Ask King George Mediate Strike at British Firm

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 4 — Winging across the Atlantic Ocean today is an invitation to King George VI of England to serve as mediator in a Newark strike.

The mediation bid, believed the first ever sent by an American union to royalty, was sent by Samuel Macri, acting CIO regional director, in behalf of 89 strikers at the Spratts Patent, Ltd., British-owned corporation manufacturing dog food.

"We urge upon Your Majesty that the royal offices be used so as to terminate this industrial conflict in the American way, namely to arbitrate the differences between this firm and the trade union," the letter said.

Taking note of the "unusual nature" of his request, Macri explained that "in these unusual times the democracies and labor must look to unusual means to protect themselves." The CIO official said that while Americans sympathize with Britain's fight against the dictatorships, British industrialists in this country "must so conduct themselves as to vindicate this support."

Newark Cancels Ford Buying as CIO Protests

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 4. — Acting on the protest of the Greater Newark Industrial Union Council, the Newark City Commission cancelled orders for over $10,000 worth of Ford automobiles, officials of the CIO Council announced this week.

The bids had already been accepted when John Genne, executive secretary of the Newark CIO Council appeared before the City Commission and demanded that the Ford Motor Company be barred from receiving contracts from the city because of flagrant violations of the National Labor Relations Act.

Mayor Meyer C. Ellenstein ordered his name removed from the contract award and was followed by City Commissioners Pierce Franklin and Vincent J. Murphy.

PAYS LOWER WAGES

Genne pointed out that the Ford bid was lower than that of other motor car manufacturers because Ford was paying lower wages than those established by the United Automobile Workers in the rest of the auto industry.

"Until the Ford Motor Co. lives up to the laws of the United States," Genne said, "and bargains with the chosen representatives of Ford workers, the money of taxpayers must not be spent to subsidize law violators.

"The action of the City in cancelling this contract sets an example that should be followed by every community in this country as well as by the U. S. Government. This action certainly proves that if there is a real desire on the part of public officials to deal fairly with organized labor and to see that the laws of this country are obeyed, real progress can be made toward industrial peace and democracy."

Delay

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 4.— — (FP) — The 3,008 ballots cast in the Labor Board election last Dec. 20 at the big Campbell Soup plant will not be counted until Jan. 8.

That day is the deadline for mail ballots of 28 drafted employes who are in the military service at Fort Dix, N. J.

The CIO United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers offered to concede the entire 28 votes to the company union if the count was made immediately, but the Board refused

Threaten Strike As Ford Welches On Agreement

DETROIT, Jan. 4.—The battle to organize Ford moved into new territory today as Michael F. Widman, director of the joint CIO-United Automobile Workers campaign, announced a strike had been authorized at the company's Lincoln plant, and asked for a Natl. Labor Relations Board election.

Widman demanded the company abide by its pledge to reinstate workers fired after they had worn union buttons in the plant, and warned that the alternative would be a walkout of the 4,000 Lincoln employes.

Meanwhile the union organizing campaign at the huge Ford River Rouge plant, with its 80,000 employes, continued at top speed.

Leaders of the UAW bitterly criticized action of the U. S. War Dept. in upholding the award of a $1,300,000 contract to Ford for production of midget cars. The Army over-ruled protests from the CIO and from Defense Commissioner Sidney Hillman, spokesmen for whom pointed out that the War Dept. was renouncing its earlier, much-publicized pledge to make labor law observance a basis for getting government orders.

$25,000 Increase

Pittburgh, Jan. 4.—Wage increases totaling close to $25,000 have been won for employes of the Pittsburgh City Home & Hospital and of the city of New Kensingtton as the result of efforts by the CIO State County & Municipal Workers.

At the Pittsburgh institution some 125 employes had their outside maintenance allowances increased from $12.50 a month to $20 and a reclassification of the work of many other persons.

The New Kensington increases amount to an estimated $13,000 annually. Under a wage provision of the union's contract with the city government, Local 213 won a 10 per cent increase.

Firm's Double-Cross Brings Big Strike

Fort Wayne, Ind., Jan. 4. — Accusing the plant of the International Harvester Co. here of giving them a double-cross for a Christmas present, instead of the signed agreement they had been expecting, more than 2,000 workers walked out New Year's Eve on a strike called by Local 57, United Automobile Workers.

EIGHT DEMANDS

Leslie M. Towner, UAW international representative, listed as the major demands of the strikers:

1. Adjustment of wage inequities within 30 days after contract is signed.
2. Pay for stewards and grievance committee from company.
3. A 10 per cent bonus for night work.
4. A 15-minute lunch hour for piece workers, paid for by the company.
4. Amendment of the skill and ability clause on seniority.
6. Union-managementt negotiations of the 10 per cent preferred list, and of any transfer work.
7. Leaves of absence for union work.
8. Compensation for conscriptees.

Union officials say production is completely at a standstill and picket lines are on duty in front of the plant.

Negotiations on terms of the contract have been going on for months,

Thomas Defends '500 Planes' Plan

Raps Tories' Knifing Of Reuther Proposal

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The present defense set-up "provides no adequate governmental channels whereby labor's experience and creative abilities can be fully utilized," R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, and a CIO vice-president, declared in an address broadcast over the net-work of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Thomas charged that some sections of the airplane and automobile interests are secretly attempting to present adoption of the CIO's proposal for mass production of defense aircraft in the automobile industry. He asserted that the American people will not be satisfied with an "off-hand" decision that the plan. drafted by Walter P. Reuther "won't work."

(The auto union head also denounced the award of defense contracts to the Ford Motor and other companies which have been found guilty of violating the Wagner Act. See story page 3).

'LINE OF DEFENSE'

Declaring that CIO Labor in the mass production industries constitute "America's first line of defense," Thomas asserted that "the vast contribution which labor can make to National Defense has only been tapped."

"I need not labor the point that our National Defense Program is not keeping face with ours and Britain's urgent needs," Thomas said. "Hitherto the representatives of ownership and management have had the controlling voice in defense production policies. In view of the record of date, is it not reasonable to suggest that there is perhaps something wrong with the present set-up?"

Thomas urged the adoption of the program put forward by Philip Murray, president of the CIO, for joint industry, management and government councils in the defense industries. Discussing the CIO plan for mass production of defense aircraft, Thomas said:

COMMON SENSE

"The common sense of this program is so obvious that as yet we have heard no open objections to it. Yet we cannot say with assurance that such a program will be placed in motion. Selfish airplane manufacturing interests, fearful of their profits from National Defense, are secretly throwing cold water. Some sections of the automobile industry are quietly doing the same. There is some talk that our plane production program will be given only perfunctory consideration before it is damned as 'impractical.'

SELFISH REASONS

"The only considerations which may delay adoption of the CIO's aircraft production plan will be selfish ones. Although President Roosevelt has urged that the conception of 'business as usual' must give way to our larger national needs, there are some interests which prefer the huge profits to be made on pleasure cars rather than the planning and coordination which manufacture of aircraft in their plants would entail.

"I believe we speak for the American people when we say that such selfish desires must not prevail to the detriment of National Defense."

Reuther, on Radio, Explains Plane-Building Idea

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—"Conventional methods will never bring results in unconventional warfare," Walter Reuther, General Motors director of the United Automobile Workers, declared in a nationwide radio broadcast on the CIO plan for 500 airplanes a day, presented to the White House by Pres. Philip Murray last week.

"We believe that without disturbing present aircraft plant production schedules we can supplement them by turning out 500 planes a day of a single standard fighting model by the use of idle automotive capacity," Reuther said. "We believe that this can be done after six months of preparation as compared to the 18 months or two years required to get new plans and engine factories into production."

The plan, as presented to President Roosevelt, outlined a program of utilizing auto plants at present lying idle for the mass production of airplane parts, the complete plane to be assembled at a central plant.

"The automotive industry, the mass production marvel of the world, over a year's period works at 50 per cent of its total maximum capacity," Reuther said. "We believe the other 50 per cent can be adapted to the manufacture of planes."

Declaring that plenty of skilled workers are available for mass plane production, Reuther pointed out that at least one-third of the tool and die workers in the auto industry are partially or totally idle. "Thus we have idle machinery and idle skilled labor," he said. "We propose to bring them together for the mass production of defense planes."

Airplane engines and auto engines are basically similar, Reuther explained, and can be turned out by the "great batteries of machines" now standing idle in Detroit and other auto industry centers. In addition, he said, drop forgings and other parts needed in plane production can be similarly produced.

SAVE TIME, MONEY

"Fundamentally the same machines are needed for mass production of planes as for mass production of automobiles," he said. "This machinery, now largely idle, will have to be duplicated and installed in new plants if and when these plants are completed. What we propose is to save precious time and much money which would be needed to duplicate idle machinery and idle plants.

"Labor's plan springs from the pooled experience and knowledge of skilled workers in all the automotive plants, the same skilled workers who are called on year by year in the industry to produce new machine marvels," he added.

"Labor asks only in return that its hard-won rights be reserved. Labor asks only that manufacturers like Ford be forced to obey the Wagner Act as have his competitors, General Motors and the smaller companies. Labor asks only that it be allowed to contribute its own creative experience and knowledge and that it be given a voice in the execution of its program."

Clothing Union Hits Low Pay Rate Set by U. S. Board

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Demands for an increase over the proposed 40 cents an hour wage rate set by the U. S. Labor Dept. for workers making army uniforms were voiced by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO, in a protest filed with Secretary of Labor Perkins in Washington.

The 40-cent rate was set by the Public Contracts Division of the Labor Department, which administers the Walsh-Healey Act requiring prevailing wages on government contracts.

The Amalgamated's brief, prepared by Special Counsel John Abt, charged that the Division disregarded evidence favoring a higher rate submitted by the union and by employers. The brief urged a rate of 60 cents if certain classes of unskilled labor were omitted and 50 cents if they were included.

The Walsh-Healey Act was described in the brief as "an essential instrument to prevent the fruits of the defense effort from being diverted from the broad mass of the workers of the country to the pockets of profiteering employers who are the recipients of government contracts."

Charter 8 New Locals

New York, Jan. 4.—Eight new local unions have been chartered by the CIO United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers since the convention held here in September, union officials announced today. The locals are located in Grand Rapids and Detroit, Mich.; Baltimore, Md.; Canton, Ohio; Framingham, Mass.; Ottawa, Ill.; Trenton, N. J.; and Atlanta, Ga.

The Atlanta local is composed of employes of the largest open shop in the stuffed toy industry—the Rushton Toy Co. Four additional locals were chartered on the eve of the convention in Franklin and Steubenville, Ohio; Detroit and Milwaukee.

100% SIGNED UP

Cleveland.—The United Automobile Workers, having signed up all the eligible 200 employes of the American Coach & Body Co., today moved forward to negotiations for a contract.

Anonymous 'Objections'

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Hiding behind a cloak of anonymity, high officials of the National Defense Advisory Commission today were reported to have rejected the Reuther-CIO plan to produce 500 airplanes a day in automobile plants.

The unknown defense experts based their rejection of the plan, which was widely hailed as offering a way out of the nation's lag in defense production, on four points.

Interestingly enough, the four-reason alibi in effect was a criticism of industry, rather than of labor. It provided an indirect answer to those Tory leaders who have become accustomed to blaming all defense ills on labor.

The plan, submitted to pres. Roosevelt by CIO Pres. Murray, was worked out by Walter Reuther, head of the General Motors division of the United Automobile Workers, in conjunction with skilled workers and other officials of the union.

FOUR 'OBJECTIONS'

Objections revealed to the press by the anonymous spokesman included:

1. Difficulty of obtaining sufficient machine tools.
2. Impossibility of obtaining sufficient aluminum.
3. The fact that automobile plants are already working on defense orders.
4. Lack of armament to equip the number of planes projected under the CIO plan.

The defense statement reflected the near-panic of some automobile officials, for whom the Reuther production plan came as a rude interruption to their stock statements blaming labor for any and all lags in defense work.

It was pointed out here that one of the key planks in the Reuther program is the employment of existing, partly idle machine tools now set up in automobile plants. Reuther, backed by expert opinion, had insisted that with only minor changes these tools could be adjusted for the more precise work required in airplane construction.

If defense officials are preaching a shortage of aluminum, they are contradicting Defense Commissioner Stettinius, who recently derided all stories of such a shortage.

While the auto industry may be receiving defense contracts, the Reuther plan listed in considerable detail the equipment even now lying idle.

Similar evidences of confusion in auto industry circles were noted last week in a report to the New York Times from Detroit.

That story, after first relating the impossibility of producing airplane parts in auto factories, then went on to boast that the industry is already producing Allison liquid-cooled airplane motors in the Cadillac factory!

13,000 Get Pay Raise At Packard

Detroit, Jan. 4.—The Packard Motor Co., has joined the growing parade of auto employers granting 3 cents-an-hour blanket raises.

In a supplementary agreement with Local 190, CIO United Automobile Workers, the firm gave a raise that will add $1,250,000 to pay envelopes in 1941, as estimated by Richard T. Frankensteen of the union's international executive board.

Chrysler, Briggs, Briggs Aeronautical and other employers have recently given 3 cent raises in revised contracts. Packard, like the others, made many classification rate adjustments that bring the raises in some instances up to 7 cents an hour.

The 13,000 employes affected will be almost doubled in number when Packard's defense contracts are in full swing.

PAY INCREASE

Cleveland.—Eight hundred fifty employes at the White Sewing Machine Corp. have received a 5 per cent wage increase as the result of activities of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

AT WHITE HOUSE: CIO Pres. Philip Murray leaves the White House after conferring with Pres. Roosevelt on the 500-planes-a-day proposal of Walter Reuther, United Automobile Workers official. The plan is receiving close study from government executives.

Minority Hits Smith Group's Final Report

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The majority report of the Smith Committee on the National Labor Relations Board is an "assault upon collective bargaining" which, if successful, "will undermine the entire foundation which Congress has built during the past seven years to strengthen the fabric of our society and to bolster the faith of the American people in the institutions of freedom," according to a statement issued today by Rep. Healey of Massachusetts and Senator Murdock of Utah, minority members of the group formed last year to "investigate" the Board.

The minority statement sharply attacked the three majority members for having "completely ignored the fact that the Wagner Act, as administered by the Board, has successfully carried out the principal purposes for which it was enacted," and for having hastily put out a report without giving the minority proper time to file a dissent.

Smith's report was filed only four days before the close of the last Congress, Healey and Murdock pointed out, was prepared without consultation with the minority, and published without reference to "our known disagreement." In addition, Healey and Murdock charged that Smith maneuvered in this way to make "impossible a detailed minority report at this time", since Congress was due to close before one could be prepared.

FEWER STRIKES

The minority report calls attention to the fact that strikes have greatly declined since the operation of the Act, pointing out that 1940 showed the lowest strike level since 1935, before the Act was valid, that fewer workers were involved than since 1932, and fewer man-hours lost than since 1930.

This record has stood up even during the accelerated defense program, Healey and Murdock pointed out, citing the fact that there were one-and-a-half times as many strikes in five months of 1916 as there were during a similar period in 1940, despite the fact that only four-fifths as many workers were employed during the first world war.

UNJUSTIFIED CHARGE

"Any implication that the Wagner Act has impeded the defense effort is not justified by the record, They write: 'On the contrary, we are of the opinion that the Act has materially contributed to industrial peace.'"

The minority also attacks the Smith report for trying to do a wholesale smear job on Board personnel, declaring that "National unity is scarcely furthered by indiscriminate and unfounded charges that Labor leaders and responsible public officials are radicals."

Concluding, the minority attacks the Smith group for insisting on passage of "ripper amendments" to the Wagner Act, despite the value of the Act in promoting industrial peace, and declares that these amendments "would sabotage the basic purposes of the Act."

War Dept. Over-Rules Protests On Ford Order; CIO Drive Moving At Top Speed

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4. — The U. S. War Dept. today had signalled a "forward march" order to Henry Ford by over-ruling strongly-worded protests against the award of a $1,387,500 contract for "midget cars" to the law-violating open shop corporation.

The War Department's action, taken in the face of previous pledges that orders would not go to Wagner Act violators, brought immediate protests from CIO officials and from spokesmen for Sidney illman, National Defense Advisory Commissioner.

The Department's tersely-worded statement said:

"After careful consideration of the protest against the award previously made to the Ford Motor Co. of a contract for the production of 1,500 light reconnoissance cars, the War Dept. announced today that the award would be allowed to stand. Award of this contract was announced by the war Dept. on Nov. 27, 1940."

SECOND AWARD

That contract was the second awarded to Ford. On Nov. 6, the day after election, an order amounting to $122,323,020 for aircraft engines was announced by the Department.

CIO unions and their leaders immediately protested the award to Ford, pointing out that it tore into shreds the statements of the War and Navy Departments on Labor Day and at subsequent intervals, that labor law violators would not receive U. S. purchasing contracts.

When the second Ford contract was announced on Nov. 27, spokesmen for Hillman intimated that the Defense Commissioner was prepared for a finish fight on the War Department's action.

CONDEMNS ACTION

The same spokesman this week condemned the Department's action, complained that "you can't believe their word" and said that further developments would await Hillman's return

DETROIT, Jan. 4.—The CIO United Automobile Workers, moving ahead at lightning speed in its campaign to organize the Ford Motor Co., today had authorized a strike at Ford's Lincoln plant.

The union threat came after Michael F. Widman, Jr., director of the joint CIO-UAW organing campaign, told government officials that the Ford management had welched on an agreement to rehire some 300 or 400 workers fired because of their union affiliation.

In a telegram to John Steelman, head of the Labor Dept.'s conciliation service, Widman asserted:

"It is absolutely clear to us that the Ford Motor Co. has no intention of keeping in good faith the agreement reached two weeks ago between your representative, James Dewey, and the company's representative, Harry Bennett."

Widman said the strike call would be issued if "the company persists in discriminatory lay-offs and fails to make good on its promise of rehiring."

WAVE OF FIRINGS

The wave of dismissals occurred two weeks after CIO members for the first time wore their union buttons inside the gates of the giant Ford empire.

They were seized by members of the notorious service depart-

'Won't Yield Labor's Right To Strike'

Detroit, Jan. 4. — Organized labor, while cooperating most fully in the national defense effort, cannot relinquish — even temporarily—its basic right to strike, R. J. Thomas, CIO vice-president and head of the United Automobile Workers, declared here today.

Thomas' statement was issued within a few hours of an announcement by Michael F. Widman, Jr., Ford organizing director, that the union had authorized a strike at Ford's Lincoln plant if the billionaire manufacturer goes back on his pledge to rehire 400 employes discharged because of their union affiliation.

NO EXPLOITATION

"I believe that labor already has proven by its record that it is willing to cooperate with management, but it will not be exploited," Thomas declared.

"The strike is labor's weapon against exploitation and unfortunately there are a few employers who will plead the need for arms and munitions as an excuse attempt to exploit labor.

"Speaking not only for the UAW but for labor as a whole, this cannot be permitted. Labor cannot give up its right to strike against a management which refuses to cooperate with its employes.

"It should be remembered that labor never wants to strike. If labor and management cooperate, there will be no cause to strike and labor can be counted on to do its part."

70,000 WORDS:

Attack On Labor

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Smith Committee report on the Natl. Labor Relations Board and the Wagner Act is only 70,000 words long; the words cover 52 pages of fine type, and represents 17 months of "investigating" during which the Committee accumulated 10,000 pages of testimony. It is said by the Committee to be its final report, completing the job started in July, 1939.

The report is not signed, as an intermediate report issued halfway through the probe was signed by three members of the five-man committee. The intermediate report, which brought out the proposed Smith amendments to the Act, was denounced by Reps. Murdock and Healey as promoting "a ripper bill" designed to cut the heart out of the Wagner act. In fact, the final report came out when both Murdock and Healey were well out of Washington — Murdock in Utah and Healey in Massachusetts.

The final report is divided into five sections, all of them anti-Labor Board, anti-Wagner Act, and fundamentally anti-labor.

Section I deals with the personnel of the Board, and amounts to an elaborate attempt to prove through research in Board files that Board employes are basically "anti-American."

For example, Board Member Edwin S. Smith made a trip to Mexico in 1938, where he attended a conference of the CTM, Mexico's national labor organization. This trip, described in some 3,000 of the report's 70,000 words, becomes "a noteworthy example of his interest in radical movements." An employe of the Board expressed disapproval of the labor policies of Henry Ford. Another was described by the FBI as a dangerous radical and was said to have once studied anthropology. A number of Board attorneys were members of the Natl. Lawyers Guild, and almost

CIO Executive Board Meets January 8

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Representatives of all CIO national and international affiliates, including national organizing committees, will assemble here January 8 for a meeting of the CIO Executive Board.

The meeting will be the first held since the Atlantic City convention of the CIO last November, and will bring over 50 CIO leaders to the capital.

The CIO constitution calls for a minimum of two Executive Board meetings annually. President Philip Murray will preside.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

AMONG the many unpleasant odors left behind by the Congress which expired with the coming of the new year was the report of the anti-labor Smith committee.

It made one think of the words of that close observer of the Washington scene, the late Paul Y. Anderson: "Some congressional committees smell, some are foul, and some stink." Not at all confidentially, the Smith committee belonged in the last category.

The report was the work of Congressmen Howard W. Smith, Charles A. Halleck and Harry N. Routzohn, and their counsel, Edmund M. Toland.

The two progressives on the committee, Abe Murdock, now a Senator, and Congressman Arthur D. Healey, objected strongly to the committee's intermediate report and to its brain child, the Smith bill to amend the Wagner Act. They were far away from Washington when the final report came out—presumably holding their noses.

Biased Committee

The Smith committee was set up to investigate the Natl. Labor Relations Board during the height of the national propaganda campaign against the Wagner Act. It went about its work in the spirit of the campaign which gave it birth.

The funniest lines in the whole report are those that accuse the Board of bias while proclaiming the committee's "spirit of complete objectivity."

From beginning to end the 70,000-word report reeks with an anti-labor, anti-Labor Board and anti-Labor Act bias that can be matched only by the personal records of its four sponsors.

The three Congressmen had an almost unbroken record of opposition to all labor and progressive legislation; and the counsel they chose was a corporation lawyer who specialized in representing employers who fell foul of the Labor Act.

Smear Campaign

The findings of the Smith committee are of little significance in themselves. They could have been written in advance, without the trouble and expense of "hearings," by anyone who knew the expressed prejudices of the committee members and the stand of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

What is interesting, however, is the propaganda technic revealed during the hearings and in the report. It is a classic example of the "smear campaign."

The smear campaign is a planned effort to discredit some person, group or movement by slanderous innuendo and false association of ideas. It depends for its success upon the cooperation of at least a large section of the daily press.

The purpose of the Smith committee, as clearly revealed by the bill it produced, was to destroy or emasculate the Wagner Act as an instrumentality for protecting labor's rights.

To prepare the public mind for this, it set out to create the impression that Labor Board was unfair to employers, biased as between labor groups, and honeycombed with radicals who sought to use it for some mysterious subversive purposes.

We say "create the impression" advisedly, for it was not a matter of proving any of these contentions. Any careful and impartial investigation of the record would reveal that they were not true.

But truth is not necessary, in fact it is rather an impediment, to a successful smear campaign. All that is needed is to get enough front-page headlines that associate the desired smears with the victim.

Headline Makers

This was effectively done by the Smith committee during its hearings. All sorts of preposterous charges were made, on the most flimsy and often ridiculous grounds. And the more outlandish they were, the bigger the headlines they received—since it is the out-of-the-ordinary that makes "news".

It is true that anyone who took the trouble to read through the whole story—in those more serious papers that gave space to a full account—could see for himself how little basis there was for the charges. And if he searched carefully in a later edition, he might even find a convincing denial or definite disproof.

But most people get their impressions from the headlines, and most papers print little more than the more sensational opening paragraphs of a long story. So it is only the "smear" that sticks in people's minds.

Similarly with the final report of the Smith committee just published — it is so long and detailed that few but students will read it. Those who do can see how flimsy, how garbled and how biased the whole business is. The daily press had only space for some of the unproved conclusions, which were dressed up with headlines about "Communistic links" and the like.

The CIO has frequently been the victim of the same type of smear campaign as that of the Smith committee.

If you look for the origin of the false charges commonly circulated against CIO unions and their leaders, you will find no proof but only "smears" that have been planted in the press in similar fashion and by the same anti-labor interests as have been at work against the Wagner Act.

Time to Plan

The Federal Council of Churches, at its recent biennial meeting in Atlantic City, adopted a resolution calling for the appointment by Congress or the President of a commission on unemployment, to be composed of representatives of the various groups that make up our population.

"Such a commission," it said, "should proceed at once to propose systematic plans for the long-range solution of the basic problem of unemployment."

The resolution pointed out further that "the present defense program will have only a temporary effect on the reduction of unemployment."

The Congress of Industrial Organizations welcomes this public-spirited support of one of its most insistent demands, and this serious reminder of the continuing gravity of the unemployment problem.

The CIO "Economic Outlook" reports close to nine million still unemployed, despite the great expansion of production for war purposes. In fact, with the seasonal drop in agricultural employment, it estimates that the number of jobless in January will be as great or greater than in July when the defense program was launched.

Optimistic predictions that the huge expenditures for war preparations will provide six million more jobs this fall than last are now being discounted.

The economists who have been making these predictions are now "less confident in their assertions," the "Outlook" states, and it is believed that "an increased employment of three million for 1941 is a generous estimate."

Careful planning of domestic as well as war production in such a way as to re-employ America's idle millions, and to guard against "a chaotic breakdown of our domestic economy when the National Defense Program is completed," is one of the main purposes of the plan recently presented by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Pres. Roosevelt.

The achievement of these purposes requires support and an increasing demand for action from all public-spirited Americans.

Let us not be deceived by momentary gains in employment, nor mistake the flush of war fever for the glow of economic health.

Now is the time to plan, before it is too late.

Vigilance Called For

Every CIO union should watch the state legislatures this year as carefully as it does the federal Congress. Many attempts will be made to slip over dangerous anti-labor laws under cover of the war emergency.

In a recent letter to all CIO affiliates, Pres. Philip Murray has warned specifically against two "model" bills drafted by a group representing governors and law enforcement officials of several states, which are intended for presentation to all state legislatures.

These bills are ostensibly directed against sabotage and designed to set up state home guards. But actually they include clauses aimed at labor's right to assemble, picket and strike.

Labor is of course opposed to sabotage, from which it is the first to suffer. But this so-called anti-sabotage bill "could readily be used to suppress strikes or other union activities to improve wages, hours or working conditions," Murray points out.

Reactionary local authorities would also try to invoke its heavy penalties "upon the ground that labor union action resulted in interference with national defense production."

Similarly the proposed state home guard bill could be used against labor unions by military officers who would be unchecked either by civil authorities or by civil law.

The CIO has also recently warned against state attempts to wreck the unemployment compensation system, through employers' drives to reduce taxes and oppose liberalization of benefits.

They referred to a War Dept. statement issued early in December which purported to notify contractors filling government orders that all such work "will be carried out in compliance with the provisions of the statement of labor policy relative to overtime pay and in compliance with federal statutory provisions affecting labor wherever such provisions are applicable, as well as with state and local statutes affecting labor relations, hours of work, wages, workmen's compensation, safety and sanitation."

ALIBI BREAKS DOWN

In upholding the Ford contract, the military procurement officers were unable to fall back on the alibi they had employed in connection with the previous award to the Duke of Dearborn—namely, that only Ford had the facilities for production of the needed military equipment.

I. F. Stone, Washington correspondent for the Nation magazine, this week charged that plans for production of the midget cars—which are badly needed for the army's mechanization program—were worked out with the Bantam Motor Co. of Butler, Pa. When the award was finally made, Bantam was given only a fraction of the total production.

Stone charged further that the Ford "midget cars" do not even meet the Army's specifications, being from 150 to 200 pounds too heavy.

THOMAS PROTESTS

A vigorous protest against the War Dept.'s action in handing out more federal money to Ford came from Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Automobile Workers, now pushing an organizing campaign at the law violator's huge River Rouge plant. He said:

"The 400,000 automobile workers for whom I speak, many thousands of them engaged in defense work, cannot understand why Ford should I have been granted its most recent defense contract.

"The Ford Motor Company has been found guilty not alone by the NLRB in more than five major cases but by the United States Circuit Court. It has been adjudged guilty of unfair labor practices all the way from discrimination to discharging and brutally beating union men.

"The decision not only undermines the faith of defense labor in the even administration of justice but it also penalizes the more than 600 automotive and parts company who are obeying the law."

of which Bennett is the chief, and in many cases had the buttons and their shirts ripped off.

Bennett sought to blame the firings on "seasonal slack," an alibi which CIO leaders promptly scotched by quoting auto industry reports of increasing production at Ford.

BUYING SPACE

Latest Ford device is the insertion of full page advertisements in metropolitan newspapers throughout the country with fabulous statistics to fool the public into continued acceptance of the Ford "high wage myth."

UAW research men derided the Ford statistics as "cock-eyed," pointing out that the wage level at General Motors, Chrysler, and other union automobile plants, is far above the pay at Ford.

In a newspaper interview here, Widman revealed that the Ford organizing campaign is far ahead of schedule.

"I thought that we would be ready to ask for an NLRB election in March or April," he declared.

"We've already asked for it. The day after the mass firings, we got more, not less, applications for membership. There's still plenty of fear, but it's declining.

Rep. Smith Takes 70,000 Words for 'I Hate Labor'

all of the staff belonged to the Board union.

The report makes a great point of the fact that Board members did not agree that government contracts should go to violators of the Wagner Act — a policy that the CIO has demanded since the Act came into force. This policy, the report says, amounts to an attempt to "blacklist" certain corporations, and it accuses the Board of committing the crime of trying to get other government agencies, particularly those awarding contracts, to cooperate in seeking enforcement of the Act.

The three-man report is just as interesting for its omissions as it is for its text. Thus, on this question of alleged blacklisting, the report fails to note the fact that huge firms such as Bethlehem Steel, Republic, Ford Motor, Electric Boat, etc., though repeatedly charged by the Board and by the courts with flagrant violations of the Wagner Act, continue to receive profitable contracts from the U. S. Government. All the report does is to accuse the Board of trying to "blacklist."

SMITH AMENDMENTS

The report refers frequently to the Smith amendments, passed in the House last year over the protests of all sections of labor but with the aid of AFL Pres. Wm. Green, describing them as the ideal solution to the problem of making the Wagner Act "fair" to all — by which the report means fair to employers.

These amendments were blocked in the Senate, despite the best efforts of Smith, Green, the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and other labor enemies to get them through. The report promises a new effort to get these "ripper" amendments passed during the present session.

And in case anyone might think the committee was anything but impartial, the report winds up with this statement from the summary:

"The committee, mindful of its public duty and of the Congressional mandate, undertook all phases of its investigation in a spirit of complete objectivity, admitting testimony and exhibits freely and impartially.

"Evincing a deep sympathy for the rights of labor, its members believe implicitly in collective bargaining and in stamping out unfair labor practices."

If you don't believe it, read it.

This chart shows the effect of army and navy expenditures upon the cost of living. The cost of living index is based upon the figures of the Bureau of Labor statistics. The army and navy expenditures are based upon actual disbursements for fiscal years.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK:

Predict Unemployment Rise, Jump in Cost of Living

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Unemployment "will be as great or greater" in January than it was in July this year when the National Defense program got under way, according to the latest issue of the Economic Outlook, monthly economic publication of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

While the figure for the month of October dropped from 9,087,000 in September to 8,919,000, according to the CIO estimate, there will be an increase due to agricultural unemployment in November, December and January.

Washington economists who have been predicting that there will be 6,000,000 more jobs in the Fall of 1941 "are less confident in their assertions" now, the Outlook says, and it is believed that "an increased employment of three million for 1941 is a generous estimate."

DEFENSE LAG

Turning to the lag in defense production recently emphasized by Defense Commissioner William S. Knudsen, the Outlook cites recent statements by CIO President Philip Murray and the 500-planes-a-day plan drawn up by Walter P. Reuther of the United Auto Workers and offered to the President by Murray as evidence that plant capacity that could be turned to arms production is now being permitted to lie idle.

"As long as this capacity remains unused through a distribution of contracts which automatically creates bottlenecks, defense production will be seriously slowed and the reabsorption of the unemployed will be hampered," the Outlook says.

Further, it points out that this situation will be intensified by the increase in the amount of arms assigned to the British. This increase, it is estimated, will add 2.5 billion dollars worth of material for Britain to the two billion dollars worth already on order, resulting in "a sudden wave of pressure for a rapid speedup of the National Defense program."

PRIORITIES

This new demand for speedup in arms production in turn brings up the question of priorities, the Outlook points out, due to the "absolute refusal of industry to expand its facilities for the first several months of the defense program until it received extensive tax concessions or provisions for the purchase of plant by the government."

"The result of this attitude and activity on the part of industry, and of some considerable aceptance of such an attitude by the Defense Commission, has been to leave the nation now in a situation in which greatly increased demands for speedup of national defense production cannot be met by increased facilities," the Outlook says.

"The alternative is to devote production facilities now being used for consumers' goods to the manufacture of armaments. That means the establishment of priorities."

The effect of priorities will be to cut the amount of consumers' goods, thus raising the cost of living and lowering the amount of consumers' goods that wage earners can buy.

LIVING COSTS RISE

"The way such a situation usually affects the individual worker is by making him pay more for the things he needs than he paid before so that he is able to buy less goods with his wages," it says. "The cost of living rises and the real wages goes down."

Rising costs of living are already evident, the Outlook declares, citing a food price rise expected in the spring and further rises in the cost of clothing and in rents.

Unions that tie their wage demands to the cost of living are revising this policy, the Outlook points out, since it freezes the level of real wages.

"The CIO has continuously set forth the view that the working people of the nation are entitled to a greater share of the national income and that, as machines make increased production possible, the benefits should go to increase the income of working people," the Outlook concludes.

Announce Concert

New York, Jan. 4.—The American People's Chorus, under its new director Dean Dixon, announces a concert by Paul Robeson to be held Feb. 23 at Manhattan Center. Mr. Robeson will give a program of Negro spirituals and international folk songs, including the Ballad for Americans which the Peoples Chorus of 150 voices will sing with him.

THE UNIONS' YEAR:

1940 Saw CIO Speed Organizing Drives

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—A year ago, in its issue of January 1, 1940, The CIO NEWS carried this lead story:

Last week, in its final issue for 1940, The CIO NEWS reported a $1,500,000 wage-raising contract renewal at Brewster Aircraft; a new closed shop agreement with a Massachusetts textile mill; a $450,000 pay boost for New York furriers; and a Labor Board election victory at an important potash plant in the California desert.

The two issues of the CIO's official paper are significant — they furnish before-and-after evidence that in 1940, as in the five years previous, the CIO led the way in bringing better wages and working conditions to millions of American workers.

While American labor was forced to remain on the defense on the legislative front, in the nation's economic battlegrounds the CIO maintained a constant offensive that has led to hundreds of millions of dollars in extra purchasing power for labor; shorter working week; and general improved standards for union members.

THREE MAIN DRIVES

And, as the bells tolled out the old year, they found CIO energies and finances concentrated on three key organization campaigns to mend a trio of the most flagrant gaps in American industrial democracy—Ford, Little Steel and aircraft.

All three drives are booming.

King Henry of Dearborn, whose strong-arm philosophy of labor relations has won him world-wide admiration from economic royalists, is on the defensive for the first time. Hemmed in by a spurting union membership among his 80,000 Michigan employes; harassed by a half-dozen Labor Board decisions; censured by decent-thinking persons who show less and less inclination to buy his cars — Ford will soon be forced to realize that only the signing of a CIO union contract can solve his many-horned dilemma.

LITTLE STEEL

Bethlehem Steel, feasting on a billion dollars of ill-deserved government orders, knows its workers are going CIO, as a specially-recruited organizing staff under expert leadership hammers away at the steel industry's second largest corporation.

Tom Girdler's Republic Steel, haughty to CIO unionism in years past, is growing increasingly humble. Already, under the impact of CIO charges and government decrees, it has had to hand out $350,000 in vacation pay to employes who struck in 1937. Millions more, in back wages for strikers long refused re-employment, are on the docket.

The Vultee aircraft strike broke a tight-fisted "united front" of west coast manufacturers who had sought to freeze their wages at the lowest level of any modern mass production industry. With that strike won, the CIO aircraft campaign is flying at top speed through other centers of the industry.

But the gains are not confined to a few industries. In rubber and clothing, maritime and transport, coal and metal mining, aluminum and packinghouse, textile and hosiery, retail trade and warehouses — in every field where CIO is represented, the workers' economic status improved in 1940.

LABOR FACTS By Scheel

Bell Plane Pact Wins Increases

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 4. — A new contract signed by the United Automobile Workers with the Bell Aircraft Co. here will add $600,000 annually to the pay of 4,000 employes of the company.

The company also agreed to recognize the UAW as bargaining agent for about 15,000 workers to be employed at the Niagara Falls plant scheduled to start operation next April.

Under the terms of the new agreement a five cent average hourly pay increase is provided with increased minimums after four months of service and the right to reopen wage negotiations at any time.

Urge Defeat Of Measures For War

Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 4.—Appeals for defeat of measures aimed at the organized labor movement which might involve the United States deeper in the European war were recently presented to members of Congress from this city by a delegation of CIO members.

The delegation, composed of officers of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, National Maritime Union and United Office and Professional Workers, presented their views on labor and war legislation to Sen. Robert Taft and Representative Charles E. Elston. A statement was mailed to Cong. Ross, who was out of town.

In the conference with Sen. Taft, the delegation stressed the determination of organized labor to block such bills as the Smith anti-strike bill. Taft said that he favored such legislation only in time of war.

MINERS AID MINERS

Denver — Speaking for the nation's organized metal miners, the executive board of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers voted to aid the effort of coal miners, through the United Mine Workers, to win passage of the Federal Coal Mine safety bill.

Screen Apes, Bratters, Slough Pigs - - They're All Jobs!

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 4.—If you ran an employment agency and received a request for the services of a screen ape, you would probably suppose that the movie industry was getting ready to produce another horror picture.

And if you were told that a screen ape is a synonym for a grizzly man you'd probably be sure you were right. As a matter of fact, a screen ape or grizzly man is no part of the Hollywood scene. He's a laborer in the metal mining industry whose duty it is to work underground dumping ore from cars through a grating.

If someone told you he wanted to hire a slough pig to work in his lumber camp, you'd probably shake your head sadly and conclude that the person had one too many. Not at all. A slough pig is a colloquialism for "log driver," one who floats logs out of sloughs after the main body of logs has passed down the river.

NEW DICTIONARY

How do we get that way? We've just looked over a 1,287 page "Dictionary of Occupational Titles," recently issued to the local offices of the New York State Employment Service by Executive Director Milton O. Loysen.

This new dictionary, an invaluable supplement to Mr. Webster's, if there ever was one, was prepared by the Job Analysis and Information Section, Division of Standards and Research, U. S. Department of Labor. It has been issued to State Employment Services throughout the nation, but in some cases rapid technological changes are already out-dating it.

If you think a horn puller has some connection with music, you're dead wrong. He's a textile worker who pulls loose ends of thread through to the inside of a stocking with a small hook and cuts off the loose ends with scissors.

How about a sky hooker? Probably has something to do with aeronautics. Wrong again. He stands on top of a vehicle and places logs as they are hoisted in order to form an evenly balanced load.

In the not so long ago, the obsolete jigger was a golf club, an iron used on short shots. That's what the golfer's dictionary will tell you. Then there's the jigger associated with Terpischore. But this dictionary lists neither. It tells you that a jigger is one who thumps sacks of fish meal against the ground to permit the sacks to be filled up to full weight.

WHAT'S A BRATTER?

Did you ever hear of a "bratter"? Well, a "bratter" is a child monitor; a child-nurse, part time; or a sitter. The "bratter's" service is defined as follows:

"Looks after young children in the absence of their parents, usually during the evening; performs such duties as amusing the children by reading or playing games, helping them to undress and retire, and regulating the temperature of the bedroom; answers children's calls and complies with any reasonable request; may perform sundry cleaning duties, such as washing dishes or dusting furniture; works 'on call,' usually by the day or hour, as opposed to NURSEMAID."

A cat doctor is colloquial for a tractor mechanic and a cat skinner is a tractor operator. What do you think of that?

SLUGGERS AND SLAVES

Sports writers would probably identify a "slugger" with the boxing game. According to industrial terminology, he's a worker in the boot and shoe industry. He drives in a row of tacks, staples, or slugs around the outer edge of the top lift of a shoe to hold the lift securely in place.

So the job titles go, right on down the list. A "slave" is slang for a laborer who transports coal or coke from storage bins or piles, to places of use, such as furnaces, etc.

Part One, entitled "Definitions and Titles," contains 29,744 titles and 17,452 definitions. These are grouped into approximately 7,000 coded classifications on the general principle that jobs requiring the same technique or abilities on the part of the worker are classified together.

Part Two, entitled "Titles and Codes," serves both as a numerical and as a group arrangement. The entire classification structure revolves around the definition or actual description of the work performed, and not around the job title alone.

HAS GREAT VALUE

The dictionary is of inestimable value as an operating tool in identifying and classifying every job to which reference is made in the course of day-to-day operations. It will serve as the basis for a filing system for referral and placement purposes, will provide the basis for a permanent training program in job information, and will furnish a precise and comprehensive classification of occupational information for the study and statistical measurement of trends in registrations and placements.

The dictionary is the final product of the Occupational Research Program which has been conducted for seven years by the Division of Standards and Research of the former United States Employment Service, now a part of the Bureau of Employment Security of the Social Security Board.

Win Leaflet Case In Ontario

HAMILTON, Ont., Jan. 4.—A victory for the right to distribute union literature in this city was hailed by Steel Workers Organizing Committee officials this week after charges of distributing advertising matter contrary to a by-law against Milton Montgomery, SWOC representative, were dismissed in court. Magistrate McKay ordered police to return the pamphlets seized from SWOC distributors.

Police took the pamphlets from Montgomery at 6:40 A. M. near the National Steel Car Plant in response to a "complaint". The magistrate rejected the prosecution claim that advertising pamphlets could not be distributed without obtaining a license. The accused was not in the business of distributing literature and did not come under the by-law, he said.

C. H. Millard, assistant regional director of SWOC, told the magistrate that the pamphlets outlined the Government Order-In-Council recommending collective bargaining in all industries. The union was thus aiding in maximum war production, he said.

Distribution of the pamphlets will be resumed immediately, Millard said, pointing out that an organizational drive was receiving excellent response.

Nova Scotia Steel Wages Rising

Trenton, N. S., Jan. 4. — An extra $40,000 has been paid to SWOC employes of the Trenton steel plant in their Christmas pay envelopes and a long struggle for higher wages and improved conditions has just been ended with the signing of a wage contract.

The contract which also benefits the Eastern Car Plant employes was signed by Canadian Regional SWOC Director Silby Barrett and President Miller Dick and Chad McMillan of the Trenton SWOC Local for the men.

Sydney N. S., Jan. 4. — Two weeks additional pay has been given the 5,000 employes of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation steel division. Workers, clerks and other office staff members shared in the distribution which was estimated at more than $150,000.

The Christmas gift came unexpected at the end of a year which saw the first wage contract between the SWOC and the company signed. It was made possible, a company spokesman said, because of co-operation of employes in providing uninterrupted operation of the steel plant during 1940. He added "relations between employer and employes are highly satisfactory."

"Appreciation and pleasure" at the company's action was expressed in a statement issued by the Sydney SWOC local executive.

Fleming Cites Wage-Hour Law's Goals

Washington, Jan. 4.—Taking issue with a widely-publicized editorial in the Los Angeles Times, Wage-Hour Administrator Philip B. Fleming charged that the Fair Labor Standards Act is succeeding in its basic aim—to spread employment by cutting the work week.

Fleming charged the reactionary California paper with inaccuracy in maintaining that bankruptcies have increased because of the wage-hour law.

"The 40-hour week is working," he wrote. "It is enforcing the employment of America. Reports coming to my office indicate that it is causing plant after plant to go on two and three-shift operation; that it is hastening the employment of hundreds in good-sized plants down to the employment of one or two in the very smallest establishments.

"This increased employment is being forced not only in factories and mines, but in wholesaling, transportation and commercial establishments."

Goodyear To Rehire Two Workers

Bowmanville, Ont., Jan. 4. — Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. agreed to rehire two workers at its plant here last week following protests against their discharge by the United Rubber Workers' Union, Joe MacKenzie, URW representative stated.

A conciliation board hearing into claims of nearly 300 members of the union for recognition, higher wages and improved working conditions, will begin next week.

Appointed

Washington, Jan. 6. — William C. Thompson has been appointed secretary-treasurer of District 17, United Mine Workers.

Thompson, a native of Beckley, W. Va., will make his headquarters in the District office at Charleston, W. Va.

WHAT'S IN A LABEL?

"What's in a name? A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." So says the poet, and maybe that's all right for flowers. But a name on the clothes you are wearing? That's another matter, particularly when the name is on a label bearing the seal of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

That name on your suit, overcoat, topcoat, means quality. That label on your underwear, work clothes, overalls, necktie, gloves, means the best you can buy for your money.

The Amalgamated label means the quality that comes from jobs performed by skilled workers working under good conditions. Workers who can take time to see that a seam is true, that stitches hold, that buttons won't pop. Sweatshop labor means tired workers, prideless workers; union labor means workers with decent hours, and decent wages. That is the fuel for good performance on the job.

What else is in the name? The Amalgamated label on your clothes means a quarter of a million organized workers living up to high standards of workmanship. It means a quarter of a million men and women in the ranks of organized labor taking part in shaping legislation which will protect workers in all industries.

It means a quarter of a million workers under contract with manufacturers of men's clothing throughout the country. It means 250,000 men and women strengthening the hold of collective bargaining in industry.

MORE MONEY?

So far, so good. Certainly for Mr. Amalgamated Member. But must Mr. Consumer-at-Large pay more for the name on the label? Not a bit, for he can buy men's garments with the union label in any price range.

Must he run all over town, asking here, and asking there for clothes with a union label? No, he needn't. More than 90 per cent of the industry is organized and all retail stores can carry clothes made in the Amalgamated shops. Stop in and ask your local haberdasher some day.

If he isn't carrying union made articles, he can get them. If you ask for them, he will order them and that, incidentally, is a good way to help the manufacturers who are playing fair with the union to get their products into wider circulation.

Can you wear a union-made garment from sun-up to sundown; from season to season; and even in the still, dark hours of the night? You certainly can. Getting ready for work in a factory? Look for the union label on your work clothes. Going to sit at a desk all day? Look in the inside pocket of your business suit for the Amalgamated label.

Going out tonight with the best girl? Look for the union label on your tie, your favorite shirt, on your new gloves. Tuck your union-made muffler inside your union-made topcoat.

Or maybe its vacation clothes. Pick out the slacks and the riding breeches with the union label. Your lumber jacket or your leather windbreaker—you will find it there, too. Your new pajamas and underwear? They carry the union label, as well.

Yes, there's a lot in a name when the name is on a label bearing the seal of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. The name on your garments means you're the complete man, at least the complete union-made man.

Urge State CIO Groups Push Campaigns For Improved Unemployment Benefits

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4. — Unemployment compensation "is now facing a critical stage" due to an employers' drive designed "to reduce taxes and oppose liberalization of benefits," the CIO warned in a letter and analysis of state compensation laws sent to all CIO state and local councils today.

The letter was signed by John Brophy, director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, and was accompanied by a memorandum detailing the CIO program to head off this expected attack and to improve existing standards. The memo was prepared by the CIO Social Security Committee.

"The unemployment compensation law is now facing a critical stage," the CIO statement said. "The drive on the part of employers to reduce taxes and oppose liberalization of benefits threatens to wreck the system.

"This drive is taking its chief form under employer support for so-called merit or experience rating plans which are only thin disguises for reducing taxes. These tax reduction schemes menace the existing benefit rates and prevent much-needed improvements."

CIO PROGRAM

Basic to the CIO program is a policy of increasing weekly benefits, cutting elegibility requirements, adding benefits for wives and children, and extending coverage to workers now discriminated against in large numbers.

Under the CIO program, workers would receive a maximum of $20 a week for 20 weeks, with the minimum fixed at from $7.50 to $10. Present rates vary from as low as $5.00 a week with the benefit period running from nine to 11 weeks. Dependents do not now receive allowances.

In addition, the program calls for reduction of the eligibility clause to the point where workers earning $150 or more in a fixed period can get benefits, as well as a reduction of the waiting period from the present two or three weeks to one. Disqualification periods, under which workers who quit their jobs or engage in labor disputes are frequently denied benefits, would be limited to two weeks.

"MERIT RATING"

"Merit rating," the CIO statement explains, should not be permitted, since it allows many employers to evade or reduce their social security taxes. This policy, the CIO statement explains, would allow employers who maintain relatively stable employment to pay less in taxes, thus reducing the total amount of money available for benefits and penalizing workers unemployed through no fault of their own.

The CIO program calls also for extension of coverage to include seasonal, casual and non-profit workers and workers in plants employing one or more, now discriminated against and for payment of partial benefits to those partially unemployed.

FEDERAL STANDARDS

In conclusion, the CIO program calls for Federal standards for state compensation systems, "thus providing for uniform standards throughout the country and eliminating interstate competition and reducing administrative costs."

On this point, the CIO program calls for a system of "Federal reinsurance" through which poorer states could bring their benefit systems up to a level with those of wealthier areas.

EVEN COURSE

New York — Promising to be as reactionary in 1941 as it has been in the past, the Natl. Association of Manufacturers today came forth with a New Year's resolution urging the government to finance the national defense program with a soak-the-poor federal sales tax.

Win Better Tile Pact

Anderson, Ind., Jan. 4. — A greatly improved contract with the National Tile Co. here has been won by Branch 286 of the CIO Quarry Workers Intl. Union.

Paving the way for the pact was a strike which begun Oct. 16 and ended Dec. 19.

The 250 workers won overtime pay for work over eight hours a day, better seniority and improved methods of handling grievances, and check-off of union dues.

See Need For Wider Security Act Coverage

Washington, Jan. 4. — Thousands of men and women will move out of jobs which are covered by insurance benefits under the Social Security Act into Federal civilian defense jobs not covered by the Act as it stands, Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board stated in a recent speech.

"Those civilian defense workers employed and to be employed by the Federal Government require our immediate attention, lest they lose the insurance rights they have now," Altmeyer said. As the law now stands it excluded from unemployment insurance and old age and survivors insurance anyone employed by the U. S. Government or by any state, county or municipality.

"Not only would wage credits stop when the man moves from private to public employment," Altmeyer declared. "If or when he returns to private employment after the defense emergency is over and his social security account is reopened, the amount of his old age benefits, and the amount of the benefits to his wife and children, will be reduced by the present method of calculating his payments."

The CIO Social Security Committee, in commenting on Altmeyer's remarks, said that it is working on the problem and will soon present recommendations to Congress for changes in the Act.

PLAN DRIVE

Atlantic City —(FP) — An organizational drive in Camden, Chicago and the New England area was launched by the executive board of the United Retail & Wholesale Employes, CIO.

Win Strike In Movie Houses

Mannington, W. Va., Jan. 4. — A three-day strike here called by the CIO United Theater Employes against the two theatres owned by C. P. Church ended with the signing of a closed shop contract, Joseph Angelo, CIO regional director, announced this week.

Six of Church's employes were fired Dec. 16, following the organization of the theater workers by Local 255, Clarksburg. Local President Charles W. Long and Vice President Kenneth Maguire, together with the employes who picketed the two theaters are given the credit for the signing of the contract by Angelo.

Southern Liberals Flay Crump Terror Drive

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 4.—Ed H. Crump, labor-hating political boss of Memphis, is expanding his activities into a campaign of racial prejudice which may result in serious disorders, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare today advised Pres. Roosevelt.

Howard Lee, executive secretary of the southerners' liberal group, wrote to the President that the "situation in Memphis calls for the immediate intervention of federal authorities and the Dept. of Justice to maintain order and elementary American rights in Memphis."

CANCELLED MEETING

The letter revealed that "leaders of an inter-racial religious conference decided to cancel a meeting" scheduled for Dec. 27-31 because of "reliable evidence that a build-up is being made for a race riot to intimidate the Negro population and to discredit and terrorize the groups doing constructive work, especially the CIO."

Lee accused Crump of cooperating closely with the Firestone Rubber Co. to "violate the federal labor laws and prevent organization in Memphis by the CIO." Organizers of the United Rubber Workers who have been seeking to unionize the open-shop factory have been met with violence and threats.

Crump's anti-Negro campaign is being conducted on a systematic basis, Pres. Roosevelt was told.

"During the presidential campaign, some Negro leaders in Memphis dared to express their elementary American right to vote for a presidential candidate other than one dictated to them by Ed Crump.

"In retaliation, the police department has, under a guise of a 'drive against crime,' stationed policemen in front of the business establishment of Dr. J. B. Martin. These policemen have searched prospective customers entering this and other establishments and otherwise conducted themselves in such a way as to effectively drive J. B. Martin and other Negro businessmen out of business.

TERRORIZE NEGROES

"A score or more of prominent Negro citizens have been identified and threatened with being run out of town by Police Commissioner Joe Boyle. Negro newspaper editors are being harassed and likewise threatened with similar treatment if they do not cease printing news articles and editorials concerning the situation in Memphis."

Crump received nationwide notoriety a year ago, when, amidst a popping of champagne bottles and drunken revelry, he pledged himself to a one-man war against the CIO in Memphis.

Mrs. Roosevelt in Washington Guild

Washington, Jan. 4. — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has transferred her membership from the New York to the Washington Newspaper Guild.

A member of the CIO newspapermen's union by virtue of her syndicated column "My Day," Mrs. Roosevelt has in the past attended a number of meetings of the New York Guild.

CIO Board Asks Higher Pay As Profits Mount

CIO Aids Neisner Strikes

Washington, Jan. 11 — The CIO swung full support to striking retail clerks in the Michigan stores of the Neisner Bros. chain as Allan S. Haywood, Director of Organization, called for concerted action to bring about a smashing victory.

In letters to CIO officials and unions in those cities where the Neisner outfit maintains stores, Haywood explained that with "your effective help now" the United Retail & Wholesale Employes will be able to negotiate a contract with those gallant strikers who have suffered so much through unfair practices of this concern.

CALLED DEC. 7

The strike was called on Dec. 7 in the firm's Detroit stores after the management "acted arrogantly and refused to cooperate" with federal and city officials to effect a peaceful settlement.

Key cities in the Neisner chain include Chicago, St. Louis, Cleveland, Buffalo, Akron, Cincinnati, Rochester, Columbus, Boston, Camden, Omaha, St. Paul, Denver, Gary and Racine, Wisc.

Haywood urged CIO unions and officers in those localities to contact Tucker P. Smith of the United Retail & Wholesale Employes, 604 Hofmann Bldg., Detroit, to work out the most effective means of cooperation.

SOUP KITCHEN: Striking workers at the Fort Wayne, Ind., plant of the Intl. Harvester Co. get comfort for the inner man from the special commissary set up by the United Automobile Workers' Ladies' Auxiliary. The men are seeking union contract and higher wages. Strike ended Jan. 9.

Is Toland's Face Red!

(See Story Page 8)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 — Monday, January 6, was a bad day for one Edmund Toland.

Toland won generous gobs of newspaper space last year, when as general counsel for the Smith Committee allegedly "investigating" the National Labor Relations Board, he turned in the niftiest smear job seen in Washington during 1940.

A major point in Toland's program was to picture the NLRB staff as young, inexperienced, incapable and ignorant of the law.

Before coming to the Smith Committee, Toland served as counsel for a number of big corporations involved in Labor Board cases. One of those firms was the H. J. Heinz Co., which argued, under Toland's guidance, that it wasn't violating the Wagner Act when it refused to put into writing and sign an agreement with a union of its employes.

Was Mr. Toland's face red when the Supreme Court unanimously tore into Toledo-Heinz argument and upheld the "incapable, inexperience" National Labor Relations Board.

ANTI-UNION BLOCKADE: Hoping to forestall efforts of the CIO United Automobile Workers to win wage increases, the Ranger Engineering Co. on Long Island, N. Y., got police to block roads leading to the plant. Only persons approved by the management can get through the police-guarded barriers. Meanwhile the union, at government request, delayed strike action for 48 hours.

1941 Program Calls For Preservation Of Labor Rights

(See Stories on Inside Pages)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—A legislative program calling for protection and extension of labor laws, protection of workers' rights and measures to extend security to all Americans was adopted at the CIO Executive Board meeting here.

The meeting, which lasted two days, also called for a forward move to raise wages, so that workers may receive "an increasing share of mounting profits"; and so that the living standards of the two-thirds of the people who get less than $1,000 a year may be lifted to decent levels.

CIO's stand on withholding government contracts from violators of the Wagner Act and other social laws was reaffirmed in a resolution calling on President Roosevelt to issue an executive order to this effect.

Full support for the revised national defense set-up, urged by CIO Pres. Murray, and for the Reuther 500 planes-a-day production plan, was voted by the Board.

The Board also called on the Federal government to see to it that the rights of workers conscripted into the army are protected, to give labor adequate representation on draft boards, and to select men for the army "in a way least to disrupt their family life and their careers," and to provide jobs for conscripted men when their term in the army is finished.

Other Board actions included unanimous support for the United Mine Workers in their forthcoming negotiations with coal operators; support for the United Construction Workers, for the seamen and for the Federal workers; and condemnation of the U. S. Maritime Commission for its anti-union policies.

Nova Scotia Govt. To Sign Coal Contract

GLACE BAY, N. S., Jan. 11.—Negotiations being conducted by District 26 United Mine Workers of America for new wage contracts on behalf of 16,000 CIO mine workers are spotlighting labor affairs in Nova Scotia.

For the first time in history a wage contract is to be signed shortly by the UMW with the government of Nova Scotia. The contract will cover mine workers at the government-operated mine in Inverness and will bring wage increases for the men.

Negotiations have also been entered into by the UMW with the Dominion Coal Company for a new wage contract to replace the one which expires January 31.

Other negotiations are being commenced with the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company and the district board is also endeavoring to secure a satisfactory contract for UMW mine workers employed by the Acadia Coal Company in the Pictou County coal area.

The contract with the Dominion Coal Company would cover 12,000 mine workers in Cumberland County and in Cape Breton.

Delay Strike Deadline In Plane Plant

East Farmingdale, N. Y., Jan. 10,—A zero hour appeal from Natl. Defense Advisory Commission authorities today had pushed back by two days the strike deadline set by the CIO union at the plant of the Ranger Engineering Corp.

Ten minutes before the strike call was to go into effect, Walter Smethurst, head of the CIO-United Automobile Workers national aircraft drive, agreed to a 48-hour truce suggested by John Owens, Ohio CIO head and assistant to Defense Commissioner Sidney Hillman.

Aircraft Union Moving Fast; Wins 3rd Poll

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—CIO organizing efforts in aircraft today continued to move along at top speed.

The United Automobile Workers rolled up its third Labor Board election victory in the aircraft industry when employes of the Harvill Aircraft Die Casting Corp. in Los Angeles voted for the CIO affiliate as their sole bargaining agency.

The vote was:

UAW-CIO	162
AFL	47
Neither	42

Other highlights of the aircraft week:

1. Representatives of the UAW and an AFL union met with NLRB officials in Los Angeles to discuss plans for a poll at the booming North American Aviation Corp., which employs some 4,500 production workers.

THREE IN A ROW

The Harvill victory made it three in a row for the UAW-CIO's streamlined drive on the West Coast. Previously the union gained easy wins at Vultee, where a contract is now in force, and at Ryan.

"Every Harvill worker knows that the wage situation in our plant is one of the chief injustices we must suffer," a union statement issued prior to the election pointed out.

"The UAW-CIO tackled this question at Vultee—and won. At Harvill, this matter is even more acute because of the extremely low wages that prevail from one end of the plant to the other.

"A majority of the Harvill workers still earn between 50 and 55 cents an hour. . . . The UAW has voted that these substandard un-American wages must go."

RYAN DISCUSSSIONS

Echoes of the same statement were heard in the Ryan negotiations as well.

Ryan officials countered the UAW's demand for a minimum of 75c an hour by suggesting that the 50c scale be maintained for four months, to be followed by a pay boost of only four cents.

Reiterating that the CIO stands by its pledge to lift aircraft wages, Lew Michener, UAW regional director, termed the Ryan proposal a "ridiculous offer."

"Why Ryan made more money than Vultee last year, and he refuses to offer his workers any kind of a wage boost.

"The CIO has told the workers in aviation that we will not tolerate a 50c an hour wage. We mean this.

'THE HARD WAY'

"Evidently some of these employers have to learn their lesson the hard way. If that's the way they want it, it's perfectly all right with us,' Michener added, asserting that Ryan's attitude is similar to that of Vultee before the CIO's successful strike.

DEFEND SECURITY: Defense of workers' rights against company anti-union attacks forced the United Automobile Workers, CIO, to call a strike at the Fort Wayne, Ind., plant of the Intl. Harvester Co. The workers are seeking a contract and wage increases from the firm, which is working under fat government purchasing awards.

Offer 6-Point Plan to Insure Democratic Spirit in Army

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—A six-point program designed to insure that those men drafted into the Army will be "chosen and trained in a spirit of democracy" was adopted today by the CIO executive board.

The board's statement warned of the potential danger that men may "leave their period of training disillusioned with or disdainful of the democratic way of life" and asserted its profound concern that the "Selective Service System shall be operated so as to protect the health, welfare and best interests of the young people of America.

VOICE FOR LABOR

Included in the CIO program were these points:

1. Equitable administration of the act by giving labor an active voice — "the present operation of the system has in most areas virtually excluded labor participation."

2. Selection of men in such a way as to "least disrupt their family life and their careers" — "the administration of the law up to this point has tended to be unnecessarily harsh upon men who lay claim to exemption."

3. Complete protection must be provided for reemployment of those who leave jobs to be drafted and for new employment for men who were unemployed before training, and provision, through public agencies, for the families of draftees.

DECENT CONDITIONS

4. Living conditions for conscripted men that will improve their health and well-being.

5. Administration of the training period in accord with democratic practice.

6. Expansion of the Sailors and Soldiers Relief Act to "give real protection to these men and their families by suspending, during the period of military service and a reasonable period thereafter, forclosures or eviction from homes, the lapsing of life insurance policies, and the seizure of chatels such as cars, furniture or household goods.

CITIZENS' ARMY

The section on administration of the training period pointed out that "harsh and authoritarian discipline has no place in a citizen army.

"The encouragement of initiative and self-reliance with full opportunity for advancement from the ranks is a first requirement of the American army.

"Conscripted men should be guaranteed both in selection and training against discrimination because of race, creed, nationality or any other reason. The civil rights of conscripted men, such as the right to vote, must be protected. Communication with families and unions must not be interfered with."

Illinois, Gotham CIO Groups Draft '41 Program

New York, Jan. 11.—Gov. Herbert Lehman was asked today to take the lead in a state legislative program to guarantee labor's rights.

Pres. Joseph Curran and Sec. Saul Mills of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council warned the governor that "there are those who declare that the successful prosecution of the national defense program demands the contraction of civil rights, the sacrifice of present living standards, the cessation of all further social progress and the restriction of the rights of labor.

"The vast majority of our people reject this un-American doctrine and the unfair practices flowing from it; no matter how cleverly they may be concealed by protestations of patriotism."

MAIN POINTS

Main points in the CIO recommendations included strict limitation on the activities of special police and Home Guard units to prevent their use for anti-labor purposes; guarantees of the right to picket, distribute literature and hold meetings through amendment of the Civil Rights Law; abolition of blue-ribbon juries; guaranteeing seamen the right to vote; regulating the conduct of special legislative investigating committees; and prohibiting, through heavy fines on employers, discrimination by reason of race, creed, color or political opinions.

The council also urged passage of a state wage-hour and Walsh-Healey law, ratification of the child labor amendment and adoption of a rent-control law.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 11.—A 12-point legislative program designed to protect and expand labor's rights under the national defense set-up was announced here today by Ray Edmundson, state CIO director, in behalf of CIO affiliates in Illinois.

In making public the labor planks as the state's general assembly convened here, Edmundson said he hoped it would "strengthen national defense, encourage patriotism and intensify the democratic faith of the people of Illinois.

NO. 1 PLANK

Plank No. 1 is a demand for enactment of a Soldiers and Sailors Job Guarantee Act to insure return to their employment with full rights and priviliges for all service men. The right of service men to vote in all state, county and municipal elections is also advocated.

Others planks calls for liberalization of the unemployment compensation act; restrictions upon the power of state courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes; state labor relations and wage-hour laws; repeal of the sales tax on food; a state constitutional convention; a wage guarantee law; adequate relief; liberalization of old age assistance; and guaranteed vacations with pay.

Hit Brasshats' Scheme to Cut Seamen's Pay

Washington, Jan. 11.—Congressional proposals for the establishment of a Naval Reserve in which all American seamen would be included were attacked by the CIO executive board here as instituting "a fascist system of control of labor in the maritime industry and in all probability will be the first step in extending similar control over all labor."

The resolution pointed out that attacks on the organized maritime workers "usually occur when the unions are undertaking organizational drives or when negotiations for increased wages and better conditions are being entered into."

The Naval Reserve proposal suggested by Rep. Dirksen of Illinois subjects seamen "in fact . . . to military control, reduces their wages to less than one-half of what they are now receiving and abolishes the unions in the industry," the resolution said.

The CIO Board also called for the inclusion of maritime workers in the coverage of the unemployment compensation system, and quoted from statements of Pres. Roosevelt in 1939 and 1941 for the need of expanding that system.

"The effect of the war on shipping has not only drastically curtailed employment in the American merchant marine," the Board pointed out, "but threatens an even greater curtailment during the inevitable post-war depression."

Construction Union Lauded By Board

Washington, Jan. 11.—Pledges of support to the United Construction Workers were made in a resolution passed by unanimous vote of the CIO Executive Board meeting here.

The Board's resolution, after pointing to the huge amount of building now going on in connection with the defense program and other industrial expansion, declared:

"The affiliates of the CIO pledge their complete and full cooperation to such organizing efforts, promise to give their full backing to the United Construction Workers in all respects, and condemn local agreements with AFL craft unions which prevent this cooperation and aid."

The resolution also attacked AFL building trades racketeering, stating, "The UCWOC offers to the construction workers the only democratic union available to them with an elimination of craft jurisdictional disputes and racketeering." It urged the UCWOC to "extend its organizing efforts among the construction workers employed by contractors in the mass production plants."

Harvester Strike Ends

Fort Wayne, Ind., Jan. 11.—The nine-day strike of 2,000 employes of the Intl. Harvester Co. plant ended here as the union, a local of the CIO United Automobile Workers, voted to accept a company contract offer.

The strike was called after the firm had delayed for months accepting the union's offers for wage increases and a contract.

CIO Board Urges Wage Increases, Recognition of Labor's Interests

Asks More Legislation For Workers

Washington, Jan. 11.—Constant vigilance to protect labor's gains already won and a determination to go ahead to further progress marked the Federal and state legislative program unanimously adopted by the CIO Executive Board meeting here.

Vigilance is especially needed now, the Board declared, while "certain vicious elements are attempting to play upon the fears and emotions of the people in order to impose their policies of reaction and repression." These elements, the Board made clear, are trying to use the defense program as a mask for their reactionary schemes.

First item in the CIO program for the coming session of Congress was defense of the Wagner Act from crippling amendments.

"The numerous proposals which have emanated from the diverse enemies of labor restricting the right to organize or the right to strike in any industries must be fought and defeated," the program stated. "The imposition of any such repressive legislation upon the workers of the nation will constitute a denial of the very democratic institutions which all Americans are determined to preserve."

MURRAY STATEMENT

This statement was backed up by Pres. Philip Murray in a press conference following the Board meeting, where he said in reply to a question on the right to strike:

"I do not think that labor should be asked to lay aside the right to strike for redress of wrongs imposed on it by employers. We are not prepared to yield and we are not going to yield the right of the workers of this nation to strike against injustices that may be heaped upon them."

WAGE-HOUR ACT

The CIO program called for defense of the Wage-Hour and Walsh Healey Acts, pointing out that both provided minimum protection and that neither of them imposed rigid limits on the number of hours that could be worked, provided overtime is paid.

The defense program, in spite of its huge expenditures, will leave many millions of able workers

Vote Support To Miners

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The CIO Executive Board today had "pledged complete support to John L. Lewis, Philip Murray, Thomas Kennedy and the United Mine Workers of America in their coming negotiations."

The UMWA national contracts in bituminous and anthracite expire April 1, and negotiations will probably start next month in New York City.

Win 2nd Poll At Campbell Soup Plant

Camden, N. J., Jan. 11.—The CIO won a major election victory here when employes of the Campbell Soup Co. voted by a more than 2-1 majority for the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers as their sole bargaining agency.

The ballot count, delayed for two weeks while votes were collected from 35 employes now serving in the army, showed:

CIO	1,918
Independent	886
Neither	105

The victory was the second won by the CIO affiliate at the Campbell firm, one of the largest canners in the country. A few months ago UCAPAWA scored an easy win at the firm's Chicago plant.

Urge Rise In Public Wages

Washington, Jan. 11.—The CIO Executive Board, at its meeting here, urged the government to embark on a program of wage increases for its employes, and hailed income-lifting efforts of the CIO's United Federal Workers and State, County & Municipal Workers.

Demands U.S. Cease Aiding Law Breakers

Washington, Jan. 11—Sharp reiteration of the CIO demand that the U. S. government stop giving contracts to lawbreakers such as Bethlehem Steel, Henry Ford and others marked the two-day session of the CIO Executive Board here.

The Board's resolution, after pointing out that these labor enemies are still getting fat from arms orders despite statements of the Defense Commission, renewed the CIO's call to Pres. Roosevelt to issue an executive order putting a stop to the practice.

This order, the Board said, has perfectly sound legal grounds, as shown by statements of the U. S. Attorney-General and the Comptroller-General, to the effect that contracts could be denied to lawbreakers.

NEEDS CLARIFICATION

Following up the Board's statement, Pres. Philip Murray elaborated in a press conference on the position of the CIO.

The new order of President Roosevelt setting up a super-Defense Board consisting of Wm. S. Knudsen, Sidney Hillman and the Secretaries of the Navy and War "needs clarification" before it can be considered to cover the contracts question, Murray said.

"I am not sure from the order whether it will be the purpose of the new Commission to continue or discontinue giving government contracts to law violators," he said. "When we have clarification of the order we can discuss it more intelligently."

Declaring that labor is concerned in seeing that defense needs are supplied, Murray pointed out that the best way to do it is to see that labor's rights are fully maintained. Vital to this is the denial of contracts to firms that have openly and consistently violated labor laws.

UNUSED CAPACITY

"There is no organized group that has offered sounder or more constructive plans for acceleration of the defense program than the CIO," he said, in referring to the Industry Councils plan and the plan for airplane production offered to the U. S. during the past two weeks.

These two plans would turn the

CIO Officials On Radio Jan. 19

Washington, Jan. 11.—Leading representatives of the CIO will discuss the CIO's Contribution to National Defense on a coast-to-coast program to be heard over the Columbia Broadcasting System on Sunday, Jan. 19, at 2 P. M., eastern standard time.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has been invited to head the list of speakers on the half-hour program, it was announced here. Others scheduled to talk are CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas, head of the United Automobile Workers; Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the United Mine Workers; and David McDonald of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Fights Foes of 40-Hr. Week

Newark, N. J., Jan. 11 — CIO unions throughout New Jersey will resist any attempts to lengthen the work week or to weaken existing provisions of the law in regard to overtime pay for extra work, Peter J. Flynn, executive secretary of the state CIO Industrial Union Council declared today.

In his first statement to the press since his election as executive secretary, Flynn warned that "the CIO will resist every attempt, under the guise of national defense, to abolish labor's gains."

Cites High Profits Of Corporations

Washington, Jan. 11. — A policy of seeking wage improvements through collective bargaining, and of protecting labor from any attempt to deprive of "a fair share" of the increased earnings which are pouring into corporate treasuries as a result of the national defense effort, was urged on CIO-affiliated unions by the Executive Board this week.

After citing the maldistribution of income disclosed by recent Social Security Board figures — which showed that more than one-third of the people covered by that program had incomes of $500 or less—the CIO leaders urged a wage policy based on these two objectives:

"1. To continue to strive on the basis of our economic strength and through collective bargaining to improve the wage structure for our members and obtain improved working conditions. This involves obtaining for the workers an increasing share of the mounting profits which are being enjoyed by industry through increased business and technological improvements.

NO INFLATION

"Such increases in wage earners income can be readily attained without necessitating increases in the cost of living, or in the price structure. These wage increases will not cause an upward spiral of inflation.

"Labor also rejects any proposal which would prevent the workers from receiving a larger participation in the bounties of the nation, such as the suggestion that wages should be tied to the cost of living index.

"2. To guard against any action which, under the pretense of furthering national defense, will seek to deprive the workers of their fair share of these increased earnings or to deny them their fundamental right to organize into unions of their own choice or to strike. The protection of these rights is necessary to assure the workers that they will not be relegated to the position of economic slavery.

"The American people cherish their democratic institutions and PLAN 1941 CIO POLICIES: Members of the Executive Board of the CIO gathered in Washington January 8-9 to determine the organization's stand on current union problems and to map the legislative program for the new year.

CIO Takes Lead

The recent meeting of the executive board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations once more revealed the leading role which progressive labor plays in our national life.

Millions of people have come to look to the CIO for leadership in combatting reaction; in defending democratic rights and civil liberties; in advancing the economic welfare of the people; and in pointing the way forward in social progress.

The CIO took the lead in all these matters at its board meeting.

(1) It proclaimed its intention to press for wage increases, to reduce present inequalities between huge and mounting profits on the one hand and low wages on the other, and to raise the American standard of living.

(2) It adopted a comprehensive legislative program for 1941, designed to protect social gains and civil rights and to extend social and progressive legislation.

This program calls for vigorous defense of the right to organize and the right to strike, which are threatened by a number of anti-union and anti-strike bills and by destructive amendments to the Wagner labor act.

The CIO legislative program calls for the defense and expansion of the wage-hour, Walsh-Healey, housing and social security legislation. It demands a new and broadened work program to provide jobs at decent wages for all the unemployed, and increased aid for youth.

It renews the CIO demand for more adequate pensions of $60 a month at 60, for a real national health program and for passage of the mine safety bill.

Concern for democratic rights is shown in the call for abolition of state poll taxes; for passage of anti-lynching legislation; for legislation against labor spies, strikebreaking agencies and other oppressive labor practices; and for opposition to wire-tapping and the many other suppressive laws threatened by the war hysteria.

Finally the CIO legislative program calls for equalizing the present enormous and increasing tax burden, by genuine excess profits taxation which will really hit war profiteers and by lessening the burden on low-income groups.

(3) The CIO board presented definite proposals to insure fair and equal treatment for conscripts; to insure against discrimination in the draft; and to provide that conscripts be "chosen and trained in a spirit of democracy."

(4) It again called upon the President to issue an executive order requiring compliance with labor laws on the part of corporations which are waxing fat on government contracts.

(5) By formally approving and adopting Pres. Murray's plan for industry councils and a better administration of defense production, and the Reuther plan for using auto plant facilities in airplane production, the CIO board emphasized the constructive contribution which labor can make to the solution of practical industrial problems; and its impatience with the present mal-administration and maldistribution of contracts which creates bottlenecks on the one hand, and leaves millions of workers and hundreds of plants idle on the other.

"Not only has labor a right to organize, but also it is socially desirable that it do so, because of the need for collective action in the maintenance of standards of living."—From resolution adopted by the Federal Council of Churches.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE FABLE about the dog in the manger has been told many times. But no effort has been made to do justice to the dog's point of view, which is here recorded for the first time.

When interviewed by your reporter, the dog was reclining as usual in the horse's manger. He was licking his chops after an excellent meal and inclined to be philosophical.

"Tell your readers," he said, "that the root of all this trouble between the horse and myself is greed and selfishness and lack of consideration for the rights of others."

"But that's just what they think already," your reporter interjected.

The dog in the manger ignored the interruption and proceeded:

"I refer of course to property rights, such as I enjoy in this manger. Now I have nothing against good hard-working horses, so long as they stick to their work.

"But this particular horse has come under the influence of subversive union elements, which have played upon his equine greed and selfishness.

"I have told him that the times call for sacrifices and uninterrupted production. But he insists on quitting work every evening and disturbing the peace of this stable by demanding what he calls his share of these oats of mine.

"He has even threatened to strike me with his nose, saying he is hungry and can't work unless he is properly fed. His attitude is unpatriotic, to say the least, and I am demanding that he be securely haltered away from my manger, in the interests of national defense."

No Coincidence

If the original dog in the manger has not received a good press heretofore, the same cannot be said for those American employers who have amassed huge fortunies by following his example.

They even have a press of their own which gives little else but their point of view. It specializes in thinking up arguments why labor is always "unreasonable," "ill-advised", "radical", "unpatriotic" or worse, when it demands wage increases which may infringe on their profits.

The National Maritime Union, in a recent statement, describes concerted newspaper attacks on it as "a natural preliminary to the opening of wage negotiations with the operators."

It does not consider it a coincidence that such attacks always occur, in an effort to discredit or disrupt the union, when it is engaged in negotiating for wage increases.

Similarly with other unions, and with labor generally—one does not have to be unduly cynical to note that anti-union propaganda, demands for anti-strike legislation, arguments about the dangers of inflation, and lectures about the need for sacrifice etc. are always most prevalent at times when labor is clearly entitled to increased wages and in a position to secure them.

The CIO Position

The statement on wage policy adopted by the recent meeting of the CIO executive board cuts cleanly through all this dog-in-the-manger propaganda.

It points out that most manufacturers are enjoying enormously increased and constantly rising profits from the defense program; while millions upon millions of workers are still on a near-starvation wage level.

It demands for the workers "an increasing share of the mounting profits which are being enjoyed by industry through increased business and technological improvements."

The CIO statement also notes that "there are significant signs of a serious rise in the cost of living beginning in the coming spring."

Labor's case for increased wages is so clear and sound and obvious that it is being countered by indirect propaganda and attack rather than by direct argument.

One of the few arguments made is that labor will gain little from wage increases, because they will be immediately passed on in higher prices and will cause a general inflation.

But the CIO statement points out that this is not necessary, since wartime profits are now so great that substantial wage increases can be paid from them without any need for increasing prices.

At the same time, the CIO statement reveals the real motivation for present demands for anti-union and anti-strike laws. It calls on labor "to guard against any action which, under the pretense of furthering national defense, will seek to deprive the workers of their fair share of these increased earnings or to deny them their fundamental right to organize into unions of their own choice or to strike."

The CIO attacks present dog-in-the-manger policies in another way as well.

The plan devised by Pres. Murray for the administration of defense production is intended to correct the present selfish and stupid maldistribution of government contracts, under which bottlenecks are created in some big companies while millions of workers and hundreds of plants are idle elsewhere.

Board Adopts Legislative Program

without jobs, the program pointed out, in calling for adequate WPA appropriations to provide work at decent wages for all who cannot find employment in private industry, and for an adequate youth program to help solve the plight of millions of young people who have never found a place in economic society.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The CIO program paid particular attention to the defense of workers' rights and the extension of democracy, demanding abolition of the poll tax, passage of the anti-lynching bill, protesting the wiretapping bill, and demanding passage of the anti-lynch bill and the LaFollette-Thomas act to prohibit use of labor spies, industrial armies, teargas, etc., against workers.

"The spread of dictatorships abroad and hysterical fears at home must only serve to reaffirm the abiding faith of the American people in the great principles of civil rights and civil liberties embodied in the Bill of Rights and in the social legislation upholding the dignity of the common man," the program said.

MINE SAFETY

Action to end the appalling slaughter of miners in coal mine disasters was urged in a demand that Congress stop stalling on the Mine Safety Inspection bill, designed to cut the number of mine explosions through imposing Federal inspection standards.

The program also called for "an adequate supply of decent, safe and sanitary housing," for more adequate social security benefits, including $60 a month for persons 60 years of age or over, for a national health program to bring medical care to all Americans, and for adequate benefits to the disabled.

TAXATION

The present tax structure lays the burden of financing the U. S. most heavily on those least able to bear it, the program explained, pointing out that consumer taxes and income taxes on low incomes have increased enormously in recent years, while huge incomes are left comparatively untouched.

STATE LEGISLATURES

Turning to problems of state legislation, the program urged CIO affiliates to be on guard against "model" state bills designed to repress labor, to demand labor protective laws from state assemblies, and to press for state acts to implement the Federal program.

Washington CIO to Meet March 1

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 11.—A call for the convention of the Washington State Industrial Union Council in Tacoma on March 1 was sent out today by J. C. Lewis, veteran United Mine Workers official who is administering the affairs of the council.

Lewis was appointed to the task of straightening out the council's affairs by Ex-Pres. John L. Lewis during the CIO convention at Atlantic City, N. J., in November.

Scheduled to meet last autumn, the convention was postponed when a dispute arose in the credentials committee over the seating of a number of the delegates.

Protest Use of Police In Hosiery Strike

Burlington, N. C., Jan. 11.—(FP).—Efforts of the North Carolina State Highway Patrol to help the Wilson Hosiery Co. break a 3-month strike of employes in protest against a wage cut have so far failed.

The CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers, representing the workers, offered to resume operations at the reduced wage rate pending a consent election on bargaining agents. If the union won, the dispute would be submitted to arbitration. The company refused this proposal.

CIO Affirms Stand On U. S. Contracts

large proportion of industrial capacity now unused to defense needs, Murray explained, pointing out that only 30 per cent of some 12,000 industrial plants suited to arms production have so far received government orders.

This is the real defense bottleneck, he added, in referring to hundreds of steel and other plants under agreement with the CIO that have received no orders, while lawbreakers such as Bethlehem were choked with contracts they could not fill.

RIGHT TO STRIKE

The needs of the arms program do not require labor to give up any of its rights, Murray said in reply to questions on the right to strike; and the CIO "is not going to yield the right of the workers of this nation to strike against injustices that may be heaped upon them."

Responsibility for lags in defense production rests squarely on the shoulders of those who let contracts—the Army and the Navy Departments in Washington—Murray declared in answering newspapermens' questions.

Murray revealed that the Executive Board had unanimously endorsed the Industry Council's plan and the 500-airplane production plan.

Asked how the plans had been received by President Roosevelt when he presented them at the White House, Murray replied:

"The matter is under consideration, I am told by the Administration."

are determined to preserve democracy. This end is furthered through the firm policy of extending and improving the standard of living of the workers through the instrumentality of powerful and democratic industrial unions. Upon no other economic policy can a sound and stable national economy be constructed."

The CIO policy statement said that corporation reports "reveal a story of constantly rising and inflated profits. This has occurred through increased industrial activity, technological improvements and forced speed-up for the workers.

HIGHER PROFITS

"It is estimated that profits of leading manufacturing corporations for the first nine months of 1940 were 42 per cent above a similar period of 1939. Nineteen thirty-nine's profits were 100 per cent higher than those of 1938 for the same corporations.

"The enormous expenditures now being made by the federal government coupled with exemption from profit limitations, high amortization allowances and furnishing of plants by the government, portend profits in the near future higher than in any period of recent business history.

"At the same time there are significant signs of a serious rise in the cost of living beginning in the coming Spring. This will bear first upon the working people of the nation."

CIO 1941 Legislative Program

Following is the complete text of the CIO's Legislative Program for 1941, as recommended by the Committee on Legislation and unanimously approved by the Executive Board on Jan. 9:

LABOR during the coming months must have two primary objectives regarding its legislative program. First, constant vigilance must be exercised to protect the hard-won legislative gains which have been made during the past few years. Second, labor must continue to march onward with a legislative program calling for extended social and progressive legislation for the protection of the people of the nation. These problems will arise in relation to both federal and state legislation.

At the present time the American people are being called upon to defend their basic institutions and our democratic way of life. During this period of stress certain vicious elements are attempting to play upon the fears and emotions of the people in order to impose their policies of reaction and repression of the interests of the people. The legislative program of the CIO is offered as a contribution toward the preservation of what the people seek to defend.

On the basis of this policy the following legislative program is proposed:

National Legislation

1. THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

This legislation continues to be the most important in assuring labor unions the right to exist and to continue to live through the protection of the right of workers to organize into unions of their own choosing and to engage in collective bargaining. Labor must demand that this legislation be kept intact without amendments.

The numerous proposals which have emanated from the diverse enemies of labor restricting the right to organize or the right to strike in any industries must be fought and defeated. The imposition of any such repressive legislation upon the workers of the nation will constitute a denial of the very democratic institutions which all Americans are determined to preserve.

2. WAGE-HOUR AND WALSH-HEALEY ACTS

The Wage-Hour law was aimed to protect the most exploited segment of the workers of the nation. At the present time its minimum wage merely provides for 30c per hour. Industry committees operating under the law may fix the wage up to 40c per hour. Certainly these standards do not impose any serious burden on American industry. The maximum hours per week is set at 40 hours. However, this limitation in no way imposes any undue burden or any unsurmountable obstacles because overtime is permitted provided time and one-half is paid for such overtime.

Labor must continue to vigorously oppose any amendments to the Wage-Hour law which would in any way detract from the protection now given to labor under such legislation. In addition, vigorous efforts must be made to extend the protection of this law to millions who have not yet enjoyed its benefits.

The Walsh-Healey Act protects workers employed by those who receive government contracts in the maintenance of an 8-hour day and 40-hour week and of prevailing minimum wages for each industry. This legislation does not limit the number of working hours but merely protects workers in assuring them payment of time and one-half for overtime.

3. WPA APPROPRIATIONS

In spite of increased appropriations for national defense, millions of able-bodied workers are unable to find jobs in private industry. Ominous rumblings have been heard already from the "economy bloc" whose efforts will be directed against any adequate appropriations for the unemployed.

The WPA must be provided with an adequate supplemental appropriation for the rest of the fiscal year to provide at least a continuance of the present level of jobs with wages adjusted upward to meet increasing needs. For the coming year a new and broadened work program should be instituted, paying adequate wages and without requirements of sponsorship or relief status. Such a program should provide work for all able-bodied workers who cannot get jobs. Comprehensive youth program should be enacted which will provide not only full opportunity for education and training but also give substance to the fundamental right of everyone to a job.

4. HOUSING

One of the great unfilled needs of the American people is an adequate supply of decent, safe and sanitary housing. The existing program of government subsidized construction designed for the lowest income groups must continue to be the backbone of any national housing program. The United States Housing Authority program must be enlarged through the adoption of legislation for broader than any considered thus far, with vastly increased appropriations. Furthermore, in order to extend the program to the lowest income groups in all regions, such changes should be made in the law as may be necessary to reach the population of the milling towns, mining towns, and rural areas.

5. FEDERAL MINE INSPECTION BILL

In the mining industry many thousands of coal miners have lost their lives because of inadequate safety controls, and these deaths could have been prevented by the passage of a law providing for the federal inspection of mines.

The CIO must vigorously aid the efforts of the United Mine Workers of America in obtaining the passage of an adequate and satisfactory federal mining inspection bill.

6. SOUTHERN POLL TAX

The recent congressional elections have emphasized the fact that certain reactionary congressmen are able to maintain themselves in power as representatives of a minority only because the poll tax disfranchises the majority of the citizens living in their districts.

The CIO will continue to seek the enactment of legislation intended to prohibit the imposition of State poll taxes as a condition to the exercise of the franchise in federal elections.

7. LaFOLLETTE-THOMAS OPPRESSIVE LABOR PRACTICES BILL

After several years of public hearings by the LaFollette Senate Civil Liberties Committee, legislation was proposed by this Committee which would prohibit the use of labor spies, strikebreaking agencies, armed guards and industrial munitions in order to put an end to the brutal practices of anti-labor corporations against the workers.

No just or logical reason has ever been urged in opposition to this legislation. It has been stymied in Congress in the past by being smothered to death by the reactionaries. Labor must press only the more vigorously for the early enactment of this legislation.

8. SOCIAL SECURITY

The American people are entitled to a system of real security for aged people. The present dual system of state old-age pensions and federal old-age insurance does not take care of our needs in a satisfactory way and does not exhaust the limit of our resources. The CIO must continue to press for the adoption of an old-age pension program based upon a flat pension of $60 per month, a supplementary allowance to wives up to a maximum of $90 per month, for each married couple with an age limit of 60 years, and eligibility to all persons, administered through a single federal system. Large groups of American workers who are not yet covered under this legislation should be brought within the system. The additional funds necessary for this program must be secured by taxes upon the higher income brackets and not imposed upon the workers.

9. HEALTH AND TOTAL OR PERMANENT DISABILITY

One-third of the American people now receive no medical care worthy of its name and the wage earners and low income groups cannot afford adequate medical care because the costs of medical care are disorganized and excessive. Further, the incidence of total and permanent disability is now thrown entirely upon the workers and no adequate provision is made to meet their problem.

Legislation must be enacted which would:

a. Enact a national health program including insurance for medical care on a federal basis covering all persons, free medical care for those who cannot afford insurance, cash benefits for temporary disability to workers, and the construction of new hospitals in rural and urban areas throughout the country; and

b. Establish a system providing for cash benefits in cases of total or permanent disability as part of the federal old-age pension program.

10. ANTI-LYNCHING

Lynching, which has been a bar to the extension of democracy to millions of Negro workers and underprivileged white workers, must be eliminated. The CIO will continue to offer its unstinted support to the early enactment by Congress of anti-lynching legislation.

11. CIVIL LIBERTIES

The gains that have been made in the protection of civil liberties through the Supreme Court decisions enforcing constitutional rights must not be curtailed by Congress. The spread of dictatorships abroad and hysterical fears at home must only serve to reaffirm the abiding faith of the American people in the great principles of civil rights and civil liberties embodied in the Bill of Rights and in the social legislation upholding the dignity of the common man.

The CIO pledges itself to the maintenance and extension of our democratic rights and liberties and will combat any attempted legislative invasion of the civil liberties of any part of the American people.

In the last session of Congress, a bill was introduced which may well have resulted in serious suppression of civil liberties. This bill authorized the FBI to make investigation by wire-tapping and other means into what the Department of Justice deems to be interference with the national defense. While the Attorney General has attempted to safeguard the use of wire-tapping by requiring a certificate justifying its use, there is no safeguard upon the broad authority to make other investigations. The bill is a dangerous invasion of civil liberties and constitutional guarantees against unlawful searches and must be fought and defeated.

Two tax laws have been passed by the last Congress. The first was a revision of the income tax and federal sales taxes to raise approximately one billion dollars annually. One-half of this burden was placed upon wage earners and low income groups under $1,500 a year. This is the group that receives less than one-third of the national income, yet they are made to assume nearly one-half of the tax burden. The second tax law was an alleged excess profits tax. Under this excess profits tax bill, very few of our large monopoly corporations will actually pay any taxes because they are given such liberal exemptions. While a single worker who receives an income of over $800 a year must now pay income taxes, corporations do not pay any excess profits until they have earned more than 8 per cent of their capital, or more money than they have been making in the past.

In addition, the excess profits bill met the demands of industry that its huge profits from government defense orders remain unimpaired through special dispensation by way of liberal amortization provisions and elimination of previous legislative enactments limiting the amount of profits under government contracts.

The CIO calls for a revision of our tax structure by way of enactment of sound tax legislation, including the elimination of all forms of consumer taxes, direct or indirect, the imposition of a genuine excess profits tax, an end to tax exempt securities, progressive tax rates upon upper bracket corporate and personal incomes, increased inheritance taxes, and a tightening up of administrative loopholes.

State Legislation

1. A series of proposed model State bills will be sponsored and supported by the CIO local and State Industrial Union Councils in the various states in which the legislatures will be in session this year. These bills will include the following:

a. Limiting the authority of courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes;

b. Guarantees of collective bargaining in state contracts;

c. Establishing State Labor Relations Board to prevent unfair labor practices;

d. Regulating and controlling the use of Home or National Guards;

e. State minimum wage and maximum hour law;

f. Protecting the payment of wages by employers to employes;

g. Regulation of private detectives;

h. Prohibting evictions of persons who are unemployed involved in labor disputes;

i. Regulating use of deputy sheriffs in labor disputes;

j. Protection of exercise of civil liberties;

k. Expanding coverage and benefits under State unemployment compensation laws.

2. Several model State bills which were drafted by a Federal-State Conference in Washington of representatives of different Governors, have recently been submitted to the various State officials. These bills, under an alleged protection of national defense to prevent sabotage and to provide for the use of Home Guards, may constitute one of the most serious threats against organized labor. This proposed legislation will undoubtedly result in serious inroads in the full exercise of civil liberties, restrict and possibly prohibit efforts of unions to organize unorganized workers and curtail if not eliminate the constitutional and God-given right of workers to exercise their right to strike in order not to be relegated to a position of economic slavery.

These bills must be fought and defeated in every State Legislature where the attempt will be made to obtain their enactment.

LUCKILY ALIVE: A cave-in held these miners imprisoned for 19 hours in a McIntyre, Pa., coal mine until a rescue squad got them out on New Year's Eve. But hundreds of other miners have been less lucky, and Congress still sits on the CIO-supported federal coal mine safety bill.

CIO Rubber Union Launches Big Drive In Goodyear Plants

AKRON, Ohio., Jan. 11.—Goodyear, the only major rubber company not under CIO contract, is now the focus of a nationwide drive launched by the United Rubber Workers.

The campaign, aimed to get 100 per cent organization in all Goodyear plants, preliminary to securing a written agreement, was announced in a joint statement issued this week by URW President S. H. Dalrymple and CIO Director Allan S. Haywood.

"Representatives have already been assigned to every Goodyear plant in the United States," the statement declared. "Both the United Rubber Workers and the CIO have assigned a sufficient number of men to start the drive. More will be added as the occasion demands. This staff will be supplemented by volunteer organizers in every plant."

Goodyear has plants in Akron, St. Mary's, Ohio, Gadsden, Ala., Los Angeles, Cal., Cumberland, Md., Jackson, Mich., and Windsor, Vt.

NAME DAVIDSON

The drive will be under the direction of Robert J. Davidson, CIO field representative, who will have complete charge of all organizational activities in the Goodyear plants.

Stressing the importance of aid from all URW locals and other CIO affiliates, the union officials stated:

"Plans for cooperation in the various Goodyear plant drives have been made and will be taken up with all locals by the representatives assigned to the various plants. These will call for assistance in contacting Goodyear workers, in arranging meetings, in distributing handbills and other work. We expect a good response from all locals."

Declaring that Goodyear was the No. 1 labor problem in the rubber industry, Davidson pointed out that the requirements of national defense demand a written contract with the company.

"We are pledged to 100 per cent cooperation with the defense program," he said. "We are anxious and ready to meet our responsibilities in that connection, but so long as Goodyear maintains a dictatorial policy in regard to its workers, the union is not in a position to give the full cooperation which it wants to give.

"Futhermore, only through a written agreement can responsible relationships between the company and the union be set up. Then both can operate in full cooperation to the benefit of the workers, the company and the country at large.'

President Dalrymple said that "organization of Goodyear is our main job this year. We shall do all we can to get done. The International will bend every effort to bring the drive to a successful conclusion. We are informing all our local unions and our field representatives that the Goodyear drive has the right of way. All the departments in the union have arranged their schedules to give every assistance to the campaign."

Name Selly To Defense Board

Washington, Jan. 11.—At the recommendation of CIO President Philip Murray, Joseph Selly, acting president of the American Communications Association has been appointed to represent the CIO on the Labor Advisory Committee of the Defense Communications Board.

The DCB was set up recently under an executive order from the White House with the stated purpose of tying the communications industry into the national defense program.

Labor Dept. Backs Social Laws; Justice Dept. Quiet on Key Issues

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Two U. S. government reports came off the press this week—one from the U. S. Dept. of Justice and the other from the Labor Dept.

The Labor Department's report is the shorter of the two, and is put out in simple mimeographed form. It records, among other things, the fact that industrial accidents cause 16,000 deaths a year, described as a "labor wastage, particularly of skilled workers," and outlines a plan for cutting it down through the work of a 24-man "National Committee for the Conservation of Manpower in Defense Industries."

On labor relations, the report notes that seven conciliators are at work, commenting: "American labor is cooperating with employers and will cooperate with all responsible groups to avoid delays tand interruptions, to increase production and efficiency, and to preserve human welfare and labor standards during the defense program."

The report is emphatic on the subject of the working week, pointing out that there has tbeen "some uninformed comment" to the effect that the work week should be lengthened for defense, and nailing once again the fable that the 40-hour week caused the downfall of France.

On employment, the report finds the outlook "bright,' making the flat assertion that the defense program "should break the back of unemployment before the end of 1941," since it will create five or six million jobs.

(The current issue of the CIO's Economic Outlook, released last week, states that an increase of three million jobs in 1941 is "a generous estimate".)

Strikes have declined almost 50 per cent between 1933 and 1939, the report notes, citing 565 per million organized workers in 1933 and 290 per million last year.

JUSTICE

National defense is also the keynote of the Justice Department's report, which uses it in the lead paragraph and refers to it liberally throughout the text. Defense problems are taking and will take an increasing share of the Department's time, the report notes, adding that they must be solved within the framework of civil rights. However, though civil rights must be observed, their "due observance does not detract from the efficacy of our work."

How far "due observance" goes can perhaps be gauged from the relative amount of space given in the report to the civil liberties section of the Department, compared to that given to J. Edgar Hoover's FBI and other divisions. Civil liberties gets exactly one half page; the FBI 26; and wiretapping, which the Attorney-General favors, two.

ONLY THREE CASES

The Civil Liberties unit handled three cases during the year, the FBI 16,885 on national defense alone. The "regular" appropriation of the FBI for the year was $7,300,000. The appropriation for the Civil Liberties unit is not given.

An important part of the FBI's report concerns activity against espionage, sabotage probes of alleged violations of the antitrust laws, chiefly by unions, and "subversive activities." Close to 300 surveys of factories have been made and "recommendations made to the plant officials designed to maintain a maximum of protection."

MUCH OMITTED

The head G man's section of the report says nothing about the General Intelligence Division whose functions Hoover described in Congressional testimony last year as including an alphabetical and geographical index of "subversive individuals," finger printing industrial workers and reporting to their employers, inviting reports from employers and others on alleged "subversive individuals" and other similar activities.

The section on enforcement of the antitrust laws, written by Thurman Arnold, head of the Antitrust Division, covers seven pages of the report. It lists 33 as the number of cases disposed of during the year, with 2,485 defendants brought into court.

It does not mention the word "labor union" once, though it spends considerable space discussing antitrust suits brought against companies.

Girdler Must Pay $30,000 to Miners

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 — Republic Steel is still shelling out money to pay for past mistakes made during the days it was fighting the CIO tooth and nail.

The National Labor Relations Board announced last week that the corporation had agreed to pay $30,000 in back wages to 45 members of the United Mine Workers whom it fired from its Davidson and Trotter mines in Fayette County, Pa.

Just before Christmas, Republic came across with vacation money for between 6,000 and 7,000 workers estimated to total $350,000. This was vacation pay for the years 1939-40 due members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committees involved in the "Little Steel" strike of 1937.

Under the terms of the stipulation in the miners' case, the corporation agreed to cease interfering with the rights of its employes to belong to a union and to stop discouraging membership in UMW Locals 6320 and 6547. It also agreed to abolish the Workmen's Brotherhood, stooge union, as a collective bargaining agency at the two mines.

Ford's Thugs Launch New Attack on Union

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Jan. 11.—Another attack on union men in Ford's River Rouge plant this week-end somewhat beclouded Edsel Ford's public goodwill gesture of offering to stop auto production and produce bombers for the Army.

Ford's statement, which was a good deal more vague than the Detroit newspaper headlines gave it credit for, came just at a time when Harry Bennett had put the company on a bad spot by denying he had promised Federal Conciliator James Dewey that several hundred Rouge and Lincoln workers laid off in the last two months would be rehired immediately after January 1.

Right after Edsel's statement, a company thug attacked Clayton Sova and John Nalepa, union members and Lincoln workers who had been called back to work at Rouge.

BADLY BRUISED

Both men were badly bruised about the face and Sova's back was hurt. The union is seeking a John Doe warrant for the arrest of their assailant on a charge of felonious assault.

Sova and Nalepa were members of a union committee of Lincoln workers who last Monday conferred with I. A. Capizzi, Ford's chief counsel, on discriminatory layoffs at the Lincoln plant.

It was the first conference between Ford officials and an official union committee in the Detroit area.

On Tuesday the two men received cards asking them to report to the Ford employment office on Wednesday. At that time they were told to report for work at the Rouge plant Thursday morning. There they went to their assigned jobs and had been working only a few minutes when the company strong-arm man ordered Sova to remove the union cap which he was wearing. When Sova refused, he was attacked and beaten.

The same assailant went to another part of the department where Nalepa was working, out of sight of Sova, and attacked Nalepa after he, too, had refused to remove his cap. Workers separated Nalepa and the strong-arm man and the two union men were taken to the employment office.

After being detained there most of the rest of the day, they were told to report to the Lincoln plant for work Friday morning.

Sova secured the badge number of their assailant, who removed the badge before he attacked Nalepa. Both men say they can identify him.

The attack in the plant ended a week of fast-moving events in the UAW-CIO's campaign to organize Ford, which is being accompanied by a growing nervousness on the part of high company officials at the obvious success of the drive. This has been manifested partly by a rash of full page, nationwide advertising by the company in which it defensively claims its wages are high, working conditions are good and there is no labor trouble.

SUPREME COURT RULES:

Employers Must Sign Contracts

Justices Uphold Labor Board In Major Case

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Employers who stall off union representatives by refusing to sign labor agreements were politely advised this week by the U. S. Supreme Court to go jump in a legal lake.

The decision, delivered unanimously in the case of the H. J. Heinz food products corporation, completely upheld the views of the National Labor Relations Board. The NLRB maintained that collective bargaining isn't bargaining in the eyes of the law when an employer declines to sign a written agreement.

The Supreme Court's ruling was unanimous.

In a second highly-important decision, the high tribunal slapped the knuckles of a lower court judge who, in the Link Belt Co. case, had tried to horn in on the jurisdiction of the Labor Board.

"Congress entrusted the Board, not the courts, with the power to draw inferences from the facts" in Wagner Act cases, Justice William Douglas declared.

STRENGTHENS NLRB

Effect of the Link Belt decision was to strengthen the NLRB's defense against efforts by the lower court judges to overrule their decisions. The principle that only expert administrative agencies are capable of handling highly technical problems in specialized fields has long been advocated by students of government, and was the basis of Pres. Roosevelt's recent veto of the reactionary Walter-Logan bill.

HEINZ CASE

The Heinz case grew out of the corporation's efforts to avoid signing a contract with an AFL union and to promote a company-dominated organization.

"Such refusals have proved fruitful sources of dissatisfaction and disagreement.

"Contrasted with the unilateral statement by the employer of his labor policy, the signed agreement has been regarded as the effective instrument of stabilizing labor relations and preventing, through collective bargaining, strikes and industrial strife. . . .

"A business man who entered into negotiations with another for an agreement having numerous provisions, with the reservation that he would not reduce it to writing or sign it, could hardly be thought to have bargained in good faith.

"This is even more so in the case of an employer who, by his refusal to honor, with his signature, the agreement which he has made with a labor organization, discredits the organization, impairs the bargaining process and tends to frustrate the aims of the statute to secure industrial peace through collective bargaining."

LINK BELT CASE

The Link Belt case involved the CIO Amalgamated Assn. of Iron, Steel & Tin Workers, who were met with the opposition of an "independent" union formed immediately after the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the Wagner Act in 1937.

The NLRB's order for dissolution of the company union was over-ruled in the lower courts, but the Supreme Court ratified the Board's findings and made a number of left-handed pokes at the action of the Court of Appeals.

Asserting that that court "substituted its judgment on disputed facts for the Board's judgment—a power which it has been denied by Congress—," Justice Douglas indicated that the NLRB had done a far superior job of examining the points at issue.

Although the "independent" union appeared to be free from employer control, the Board found plenty of evidence that it had been aided by the firm as a substitute for an old company union. This fact was missed completely by the lower court judges.

"The fact that these forces at work were subtle rather than direct does not mean that they were nonetheless effective," Douglas ruled. "Intimations of an employer's preference, though subtle, may be as potent as outright threats of discharge."

DEFY ICY BLASTS: Despite frigid weather, CIO strikers at the Chicago Molded Plastics Co. are making it hot for their employer, who refused their demands for a union rontract and a badly needed wage increase. Almost two months old; the strike is being conducted by the Natl. Assn. of Die Casting Workers.

Union Asks Army Clean Up AFL Shady Deals

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The attack on shady AFL craft union practices at Army construction projects was renewed today by Chairman A. D. Lewis of the CIO United Construction Workers, who said that work is being denied to thousands of needy persons in St. Charles County, Mo., who are unable to pay AFL work permit fees ranging between $54.50 and $224.

Lewis' letter, addressed to Asst. Sec. of War Robert Patterson, urged "prompt official action to correct a shocking situation prevailing on War Dept. building projects that clearly violates federal labor policy and also militates against efficient prosecution of the national defense program."

AFL craft union czars and building contractors are pulling a squeeze play, Lewis said to avoid the War Dept.'s stated labor policy.

This policy, calling for no discrimination against non-union members, "was suddenly abandoned" after local AFL leaders — who had only 27 members in the county — registered protests.

"Several thousand workers in the community were abruptly informed that they must pay fees to various AFL craft unions if they wished to obtain work or continue working," Lewis said, and the contractor refused employment to "all who did not pay this tribute."

Those who pay the fees receive work permits, rather than union membership, the CIO official pointed out.

"While we make no objection to the payment of legitimate initiation fees by anyone voluntarily wishing to do so for union membership, the exaction of fees ranging from $54.50 for common laborers to $220 for electric welders solely in order that they may have temporary work on a government job seems to us to be in the category of levying an unconscionable tribute on workers in National Defense," he said.

Shipyard Union Offers Plan to Speed Building

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 11.—A program to expedite the construction and repair of ships for national defense purposes, and a resolution declaring it to be against the best interests of the union for Communists, Nazis or Fascists to hold positions of responsibility or authority in any of its branches or subdivisions, were adopted by the General Executive Board of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, CIO.

The quarterly meeting of the board, governing body of 50,000 organized shipyard workers in both private and Navy yards, was convened a month prior to its scheduled date by Pres. John Green, to take action on vital national problems arising from the defense program.

The program to expedite shipbuilding and repair, which was adopted at this meeting, was presented January 6 by Pres. Green to the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee of the National Defense Advisory Commission. Pres. Green and Sec. Van Gelder are the two CIO members on the Stabilization Committee. The program was also submitted to the House Naval Affairs Committee, headed by Congressman Vinson, which has announced a probe of shipbuilding activity for the defense program.

SEVEN-POINT PLAN

The union's program, based on a recognition "of the rights and aspirations of labor as an essential element in maximum efficiency and production," covers seven points, which, the board feels, will assure uninterrupted production in the ship construction and repair industry.

Noting that the union's constitution makes membership open to all without regard to race, creed or political belief, the resolution sharply warned all affiliates that "any member proven guilty of subverting the real purposes of this organization by using the privilege of membership for propagating or furthering the cause of Communism, Nazism, or Fascism" would be expelled.

Decision Vindicates CIO Position, Murray Says

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 — CIO President, Philip Murray, today made the following comment on the United States Supreme Court ruling in the H. J. Heinz Company case:

"The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court upholding the right of the Labor Board to require a company to sign a written contract when an agreement is reached with a labor union, completely vindicates the stand of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the "Little Steel" strike and of the CIO in its relation to a number of other companies as well.

"It affirms the legal status and dignity of collective bargaining agreements, which should obviously be committed to writing if they are entered into in good faith.

"The Supreme Court's decision is a rebuke to the irresponsibility of those companies which have paid lip service to collective bargaining but have provoked industrial stoppages by refusing to carry through the bargaining process to its logical and legal conclusion.

"If recalcitrant employers will now abide by the law, as clearly upheld by the Supreme Court, its ruling will contribute greatly to industrial peace and to the other benefits which flow from the orderly processes of true collective bargaining."

CIO Hails New W. Va. Governor

Morgantown, W. Va., Jan. 11—West Virginia's new governor, M. M. Neely, elected by labor support, will take the oath of office at the State Capitol Monday.

"This is the first time in the history of the State that the powerful coal, financial and utility interests have not had a puppet in the State House," said Forest R. Thompson, editor of the Voice of Labor, here.

The Neely forces completed the rout of the Tories, Thompson said, by reorganizing the State Legislature, and also won the nomination and election of two progressives to the State Supreme Court, H. H. Rose and W. A. Lovins.

Pittsburgh CIO Raps Foes Of Democracy

Pittsburgh, Jan. 11.—The CIO Steel City Industrial Union Council has locked its door against Nazis, Fascsits, Communists, or "agent of any anti-democratic government," through an amendment written into its constitution.

Passed by a 12-to-one majority, the new section in the constitution provides that any person with "ism" affiliations cannot be seated as a delegate to the local body. It also suggests that delegates urge similar action in their own unions.

'DELIBERATE LIES'

P. T. Fagan, president of the SCIUC, told delegates that the "enemies of organized labor who spread the false publicity that the CIO tolerates Communism or any other 'ism' will hereafter be spreading deliberate lies."

"We must keep foremost in our minds the fact that we stand strictly for Americanism and unionism," Fagan declared.

Pres. Murray Defends '500-Planes' Plan, Answers Critics

(See Story Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Citing facts and statistics, CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week issued a memorandum answering the wide range of criticism—most of it anonymous—against the CIO plan to produce 500 airplanes a day.

The memorandum, drawn up by Walter Reuther, United Automobile Workers executive board member and author of the original plan, pointed out that despite heavy propaganda from corporate interests, less than 10% of the automobile industry's potential capacity is being used for defense purposes.

The union official's statement also denied that production need be limited to fighting planes, asserting that bombers could just as well be produced in auto factories.

The Reuther memorandum denied that the CIO plan would "dislocate" the automobile industry, but maintained on the contrary that it would permit planned production for a year's period with benefits to both the workers and the corporations.

Manufacture of aircraft in the auto industry, he said, would give the companies a greater return on their capital investment and provide half a million auto workers with more regular employment.

Open Shop 75 Years, Firm Goes CIO

Dayton, Ohio., Jan. 18—Dayton workers today had a chance to see for themselves what happens when an immovable object—this time the 75-year non-union tradition of the Simonds-Worden-White Co.—comes in contact with an irresistible force, the CIO.

The result, as might have been predicted, was a CIO union contract which brought wage increases for the workers of up to 10 cents an hour.

The company, which is Dayton's oldest machine shop, signed its contract with Local 753, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The new local already has sole bargaining rights for 800 workers in four plants and is carrying on organization work among 850 employes in four others.

The contract, in addition to granting the wage increases, provided piece workers with guaranteed eight-hour rates, cash bonus and return of job to drafted employes, seniority and grievance systems.

WIN BONUSES

Timmins, Ont. — A number of northern Ontario gold mines have recently inaugurated war bonuses of 21 cents per shift as a result of organizational activity by the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers' Union, it was learned this week.

Big Boston Store Signs First Pact

BOSTON, Jan. 18.—Nearly 1,000 employes of the R. H. White Company here will receive pay increases totaling $80,000 under the terms of an agreement reached with the United Retail & Wholesale Employes. The contract is to be submitted to the membership for ratification before final acceptance.

The contract also provides for time and a half overtime pay, grievance and arbitration machinery, 44-hour week, closed shop, vacations and legal holidays with pay, full seniority rights and other improved working conditions, and will run until Jan. 31, 1943.

A statement issued by the union declared the agreement "marks another milestone in the URWE's nationwide organizing drive to enroll the department store employes under the CIO banner and paves the way for further progress by the New England Joint Board in Boston's rock-ribbed department store industry."

18-MONTH DRIVE

Successful conclusion of the contract is the culmination of an intensive drive started a year and a half ago. Last October the URWE, won a State Labor Board election, swamping 10 competing AFL unions by a clear majority of 53 per cent of the votes.

Win Contract In Carolina Factory

Hickory, N. C., Jan. 18.—Hutton Bourbannais, novelty and case goods furniture manufacturers, here, have signed an agreement with Local 298, United Furniture Workers covering 185 employes. The union won an election in the plant some time ago, held after a two-day walk-out.

Union officials say the signing of the contract here has had a marked effect in the area. Full text of the contract was printed on the front page of the local newspaper, and other Hickory plants, fearful of UFW organization, gave increases to their employes. The union has launched a drive to bring all Hickory furniture plants under contract

Labor Role in Training Plan Wins Praise

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18. — Labor was not only a prime factor in inaugurating the national defense vocational training program but it has shown splendid cooperation in maintaining it," Dr. John W. Studebaker, U. S. Commissioner of Education said this week.

"More than 1,400 local advisory committees, comprised of representatives of labor and industry, have been organized throughout the country. Not in one instance where cooperation has been asked from labor has it failed to be forthcoming.

"Take one typical example: In Joplin, Mo., funds were lacking to renovate an old building to be used as a vocational school in the national defense training program. The local labor unions, anxious to help, donated the services of carpenters, painters, cement workers and machinists to renovate the structure and tune up the machinery.

HOSIERY WORKERS

"In Philadelphia, nearly 1,500 hosiery workers, members of the CIO hosiery union, who were unemployed during the depression, were interviewed by local union officials. As a result, the majority of them were discovered to have latent skills in other trades, and now they are being trained in the national defense training program.

"In Detroit a similar situation was found. There a great number of the members of the CIO United Automobile Workers Union, who were unemployed, are being trained in the national defense vocational program.

"The story is the same for the rest of the country. Both the CIO and the AFL have named special advisors on the national defense vocational training advisory committee. CIO consultants on employer-employe relationships are Ralph Hetzel and Stanley Ruttenberg.

"Labor has a special stake in the training of some 700,000 workers in national defense industries during the current fiscal year. Only about six months are left to reach our goal. We have every reason, therefore, to believe that the cooperation thus far shown by organized labor will continue and increase in the crucial, coming months of 1941."

WIN JOBS BACK: CIO pickets march past the Saginaw, Mich., plant of the Eaton Manufacturing Co., shortly before the company bowed to union and government pressure and reinstated some 300 workers to their jobs. The men, members of the CIO United Automobile Workers, were fired last December despite management promises of reinstatement.

Shoe Union To Sue Pay Law Chiselers

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Shoe manufacturers who violate the federal wage-hour law and think they can get away with it were given notice today that they face costly legal suits from the CIO United Shoe Workers of America.

Acting under Section 16-B of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the union will sue "each shoe company found in substantial violation of the Act . . . for double the original sum unpaid." Under the law unions may file the double back-pay suits as representatives of the workers.

A union statement asserted that "a recent survey of compliance showed that 97 out of 250 shoe factories visited were in substantial violation of the law.

MANY VIOLATIONS

"The large number of firms found to be violating the law proves that present policies are inadequate. Therefore the union has determined on the policy of filing employe suits in order to prevent loss of business or a breakdown among those firms which are in full compliance."

First suit initiated by the USWA was against the A. G. Walton Shoe Co. of Boston, Mass., for $100,000.

USWA officials pointed out that while the company was indicted for wage-hour violation in May, 1940, the suit has not yet come to trial.

GOT U. S. ORDER

"In the face of widespread violation of labor law, this company has recently received several large government orders for shoes, although many firms living up to the law failed to get an order," the union pointed out.

Other firms against which the USWA plans to file suits include the Peerless Shoe Co., Ware, Mass.; Kesslen Shoe Co. and Mitchell Shoe Co., both of Biddeford, Me., the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Corp., Binghamton, N. Y., the Beckerman Shoe Corp., Boyertown and Kutztown, Penna., and the Collins-Morris Shoe Co., Owensville, Mo.

On the Job!

Akron, Ohio, Jan. 18. — Rubber workers are getting a new demonstration of the value of CIO union organization.

Current issue of the official organ of the United Rubber workers carries nine stories about union locals' winning wage increases; one report of a National Labor Relations Board election victory; and details of three major drives to organize unorganized workers.

Most important of the drives is one on Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., where a joint CIO-URW campaign has been announced by Pres. S. H. Dalrymple, CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, and CIO Field Representative R. J. Davidson, who will have direct charge of the campaign.

4 New Pacts In One Town In One Month

Within the past four months, CIO unions have signed four contracts, including wage raise provisions of from 10 to 16c an hour, Joseph Mayo, sub-regional director, declared today.

In addition, some 700 workers have recently joined the United Automobile Workers at the General Motor Corp.'s New Departure plant, giving the local practically 100 per cent organization of the 3,300 employes.

The UAW has signed a contract covering 210 workers with the McCarther Corp., which makes seats for airplanes. Another UAW pact, containing a preferential shop clause, has been reached with the Vete Rut Corp., with 350 employes.

The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has won an agreement for the 340 workers employed at the Session Foundry, while a new closed shop contract has been signed by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee for employes of three local coal firms. The workers won the eight-hour day, time and a half for overtime, seniority rights and vacations with pay, as well as wage increases.

DRAFT BONUS

East St. Louis, Ill. — Payment of $150 to employes who are drafted or who enlist in U. S. armed services was agreed upon by the American Zinc Co. in negotiations with the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

SIGN CONTRACT

Washington — After a year of negotiations, the CIO United Cafeteria Employes Local 471 has won a signed contract from the management of the Methodist Cafeteria.

Paving Men Win 15c Pay Increase

Washington, Jan. 18.—Signing of a wage agreement covering more than 1,000 paving workers by nine firms who do 90 per cent of the street work in the District of Columbia was announced here by the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

The agreement calls for a 15 cents an hour wage increase for all the men. Successful negotiation of the contract followed the winning of a NLRB election.

The contractors are well established firms that have been doing District government work for many years.

With the addition of these new workers to its membership in Washington, the UCWOC local there becomes one of the most substantial in the nation.

Name Titler To Lead Drive

Washington, Jan. 18 — Martin Wagner, president of District 50, Gas, Coke & Chemical Division of the United Mine Workers, today announced the appointment of George Titler, former secretary-treasurer of UMW District 19 and organizing director of many years experience, as executive director of the Kanawha Valley Chemical Workers Council.

Titler will have direction of all chemical organizing in the Charleston-Kanawha Valley area of West Virginia, where campaigns are already in progress at the Belle plant of E. I. DuPont de Nemours and the Alloy plant of the Electro Metallurgical Co., as well as other units in the extensive chemical industry of the state.

Taylor New GM Arbitrator

Detroit, Jan. 18.—Dr. George W. Taylor has been appointed permanent arbitrator in cases arising between the United Automobile Workers and General Motors under the terms of the contract between the union and the company. He will replace Dr. Harry Millis who resigned when he was appointed as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board.

Dr. Taylor, a professor at the Wharton School of Economics at the University of Pennsylvania, for the past several years has acted as arbitrator in the full-fashioned hosiery industry, and also has been impartial chairman in the men's clothing, hat, textile and other industries.

As umpire in the UAW-GM agreement, Dr. Taylor will handle grievances which could not be adjusted by direct negotiations between the union and the company.

Distillery Campaign Booming

Washington, Jan. 18 — Encouraging progress in the organizing drive of the CIO Distillery Workers Organizing Committee was reported today by Chairman Joseph D. Cannon.

An election has been ordered at the National Distillery Company, Louisville, Ky., and favorable contracts have been won with two New Orleans companies.

At the National Distillery Co., the AFL union had a "back-door contract" since 1939, according to Cannon, but the workers have been turning to the CIO. At a meeting of the AFL union on January 3, the AFL representative was chased from the hall. At a later meeting, the president of the Local, charged with being a company stooge, was also removed from the chair.

At New Orleans, the CIO Distillery Workers have signed a union shop contract, with check-off, with the Publiker Distillery Co. and the North American Import & Rectifying Co. The contract provides for pay increases from $3.50 to $7.60 a week and a minimum wage of 50c an hour. Seniority rights and paid vacations are also provided.

Eaton Co. Rehires CIO Men

Saginaw, Mich., Jan. 18.—Carrying out the demands of a federal conciliator, management of the Eaton Manufacturing Co. here rehired 300 members of the CIO United Automobile Workers and thereby brought an end to the strike which had closed the firm's five plants.

The strike, precipitated by the company's refusal to rehire the men after a strike here last December, spread to four other factories in Michigan and Ohio.

The Saginaw plant operates under an AFL contract, though the UAW-CIO officials assert the federation affiliate does not have a majority of the employes. They have been seeking a Labor Board election, claiming that such a poll would show the CIO the majority's choice.

FIRM AGREES

After several hours of negotiating the plant agreed to follow out the demand of Conciliator James Dewey, who earlier had declared he had instructions from the Dept. of Labor and John Owens, labor assistant at the Defense Commission to reopen the plant at once and "to rehire the strikers involved in a walkout last December. . ."

"The company made an agreement with the UAW-CIO" to rehire the men, Dewey added, "but they did not do it. We are going to insist in the name of the government that they carry out that agreement."

MEETS UAW DEMAND

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the auto union commented that Dewey's demand "is what we have been asking all along" and added that the UAW also wants a Labor Board election at the Saginaw plant so that the employes can determine their sole collective bargaining agency.

Efforts of the company and police to break the strike resulted in failure when a platoon of strikebreakers escorted by the officers failed to smash the strong CIO picked line. As a result of the clash, several of the police required hospital treatment.

When the Saginaw agreement was reached, the UAW ended sympathy strikes at plants of the company in Detroit, Battle Creek and Marshall, Mich., and at Cleveland, Ohio.

PLENTY OF PICKETS: Strikers turned out en masse to picket the Babcock & Wilcox Co. plant in Bayonne, N. J. The firm has a huge backlog of government national defense orders, zooming profits—and refuses to bargain with the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. Union is demanding badly-needed wage increases.

Win Pay Rate Rise At Ranger Aircraft

E. FARMINGDALE, N. Y., Jan. 18.—Increased minimum pay rates and eight holidays with pay were won by the CIO United Automobile Workers for 240 employes of the Fairchild Engine & Airplane Co.'s Ranger Division here.

Under the new contract — the second signed by the company with the CIO—workers will receive a minimum rate of 55 cents an hour after four months employment, 57½ cents after eight months and 60 cents after a year. The eight holidays with pay provision is described as the best in the aircraft industry.

John Owens, assistant to Labor Defense Commissioner Sidney Hillman and head of the Ohio CIO Council, played a key part in avoiding the walkout and bringing about the settlement.

The Fairchild firm produces water-cooled aircraft motors, and has a backlog close to eight million dollars in government contracts.

READY TO ATTACK

Farmingdale authorities were apparently ready to crack down on the workers in case of strike, bor news service. Despite protests by local merchants and civic groups, a quarter-mile stretch of U. S. Highway 24 was barricaded the day after a strike vote had been taken. Company guards and state troopers patrolled the barricaded section.

"On the evening before the strike was to be called, 42 sheriffs and deputies were stationed at the blocked-off section," said to Ewald Sandner, local director of the UAW aircraft division.

Win in South

New Orleans, La., Jan. 18 — Workers at the Henderson Sugar plant here voted 144 to 83 for the CIO in an NLRB election held here, CIO Regional Director F. C. Pieper announced today.

TAKE FORD FOR A RIDE: This tin lizzie, 1914 vintage, went whizzing through Detroit and Dearborn streets last week, with members of the CIO's Ford Organizing Committee at the wheel. The sign speaks for itself.

CIO Answers Criticism Of Reuther Plan

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—CIO Pres. Philip Murray today made public a detailed reply to the objections—most of them discreetly anonymous—raised against the Reuther 500-planes-a-day production plan.

Since the proposal was first offered to defense officials by Walter Reuther, director of the General Motors division of the United Automobile Workers, it has received generally frigid treatment from corporation executives who fear their profit structure will be altered.

At the same time, numerous technicians and engineers have shown keen interest in the plan, which proposes that idle facilities in the automobile industry be utilized for mass production of airplanes.

Criticism of the Reuther plan broke down into two mutually exclusive categories. One group insisted that the plan was not feasible because planes could not be constructed in auto plants. The other critics argued that the plan was unimportant because the automobile industry is already turning out — or preparing to turn out—airplanes for national defense purposes!

Illness this week prevented Reuther from testifying before the House Naval Affairs Committee about his plan. A conference of CIO Pres. Murray, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW, Reuther and Natl. Defense officials, is also scheduled.

DON'T USE NAMES

The memorandum made public by Pres. Murray quotes Reuther as stating:

"I have read and studied the objections to the CIO's aircraft production program. Virtually all of these criticisms have been anonymous, aircraft and automotive industry executives refusing, for some reason, to lend their names to their printed views.

"By and large they indicate either a sad lack of imagination or an insistence by automotive interests to continue with 'business as usual.'

"Since most of the criticisms have been anonymous and since we are shortly to have a conference with Mr. William S. Knudsen and defense commission production experts on our program, I have hesitated to engage in public discussion on these matters. However, so many misconceptions on our program have gained credence that I think it advisable to discuss and dispose of these matters at this time."

MAIN ARGUMENTS

Highlights of Reuther's arguments:

1. The plan does not call for the production of pursuit planes only —any type of plane could be constructed in the partially idle auto plants.

2. Auto plant facilities are available—"not 10%" of the auto industry's available facilities are being brought into play for national defense purposes.

3. Leveling out of automobile production, to avoid seasonal peaks and falls, would aid the industry and work no hardship on the American public.

4. Industry arguments to the contrary notwithstanding, the Reuther plant would stabilize rather than dislocate the auto industry by providing 12-month production and 12-month employment.

5. Man-hours required for production of a plane would be cut below present standards, as would be the amount of factory floor space needed per manufactured unit.

BASELESS TALK

6. Doubts that automobile production machinery could be used

Union to Ask Wage Raise At GM

Detroit, Jan. 18.—General Motors will soon be asked by the CIO United Automobile Workers for a wage increase covering its more than 125,000 workers, UAW officials said today.

The CIO affiliate is spokesman for the workers in 68 GM plants in which elections have already been held.

The union was said to be considering demands for an increase in the cash payment given by the company to men called for military service.

Murray, Big Steel to Meet

Pittsburgh, Jan. 18.— Chairman Philip Murray of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee will soon meet with executives of the big U. S. Steel Corp. to discuss possible changes in the company's SWOC contract, it was learned here today.

The SWOC is bargaining representative for its members who form a large proportion of Big Steel's 150,000 employes.

Testimonial For Murray

Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 18 — A testimonial dinner for CIO President Philip Murray is being sponsored by the Steel City Industrial Union Council Saturday, Feb. 1, at the William Penn hotel here.

Unionists from all centers in western Pennsylvania are making reservations. At least 100 persons from New Kensington, Tarentum and Brackenridge will attend. Reservations may be made through David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, at 1500 Commonwealth Bldg. here. Tickets are $2 each.

Win Transit Strike

Schenectady, N. Y., Jan. 18. — The six-day strike of 250 bus and trolley line employes here ended Jan. 13 with a settlement providing an hourly pay increase of five cents immediately, and an additional five cents May 1.

The strike was called by the CIO Transport Workers Union, following refusal of Federal Judge Frederick H. Bryant to approve an agreement granting a 10-cent increase, reached between the union and the receiver for the Schenectady Railway Co. last November.

John T. Jones Appointed

Washington, Jan. 18.—Appointment of John T. Jones as legislative representative for the CIO, was announced today by President Philip Murray.

Jones has served as director of Labor's Non-Partisan League for the past several months, and was in charge of the CIO's campaigns to protect the Wagner Act and to secure passage of the Federal Coal Mine Safety Bill at the last session of Congress.

He will continue to serve as director of the League, and will maintain offices at 1037 Earle Building, Washington, D. C.

Win Strike

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 18 — A five month strike at the Republic Creosote plant here has been settled with a signed contract, CIO Regional Director James Robb announced here today. The workers who have been out since August 12, returned to work last Monday.

Win Pay Boost In Cleveland

Cleveland, Jan. 17. — Employes of the Weatherhead Manufacturing Co. today had taken a strike vote to back up their demands for 10 cents-an-hour wage increases.

Hastings Jones, organizer for the CIO United Automobile Workers said the union had vainly sought to reach an agreement with the company, which manufactures amunition parts.

U. S. Official Flays Threat to Use Draft Against Aircraft Union

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Threats to draft striking aircraft workers at the Ryan Aeronautical Co. plant in San Diego, California, brought a statement from Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Acting Director of the Selective Service that such action would be "contrary to the intent of the law."

The threats were made when CIO workers at the Ryan plant voted to walk out after the company flatly refused to consider wage demands. Present basic pay scale is 50 cents an hour and the men are asking 75.

The draft threat came from Lt. Commander Maurice Sparling, liaison officer attached to San Diego draft board, whose officials told newsmen that the strikers would lose their draft deferments.

"We are always opposed to use of the system for purposes for which it was not intended," Gen. Hershey said. "This is an industrial dispute and we are not policemen."

Gen. Hershey also said "a man on strike was still an employe," and could not be considered unemployed.

San Diego, Calif., Jan. 18.—Insistence of a profit-minded plane manufacturer to keep minimum wage rates at a "sweatshop" level today seemed to be leading to a new showdown with the Union.

By a near-unanimous vote, employes of the big Ryan Aeronautical Co. today had authorized a strike unless the management finally agrees to talk turkey about CIO proposals for badly needed wage increases.

To show that they mean business, the workers voted by a 731-21 margin to permit a strike, Lew Michener, regional director for the United Automobile Workers, revealed. Federal conciliator Harry Malcolm is in the city seeking to effect an agreement which would avert the necessity of calling the walkout.

The union, Local 506 of the UAW-CIO, has demanded a 75c minimum wage and corresponding increases for skilled workers, but in weeks of negotiations the Ryan management has endeavored to stand pat on its present 50c minimum.

In a recent NLRB election, the CIO affiliate was named sole bargaining agency by a heavy majority.

"Aircraft workers in this rapidly expanding national defense program are the industrial 'Tom Joads' of American," Michener declared after the strike vote.

WHY 31 DIED

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18 — Thirty-one coal miners lost their lives in the Cadiz, Ohio, disaster last November because their employer was using sub-standard, unsafe equipment.

That fact, charged at the time of the accident by the United Mine Workers of America, was confirmed today when the U. S. Bureau of Mines made public its report on the explosion at the Nelms Coal Mine Co.

Direct cause of the explosion, the report said, was the ignition of gas from a mining machine or an electric drill. Both pieces of equipment were in a condition deemed "non-permissable" by Bureau standards, since many bolts were missing.

The Bureau of Mines also reported that ventilation was not sufficient to clear away dangerous accumulations of explosive gas, and said that this situation was likely to be aggravated by carelessness in failing to keep ventilation doors open.

CIO officials pointed to the Bureau report as strengthening their demands for passage of a federal mine safety bill, which was pigeonholed by the House at the last session of Congress after it had been passed by the Senate. The bill has just been re-introduced in the House by Rep. Flannery of Massachuetts.

TIME TO CHANGE MODELS

The CIO Plan

At its recent executive board meeting in Washington, the Congress of Industrial Organizations officially adopted the plan drafted by Pres. Philip Murray for strengthening and broadening the scope of the defense program.

The general outlines of this CIO plan are well known by now. It calls for the establishment of industry councils in each major industry, with equal labor and management representation and with a government representative as chairman — the whole structure being headed by a national defense board similarly constituted.

But to describe the plan thus is merely to give the frame and to omit the picture. For the main content of the CIO plan is expressed in the duties which the industry councils would be required to perform and in the stated objectives of the whole plan.

To begin with, the CIO plan is fully as much concerned with the domestic welfare of the American people as it is with armaments. Adequate production of domestic goods, fairer distribution of national income, and prevention of economic breakdown after the war boom are among the plan's main objectives.

In keeping with the CIO convention stand, the plan makes the defense of American civil, democratic and labor rights a basic part of its conception of national defense.

Extension of collective bargaining and strict observance of existing labor laws are specifically provided for; also the allocation of contracts in such a way as to re-employ as rapidly as possible America's idle millions.

The CIO plan, in short, involves much more than a reorganization of administrative set-up; it calls for changes in spirit, scope and purpose.

In voting to adopt the Murray plan as a CIO program, the executive board also urged its widespread distribution, its careful study and the active support of all CIO affiliates to secure its adoption.

It's a plan that deserves the backing not only of every labor man and woman, but also of all patriotic and public-spirited Americans. Let's get behind it!

The CIO defense plan, drafted by Pres. Murray and adopted by the CIO executive board, is now being printed in pamphlet form for quantity distribution. It will be Publication No. 51 in the CIO series. Place your orders now with the CIO Publicity Dept., 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C.

Written Contracts

One of the causes of the "Little Steel" strike was the refusal of the companies to enter into written agreements with the union. They argued that the requirements of collective bargaining were met by merely going through certain perfunctory motions.

The Labor Board held otherwise, and its position has now been upheld by the United States Supreme Court in the H. J. Heinz Co. case.

The Little Steel companies have been imitated in their defiance of the law by many other companies throughout the country, which have refused to sign union contracts until the courts settled this question.

The Supreme Court decision not only vindicates the position of the CIO but it also removes the last shadow of excuse for the stalling tactics of those companies which still refuse to carry through collective bargaining to its logical and legal conclusion.

Latest Labor Dept. reports show a big increase in the cost of food in many industrial cities. In Los Angeles food prices were 5.6% higher in December, 1940 than in the same month of 1939. In many other cities increases ranged from 3.5% to 5.1%. Wages are lagging behind such rises in living costs. Refusal to raise them therefore means a cut in real wages.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

GLENN L. MARTIN, aircraft manufacturer, expressed a pretty radical idea when he testified recently before the House naval affairs committee—and we're not referring to his "draft labor and industry" proposal either.

In answer to a question, Martin is reported to have replied that "there was no reason why labor should not be treated in the same fashion as industry."

If such a revolutionary idea took hold, we'd have wages going up 217% in Martin's plant in Baltimore. For profits of the Glenn Martin Aircraft Co. increased by 217% between the first nine months of 1939 and the same period of 1940.

Then, if labor were treated in the same fashion as industry, it would be rewarded with fat government bonuses for disobeying laws protecting the rights of employers; just as the Bethlehem Steel Co. is rewarded with most of the juiciest defense contracts for its enterprise in disobeying the National Labor Relations Act.

John Smith, union man, could place his spies in the employers' association; deprive the ringleaders of their $100,000 directorships; establish a labor-controlled outfit for the bosses, to keep down their profits; and refuse to deal with the managers and superintendents freely chosen by the employers.

Under equality of treatment, Unionist Smith would not be put in the jug if he broke the law. He could just keep on breaking it until lengthy hearings got under way. And when in the course of months or years, a decision was rendered against him, he could keep on breaking it while he appealed from one court to another.

If labor were treated in the same fashion as industry, it could hold up defense production for months, until it was guaranteed wage increases comparable to the several hundred per cent profit increases common in defense industries.

Then labor would, of course, expect "amortization", just like industry. Applying this principle, the workers would demand free government-built houses, if they had to move into new homes for their defense jobs.

They would also refuse to go to work until they had definite assurance from federal and local governments as to what their taxes would be for the next five years.

It is possible, however, that Manufacturer Martin did not have in mind leveling up labor's treatment to match the treatment accorded to industry.

For he skipped lightly over the "draft industry" phase of his proposal and concentrated chiefly on the idea of "drafting labor", to prevent labor unions from "taking a bite into a bigger and bigger melon," as he put it.

If labor is not to get a bite into the "bigger and bigger melon" of profits, and equality of treatment is to apply, perhaps Martin had in mind a leveling down process of treating industry in the same fashion as labor, instead of vice versa.

In that case, the manufacturers and their stockholders would not be allowed to bite into the present big profit melons, and their compensation would be reduced to the same level as that of labor.

They might find it inconvenient, at first, to support their families on incomes of less than $1,000 a year, as 19 million American workers have to do, according to Social Security Board statistics.

So let's interpret the "equal treatment" idea liberally and allow the coupon-clipping advocates of sacrifice the higher level of $1,400 a year for a family of four. This is the income which a small percentage of better-paid workers enjoy—and which incidentally a recent WPA study estimates to be a minimum "maintenance level" for a worker's family of four.

With this income, according to the same study, a family can afford an average of 30c a day per person for food, or 10c a meal. Our industrialists would definitely have to cut out dollar dinners, unless they wanted to fast 10 meals to make up for each.

Then, if they are still keen on equal treatment, they might find themselves a bit cramped at first if they moved from their country homes to an $18.50 flat or apartment—which is all that the average $1,400-a-year budget will permit for monthly rent.

This same average budget of a better-paid worker's family allows about $1 a week for the whole family's transportation; and about $1.50 for its recreation, including smokes, movies, club dues, etc.

So if the idea of treating industry the same as labor should spread, it looks as if a lot of chauffeurs would be out of a job. Likewise Florida resorts might just as well be hit by a hurricane, and there'd be hell to pay at all our best clubs.

Or perhaps Mr. Martin was just kidding about labor and capital being treated alike—and we took him too seriously.

High Court 'Mops Up' Wagner Act Foes

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The U. S. Supreme Court this week renewed its "mop up" drive against corporate opponents of the National Labor Relations Board when in one day it upheld the NLRB in five separate cases.

Seven days previously the Court had declared in no uncertain terms that after reaching an agreement with a union, an employer is duty-bound under the Wagner Act to put the contract in writing and to sign it.

That ruling, in the H. J. Heinz case, was the handwriting on the wall for the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., which promptly asked permission to withdraw a request for Supreme Court review of an Appeals Court decision favorable to the Labor Board and the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

The Circuit Court found that the powerful Bethlehem Steel subsidiary had "plainly violated" the Wagner Act by refusing to deal with the union or to reach an agreement with it covering the Boston and Fore River, Mass., shipyards.

ANOTHER VICTIM

Second victim of the Heinz decision was the Sunshine Mining Co. whose appeal for a review was dismissed. The corporation, one of the nation's largest silver mines and a notorious foe of labor, had been ordered by the board and the Circuit Court to disestablish company union and reach a written agreement with the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers were involved in another of the day's quintet of cases when the Court, acting on a request filed jointly by the Board and the corporation management, agreed to review an NLRB order against the big Phelps-Dodge Mining Company.

The lower court cut down the number of workers ordered rehired by the Board, while the company apparently felt that none of the employes should have been rehired.

Objections of the Stewart Die Casting Co. to a Labor Board reinstatement and back pay decision were turned aside by the Supreme Court, which refused to review the NLRB's decision. Similarly, arguments of the Viking Pump Co., Cedar Falls, Ia., failed to convince the Court that the Board had erred in ordering reinstatement of three discharged members of the CIO Amalgamated Assn. of Iron, Steel & Tin Workers.

CIO Answers Critics Of Reuther Plan

for turning out airplanes are "without foundation" in fact.

7. Pooling of productive equipment in industries related to aircraft industry would help eliminate bottlenecks in the production of accessories and parts for airplanes.

8. Basic machinery used for automobile production can be and is being used at the present time for making airplanes.

SAME MACHINES

To buttress that last point, Reuther's memorandum listed specifically a large amount of equipment just installed by General Motors for manufacture of Allison engines "which duplicates existing automobile plant machinery." The list included a number of grinding, milling, Keller and Spline machines, as well as hones.

"It has been wrongly assumed that the CIO program contemplates the production only of pursuit ships," the statement said. "Our reference to the possible production of 500 fighting planes a day was used only to indicate the overall productive capacity of an automobile industry whose idle machines and idle men were fully mobilized and whose private interests were temporarily subordinated.

"The productive capacity we have indicated can as readily be adapted to the production of medium-sized or heavy bombers. If these latter types are built rather than pursuit ships, the daily production would be scaled down in proportion to the increased amount of work required on each plane. Nevertheless, our program could build many more bombers, large or small, than are now being built or are contemplated, and in much shorter time."

The statement was sharply critical of objections that seasonal peaks in automobile production cannot be remedied.

"These objections imply that the American public is so slightly concerned with national defense that it will not wait a month or several months for new models. We believe that the car-buying public realizes that new models with the latest gadgets and improved lines will be of little value to a populace that may have to live in subways and air-raid shelters.

"We believe that the car-buying public will wait. If all companies cooperate, none will gain competitive advantages over the others . . .

"Automobile industry trade journals and others have argued that our plan would 'dislocate' the automobile industry. Our plan would work to the contrary.

"The leveling off of production would, for the first time, permit the manufacturers to plan ahead for 12 months. It would eliminate the tremendous peaks and valleys which for many years have worked such hardships on more than half a million automobile workers.

FULL EMPLOYMENT

"Furthermore, the production of defense planes in addition to automobiles would make the industry a two-product industry. This may well offer a permanent solution of serious problems of both manufacturers and workers.

"It would give the former full use and return on their tremendous capital investments; it would give the workers year-round employment."

100% CIO Town

Houston, Tex., Jan. 18 — Sugar Land, Texas, is now a 100 per cent CIO town. A contract signed recently with the Marshall Canning Co. of Sugar Land brings the only two industries in the town under the banner of the CIO, Maurice J. Dineen, CIO regional director, announced at CIO headquarters here.

In 1939 the Imperial Sugar Co. signed an agreement with CIO Local Industrial Union 917 which was renewed in March 1940. The new contract with the Marshall Canning Co. covers 125 plant production and maintenance employes and is effective for one year, Dineen said.

Terms provide a five cent hourly pay increase; check off of union dues; seniority rights; one week's vacation with pay after one year's service; grievance machinery and guarantee to employes entering military service that they will be given their same jobs back upon return.

Reuther Plan Worries Tories, Says Carey

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—The Reuther plan to produce 500 airplanes a day "was a dart tossed into a balloon dispelling an accumulation of gas about the mystery of building planes," CIO Sec. James B. Carey said today.

Writing in the UE News, official organ of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, of which he is the president, Carey voiced high praise for the plane plan, which won official CIO approval at the Executive Board meeting in Washington last week.

"The plane manufacturers who have been soaring pretty high since the defense program started, were at least brought down to earth long enough to have their 'experts' reluctantly declare the program impractical — in fact, so reluctantly the 'experts' forgot to leave their names," Carey declared.

"People who own factories usually know very little about production, and, more often than not, the corporation heads are lawyers or salesmen who look at defense operations from the standpoint of a profit problem rather than as a pure production problem . . .

"In private conversation, some of the employers are saying:

" 'The brazen audacity of the young upstart. What does a CIO organizer know about production'?"

Carey explained that he answered this question by pointing out that labor is the one group most interested in preserving democracy; that the producers, "both farm and industrial labor" pay the bills and are most interested in knowing how their money is spent; and that CIO leaders are thoroughly informed about defense production problems "because of their knowledge gained through actual experience on the production job and their proven ability as practical organizers."

Outline Function Of CIO Councils

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Chief function of CIO Industrial Union Councils is to press ahead with a legislative program to protect labor's rights and labor's social gains, Philip Murray, CIO president, said in a circular letter to Councils and Regional Directors released here.

In addition, Councils have the task of aiding national unions and local affiliates in organizing the unorganized, Murray pointed out. "There will be opportunity to assume new responsibilities in the public life of the nation, including those relating to national defense, and to make great advances in both the legislative and organizational fields," he wrote.

"But there will be difficulties as well, growing out of the rapidly changing conditions and mounting tensions inevitable in a period of national emergency. In these circumstances, it is essential that we be fully prepared to carry on vigorously with our legislative and political work, local, state and national, during this coming year."

Order Plane Plant Poll

San Diego, Calif., Jan. 18—Some 400 employes of the Solar Aircraft Co. here will decide in a Labor Board election Jan. 24 whether they wish to be represented by the CIO United Automobile Workers.

The election, fourth to be held in the Pacific Coast's fast growing aircraft industry, will give the workers an opportunity to choose between Local 506, UAW-CIO, the Solar Employes Assn. or neither.

The three previous elections—at Ryan, Vultee and Harvill — have all been won by the CIO affiliate.

Many Anti-Labor Bills In Hopper As 1941 Congress Convenes

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Congress did almost nothing for labor in last year's session. In fact, Congress didn't try—so much of its time was spent in trying to get anti-labor bills passed that little was left for bills to protect the rights and living conditions of the workers.

Judging from the lineups as the present session gets under way, the same attack will continue this year, much of it under the mask of national defense—as CIO's 1941 legislative program points out.

CIO and CIO alone staved off the worst of this attack last year. The Wagner Act and the Wage Hour Act were not amended, though they were the main targets of a tory drive that succeeded in getting the notorious Smith amendments to the Wagner Act shoved through the lower House. The industrial armies bill, aimed to set up private armed forces controlled by employers, was stopped. The Bridges deportation bill passed the House, died in the Senate. The Walter-Logan bill, designed to wreck Federal social agencies, did pass, but was vetoed after sharp CIO opposition.

Congress was not only busy attacking labor laws last year. It spent a lot of time evading action on bills labor wanted. The Mine Safety bill, designed to stop the slaughter of workers in mine disasters, was dodged throughout the session. So was the anti-lynch bill and the poll tax repeal bill. Walsh-Healey Act amendments, aimed to stop the flow of Federal contracts to Wagner Act violators, was again denied a chance on the floor of the House.

The social services got no help from Congress. WPA was cut one third, though nine million are still unemployed. Needed improvements to the Social Security Act were evaded. Nothing was done about housing or national health. A bill to aid unemployed youth was let die in committee — a favorite method of assassinating progressive legislation.

And so on, down the line, with little or no action on bills backed by labor, but lots of bustling and hurrying to slip anti-labor laws through. Some of them, in fact, did get by — the sabotage law, which went through without a clause protecting labor's right to strike, the state home guard bill, setting up a substitute for the mobilized National Guard with none of the precautions against anti-labor use sought by the labor movement—and others.

The present session is a little more than two weeks old. Already a rash of anti-labor bills has broken out, with a good two dozen put on the program for consideration.

As usual, the Wagner Act is a main objective for Congressional dive-bombers. The Smith bill, which just about tears the heart out of the Act, has been reintroduced. This is the measure that two of the five members of Smith's committee described last year as "the ripper bill." Rep. Hoffman, veteran labor-baiter from Michigan, has one of his own in the hopper, designed to repeal the present Act, write a new one guaranteed to bring back the good old company union days.

The defense program comes in for a great deal of attention, most of it carrying not too well concealed threats to organized labor. Hoffman has two bills covering this angle, one with five years in jail for requiring any defense worker to join any organization as a condition of getting a job, another requiring individual contracts from defense workers.

A bunch are directed at "sabotage," one providing 20 years for interfering in any way with defense production, another providing the death penalty, another (offered by Rep. Voorhis) providing 20 years for injuring goods scheduled for export.

THE ALIEN 'MENACE'

The Hobbs bill to put aliens in concentration camps when they can't be deported fast enough, passed by the House last year, is up again. So is the Starnes bill, deporting aliens who advocate any change in the U. S. government — which would include aliens who might favor abolition of the Electoral College. The Pace bill is the simplest of them all—it orders all aliens deported forthwith.

The Allen bill to deport Harry Bridges "notwithstanding any other provision of law" is up again. There are at least half a dozen to deny employment to aliens in government or on defense work. There's another that makes it a criminal offense for a non-citizen to represent workers in collective bargaining negotiations.

ETC., ETC.

Rep. Voorhis has a bill to register all males between 18 and 24 for "national service" of one year at $25 a month. Rep. Moser has one clapping a $10,000 fine on anyone advocating any change in the U. S. government, citizen as well as non-citizen. This subject is also a favorite one, with several more bills aimed at the same purpose, including one to deny all ballot rights to such groups.

LABOR'S BILLS

This is one side of the Congressional picture. On the other side, certain measures of benefit to labor have been introduced, though the number is by no means comparable. The Mine Safety Bill was put in again by Rep. Flannery of Massachusetts.

The anti-lynch bill has been reintroduced, making lynching a federal offense and setting penalties for individuals and communities involved. The Geyer Bill to repeal the poll tax is up again. Rep. Sumners has his bill for giving the vote to citizens of Washington, D. C., in the mill once more.

This is only a brief summary of the Congressional situation to date. It will require additions as the session goes on, new bills are introduced and old ones revived. All legislation not passed at the previous session must be put through the original processes again with each new session.

CIO POSITION

As the lineup shows, it gives further point to the statement of the CIO Executive Board in recommending CIO's 1941 legislative program:

"Labor during the coming months must have two primary objectives regarding its legislative program.

"First, constant vigilance must be exercised to protect the hard-won legislative gains which have been made during the past few years. Second, labor must continue to march onward with a legislative program calling for extended social and progressive legislation for the protection of the people of the nation."

Legislative Program In Pamphlet

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—CIO's 1941 legislative program, passed at the recent CIO Executive Board meeting here, is ready in pamphlet form for distribution among CIO affiliates and throughout the labor movement.

The pamphlet, titled "CIO's 1941 Legislative Program," can be ordered from the Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Avenue, N. W. Quantity prices on application.

FOR THE LADIES: A member of the Ladies Auxiliary of the CIO Transport Workers Union receives treatment in New York under the TWU medical plan. Health protection was provided for union members in 1939, and now it's been extended to include members of the fair sex auxiliary.

Peanut Bosses Called Just That

SUFFOLK, Va., Jan. 18.—Officials of the Suffolk Peanut Company, largest cleaning, shelling and hulling plant in the world, are "peanut bosses" in more ways than one, in the eyes of Local 110, United Peanut Workers. The local is an affiliate of the CIO's United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers.

When the union tried to get the company to agree ot a 31½-cent hourly wage for women and a 2½ cent increase for men workers, it met with a flat refusal, and was forced to call a strike early this month to protect contracts already signed with other companies. The strike is still on.

Suffolk has brought in labor from the countryside to break the strike and also hired children to scab, according to Union Organizer William Haber.

The union is calling upon labor throughout the country to put Suffolk peanuts on the unfair list.

Last month the union won a strike against the Lummis Peanut Co., getting bonuses and wage increased for over 600 workers in three large factories in this city, Haber said. "Negro women peanut workers are again putting up a heroic fight against the organized peanut bosses of this city," he declared.

Accuse Firm Of Playing AFL's Game

Chicago, Jan. 18.—An employer's attempt to railroad warehouse workers here into the AFL via a phony election was met with sharp protests to the National Labor Relations Board and other government agencies by officials of the Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, and the Packinghouse Workers Council.

According to the protests of the two CIO unions, the employer, Goldblatt Bros. Warehouse, arranged the "election", called in the workers and told them how to vote, using ballots drawn up by the company's attorney, and then announced that an AFL union had won—without giving the vote.

Just to make it look legal, the company called in two judges—Walter La Buy and Edmund K. Jarecki, plus Lieut. Charles Egan of the state police—who told the workers everything was on the up and up.

Plan 2 Polls

Dayton, Jan. 18. — The CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, continuing its streamlined organization drive in this one time open shop city, prepared today for two important Labor Board elections.

Largest vote was expected at the Master Electric Co., where 1,200 employes were to vote whether they want the UE as sole bargaining agency. On Feb. 5 workers at the General Motors Moraine Products plants will participate in a similar poll.

Health Plan Now Open To Ladies

New York, Jan. 18 — A group medical plan, paralleling the plan now covering the 40,000 members of the Transport Workers Union in Greater New York, went into effect this week for women relatives of the union, the TWU Ladies Auxiliary announced today.

An extension of the TWU medical plan, largest of its kind in the United States, the project has established 35 medical districts throughout the city and provides for the services of 43 general practitioners and specialists in surgery and eight other fields of specialized medicine for the mothers, wives and daughters of transit employes who belong to the Auxiliary.

Periodic Exams

Periodic health examinations and preventative as well as curative medical care are the outstanding features of the plan. Mrs. Miriam Murphy, president of the TWU Auxiliary, said that the plan was ratified after a medical committee "had given months of study to the social and economic soundness" of the benefits provided.

Cost of administering the service will be based on an annual medical assessment of $4 per member and other revenue of the organization. In addition to Mrs. Murphy, the other members of the Medical Committee that worked out the final details of the plan are Mrs. Bridget Butler and Mrs. Mollie Grogan.

Textile Union Wins in New Hampshire

New York, Jan. 18.—Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union, announced the winning of a Labor Board election at the Suncook Mills in Suncook, N. H. Out of a total of 498 valid votes cast, 370 were for the CIO textile union and 119 against.

Loomfixers and changers did not take part in the election as they are already members of TWU Local 1141, have been organized for ten years and have a contract with the company.

Horace A. Rieviere, a member of the National Executive Council who aided the union in the election, said that the TWU would proceed to negotiate an agreement containing a clause for the arbitration of all disputes when negotiations fail.

Chain Store Employes Vote CIO

New York, Jan. 18. — Employes in 46 stores of the Strauss Corp., dealers in auto accessories, voted 96 to 62 for Local 104, United Retail & Wholesale Employes, in a State Labor Board election, the union announced this week.

Louis Bais, secretary - manager of the local, said that the victory makes the beginning of an intensive drive to unionize the rest of the stores in this field where employes are working long hours for low pay. Efforts will be directed next at "Times Square", the next largest auto accessories chain in New York. It has 25 stores.

Office Union Gets Votes

New York, Jan. 18 — Office employes of L. Sonneborn Sons, Inc., paint and oil concern, voted 65 to 30 for Local 16, United Office & Professional Workers at a Labor Board election here, in the first election ever held by the UOPWA in an oil firm. Negotiations for a contract will start soon, Local President Peter Hawley said, in announcing the vote.

'No Boom' In Bridgeport

Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 18 — Like the story of Mark Twain's death, reports of unbounded prosperity in Bridgeport are greatly exaggerated, the city's CIO Industrial Union Council indicated today.

The group demanded that industries in Bridgeport and Connecticut stop advertising about local "prosperity" and pay more attention to offering job security at decent wages.

Everybody's Joining!

ERIE, Pa., Jan. 18.—Not to be outdone by their fellow employes in the production departments, office and clerical workers in the General Electric plant here have formed a union and affiliated with the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Production workers voted for the UE in a Labor Board election here several months ago and accordingly came under the national union contract with the big electrical products company.

OUT OF BALANCE:

Social Security Figures Spotlight Low Incomes

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Statistics of the Social Security Board today once again focussed a national spotlight on the glaring problem of the nation's maldistributed income.

The figures, based on the 31,000,389 workers covered in 1938 by the Old Age Insurance program, showed that a quarter of these people had an annual income of less than $200. Well over one-half received less than $800 during the year, and 80% received less than $1,400 during the year.

The statistics:

Newark CIO Backs Right To Strike

Newark, Jan. 18 — The Newark Industrial Union Council today had taken a strong stand against anti-strike legislation and voted continued support for the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, now striking at the Babcock Wilcox plant in nearby Bayonne.

John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union council, inducted into office the Newark group's new officials and told the delegates that labor must "seek its share of the benefits coming from increased production."

The council was urged by Brophy to back the national defense plan proposed by CIO Pres. Murray, under which there would be a labor - industry - government council in each defense industry and a national council to determine problems and differences between various industries.

Win Strike

New York, Jan. 18.—A strike at the Bedford Woodturning Co. called by Local 76-B, United Furniture Workers, has ended with signed contract providing pay increases, a minimum wage of $16 a week for unskilled workers, and a closed shop.

Unions Back Fight On Paralysis

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18. — Spurred by an appeal from President Philip Murray, powerful unions of the CIO have thrown their support behind the "fight-infantile paralysis" campaign, Keith Morgan, National Chairman announced today.

Following a tour among CIO unions by one of his representatives, Morgan said:

"The United Automobile Workers and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee are doing splendid work and I wish publicly to thank leaders of these great organizations for their zealous efforts in behalf of this worthy cause. From early reports we are receiving I feel confident the auto and steel workers will make a great showing this year."

President Murray, a member of the Executive Committee of the Committee for the Celebration of the President's Birthday, endorsing the campaign hsa said:

"This great cause dedicated to the improvement of the health of our young people is one worthy of every citizen's support."

Auto and steel workers this year are raising funds through use of huge telegrams each containing the names of one hundred contributors. The telegrams will be turned over to international union headquarters and in turn sent to the White House on or before January 30th, President Rosevelt's Birthday.

Cutlery Strikers Hold Ranks Firm

Muncie, Ind., Jan. 18—Negotiations for a contract between the CIO United Cutlery Workers and the Ontario Manufacturing Co., makers of tableware, are in progress here, but as yet a settlement has not been reached.

The CIO won an election at the plant Jan. 6, by a vote of 183 to 151 for the AFL. The company's workers went on strike about five months ago.

As soon as the winning vote for the CIO was announced, a joint committee from the CIO local and the CIO Delaware County Industrial Union Council started negotiations for a contract.

Agreement has been reached on some points, but on others considered vital by the CIO, the company refused to yield. The CIO union is now requesting the U. S. Conciliation Service for aid in settling the dispute.

Jack Reed, chairman of the CIO Council committee, said that the CIO has signed up more than 1460 workers in other miscellaneous plants in the area and had seven contracts in negotiation.

Scholle Charges Law Evasion

Detroit, Jan. 18. — A Michigan State Mediation Board order requiring 30 days' advance notice of strikes in national defense issues brought immediate repercussions today from state CIO officials.

Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan Industrial Union Council told Gov. Murray Van Wagoner that the CIO would challenge the constitutionality of the order. Under state law, unions must give five days' advance notice of desire to strike, and Scholle said the mediation board ruling constituted "deliberate distortion of the legislative intent."

Farmers Say Army Forcing Hundreds Into Migration

CATO, Ark., Jan. 18.—Officials of the Natl. Farmers Union today had taken up cudgels for America's first war refugees—1,200 farm people driven off their land by Army construction plans.

The War Dept. is taking over 39,500 acres in Pulaski County for Camp Joseph T. Robinson, and is leasing the land from the farmers.

Farm and community leaders have complained that with the land being rented on a 7% land valuation basis, the farmers will receive sufficient money only for a few days' food and gasoline.

"Unless help is forthcoming from other sources, these people have no choice but to become homeless wanderers, aliens in their own country," a statement from the Natl. Farmers Union declared.

WANT FAIR PAY

"The embattled community can't understand why, if they must give up the fruit of their life's work, they are not paid a fair cash settlement. They cannot return to Cato after the army leaves.

"Their buildings will deteriorate. Tanks, shells and horses will smash their fences, destroy the cover and terracing, and churn up the top-soil. The erosion will set in, making the land unfit for farming for years to come."

Dr. N. F. Dickinson, national board member of the organization and head of its Arkansas division, has suggested a three-point program for protection of the farmers. He urges more liberal leasing terms, which would approximate outright purchase; intelligent planning of defense sites; and aid to the farmers from the Farm Security Administration and other governmental agencies.

ASK HELP

In a letter to national defense officials, Pres. James Patton of the Farmers Union asked for formation of a "committee to look into this situation and submit an outline for future policies, aimed to avoid injury in the future.

"With great areas of both abandoned and uncleared land available throughout the country, it seems to many of us that such displacement in many cases is both unwise and unwarranted," Patton said.

Canadian AutoWorkers Pay Fines

Windsor, Ont., Jan. 18.—Fines totalling $1,650.00 were paid by Geo. Burt, Canadian Regional Director of United Automobile Workers, last week on behalf of himself and 45 other members of the UAW who were convicted of "loitering" under Defense of Canada Regulations when they attempted to picket the Chrysler plant in protest against a lockout.

The significant thing to Canadian workers was that this large sum was assessed on members of the UAW at the same time as that organization was discussing its comprehensive plan with President Roosevelt to produce 500 planes daily to assist embattled Britain. Under the UAW scheme the unused productive capacity of the automotive industry would be used for the production of airplane parts in great quantities.

Significantly, too, the skilled workers locked out of the Chrysler plant are still unemployed, being unable to obtain employment in other war industries until released by Chrysler. The request of the workers concerned, made nearly two months ago, for a government conciliation board, has so far met with a negative response by the federal department of labor.

Burt said he hoped labor in Canada would be able to make sufficiently strong representations to the government to have the Defense Regulations amended to permit picketing. The recent decision of the Ontario appellate court confirming the conviction of the picketers by the magistrate, automatically prevents picketing in 95 per cent of Canadian industry, labor men estimate. The ruling also, in effect, outlaws strikes since such use of labor's weapon of last resort would be materially weakened by the prevention of peaceful picketing.

450 Textile Weavers Locked Out

Providence, R. I., Jan. 18.—Some 450 weavers at the Atlantic Mills of the A. D. Juillard Co. were locked when the company welched on an agreement reached earlier the same day.

The agreement had ended a strike conducted by the CIO Textile Workers Union over piece work wage rates. The rates in the weave shed were supposed to be set to enable the employes to earn $31.77 for a 40-hour week, but due to a run of bad work the weavers were making only from $14 to $24.

After the company agreed to a plan proposed by a federal conciliator that the firm adjust the pay of any employe receiving less than $31.77, the union ended the strike.

When the second shift of employes reported for work they were kept waiting two hours and then refused to let them work.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 18.—Wage increases as high as 14½ cents an hour were chalked up here by Local 187, a new unit of the United Rubber Workers, in negotiations with the Lea Fabrics Co.

The pact, the first signed by the new local, provides equal pay for equal work, vacations with pay and the union shop.

Seamen Nail Effort To Cut Pay Scale With Smear Tactics

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Attempts by shipowners to slip over a wage cut with the excuse that increases won by CIO seamen in July were only "temporary" were denounced here by Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union and vice-president of the CIO as evidence that the operators were negotiating in bad faith.

"This attempt to put over a wage cut indicates that the operators were negotiating in bad faith," Curran said. "During the meetings of our committees, the operators admit they are making unprecedented profits and that seamen are underpaid. They are taking this underhanded method of trying to offset our demands because they realize they have no fair basis for refusing them."

The NMU is asking for a 25 per cent wage boost for all hands "to meet the present and anticipated rise in the cost of living" and to bring substandard maritime wages up to shore levels. The union is also asking for a war bonus of $125 to $250 per month for workers shipping outside the Western Hemisphere or to ports of belligerent nations on this side.

Newspaper Attacks

NMU officials pointed out that newspaper attacks on the union for supposed "red" dominance were the usual preliminary to contract negotiations.

"This is exactly the attack we anticipated," they said. "The pattern repeats itself every time the union's leadership meets with the operators to discuss improved wages, hours and conditions, especially when we refuse to make a deal with the shipowners behind locked doors and sell the union down the river."

Stories in a Washington newspaper to the effect that the U. S. Navy was going to take over the merchant marine for the same reasons were also described as a shipowners' maneuver. "The shipowners want to return to the conditions that obtained before seamen were organized, conditions described by the U. S. Maritime Commission in 1937 as close to slavery," the union said.

"Before this can be done, it is necessary to smash the seamen's unions—hence this renewed attempt to smear its members and leaders of whatever cost to truth or simple decency."

Justice Dept. Disavows Forced Labor Plan

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18. — A spokesman for Attorney-General Robert Jackson today formally disavowed any responsibility for a widely-publicized article in the Harvard Law School Review which discussed the problem of forced labor in wartime.

The article, written by three attorneys for the Dept. of Justice, brought forth widespread protests from labor and progressive gorups.

In a letter to Pres. Cecil Owen of the Washington, D. C. Industrial Union Council, James Allen, executive assistant to Jackson, declared:

". . . There is not in this Department 'a general rule that federal employes must obtain the approval of their superiors before offering a manuscript for publication'" and accordingly the "assumption by the Council that the authors of the article must necessarily have referred it to the Attorney-General for approval, or should have done so, is entirely incorrect."

Allen said that the three authors of the piece, which was entitled "Wartime Conscription and Control of Labor" are not assistants to the attorney-general, as many had believed on the basis of earlier stories, but employes of the Department's Lands Division.

UNDERSTANDS FEELING

Asserting he could understand "how any article dealing with conscription of labor could raise apprehensions" in the minds of workers, Allen referred to the Attorney-General's "determination to uphold civil liberties in general and to protect the rights of labor . . . His liberalism needs no defense."

The Washington CIO group's resolution had called upon Jackson "publicly to reprimand" the three authors of the article "for suggesting ways of subverting the Constitution which they and you are sworn to uphold and defend."

'FASCIST METHODS'

The Council charged that "the methods outlined in the article are the methods of Fascism" and added that it "condemns suggestions . . . that labor standards be lowered, that wages be frozen and that hours of work be lengthened."

Pres. Owen of the CIO group flatly contradicted a suggestion in the Justice Dept. official's letter that the Council's resolution had been based on a "distorted account" of the article.

Charge AAA Violates Law

New York, Jan. 18.—The Automobile Club of New York, an affiliate of the AAA, has been named in charges of anti-union discrimination filed with the State Labor Relations Board by Local 16, United Office and Professional Workers of America, CIO.

These charges grow out of the summary dismissals of about fifty of the Club's District Managers and the subsequent refusal of the Club to meet with representatives of the men or officials of the Union.

Charges DJ Meddles In Strike

Chicago, Jan. 18 — (FP) — Use of the Dept. of Justice's Bureau of Immigration & Naturalization as a strikebreaking agency was revealed in an affidavit by Erik O. Berg, who is a member of the CIO Natl. Assn. of Die Casting Workers on strike against the Chicago Molded Products Co.

Berg was summoned by the bureau and told he had been reported as an "undesirable alien."

"Inspector Goodman advised me that I should be careful of the union which I joined, since many CIO unions were dominated by Communists. Berg said in his affidavit. "He then further advised me that I could be deported because of this report.

"The inspector advised me that there was a strong possibility that my citizenship papers would have to wait another five years. He said that I had best go home and not picket."

Strikers Demand Pay Boost

Phelps, Wis., Jan. 18. — Charging that the C. N. Christensen Lumber Co. is paying starvation wages to workers in its sawmill plant here while pocketing a good profit, Local 142, International Woodworkers of America, is demanding that the company bargain with the union and agree to pay a decent living wage.

The plant has been shut down tight since December 20, when the 110 employes walked out following the company's flat refusal to meet the workers' request for a five cent hourly pay increase.

The company has been working under contract with the union for three years. When the last agreement expired Dec. 1, the local renewed its demand for a wage boost which had been turned down by the company in the 1939 negotiations.

LOW WAGES

The union pointed out that 75 per cent of the employes had been averaging only 35 hours a week instead of 40 and had been receiving only the $16 minimum pay regardless of skill, although a net profit of more than $50,000 was cleared in 1939.

Rap Dorsey's Appearance On Program

Philadelphia, Jan. 18.—A warning that employment of Jimmy Dorsey and his orchestra on its Twenty Grand cigarette radio program might hurt sales of the product was sent to the Axton-Fisher Tobacco Co. today by Martin A. Coffey, CIO Hotel & Restaurant Workers Local Industrial Union 356.

The CIO union has been on strike against wage cuts at the Penn Athletic Club here for several months. Dorsey and his band walked through the picket line to entertain at a Christmas night affair despite notice sent to him in advance that the club-hotel was unfair to its organized workers.

Leaflets to advise workers throughout the country of the Dorsey strikebreaking episode are being distributed by the local, Coffey declared.

Unions are urged to send letters protesting Dorsey's appearance on the cigarette program to the Axton-Fisher Tobacco Co., Louisville, Kentucky.

Wisconsin CIO to Test State Labor Act

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 18.—Leaders of the Wisconsin CIO Industrial Union Council today made plans for a U. S. Supreme Court test of the constitutionality of the state's anti-labor relations act.

Maintaining that the state law conflicts with the National Labor Relations Act in at least 10 respects, Max E. Geline, union attorney, declared:

"The state labor act remains as unconstitutional as the Oregon state labor law, which was declared unconstitutional."

Test of the state law came when the Wisconsin high court upheld a State Labor Relations Board ruling that workers deemed guilty of "employe unfair labor practices" lose their employe status in the eyes of the law.

The case involved 14 members of the CIO United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, who are fired by the Allen-Bradley Co. after the Board found them guilty of unfair employe practices during a 1939 strike.

Equipment Union Awaits Reply From Company

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Demands made by the CIO Farm Equipment Workers for pay increases and union recognition in all the plants of the International Harvester Corp. on a system-wide basis are awaiting the answer of company officials, Grant Oakes, president of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, reported this week.

The FEWOC has authorized the calling of strikes in the plants where locals are chartered to give the Harvester locals power to enforce their demands. The members of the various locals will vote on the strike issue before any walkouts are actually called, it was stated at FEWOC headquarters.

MAIN DEMANDS DRAFTED

Union demands as drafted at a meeting attended by executive board members, stewards, delegates and wage scale committeemen from all the Harvester locals, include:

1. Abolition of the piece work system and the establishment of hourly rates that will be 10 per cent higher than prevailing piece work and hourly rates. In the Chicago Tractor Works and the new rates are to be set on the basis of scale committee proposals.

2. A minimum wage of 75 cents for men and 65 cents for women.

Negotiations on the demands were under way on a plant basis in Chicago Tractor Works and Richmond Works, but FEWOC officials state that any settlement of the wage dispute in these plants will be held in abeyance "until Harvester deals on a corporation-wide scale."

CIO Pushes Pay Raise Demands

Washington, Jan. 25.—CIO unions this week continued their drive for wage increases in basic industries throughout the nation.

In Pittsburgh, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, head of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, spent three hours discussing SWOC contract renewal demands with heads of U. S. Steel, which employs a quarter of a million workers.

In Detroit, representatives of 150,000 workers in 68 General Motors plants will gather soon to discuss their demands for a new agreement.

At San Diego, Calif., a last-minute agreement averted a strike and brought big pay boosts for 1,660 employes of the Ryan Aircraft Corp.

In Chicago, the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee prepared for a strike vote at the Intl. Harvester Co. Tractor plant, and strikes were in progress at two other properties of the IHC industrial network.

In West Allis, Wis., 7,000 members of the United Automobile Workers struck to enforce demands for greater union security and more pay.

To Vote At Solvay Process Co.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Production and maintenance employes of the Solvay Process Co., Hopewell, Virginia, will have the opportunity soon to vote on being represented by Local 12103, Chemical Division of District 50, United Mine Workers. The NLRB has ordered that an election be held at the plant within 30 days.

Also on the ballot will be the Solvay Workers' Council, independent, which signed one-year agreements with the company in 1938, '39 and '40. In February, 1940, UMW Dist. 50 filed a petition for investigation and certification on the basis that it represented a majority of the employes.

CIO OFFERS AN ANSWER: Do away with make-shift defense housing like this, and provide America's workers with clean, inexpensive pre-fabricated homes, is the suggestion the CIO Committee on Housing made public this week. This picture, taken when the thermometer stood at five degrees above zero, shows a trailer camp at Eliot, Me., occupied by workers at the nearby Portsmouth, N. H., Navy Yard. Cold weather, poor housing have combined to spread epidemics.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—A seven-year struggle waged against the H. C. Frick Coke Co., an old and bitter enemy of organized labor, has ended with a smashing union victory which will bring in 20,000 new members, the United Mine Workers announced this week.

The Frick Co. has agreed to disband its two company unions in its Fayette county mines in Pennsylvania, according to a release issued by the National Labor Relations Board.

This means that the United Mine Workers becomes sole bargaining agent for some 20,000 miners not previously enrolled in the union.

The case goes back to the "captive mine" strike of 1933. At that time an election was held under the old NRA which resulted in a three-way split of the miners' votes between the two company unions — the Workmen's Brotherhood and the Miners' Independent Brotherhood — and the United Mine Workers.

After the election, the UMW filed charges with the Labor Board of company control of the two brotherhoods, and for seven years the struggle of the UMW for recognition continued.

Boost Unions As Aid To Industrial Peace

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—Research experts of the Twentieth Century Fund, today concluded that the best recipe for industrial peace in defense industries is genuine collective bargaining.

The report, based on a survey of labor problems under the defense program, described compulsory arbitration as "unworkable" and pointed out that most defense industry strikes are caused by questions of union recognition rather than of hours and wages.

While many groups have advocated compulsory arbitration, "very few of its advocates understand the practical difficulties of so drastic an innovation," the statement declares. "In no democratic country has it proven possible to prevent strikes simply by legislation."

In Great Britain, the Fund recalled, "the regular machinery of collective bargaining has proven able to adjust disputes even in a severe emergency and relatively few strikes have occurred."

The report urged extension of voluntary mediation facilities to avoid strikes and praised the Natl. Labor Relations Board as providing "a means for the removal of grievances which might otherwise lead to a strike."

Would Cut Costly Delays

(See Story Page Three)

Washington, Jan. 25.—The CIO Committee on Housing today offered government officials a plan to smash the bottleneck that has tied up defense home projects throughout the country and led to discomfort, waste and inefficiency for thousands of industrial workers.

Made public by Thomas Kennedy, Committee secretary, the plan calls for establishment of a new government agency to develop use of prefabricated homes, which the CIO group said can be produced at the rate of 10,000 or more a month.

Advantage of pre-fabricated houses, it was pointed out, lie in the speed with which they can be built, their low cost and the fact that in post-war years the government could move the homes to new localities.

The memorandum said the Committee and the United Construction Workers were dismayed at the inefficiency of the U. S. Public Buildings Administration. That agency, in charge of a large portion of defense housing, has had little experience with home construction, the statement asserted.

As a result, the housing program is far behind schedule, costs are running high, and vested capital interests together with special segments of the trade union movement are having the program run to meet their own demands.

Closed Shop Won In Pact

New Kensington, Pa., Jan. 25.—The Logan Lumber Company signed an agreement last Sunday with the Construction Workers Organizing Committee (CIO) providing a closed shop and substantial wage increases.

The company signed three days after a strike was called at its New Kensington and Tarentum plants. Twenty-eight employes are effected.

VOTE BROUGHT PACT: Employes of the Ryan Aircraft Co., San Diego, Calif., cast a near-unanimous vote to authorize the CIO United Automobile Workers to strike for contract and higher wages. Shortly after that the company talked turkey, agreed to pay raises and improvements. This tot apparently is making sure his Dad votes right.

Vultee Technicians Win Pact

Los Angeles, Jan. 25—CIO technical workers have followed up the production workers victory at the Vultee Aircraft Co. here with a contract winning wage increases, job protection and other benefits for 150 workers, members of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians.

The contract has wage boosts of two to eight dollars a week, seniority, sick leave and vacations, grievance procedure, and job guarantees for conscripted workers. A major point in the agreement is a new system of job classifications which gives raises to more than half the men involved.

The FAECT expressed its thanks to the United Auto Workers, Aircraft Division, for help in securing the contract.

Ryan Aircraft Lifts Pay, Averts Strike

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Jan. 25.—With a strike zero-hour looming, the big Ryan Aeronautical Co. this week came to terms with the CIO United Automobile Workers in an agreement that spelled millions of dollars in wage increases for all its 1,600 employes.

The contract, the first signed by the company, lifted wages to the 62½c minimum level established by the Vultee strike last autumn, and provided substantial gains in working conditions.

The union twice pushed back its deadline ultimatum to permit negotiators to work out the agreement, which lifted pay scales far above those previously offered by the Ryan management.

First the union postponed the strike call from 7 A. M. to 7 P. M., and when that hour arrived the negotiators "stopped the clock" to permit the parleys to continue.

MURRAY ON PHONE

Before the settlement was finally reached, the UAW officials, Ryan, John Steelman of the U. S. Conciliation Service in Washington and CIO Pres. Philip Murray in Pittsburgh participated in a two-hour trans-continental telephone conversation in which the issues received examination.

The agreement, unanimously ratified by the membership, provides a job classification system which will send employes into the next highest rating group. Pay for the four rating levels will be at the rate of 62½, 75 and 90 cents an hour, and $1.05 for the "premium group."

In addition, the men won grievance procedure described by the union as "excellent," vacations with pay, and seniority.

Last week the Ryan employes voted 731-27 to authorize a walkout if negotiations for badly-needed pay increases broke down.

Union officials pointed out that a large majority of the workers were receiving only about $20 a week, and that San Diego rents had risen to the point where the men were unable to meet their living expenses.

Elated by the victory, Frankensteen said an immediate drive would be launched to organize the huge Consolidated Aircraft plant in this city. The company employs 17,000 workers, and with Douglas, Lockheed and Boeing, constitutes the Pacific Coast aircraft industry's "Big Four."

Win 45% Pay Rise

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Jan. 25.—Wage boosts from 20 to 45 per cent, two weeks paid vacation, sick leave, seniority rights and grievance adjustment machinery were won by District 50 of the United Mine Workers in a contract with the G. W. Carnrick Co., drug manufacturers, here.

The contract followed a Labor Board poll in which the CIO union took 80 per cent of the vote.

Intl. Harvester, Union Negotiate; Take Strike Vote

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—Negotiations for a settlement of a dispute at the Tractor Works of the International Harvester Co. continued this week with the CIO's Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee authorized to call a strike if necessary to obtain the union's demands.

Some 6,500 members of Tractor Works Local 101 cast ballots in the strike poll ordered at a special membership meeting last Sunday. Authority to call a strike was placed in the hands of the local's executive board and negotiating committee.

The strike poll was held Tuesday and Wednesday from 7.30 to 10 P. M. at the union hall and resulted in a large majority voting to authorize the strike. Meanwhile the union exerted every possible effort to negotiate a settlement with the management, pressing complete elimination of piece work, increases in hourly pay rates and national negotiations by Harvester with the CIO Farm Equipment Workers.

WIRE TO FDR

In a telegram sent to President Roosevelt, FEWOC Chairman Grant Oakes said: "Situation in International Harvester becoming more acute due to NLRB's failure to render verdict in International Harvester case. Both International Harvester and NLRB seem very interested in suppressing the report.

"It is significant that in shops where Harvester has contracts with our union, negotiations are proceeding, while two strikes are now on in non-contract shops and others developing due to the company's taking advantage of the unwarranted NLRB delay. In view of this, we consider it imperative that the NLRB render its decision immediately so that industrial peace may be preserved."

PLEDGE SUPPORT

The Tractor local here has pledged complete support to the Harvester workers in Rock Falls and East Moline, Ill., where strikes are now on, and has served notice on the company that any attempt to settle the strikes other than by negotiations between Harvester and the FEWOC will be met by action on the part of the Tractor local here.

The Labor Board case against International Harvester has been in litigation two and a half years. An intermediate report made by the Board's trial examiner recommended that company unions maintained in the plants be abolished, but the NLRB has not acted on the report.

7,000 Walk Out at Allis Chalmers

West Allis, Wis., Jan. 25—Continued refusal of the big Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. to seriously discuss two major union problems—wage increases and union security—brought its dividend this week as 7,000 members of Local 248, United Automobile Workers, went out on strike.

The walkout followed a strike authorization vote in which close to 5,900 employes voted in favor of shutting the plant if the firm continued its refusal to discuss the UAW proposals.

Federal conciliators were sent to the scene in an effort to bring about a settlement.

Ask Probe Of Ford's No.1Stooge

Washington, Jan. 25 — William J. Cameron, anti-labor, anti-Semitic front man for Henry Ford, whose booming voice switches off millions of radios every Sunday evening, will be investigated by the Attorney-General on charges of making a false statement under oath, under the terms of a resolution offered to the House by Rep. Lee E. Geyer, of California.

The resolution would bring a probe into charges by Dan Gillmor, publisher of Friday Magazine, that Cameron got his citizenship papers in 1935 by fraud, or that he swore falsely when voting in Detroit.

"Cameron's own statements, under oath, indicate that he obtained his citizenship by fraud or was guilty of fraud in exercising his rights of citizenship," Geyer said.

CONTRADICTIONS

"Cameron obtained American citizenship in 1935 without the usual five-year period of waiting by claiming that he had voted quite regularly from 1900 to 1927. One month later, when he registered to vote in Detroit, he swore, under oath, that he had never before voted. The records of Dearborn County, where he lived prior to 1927, show he never voted there.

"Mr. Cameron was unworthy of citizenship to begin with. His actions since then have reflected discredit on Americanism. I call upon the Attorney-General of the U. S. to immediatly investigate the granting of citizenship to Cameron."

AFRAID OF CIO STRENGTH:

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Jan. 25.—The pace of the United Automobile Workers-CIO drive to organize the Ford Motor Co. was quickened this week with news from Kansas City of another smashing labor board blow at the company's vicious anti-labor policies.

At the same time, despite the company's refusal to consent to a NLRB election at its Lincoln plant in Detroit, the union pushed ahead its campaign there and put the steam on for an election as early as possible.

In the Kansas City case the board ruled that Ford must rehire, with back pay, 1,021 UAW-CIO members who were discharged because of their union membership. The order, which will become final in a short time, directs the Ford Motor Co. to cease "discouraging membership in the UAW."

WARNED BY NLRB

Ford is warned in the order that it cannot get away with threats to close its plants in order to combat the UAW. The board held that Ford closed the Kansas City plant in 1937 after the union had achieved a 90 per cent membership, as part "of a plan to destroy the UAW." It reopened later, but only non-union men were hired.

The Kansas City decision is the sixth in which the board has condemned the Ford Motor Company for its labor policies.

Through its general corporation counsel, I. A. Capizzi, the company refused last week-end to consent to an election at Lincoln at the request of the director of the seventh region of the National Labor Relations Board.

WIDMAN'S COMMENT

Michael F. Widman, Jr., director of the UAW-CIO Ford drive declared that the company refused because it feared a union victory and because it selfishly refused to cooperate with the government to save time and money.

"Refusal of the company to consent to an election re-emphasizes two already known facts," Widman said.

"First, the company fears an election because it knows the UAW-CIO will win by a landslide. Consequently, it is seeking to postpone the vote as long as possible.

"Second, The company apparently has no intention of cooperating with the United States government for the purposes explained by the labor board of saving time and money. Its refusal selfishly imposes an additional burden on the taxpayers who must ultimately pay the bill."

In preparation for an ordered election at the Lincoln plant, the union has set up headquarters directly across the street from the plant's employment office.

Budget Seen As Blow To Jobless

Washington, Jan. 25. — WPA cuts of one-third in the President's budget are not justified while there are nine million unemployed whose labor is needed by the nation, the CIO Unemployment Committee declared in a statement issued here today.

The statement, issued by Sec. James B. Carey as chairman, called for an appropriation sufficient to take care of the unemployed and for a deficiency appropriation of $500,000,000 to take care of the immediate situation.

The Committee statement, approved by the members attending a meeting of the Committee in Washington, criticized government estimates of defense employment "which are, to say the least, excessive," in pointing out that only two and a half million workers will be absorbed during the year by private industry.

HIT LOW REQUESTS

It also criticized "chronically low requests" by the administration for WPA funds "which lend aid and comfort to those who would wipe out unemployment by simply forgetting it," and which have impaired CIO efforts to get decent sums appropriated for the jobless.

Text of the Unemployment Committee statement follows:

"At no time has it been more important that adequate provision be made for the unemployed of the nation. At a time when our country needs the labor of every hand and the loyalty of every heart it is complete folly to leave idle millions of men and women who need work.

"The CIO has repeatedly set forth its belief that useful work at decent wages should be provided for all Americans. If private industry does not accomplish this end then the government must.

Bethlehem Shipyards To Bargain!

Camden, N. J., —Jan. 25. — Bethlehem Steel Co. has tossed in its anti-union sponge.

Company officials announced that collective bargaining sessions, to be followed by the signing of written contracts, will get under way immediately in four of the corporations shipyard subsidiaries.

Officials of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, which will bargain for the corporation's employes, hailed the decision as the first break in the anti-union front which Bethlehem has maintained since 1919.

BOSTON AND NEW YORK

First negotiations will be conducted at the Fletcher Drydock in Hoboken, N. J., largest of the Bethlehem yards in the Port of New York, and at the East Boston, Mass., drydock. Company officials promised that the Fletcher agreement, when reached, would be extended to cover the company's other New York harbor properties.

The company's decision to recognize the Wagner Act followed successful union organization campaigns and continued defeats for Bethlehem before the NLRB and in the courts.

Murray, Big Steel In Parley

Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 25.—Negotiations for improved contracts in the steel industry have been started by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. Preliminary conferences have been held with officials of the United States Steel Corporation and Crucible Steel Corporation.

Whatever is eventually worked out with these corporations will be used as the basis for negotiations with other steel companies.

In an informal conference held here on January 21, Philip Murray, chairman of the SWOC, and William Beye, a vice-president of U. S. Steel, went into a "broad, exploratory discussion" of the existing contract and some of the proposed changes. In New York on the same day, a union committee headed by Clinton S. Golden, SWOC regional director, began contract negotiations with Crucible.

TO MEET JAN. 31

Murray and Beye are scheduled to resume conferences on January 31. These conferences are of an informal nature. The SWOC has not served a formal notice to reopen the contract, as required under the so-called "20-day escape clause," in the existing agreement.

An increase in wages is one of the primary matters under consideration in the conferences. Of all the contract changes proposed by local unions in resolutions to the national office, none failed to touch on that point.

When formal negotiations get under way with U. S. Steel, many of the causes of grievances and disputes during the past few years will be given detailed study, with the object of eliminating them through contractual changes.

OTHER QUESTIONS

These include such questions as the five-day work week, seniority, incentive plans, wage classifications—in fact, the mechanics of existing grievance provisions. On the basis of actual experience, it is now realized that the present grievance machinery can be improved to the end that more grievances can be settled in the plants and that major questions can be settled quicker.

Many of the local unions have suggested the employment of a permanent umpire—to be paid jointly by U. S. Steel and the union—in place of the present provisions for the use of an umpire on a voluntary basis.

Changes will also be sought in the new contracts on the questions of improved vacations and the collection of dues.

Murray has called a meeting of Regional Directors Golden, Van A. Bittner, William Mitch and Secretary-Treasurer David J. MacDonald for the afternoon of January 31—to go into the question of contract changes.

The CIO Defense Plan, presented by Pres. Philip Murray, is now ready in pamphlet form for mass circulation. Order from Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Conn. Ave., Washington, D. C. 100 for $1.00, 500 for $4.25.

Coal Mine Blast Kills 4 Workers

Washington, Jan. 25.—The parade of death in the nation's coal mines got its start for 1941 this week.

Four men were killed and 14 others rescued from an explosion in the Carswell mine of the Koppers Coal Co. near Kimball, six miles east of Welch, W. Va.

Last year several hundred men were killed in similar mine explosions, but Congress refused—despite frequent pleas from the United Mine Workers and the CIO—to pass the coal mine inspection bill.

The bill has once again been placed in the House legislative hopper, and the unions are preparing once again to demand its enactment.

Urge Mass Production Of Homes

Washington, Jan. 25.—The CIO today made public a plan for solving the nation's rapidly growing housing crisis through mass production of 10,000 or more pre-fabricated homes each month.

Made public by Thomas Kennedy, secretary of the CIO Committee on Housing, the plan listed four principal benefits for the mass production plan:

1. Maximum speed
2. Minimum dislocation of industry
3. Economy
4. Maximum salvage value

Kennedy's statement pointed out that the United Construction Workers, CIO affiliate, has submitted figures to show the current defense housing program is lagging far behind schedule, and said it had operated to entrench vested interests of capital and special segments of labor with little regard for efficiency or the public welfare.

FEW HOMES BUILT

Charging that only a few thousand housing units have been started — and most of these during the past month — the CIO Committee said that glowing reports issued by some governmental authorities paint an untrue picture of the situation.

"The lack of adequate housing facilities for families of defense industrial workers is an acute problem and one that calls for swift and efficient action," the statement asserted. "All segments of the industry capable of making a contribution should be mobilized and

To Ask Official Probe Of U. S. Ford Award

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25. — Charging that "there's a conspiracy involved" in the Army's award of a $1,400,000 midget car contract to the Ford Motor Car Co., Rep. Charles I. Faddis of Pennsylvania will soon ask a Congressional investigation of the War Department's action, it was learned here today.

Ford received the contract only after War Dept. officials had changed specifications to increase the weight of the four-wheel-drive cars by 160 pounds, acording to a story written for the New York Newspaper "PM" by I. F. Stone, Washington editor of "The Nation."

The 160 pounds seriously diminish the efficiency of the machines, many Army technicians believe, but the Ford engineers were apparently unable to reduce the weight to the 2,000 pounds required in the Army's original specifications.

The midget cars were first developed by the Bantam Motor Co. of Butler, Pa., in cooperation with Army engineers. But when the first orders were placed, Ford received a considerable share of the contract despite his failure to meet the Army's weight standards.

DESIGNED BY BANTAM

According to the PM story, Rep. Faddis saw the need of a "4-wheel drive car, with no top, no glass windshield, of light weight and with good clearance," when he retired from Army service at the end of the last war and recommended its adoption by the War Dept.

This is the type of car developed by the Bantam firm, but Defense Commission executives refused to clear the Army contract until Ford and the Willys-Overland Co. were allowed to share in the order.

Highly critical of Ford, Rep. Faddis was quoted in the newspaper story as believing there "is nothing in his record to indicate he is interested in national defense.

"His interest is in getting this work away from Bantam and developing a new light car after the war. He wants to make sure that Bantam won't be in the field to compete with him when he does. . . .

"I think there's a conspiracy involved in this Ford contract, and I intend to get to the bottom of it."

Textile Union Maps Big Southern Drive

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 25.—Hundreds of delegates from textile centers throughout the South are scheduled to convene in Atlanta, Ga., this week-end to launch a renewed drive by the Textile Workers Union in Southern states.

"We shall demand an increase in wages for all Southern textile workers. Our objectives, however, go beyond that. We are determined to fight as long as it may be necessary to help the Southern worker achieve the same measure of economic justice and political freedom enjoyed by workers in other sections of the country.

'DETERMINED'

"We are determined to help him attain industrial democracy in his mills and political democracy in his polling places.

"Many of the leaders of the reactionary bloc in Congress who are now scheming and conspiring to destroy the rights of labor under the guise of national defense, hold office only by virtue of the fact that they are not truly representative of the people but were elected by a minority of the elite while majority are disfranchised by illegal and unconstitutional poll tax laws."

George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the TWU and William Pollock, secretary-treasurer, also left to attend the Southern conference. Roy R. Lawrence, Southern TWU director, will open the meeting. Senator Claude Pepper of Florida and Sidney Hillman, associate director of the Office of Production Management, have been invited to speak.

The CIO Housing Plan

The expansion of defense production has created an acute housing problem for the workers in many industrial centers.

Newly arrived workers have great difficulty in finding homes for themselves and their families at rents they can afford to pay. They have to crowd into unsatisfactory quarters, and the general rent increases that result from the housing shortage mean a reduction in the real wages of all the workers.

The present defense housing program lags far behind the need, Secretary Thomas Kennedy of the CIO Housing Committee points out, in his memorandum to the Office of Production Management and the Defense Housing Coordinator.

To meet this situation, the CIO advances a constructive and carefully worked out proposal. It calls for the establishment of a separate government agency to carry through immediately a mass-production program of low-cost prefabricated housing.

By the use of modern building technics, the CIO points out, all the houses needed can be built in the shortest possible time.

This CIO plan will give employment to large numbers of unemployed workers will supply defense and other workers with decent homes at reasonable rates; will check the present general tendency of rising rents; and will relieve the present housing congestion.

Why has such a logical program not been adopted already? Simply because of the resistance of old-line contractors and of some of the old-line AFL craft unions that are in collusion with vested interests in the industry.

To overcome this resistance, the CIO is trying to arouse an overwhelming popular demand for the adoption of its plan. This demand is already being expressed by the workers who are suffering most from the present housing shortage.

It should also be supported by all of labor and by all progressive groups that want to see more employment, better housing and the maintenance of American wage and living standards.

Few Strikes

The phony character of the present outcry against strikes—a smokescreen behind which anti-labor legislation is being plotted—is revealed by the fact that we are at present experiencing one of the most strikeless periods in American history.

U. S. Labor Department records show that stoppages from labor disputes dropped sharply in 1940; and that there were only half as many strikes last year, involving half as many workers, as in 1917, when the United States was actually at war.

The credit for this reduction in industrial stoppages belongs to the very procedure which the advocates of anti-strike legislation are seeking to disrupt and destroy — namely, collective bargaining.

In the last war period most of the great mass-production industries were unorganized. Strikes frequently arose because the workers could not avail themselves of the orderly channels of collective bargaining to dispose of their grievances; and because employers refused to recognize their unions.

The success of the CIO in establishing collective bargaining in most of the basic and defense industries is responsible for the fact that union contracts now preserve industrial peace to an unprecedented degree.

Agreements affecting hundreds of thousands of workers in these industries are renewed time and again without a ripple of stoppage and with little or any mention in the press. But an occasional strike affecting a few hundred workers in a single plant is played up as if it were halting the whole defense program.

If the real facts are offset against the current anti-union propaganda it will be clearly seen that the extension, not the curbing, of collective bargaining is the best method of preventing stoppages.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

A STRIKE which holds up production one day in one plant is enough to drive some papers and some politicians into hysterics.

But the inefficiencies, the profit-greediness, the collusion and the general planlessness that keep hundreds of plants and millions of workers idle by the month, are passed over almost without comment.

In fact, it seems to take a war to make some people realize that there is anything wrong with the holding-up of production that is considered normal in times of peace.

When labor raises a fuss about this restriction of production during a depression, it is denounced as radical. It receives respectful attention only when, as at present, it is a matter of speeding-up production for war purposes.

Building Bottleneck

The proposal of the CIO Housing Committee for the mass production of low-cost housing for workers employed on the defense program, is designed to meet a need that was sorely felt long before the present war period.

Through prefabricated housing, modern building techniques and a planned program directed by a special government agency, all the houses needed could be produced in a relatively short time, and made available to workers at reasonable rents, the CIO committee points out.

There are plenty of unemployed workers to do the work, the materials are available, and there is a crying demand for the finished houses.

But standing in the way of this program are the entrenched vested interests of various capitalist groups, and the narrow, short-sighted and often corrupt practices of certain AFL craft unions.

That the CIO should be the first to point a way out of this building bottleneck, is a testimony to labor's natural concern, both as producer and consumer, with increased production; and to the fact that industrial unionism is far more geared than craft unionism to the expanding production made possible by modern industry.

Not Surprising

When the United Automobile Workers advanced their plan for increased airplane production, through using the idle facilities of the auto industry, many former critics of labor grew surprised and starry-eyed at the thought of a labor union concerning itself with increased production.

On the contrary, working people are the first to suffer when plants are kept closed; when long seasonal layoffs occur; and when America's splendid industrial equipment is allowed to produce only a small percentage of the goods it is capable of producing.

The CIO, ever since its inception, has protested against the selfish planlessness and the managerial inefficiencies of the owners of industry, which have kept millions of workers unemployed and restricted the flow of production.

It has demanded the "right to work" for all workers and advanced repeated proposals to set the wheels of industry turning and to keep them turning.

The CIO has called again and again for a national conference to plan how to put idle workers and idle plants to work producing the goods the country needs. It is the only agency that has continuously and consistently tried to force this No. 1 problem on the attention of the powers that be.

So there is nothing surprising in the fact that the CIO, in one industry after another, is now advancing plans for increased and more efficient production that will really put idle machines and idle workers to work.

Camel Swallowers

On its part, labor won't get surprised and starry-eyed until the wolves of Wall Street cease to prey upon each other and upon the public; and until the captains of industry and finance release the full forces of production at their command, so that all may have jobs producing the goods the people need.

But it looks like a long, long wait for that. So in the meanwhile labor will just have to keep on advancing its plans, and making its demands—and pointing its finger at the real reasons why production lags.

As for those who strain at the gnat of an occasional strike while they swallow the camel of unemployment and idle plants—they are not really concerned with continuous or increased production.

On the contrary, they are seeking to enchain with anti-strike laws and to keep down the wage levels of the very people who have most to gain from and most to contribute to the free expansion of production.

Urge Mass Production Of Workers' Homes

put to work without further delay."

INEFFICIENCY

In advancing its recommendation for an "all-out" campaign to construct pre-fabricated workers' homes, the CIO group issued a scathing indictment of the inefficiency of the U. S. Public Buildings Administration, whose record it said "deserves serious consideration."

Two and a half months after passage of legislation giving the government $150,000,000 for defense housing, contracts have been let for only 6,880 units in 21 projects, the CIO committee declared. That figure is less than one-seventh of the number authorized by Congress.

To break the existing defense housing bottleneck, the committee statement urged formation of an entirely new governmental agency to direct construction and placement of the prefabricated homes.

Many government experts, whose skills might be used for housing programs, are at present not engaged in work where their services would best aid the national defense program, it was pointed out — a situation which could be remedied by formation of the new agency.

USE HOMES AFTER WAR

The CIO program, the committee continued, "would also go far to avoid the mistakes of the World War when the government found itself with many thousands of homes left on its hands after the emergency. The prefabricated type of house may be quickly dismantled and removed to areas where it is needed."

Three principal advantages of the prefabricated home program were listed in the committee's memorandum.

"We would point to those areas where the isolated nature of the defense work being done makes it inconceivable that the housing needed for defense workers could for a long time in the future be absorbed in a normal market," it said. "To proceed in these areas by conventional methods must mean at some later time a long period of real estate inactivity. The cost of housing is thus increased by the real estate financial losses which must inevitably follow, plus the unemployment and stagnation of the building industry.

"To areas such as these, prefabrication can offer housing which may be used for the duration of the defense emergency, and which may later be easily removed to other areas where housing is vitally needed. Reference is made to the rural housing needs of the South; to the needs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and to the needs of many other governmental agencies where good, low cost housing is a real part of worthwhile social programs.

"Prefabrication, likewise, can make a distinct contribution in those areas where current private building is going at full capacity and where to try to add to the housing supply by conventional means can only mean a shift of the available labor from privately-sponsored projects to public sponsored projects with little, if any, net increase in the number of housing units to be made available.

"Here prefabrication would make it possible to get a substantial portion of the work done elsewhere in areas where defense work is not going on, thus adding to the housing of the defense area with a minimum disturbance of the local building industry.

"Thirdly, the prefabricated house industry can make a distinct contribution in those areas where building by conventional means involves the expensive importation of labor not locally available. Most dramatic of these cases are the numerous Island Bases. In these areas, prefabrication not only offers the fastest and cheapest answer, but fabrication in continental United States will preserve much of the labor for American workmen."

Plan CIO Circus

East St. Louis, Ill., Jan. 25 — Plans for a CIO Winter Circus and Bazaar, to raise funds for union members conscripted into the military forces, are moving quickly ahead, the E. St. Louis Industrial Union Council announced today.

A full program of entertainment has been mapped out, Edward Mahoney, chairman of the committee declared. The affair will be held at St. Paul's Social Center, March 6-8.

CIO Hits Budget Cut In WPA Appropriation

completely unemployed needing work and able to work. A number of government agencies have tried in one way or another to present figures implying that there is no serious problem of unemployment. No honest, useful figures of unemployment have been issued by the government. Even the figures issued by the Census have been twisted in an apparant attempt to conceal the extent of unemployment.

"Furthermore government sources have lent currency to estimates of new employment arising out of national defense which are, to say the least, excessive.

"It is perfectly clear that unemployment will not be decreased more than two and a half million by work in private industry within the next year. This decrease does not justify a cut of one third in WPA as set forth in the President's budget.

"For the last three years the CIO has fought for more provisions for the unemployed. Its efforts have been greatly impaired by the chronically low requests of the administration which lend aid and comfort to those who would wipe out unemployment simply by forgetting it.

"We again face a similar situation. The amounts provided in the budget are completely inadequate. Why can't this nation, which has shown such a disregard of the dollar sign in its appropriations for enormous armaments being manufactured at profit prices by private industries, show a similar sense of urgency and generosity to the unemployed?

"We will urge a public work program for the coming fiscal year sufficient to meet these requirements. We will also seek a deficiency appropriation for WPA which will provide for maintenance of WPA employment at its present level. This will require not less than $500 million.

"The CIO will continue to urge that provisions be made by which the unemployed can make their contribution to the welfare of the nation. We believe that every unemployed man and woman should be offered an opportunity to work at decent wages and that the public employment rolls should not be closed until there are no more unemployed seeking work."

Court Kills Alien Law

Washington, Jan. 25—Registration, fingerprinting and otherwise keeping tabs on aliens is the prerogative of the Federal government and not the business of the states, the U. S. Supreme Court said here in knocking out Pennsylvania's Alien Registration Law.

Further, said the Court, the Federal alien law was in part designed to protect aliens from local inquisitions. Congress, in passing the law, intended "to protect the personal liberties of law-abiding aliens through one uniform national registraton system, and to leave them free from the possibility of inquisitorial practives and police surveillance."

CIO Leaders' Broadcast Hits Anti-Strike Bills

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Current demands in tory circles for anti-strike laws "are not born of a desire to aid defense, but rather from a desire to take away labor's hard-won rights," Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, declared here in a radio round-table on labor's role in the defense program.

"That drastic step is being urged now because of the defense emergency," Kennedy said. "But if you will think a moment, you will recognize that the people who are demanding such a step have been asking for the same thing for years — long before we embarked on our defense program.

"In other words, certain people and groups who have had their knives out for labor for a long time are now plying their same anti-labor stock-in-trade under a false banner of patriotism."

The round-table, arranged by the Columbia Broadcasting System and put out over a national hookup, was participated in by Kennedy, R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, and David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

PEACEFUL RELATIONS

General theme of the three CIO officials was that labor's part in the defense program, while receiving tremendous publicity on the few occasions when a strike broke out, was one of cooperation — as shown by the low number of man-days lost through disputes.

As Pres. Thomas pointed out, there were only two strikes in aircraft last year — and in the same period the CIO union signed or renewed contracts with 700 manufacturers in autos and aircraft employing 425,000 workers, all of them completed without strikes. Similarly in steel, where, McDonald said, the SWOC has "established sound, responsible relations under the 600 or more contracts we have in that industry."

Another favorite subject of "defense" orators, shortage of labor, was disposed of by Kennedy, who cited the nine million unemployed as answer to the tory plea that labor shortage demands a lengthening of the work week.

This myth would be cleared up very quickly under the CIO national defense plan as proposed by Pres. Philip Murray, McDonald added, since the plan called for industry councils to make a thorough survey of labor and productive potentials as one of their first functions.

PRODUCTION LAG

Touching on the lag in defense production, and on the effort of reactionary Congressmen to pin the blame on labor, Kennedy again cited Pres. Murray's plan on the dangerous policy of allocating almost all defense contracts to a comparatively few large corporations, leaving 70 per cent of productive capacity unused.

"Too many heads of industry are approaching the national defense job as one great opportunity to roll up astounding profits — some going so far as to compel the government to buy them new plant equipment out of which they alone derive the excessive profits," he added.

"The CIO asks for responsibility so that it may better serve its own tremendous membership and at the same time serve the interests of our nation," Kennedy concluded, in pointing to the policy of the CIO to resist all subversive elements and other enemies as evidence of its patriotism and sense of national responsibility.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Plans of the Office of Production Management—newly-organized top Defense authority—to call on the Natl. Association of Manufacturers for a survey of defense plant facilities were sharply protested by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in letters sent to Wm. S. Knudsen, director-general of OPM, and Sidney Hillman, associate director-general.

Murray's letter, after reminding of the CIO plan for joint defense councils equally representing labor and industry, declared "the real facts obviously can be determined only by the effective participation of labor in such a survey and in the allocation of orders to available production facilities of the nation."

"In an address over the radio on January 18, Mr. John D. Biggers indicated that the Office of Production Management will this week make a census of facilities for defense production through a private organization, the National Associa- of Manufacturers.

MURRAY OFFERED PLAN

"On December 19, 1940, I proposed to the President of the United States and to the then National Defense Advisory Commission the establishment of joint industry councils vested with among other things the responsibility of surveying all available production facilities. Under the Plan, these councils were charged with the responsibility of so allocating the production as to make the fullest possible use of available facilities. These councils according to my proposal were to be composed jointly of representatives of labor and of management.

"Immediately following this proposal, a Plan was presented to the President and to the Defense Commission embodying an extensive survey of unused facilities in the automobile industry and making proposals as to their effective use in the manufacture of aircraft.

"At the same time, similar surveys were instituted by the CIO in the steel industry and in the electrical, radio and machine manufacturing industry. These proposals are token of labor's determination that full use shall be made of America's production facilities for national defense and for the welfare of our people.

"Labor has proved by these surveys that there is great production capacity still unutilized and that many millions of unemployed remain to be put to work. These facts, presented by labor, have successfully refuted the contention of the National Association of Manufacturers and other such organizations that there is necessity for the lengthening of hours or the breaking down of labor standards in the name of national defense.

"These CIO surveys have also made clear that government orders for national defense are concentrated by and large in the hands of a few especially privileged corporations, many of which are predominant in the National Association of Manufacturers.

STRONGLY PROTESTS

"Therefore, on behalf of the CIO, I must protest strongly against the official use by the Office of Production Management of the National Association of Manufacturers for a survey of production facilities.

"That organization has already made clear its bias. It simply represents those interests which have already secured the major share of arms orders. The real facts obviously can be determined only by the effective participation of labor in such a survey and in the allocation of orders to available production facilities of the nation.

"A similar letter is being sent to Mr. Sidney Hillman."

Steel Rally Hears Bittner

Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 25 — Van A. Bittner, regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the Western area, was the principal speaker at a joint meeting here of the five American Steel & Wire Co. local unions.

District Director William P. Donovan also spoke, outlining the gains made in the Cleveland area during the last month.

Commending the Cleveland staff for the splendid work they are doing, Bittner said: "Our job is just beginning, not only in Cleveland, not only in the steel mills of the United States, but in Canada as well. If we are to build a 100 per cent organization. No one, four years ago, even dreamed that in this short time we would build such a powerful union as we have today."

Declaring that "no general is stronger than his army" Bittner told the conference that the SWOC army must defend the gains made by the union.

"The first line of defense is the power and strength of the union," he said.

Plan GM Contract Demands

Detroit, Jan. 25 — Representatives of General Motors employes from over three score plants throughout the country will meet here Feb. 8 and 9 to draft demands for contract renewal negotiations with the country's largest motor corporation.

GM's 69th Goes CIO

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—The CIO United Automobile Workers today had chalked up plant No. 69 in its campaign to organize General Motors.

By a vote of 1,520 to 580, employes of the McCook Electromotive plant, chose the CIO union as their collective bargaining agency.

Ask Jobless Benefits For Draftees

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 25—Unemployment compensation for drafted workers was urged today by Ray Edmundson, state CIO director and president of District 12 of the United Mine Workers, in a letter sent to the state Unemployment Compensation Division headed by Martin Durkin.

"A man drafted for military service should be entitled to unemployment compensation benefits, not only in recognition of his patriotic sacrifice, but because of the definite needs of his family and himself," Edmundson wrote.

"Some employers in Illinois have shown a willingness to aid national defense by continuing payment of wages and salaries during the military service of their employes. The majority have not. It is the duty of the state to adjust this situation."

HIGHER EDUCATION:

Utility Outfit Paid $150,000 To Professors

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Evidence of a double-barrelled effort by big business to influence school and college teachers to impart "safe" and conservative instruction to their students was exposed at hearings of the Securities & Exchange Commission here this week.

Testimony at the hearing, which received scant attention in the daily press, brought out the fact that two New York University professors had received a total of $150,000 during a two-year period from the Edison Electric Institute.

The Institute is the electric power industry's top trade association, and was formed after a Federal Trade Commission had exposed the fact that its predecessor, the Natl. Electric Light Assn., had spent millions to bribe teachers and win the friendship of persons writing school textbooks.

NAM EFFORTS

Coming shortly after revelation that the Natl. Association of Manufacturers was distributing summaries of 800 social science textbooks in order that NAM members may confer with local officials about "objectionable passages," the public utility effort is regarded in many circles as part of a long-range campaign to bar liberal teachings from schools and colleges.

The power institute's heavy spending came to light when Prof. Herbert Dorau, professor of economics at New York University admitted that he and John T. Madden, dean of the university's school of commerce, had received the funds for services to the Edison Electric Institute.

The professor has apparently been connected with the utilities during much of his adult life, first at University of Wisconsin and later at Northwestern. In 1929-30, Dorau was aid $1,200 by the National Electrical Light Assn. for a study of holding companies.

PUBLIC SCANDAL

The nation-wide furore created by government exposure of NELA's subsidization of teachers led to the dissolution of that organization and placed the utility industry in the public's "doghouse" for years after.

Madden, dean of the NYU school of commerce, was shown to have served in a semi-official capacity for a number of utility firms, and maintained with Dorau a joint checking account into which the $150,000 funds were deposited between 1936 and 1938.

Dorau, author of several books and treatises on public utilities questions, wrote the chapter on utilities used in the University's economics department. He stoutly maintained that despite the payments from the industrial trade association, he presents fair and unbiased arguments in his articles and lectures.

"For people like myself who lead an academic life, it isn't a matter of feelings or disposal. It is a matter of analysis and conviction," he told the SEC.

SUCCESSFUL: It was mighty cold when these Schnectady, N. Y., transit workers picketed the company's main office. But it felt mighty nice when the company agreed to substantial wage increases and the CIO Transport Workers Union called off its strike.

SQUEEZING 'EM DRY:

Interest Gougers Gyp Poor Tenant Farmers

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Interest of 36 per cent and more charged to farm tenants and sharecroppers by southern plantation owners is only one of a number of interesting items turned up in a government report, "The Plantation South, 1934-37," issued by the WPA here.

These interest rates, charged on the "furnish" advanced to sharecroppers so they can keep on eating while working for the planters, are "two or three times the rates paid by the planters for short-term credit," the report says. They averaged about $14.50 a month, which may help to explain the prevalence of pellagra, rickets, beri-beri and other malnutrition diseases among sharecropper adults and children.

Sharecropper incomes average about $400 a year, according to the report, which surveyed 246 plantations with nearly 4,000 tenant and cropper families. At that, the average is high, since the figure is for 1937, "an exceptionally good season," during which planters' incomes went up 40 per cent and croppers' one-quarter as much—10 per cent. Other studies put out by government and private research agencies, show much lower averages, in many areas down to $100 a year and less.

TECHNOLOGY

Workers in the plantation south are victims of technology just as steel or other industrial workers, the report indicates, in showing increases in size of plantations, in number of tractors in use—i.e. mechanization—and in a decline in the number of "resident worker families" of eight per cent in the period surveyed.

The government report does not say what happened to the eight per cent kicked off the land by mechanization, but if the experience of evicted farm workers as shown by the Tolan migratory investigating committee is a guide, they undoubtedly joined the army of dispossessed—the millions of Joads wandering the nation in search of work.

These people get little or nothing in the way of relief, according to the report, which quotes Corrington Gill, assistant WPA commissioner:

"The problems of rural living in the South all reflect the economic situation and emphasize the need for broad programs of economic and social reconstruction."

How To Keep The Home Fires Burning

Mrs. Bargain Hunter was a very busy woman. Two or three mornings a week she could be found waiting with many other busy women outside the doors of one or another of the city's large department stores. At the ringing of a bell the doors would open and in rushed Mrs. Bargain Hunter to the nearest tables. Ties, shirts, lingerie, bedroom slippers, pink ribbons, blue ribbon. All of these found their way into Mrs. Bargain Hunter's arms. Late in the afternoon she would stagger home loaded down with treasures so successfully fought for and won.

By this time it was usually pretty late and close to dinner time and soon Joe Worker, her lord and master, would be home from the job.

QUICK JOB

A quick whisk around of the duster, a rapid opening of cans of this and that and Mrs. Bargain Hunter's cooking and cleaning for the day was done.

When the bell rang she rushed out brightly to kiss her husband. Joe sat down to the table with a smile of anticipation. He was hungry tonight. A good pot roast would just fill the bill.

Joe Worker exploded. "What, bean and cold cuts again tonight? Why can't I ever have a decent meal?"

Mrs. Bargain Hunter pouted and looked reproachful. "Why, Joe, look at this lovely tie I was able to get for you today—and this shirt—and such a bargain on these trousers. There'll never be such a sale again!"

"That's what you always say", growled Joe. "Besides they never look the same after the first time I wear them."

That night Mrs. Bargain Hunter and Joe went over to Mr. and Mrs. Union Made for their weekly poker game. Joe was wearing his new trousers and shirt and tie. Mr. Union Made was looking pretty resplendent too.

"Well", said Joe, "your missus and mine must have hit the same counters today. Pretty good little savers, aren't they?"

"Why", said Mrs. Union Made, "I got those for Pete right down the street. Just dropped in as I was shopping for dinner."

"But, of course, you must have paid much more", said Mrs. Bargain Hunter, and the women fell to comparing prices. There were loud exclamations of unbelief from Mrs. Bargain Hunter. "Then, they can't be as well made or the material so good," said she. "Come here Pete, let me see."

They looked over his tie, his shirt, and his trousers. "Very fine," said Joe Worker.

UNION LABEL

"Of course", said Mrs. Union Made, "I look for the union label when I buy, then I know I'm getting my money's worth. Look here, this is my guarantee of value"—and she pointed to the labels of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America on each of Mr. Union Made's garments. "These are made in union shops, by union craftsmen, under union conditions. I just know they're good—they've got to be."

"My", said Joe Worker, "I'm a union man myself, but I always leave the shopping to the wife".

Mrs. Bargain Hunter said nothing. She looked very thoughtful.

Just before they went to sleep that night, Mrs. Bargain Hunter said to her husband:

"You know Joe, I'm thinking that maybe there's not much sense to this chasing around town for bargains, especially if I can get union-mades for the same money right in the neighborhood."

"Sounds all right to me", said Joe, "and look, dear, how about a pot roast for tomorrow night?"

Campaign Against Union Boomerangs

New York, Jan. 25 — A squeeze play effort by the Optical Products Co. of New York to lower wage standards of its employes here, failed to carry through when union leaders quickly organized the firm's new southern plant and brought its members out on strike.

Leaders of Local 208, CIO United Optical Workers, learned of the new plant in Charlotte, N. C. shortly before negotiations were to start for renewal of an agreement covering the 70 employes at the New York factory.

Sebastian Rebaldo, local business agent and secretary of the Optical Workers Coordinating Committee, hurried to Charlotte, organized the company's employes and brought back a representative to participate in the contract negotiations.

FIRED LEADER

When the management learned that its Charlotte plant was organized, it broke off the negotiations, fired the southern unionist, and locked out the Charlotte employes.

As a result employes in both plants voted to strike and to return to their jobs only under a joint settlement.

Wages in the firm's southern plant range from $16 a week down, union officials declared.

Boston CIO To Push Campaign

Boston, Jan. 25.—A conference to plan organizing activities in eastern Massachusetts has been called by the Greater Boston Industrial Union Council at the suggestion of CIO Pres. Murray and John Brophy, Director of Industrial Union Councils.

Pointing out that the Council must take advantage of the "tremendous organizing opportunities which have developed during recent months," and warning that labor must build a defense against attacks on social legislation, Pres. John P. Tompkins of the IUC urged every affiliated local to send delegates to the February 2 meeting.

Brophy will address the meeting and suggest methods of speeding the union campaign.

Pew Anti-CIO Tactics Startle NLRB Hearing

CHESTER, Pa., Jan. 25.—John G. Pew, cocky union-hating president of the Sun Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., enlivened hearings being conducted here by the National Labor Relations Board this week, by revealing more about the tactics used in the warfare against the CIO Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

During a strike at the Sun Shipyards in December 1936, the fire department was called out in an attempt to break the strike. At the time nobody seemed to know who was responsible for sending in the call. Pew solved the four-year-old mystery by disclosing in his testimony that the call for the fire apparatus was made by the late Chester Police Chief Howard Robinson, bearing out the union's charges of a conspiracy entered into to break the strike.

Pew also boasted that since 1907 when he was president of the People's Gas Co., Pittsburgh, he had hired men to report on "radicalism and sabotage" but denied that this was "company spying."

Criticize Verdict In Strike Case

Baltimore, Jan. 25 (FP)—Convicted under an ancient English common law charge of "riot, rout and unlawful assembly", several members of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers were fined $100 each and given four-month suspended sentences.

The men were indicted following a clash between strikers and strikebreakers Oct. 4 during a walkout at the Sparrows Point shipyard of the Bethlehem Steel Co.

The defense committee, which had mobilized support for the seven men, said: "This is an attempt to break organized labor in the state of Maryland by invoking an old common law that, if successful, can be applied to every strike that is pulled."

Spread the CIO 1941 Legislative Program for civil rights, higher wages, security, now off the press in pamphlet form. Order from Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Conn. Ave., Washington, D.C. 100 for $1.75, 500 for $5.75.

Strike Paves Way For Parleys

Mobile, Ala., Jan. 25.—Local No. 18 of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America tied up the Alabama Dry Dock for two hours Tuesday morning, January 21, when 3,400 men stopped work as a demonstration in support of the union's demands for wage increases, seniority rights and a closed shop agreement.

The men resumed work at the request of local officers and Organizer Scotty Atkins, after pledging unanimous support of the union leaders and declaring themselves ready to stop the Yard again if their just demands are not met by the management of the Alabama Dry Dock.

A Federal Conciliator was scheduled to enter the picture later this week to bring an end to the dispute which has been brewing for more than a year.

Alabama Dry Dock has an agreement with the Industrial Union of indefinite term and for the past year the union has been asking for a new agreement providing higher wages, protection of the men's seniority rights, a closed shop provision and other improvements in conditions.

Call Strike To Lift $12 Wages

New York, Jan. 25—Refusal to bargain despite a two-to-one Labor Board election victory brought a strike at the L. Sonneborn paint plant here, when members of Local 16 of the United Office and Professional Workers, CIO, walked out.

The company's bad faith was shown by its adamant refusal to even talk about increasing wages, now at a low of $12.00 a week, despite huge profits, or to consider questions of job security, cuts in working hours, or any form of union recognition.

CIO Wins 87% Majority In Big Dayton Poll

DAYTON, Ohio, Jan. 25.—An 87% majority—the largest ever polled in a local National Labor Relations Board election—today had made Local 754 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers sole bargaining agency at the Master Electric Co.

The victory was regarded as particularly significant because numerous AFL craft unions have had contracts with the company, but with one exception they all withdrew before the election.

Withdrawal was taken by Dayton workers to indicate the complete failure of the AFL craft setup adequately to represent the company's employes. Plans for a contract with the firm are being pushed by the union.

Meanwhile Local 801 of the UE announced it had won a $70,000 increase for over 650 toolmakers at the big Dayton Frigidaire plant and Local 804 gained $8,195 increases for 100 employes of the Leland Electric Co.

Renew Drive To End State Poll Tax

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 25 — Defying the corrupt machine politician led by the strawbosses of Ed Crump of Memphis, Tenn., who killed a bill in the State Senate last week to abolish the poll tax, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare has launched a statewide campaign to bring majority rule to the state.

Opening gun in the fight to regain the ballot for the people and to protect civil liberties in Tennessee was a letter sent to clergymen throughout the state calling on them to preach on "The Poll Tax as a Moral Issue."

Labor, women's and civil organizations are also being asked to enlist in the fight.

Howard Lee, Southern Conference secretary declared that "we have too long allowed Mr. Crump and his little friend, Governor Prentice Cooper to frustrate the democratic aspirations of the people. Throughout the length and breadth of Tennessee we will organize to defeat at the polls every public official who votes not as the people wish, but as Boss Crump dictates."

Battery Maker Signs First Pact

Dubuque, Ia., Jan. 25. — A contract covering 650 workers employed at the Dubuque Works of the General Dry Batteries, Inc., the company's largest plant, was announced this week by District 8, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The company is the second largest manufacturer of dry cell batteries in the country.

The agreement was reached after an intensive five months' drive at the big plant. The UE issued a charter to a group of workers in the plant last August and in December the AFL chartered a Federal Labor Union in an unsuccessful attempt to stymie the progress of the UE local.

Terms of the contract call for a 10 per cent general wage increase; vacations with pay; plant-wide seniority; and other standard union provisions. The union estimates that the wage boost will put about $80,000 more in the workers' pay envelopes in the coming year.

MARITIME MEETING: Members of the national council of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union opened a 5-day session in New York last week. Pres. Joseph Curran (seated at head of table) urged union leaders to fight for protection of labor and social legislation and to oppose efforts to bring the country into the war.

Form Joint Labor Council

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 25 — Formation of a Federated Labor Legislative Council of Iowa, aimed to protect state labor laws and win the passage of additional legislation, was announced here.

Represented in the Council are CIO and AFL unions and the railroad brotherhoods. Al Couch, head of the state federation of labor, is chairman of the council, and Ben Henry, CIO regional director, is a vice-chairman.

See Army Plan As Danger To Union Standards

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 25.—Charging that the U. S. Government is bringing in non-union girls to work in a large die casting plant here employing about 2,000 workers under a closed shop agreement, E. T. Cheyfitz, executive secretary of the National Association of Die Casting Workers protested in a letter to Sidney Hillman of the National Defense Advisory that such procedure would break down the union's wage standards.

"These girls are working at a wage rate from 15 to 20 cents below the levels maintained by our contract," Cheyfitz declared. The girls are inspecting die castings produced in the factory, Cheyfitz said, and are working under the direction of Lieutenant A. J. Speyer of the Chemical Warfare Service.

"It is the feeling of our people that these girls should be paid the union scale and should also join the union," Cheyfitz wrote, "regardless of how long they are going to work in the plant.

"We are very much afraid that any closed shop contract we now have could be broken down simply by having the government step in on defense work and state that they are going to do the hiring."

Charge Ship Owners Seek To Force Strike

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—East coast shipowners are trying to force seamen into strike action, Natl. Martime Union officials charged after a conference with the American Merchant Marine Institute here. The conference was attended by the entire NMU Executive Council, now in its semi-annual session.

"The National Martime Union, in the interests of national security, does not want to be put in the position of being forced into strike action," the Council said. "But the refusal of the operators to agree to any increase in the basic wage scale, using national defense as an issue, is deliberately provocative of that end."

Shipowners, acting through the Labor Relations Committee of the Institute, have flatly rejected the proposals of the union for increases in basic wages, the Council declared.

WIN SUPPORT

Meanwhile, full support of New York's 400,000 CIO members was pledged to the NMU. The support came at a New York CIO Council meeting, where delegates from 200 local unions voted to back the seamen's demands for wage increases and other benefits.

The resolution pointed to the recent CIO Executive Board's declaration of a national policy of seeking wage increases and to the huge profits coined by the shipowners, as well as to rising living costs, as justification for the NMU's demands.

WAGE DEMANDS

Revised wage demands announced by the NMU negotiating committee, headed by Joseph Curran, NMU president, include a $15 monthly boost for all hands, an increase of $2.50 in the so-called "temporary increment" of $10 won last July, a rise of 10 per cent in overtime pay, and a system of war risk compensation. Increases offered by the shipowners amount to one cent an hour, Curran said.

Seamen, the union pointed out, work 56 hours a week, 244 a month—much higher than industrial averages—and receive less pay. Some 30,000 are affected by the negotiations.

Washington, Jan. 25 — A petition for an election among employes of the Eaton Manufacturing Co., Saginaw, Mich., filed by the CIO United Automobile Workers, has been turned down in a two-to-one decision by the National Labor Relations Board.

The majority ruling, supported by Board Chairman Harry Millis and William Leiserson, is based on an agreement entered into nearly two years ago between the company and Local 433, an AFL union.

The majority decision was opposed by Board member Edwin S. Smith, who upheld the CIO claims.

Rubber Union Gets Pay Boost

The contract accepted by the union lifted beginners' pay by five cents and hour and increased the average wage for 1,100 employes by three cents.

Win Hands Down

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 25 — Nobody had to guess whether workers at the Cambridge Iron & Metal Co. prefer the CIO when NLRB election returns were announced.

The employes chose the CIO by a 56-5 majority.

PICKET HARVESTER: Members of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee picket main offices of the Intl. Harvester Co. in Chicago. Two of the firm's plants are closed by strike, and another may close if the plant continues its refusal to bargain.

CIO Plan Suggests Council To Direct Steel Production

Snow, and plenty of it, failed to dampen the ardor of striking CIO office workers at the L. Sonneborn Sons., Inc., in New York City, wholesale paint dealer. This girl turned up in full winter sports regalia, and did her picketing stunt on skis. Not as good as the mountains, says she, but still plenty of fun.

400 Quit AFL, Join District 50

Newark, N. J., Feb. 1. — Two important victories were announced here today by R. W. Hanson, regional director for District 50, United Mine Workers.

Some 400 employes of the Koppers Koke Corp. plant at Kearney, N. J., have voted to join the CIO after a nine-month demonstration of AFL weakness, Hanson said.

The plant is the sixth run by the corporation which is now organized in the CIO. The company's 12,000 coal miners are all members of the United Mine Workers.

The Kearney plant was organized last spring by the AFL, and the two AFL organizers appointed themselves president and secretary for three-year terms. When they "settled" a three-week strike without consulting the members or giving them a chance to see the contract, the employes' sentiment for a CIO union quickly grew.

GET CONTRACT

Hanson also revealed that Local 12178 has signed a contract with the American Cyanamide Corp. which lifts wages 8 cents an hour and provides two weeks vacation with pay.

The pact also grants seniority rights, grievance machinery, the eight-hour day and improved working conditions.

Plant Capacity Still Lies Idle, Murray Charges

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Government executives and technical experts today were studying a CIO plan to eliminate bottlenecks and delay in steel production through coordination of all producing facilities under the direction of an Industry Council.

Presented to President Roosevelt and other U. S. leaders by Philip Murray, head of the CIO and chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, the plan represents another step in labor's effort to point the way towards full utilization of the nation's idle machines and idle manpower.

Pointing out that the present "helter-skelter" system of awarding contracts will lead to serious disruption of the country's economic system, Murray suggested that the Industry Council act as a "top scheduling clerk" to place orders and take advantage of all steel capacity.

Labor and industry should be equally represented on the council, with the chairman a government official, the Murray plan advised.

At the present time, Murray charged, a few companies are unable to meet production schedules while other plants lie partly idle. By treating the industry as one vast production unit, he said, a continuous stream of products could be supplied and employment increased.

Neisner Strikers Win Contract, Pay Raise

DETROIT, Feb. 1.—Average increases of $2.50 a week and a modified union shop were won by several hundred strikers at Michigan units of the Neisner Bros. 10c stores, Tucker P. Smith, regional director for the CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes, reported today.

Ratification of the agreement ended a two-month strike which won wide support from CIO unions in Michigan and in other cities throughout the country where Neisner stores operate.

Wages in the Detroit stores, which had been as low as $12 a week, were lifted to a minimum of $15.50 for those who went on strike and $15 for the rest. Wages go up 50c a week for each year of seniority up to six, and then they rise 25c a week for each year.

The union shop was won by a clause that gives union members with one year seniority a guarantee of 42 weeks a year at full time and 30 hours a week for the balance. If a girl wants steady employment she can get it by joining the union and after one year displacing non-union girls, who are not entitled to full time under the contract.

The pact provides overtime pay for work over 48 hours a week, and vacations and holidays at full pay.

Ask Raise

Kitchener, Ont.—Request for a five-cent hourly wage increase has been made by workers in Goodrich Rubber plant, memers of Local 37, United Rubber Workers' Union. Special provision for night workers will also be demanded.

Hit Plan To Fingerprint Employes

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 1.—Suggestions being passed out to New Jersey employers engaged in the defense program that they fingerprint all workers on their payrolls brought a quick reply today from the Central Jersey Industrial Union Council.

Branding the idea as "repugnant to the rights of free men and repulsive to the ordinary working man," the CIO said:

"This Council is whole-heartedly supporting the defense program and will assist employers and the government in detecting, apprehending and convicting saboteurs or any subversive activities, in industrial plants. . . We feel that the national defense program requires that the morale of the working men and women of the country be sustained at a high level to obtain the efficiency required.

"A rule becoming a condition of employment requiring honest, steady, substantial workmen with years of service to undergo the indignities accorded only to criminals in this country, is destructive of the high morale which these workers should attain."

Two More Aviation Polls On Schedule

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Jan. 31.—The CIO's whirlwind organizing campaign in southern California today moved towards two more Labor Board elections.

Workers at the Menasco Manufacturing Co. plant in Burbank were scheduled to go to the polls Jan. 31, while some time before February 23 7,000 production workers at the big North American Aviation Co. in Inglewood will have a chance to mark their ballots.

The CIO United Automobile Workers will be opposed in both contests by the AFL machinists union, whose membership is described as "very weak."

With two agreements—at Ryan in San Diego and Vultee in Los Angeles — already concluded, Lew Michener, UAW west coast director, predicted that "these two elections will set off the spark for organizing the entire industry."

Organizing efforts will be spread to Douglas and Consolidated, both of which employ thousands of men, as soon as the two immediate elections are over, Michener said.

Meanwhile, at the Harvill Die-casting Corp., where the UAW recently was named sole bargaining agent, contract discussions are under way, with the union asking a 75c minimum wage, vacations with pay, sick leave and seniority.

Two CIO Officials Get Appointments

Washington, Feb. 1—Two CIO officials have been appointed state Commissioners of Labor recently, according to information reeived at CIO headquarters. Daniel Boyle, secretary-treasurer of the Leather Division of the Intl Fur & Leather Workers was appointed in Massachusetts, and John Gibson, secretary-treasurer of the Michigan CIO Council, received an appointment in Michigan.

Report U. S. Favors CIO Housing Plan

By CECIL OWEN

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—As reports piled up of acute housing shortages among CIO members in key defense areas, government officials moved toward adopting proposals of the CIO Housing Committee for mass output of thousands of attractive low-cost homes.

On the basis of CIO reports of extreme over-crowding, rent gouging practices, and long-distance commuting caused by the lack of proper shelter, defense officials indicated they looked with favor on the committee's plan for a separate industrial housing division.

Stimulus was given in government circles to consideration of modernized building technics by the CIO committee's report which demonstrated that at least 10,000 homes a month are available by resort to well established prefabricating methods. Under this method the parts of the house are built in a factory and erection becomes a simple assembly job.

THOMAS' STATEMENT

R. J. Thomas, Chairman of the CIO Housing Committee and president of the United Automobile Workers, released a statement in Detroit that highlighted the serious housing plight of auto workers. Unless there is immedate and effective action, Thomas said, "the lack of decent housing in industrial areas will seriously interfere with the national defense program.

"Expenditure on workers' housing of a fraction of the funds appropriated for national defense is urgently needed," Thomas said, "if the entire program is not to suffer. As things are going now we may have tent colonies in Detroit within a year. We already have families living in trailers.

"In the Detroit area alone we need at least 50,000 new modern houses. In the South Bend and other defense areas the need is as urgent, if not as large.

'FIT FOR RATS'

"The Detroit press has pointed out that some 150,000 persons in Detroit 'live in quarters fit only for rats' and that an additional 118,000 persons live in sub- standard houses. Within the loop area, there are 99,693 dwelling units. Of these 38 per cent have been found 'utterly unfit for human habitation.' In these homes there live 146,502 persons.

"Rents for those in the lower income brackets have risen from 14 to 40 per cent.

"The UAW-CIO is out to see what can be done about this housing problem not only here in Detroit but in other centers where auto and aircraft workers are working on national defense. We know now that at least 50,000 modern homes for workers must be built in the Detroit area—and soon."

MRS. FDR'S COMMENT

Further attention was directed to the serious need of housing by talks at a New York housing session by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and CIO officials. Referring to the type of modern structures advocated by the CIO committee, Mrs. Roosevell said that she personally was "very much interested in the type of structure that you can put up and take down to move to the next place." The First Lady also observed:

"I think we are going to have to be a nuisance about these questions if we are going to be fair to people all over the country."

Citing housing needs of shipyard workers, Peter Flynn, vice-president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, warned that defense industries could not recruit adequate labor unless housing is provided. He disclosed that workers in New Jersey plants were refusing overtime because of the long distances they have to travel to and from work.

PLACE DEMANDS

Demands for a government project for the shipyard workers at Kearny, N. J., were placed squarely before high defense officials this week by a committee headed by James E. Thompson, of Local 16 IUM&SWA. In a letter to Charles F. Palmer, Defense Housing Coordinator, the committee said:

"We wish to serve formal notice that this union, backed by the entire organized labor movement of the state, will insist upon speedy allocation of funds for a defense housing project to meet the needs of our workers."

Thompson told of workers being forced to travel long distances and of others living in substandard flats. Some are even living in trailer camps. He asked how the shipyards expected to keep skilled men if they were not offered decent living quarters for their families.

Store Chain Signs First Agreement

New York, Feb. 1.—Making a quick comeback from a Labor Board election defeat, Local 338 of the CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes has signed a contract covering clerks and delivery men employed in the 96 metropolitan stores of the Sheffield Farm Co.

Late in December, the union lost the election to a company union by 52 votes when the firm bolstered its forces by bringing into the election all managers in their employ. The new agreement does not cover managers.

Under terms of the contract, the union is recognized as sole bargaining agency, and starting in 30 days the company will employ union members only.

All clerks will get six holidays and a week's vacation with pay, together with a flat $1 increase which will be followed by others in coming months. The contract also knocked off 11 hours from the work week and provides time-and-a-half pay for overtime and double pay for holidays.

Ask New Trial In 'Conspiracy' Blast Case

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Feb. 1.—Counsel for the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers today moved for a new trial, following jury verdicts convicting eight union members for an alleged "conspiracy" to dynamite TVA lines bringing electric power to the Tennessee Copper Co.

The explosion, which occurred during a long strike last year, was branded at the time as an effort to smear the union and break the walkout. The eight men now stand liable to two-year prison sentences and fines of $10,000.

Among the eight found guilty was M. C. Anderson of Bessemer, Ala., union international representative, who has been the particular object of company and FBI wrath.

Twenty-one men in all were originally placed on trial. The judge ordered directed acquittal verdicts of seven of the men, and five others were freed by the jury's decision.

Ever since the explosion incident last year, leaders of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union have been highly critical of the FBI's "Gestapo-like" activities and its flouting of the civil rights of the accused workers.

Ballew said he was in the farmhouse of his cousin, Mrs. Edna Carter, when two FBI agents accompanied by a Polk County, Tenn., deputy sheriff, came into the little North Carolina house, grabbed him by the arm and hustled him into an automobile.

The witness testified he was given no opportunity to change rain-soaked clothing which he was wearing.

Across the state line, he was taken to the YMCA at Copperhill, where the corporation is located, handcuffed, and told with a curse: "Now, you're going to talk."

To Seek $20,000,000 Raise At GE, Westinghouse

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—One hundred and twenty-five delegates, representing local unions of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America in 43 General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electrical Manufacturing Co. plants, met in joint conference here to plan general wage increase demands for the firms' 100,000 employes.

The national General Electric conference of UE locals last October presented its demand on the company for a general increase of 10 cents an hour. In November, the national Westinghouse parley made a similar demand for that company.

It was estimated that a 10 cent increase for employes of the electrical and machine manufacturing industry's two major corporations would boost their annual payrolls between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000.

IN 43 PLANTS

The UE is certified as exclusive collective bargaining agent in 21 GE plants and 22 Westinghouse plants, comprising the "core" of the industry.

The joint conference, which was preceded by separate meetings of the GE and Westinghouse delegates, was called for the purpose of mapping next steps in the wage drive. The union has a single national agreement with General Electric, and Westinghouse delegates are seeking a similar pact with their employer to cover the 22 factories in which the union has been certified by the Labor Board.

Pres. James Carey of the UE said the companies could well afford to pay increases since profits in the industry last year were "60 per cent higher than the already large profits of 1939. In 1941 they will go still higher."

DRAFTEES GET PAY

Toledo.—Described as the best contract of its kind is an agreement won by the CIO Cannery, Agricultural & Packing Workers that the Woolson Spice Co. will pay the full difference in pay for any of its employes drafted into the military service.

City Stands Pat Against Ford

NEWARK, N. J., Feb. 1.—(FP)—Attorneys for the Ford Motor Co. failed to argue the Newark City Commission into revoking its cancellation for more than $10,000 worth of Ford cars.

After a delay of hearings, featured by union testimony on Ford's anti-labor practices, the company's claim was referred to the city's legal department and the cancellation remained in effect.

The purchasing order was revoked Dec. 28 after a protest from the Greater Newark Industrial Union Council, which pointed out that Ford is a consistent violator of the National Labor Relations Act.

At the hearing, Ford's attorney took the attitude that the labor act was unimportant. He said that a measure such as the Sherman anti-trust act was far more important, and that the unions had forced cancellation by threatening the city commission with an illegal boycott. This was promptly denied by Samuel Rothbard, CIO council attorney.

Turner, the Ford counsel, and eight other Ford officials were embarrassed by the testimony of Alfred Cottrell and John Juliano, who were fired from Ford's Edgewater, N. J. plant after 17 and 18 years of service. They said they were discharged for "unsatisfactory" work the day after they joined the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Also presented as evidence were pictures of union men being beaten up by Ford strong-arm men at the company's various plants.

SEEK PAY BOO ST: CIO workers at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., West Allis, Wis., closed down the plant when the firm refused to bargain over greater security for the union and pay increases. The men, members of Local 248, United Automobile Workers, are taking moving pictures of any scabs who go into the plant.

MURRAY OFFERS PLAN FOR STEEL

EVERYBODY PICKETS: Members of half a dozen CIO unions in San Francisco got together on the picket line at offices of the Shell Oil Company. Warehouse and longshoremen, auto and steel workers are helping the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians force recognition of their union grievance committee from the British-owned petroleum company.

Urges Industry End 'Crazy-Quilt Production'

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—High government officials today were studying the proposal of CIO Pres. Philip Murray for conversion of the entire iron, steel and tin industry into one great production unit to assure adequate supplies for civilian and military needs.

The plan, which followed months of study by experts of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee — of which Murray is chairman — has been sent to Pres. Roosevelt, Vice-Pres. Wallace, members of the Cabinet and William S. Knudsen and Sidney Hillman of the Office of Production Management.

Highlights of Murray's "plan to achieve total steel output" were these facts:

1. The steel industry's "disorganized state" and rugged corporate individualism have caused inefficiency and waste.

2. Large reservoirs of steel productive capacity are still idle or working only a portion of the time.

3. Tremendous government purchases from only a few firms are causing bottlenecks and delays.

4. If uncorrected, the situation will lead inevitably to shortages in steel production and unnecessary price rises in automobiles and other products.

5. Only solution is the creation of a steel Industry Council, representing management, labor and government, to handle the entire productive capacity of the industry in one unit and to act as a "top scheduling clerk" who would guide orders and allotments to eliminate waste and delay, utilize all capacity and eliminate unemployment or part-time work.

NECESSARY FOR DEFENSE

"The plan is necessary for the success of the defense program," Murray said in releasing the heavily-documented survey of the steel industry.

"Steel production is falling considerably below the tonnage that can be produced by the proper coordination of existing melting and finishing facilities.

"The disorganized state of the industry, growing out of the inefficient, individual order, and cross purpose state of affairs existing among separate companies, prevents the full use of the existing steel facilities as well as the execution of an effective expansion program.

"Unless the industry is organized into a single production unit, serious shortages of steel will follow."

ONE BIG UNIT

As envisaged by Murray, the steel production plan would eliminate the present crazy-quilt pattern of overtaxed productive capacity and idle plants.

Accomplishment of this goal would be realized through:

1. "Most efficient coordination and use of present steel producing facilities."

2. "A well-reasoned, responsible program to expand steel melting and finishing capacities where necessary."

'IT'S PRACTICAL'

"The plan is practical," Murray asserted. "It has its foundation in the creation of a 'Top Scheduling Clerk' for the entire steel industry. Each mill and each company has a scheduling clerk to achieve the highest possible productive efficiency. This method of coordinating steel needs with steel facilities is precisely what is required for the entire industry, and what is lacking at present.

"It is as practical to achieve this type of industry-wide coordination as it is to achieve mill-wide and company-wide coordination of steel orders with production facilities."

URGES COUNCIL

Creation of a steel industry council, with equal representation from industry and from the SWOC, and with a government official as chairman, was advocated by the PWOC chairman, who urged Pres. Roosevelt to take action on his suggestion.

"The Council," he said, "immediately upon its creation, can undertake to put present idle capacity into operation. It can accurately determine expansion needs. And it can coordinate producing facilities with armament and non-military demands, so as to achieve the greatest possible productive efficiency of existing steel melting and finishing facilities . . . .

"No such coordination of the industry's facilities with the steel demands of our armed forces, our domestic needs, and our export markets, exists. Yet this is precisely what is critically needed now. And such coordination of facilities with demand is as practical on an industry-wide basis as it is on a company-wide basis. Actually, it is simply a logical and natural extension of the company-wide integration now in effect."

DISLOCATIONS

At the present time, the CIO and steel union leader pointed

U. S. Heeds CIO Plea, Bars Order to Ford

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Henry Ford has been denied a contract by the U. S. Government because he refused to obey U. S. Government laws.

The contract, amounting to over $10,000,000, was denied to the Ford Motor Co. by the War Dept. when the company declared it would not be bound by a department stipulation requiring manufacturers bidding for U. S. work to comply with federal and state labor laws.

The War Dept. announced that the contract would go to the next lowest bidder, The Fargo Motor Co.

Denial of the contract follows sharp labor protests caused by an award of $122,000,000 to Ford the day after the Presidential election, and a $1,300,000 contract awarded shortly after. It also follows a steady three-year campaign by CIO to stop the government practice of rewarding Wagner Act violators with juicy government orders.

This campaign, initiated by John L. Lewis when he was President of the CIO and carried by him to the White House won Senate passage of a law to withhold public money from lawbreakers, but was stymied by a handful of reactionaries in the lower House.

PUSHED DEMAND

It was carried to the White House by Lewis after the measure had gone through the Senate three times, when he urged President Roosevelt to issue an executive order requiring government agencies to stop issuing contracts to law-breaking firms, among them such corporations as Bethlehem and Republic Steel, Douglas Aircraft, Electric Boat and Ford. The executive order was not issued.

The CIO Atlantic City convention made the question of collective bargaining guarantees in government contracts one of the main points in the CIO program. Pres. Philip Murray continued to carry on the campaign after his election, and again brought it forward in the January CIO Executive Board meeting, where it was the subject of a leading resolution.

The second contract granted to Ford following the election was reported to have been sharply pro-

Rap U.S. Loan To Firm Violating Law

New York, Feb. 1.—Vigorous protest to President Roosevelt and Sidney Hillman against the award of a four-million dollar defense loan to the Stewart-Warner Co. of Chicago, has been made by Edward T. Cheyfitz, national executive secretary of the Natl. Assn. of Die Casting Workers, CIO.

CITE DECISION

Pointing to a recent Supreme Court decision against Stewart-Warner for its failure to comply with a Labor Board order to reinstate with back pay men fired for union activity, Cheyfitz declared his union believes "the defense of our nation and its democratic institutions cannot be served by granting loans to firms which flout the law of the land."

In his telegrams to President Roosevelt and Hillman protesting this loan for ordnance machinery, Cheyfitz said the interests of national defense can best be served if government agencies refuse to reward law-breaking firms by granting them defense contracts.

Leather Workers Win Million

New York, Feb. 1—Pay increases estimated at $1,000,000 will go into the pickets of 4,000 leather workers during the next two years under a new agreement concluded between the Massachusetts Leather Manufacturers Association and the CIO International Fur and Leather Workers.

The two-year contract was announced this week by Ben Gold, IFLWU president, who said that the wage increases are retroactive to Jan. 1. Other terms provide preferential hiring of union members; a five-day, 40-hour week; time and a half for overtime work with double time for Sunday and a minimum guarantee of three hours work when called in to work.

Set Program For Textile Campaign

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 1 — A broad program of action designed to raise the standard of living of the 500,000 textile workers of the South was laid down at a conference held here by the CIO Textile Workers Union last week-end.

The conference endorsed a petition requesting the Wage-Hour Administrator to establish a 40 cent minimum in cotton textiles; outlined a renewed Southern organizing drive including a demand for a general wage increase; backed the national defense program and called upon Southern labor to be vigilant against measures introduced into state legislatures under the guise of national defense which would destroy unions.

Riot Call!

DALLAS, Tex., Feb. 1.—(FP)—Newspaper and radio reports of saboteurs and fifth columnists had a strange sequel here. When residents saw 100 men in working clothes assemble on Ross Ave., a main thoroughfare, they phoned the police.

Radio cars converged at the spot and cops piled out with drawn guns. They learned that the men were WPA employes, about to begin the job of widening the street.

Fourth CIO Plan

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—The Murray "Plan to Achieve Total Steel Output" is the fourth of its kind proposed by the CIO in the past two months.

Summary of the four plans:

1. The Murray Defense Plan—to establish labor-industry government councils for all basic defense industries, expand and coordinate production, and eliminate unemployment.

2. The "Reuther Plan"—to utilize idle plant capacity and partially employed workers in the auto industry for the mass production of airplanes up to 500 a day.

3. The CIO Housing Plan—to speed up defense housing plans by developing the prefabricated homes industry, easily capable of producing 10,000 housing units a month to start.

4. The Murray Steel Plan—to treat the steel industry as one production unit, coordinate placement of government orders and utilize current idle plant capacity.

The CIO Steel Plan

President Philip Murray of the CIO has presented to the government an exact description of the bottleneck that prevents the steel industry from producing all it should. He has also offered a constructive proposal for remedying this situation.

The bottleneck revealed by the detailed survey of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee is caused by the disorganized state of the industry; by separate companies acting at cross purposes; by the illogical distribution of defense contracts, which overtaxes a few large companies while making no use of the idle facilities of smaller firms; and by many other inefficiencies and a general lack of coordination.

(1) The steel industry is falling nearly six million tons below the production that could be attained by proper coordination.

(2) Total employment in the steel industry is 26,106 below the peak of 603,106 in August, 1937.

(3) Large steel firms are overloaded with orders, with backlogs of orders running from two to four months, while smaller firms are operating their open hearth departments as little as 45% of capacity.

(4) Serious shortages of steel threaten, which will also affect the automobile and other industries, causing unemployment and higher prices.

The plan which Murray advances "to achieve total steel output" would organize the entire industry into one great production unit, for the purpose of producing all the steel that may be needed for both domestic and military purposes.

Under the Murray plan, the President would be required to create a Steel Industry Council, consisting of an equal number of representatives from management and the SWOC, and with a government representative as chairman.

This Council would be charged with coordinating production throughout the industry so that the most efficient use can be made of all existing facilities.

It would put present idle capacity into operation; see that orders were properly distributed; and put into effect a well-planned program for expansion where that might prove necessary.

The whole plan reveals the responsible and socially-minded attitude of the CIO to national industrial problems; and the constructive contribution which labor can make to their solution, if its advice is heeded.

Much Ado About Little

Hardly a day passes without some new bill being dropped into the Congressional hopper to curtail or destroy labor's right to organize and strike.

If all these laws were passed, unions would be smashed, wages and living standards would be cut, American workers would be condemned to involuntary servitude, and democracy would be destoyed from within.

And what's all the shooting about anyhow? Anyone would think American labor was in a state of rebellion and engaging in an orgy of strikes to listen to some of the frothing at the mouth.

Yet labor is actually showing amazing docility in a period of business upturn, huge profits and high living costs, when normally there would be a big increase in strikes.

U. S. Labor Dept. records show the sharpest drop in strikes. In 1917, when the United States was actually at war, there were 4,450 strikes involving 1,227,254 workers. In 1940, there were only 2,450 strikes involving 575,000 workers.

In fact, there were fewer workers involved in strikes last year than in any year since 1932; and there were fewer man-days lost through strikes than in any year since 1930.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

Surprise — surprise — surprise!

With rents going up everywhere else, Henry Ford offered to rent his whole plant to the government at a cut rate of $1 a year, if we are to believe Congressman Hoffman (which we usually don't).

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States came out with a forceful defense of the right to strike—or at any rate, opposed anti-strike legislation.

Pres. Wm. Green of the AFL said he would circulate to all his unions an editorial denouncing extortionate initiation fees.

The War Dept. decided to withdraw its petition to cut cannery workers' wages by exempting their employers from the Walsh-Healey Act.

All this reported repentance in a single week might suggest that some revivalist had been at work. But unfortunately there's usually a "but" — just like the bottle in the hip-pocket of the drunkard signing the pledge.

To begin with, the unbelievable Mr. Hoffman announced Ford's alleged statement as if it were a threat instead of a promise.

Anyhow, it wasn't in writing and the government might have difficulty in taking Ford up on it. You'd probably find that the $1 was just FOB Detroit or something—and by the time all the fixtures and equipment and other extras were added, Henry would be making a right neat profit from Uncle Sam on the deal, as he usually does.

Henry Ford, however, is really on the road to repentance, whether he knows it or not. At the rate his employes are joining the CIO, it won't be long before he is signing the union pledge—and the UAW will be strong enough to see there aren't any hip-pocket reservations in the agreement.

Puffing Billy Green also sounds better than he means to be.

It was an editorial in Scripps-Howard papers that got him to huffing and puffing. The editorial asked him to put some heat on the AFL building crafts "to cut out their rotten practice of extorting unreasonable initiation fees" from workers on defense projects.

It pointed out that millions of dollars are being collected in this way from needy workers who, in many cases, aren't even admitted to membership. "A great many of these men get fired, for no good reason, as soon as their fee installments are paid, and the men who replace them also have to fork over," it said.

Green replied indignantly (as a threat, not a promise) that he was going to circulate the editorial to all AFL national and local unions, "so that they may understand the attitude of the Scripps-Howard publications to them."

The CIO has denounced this racket too, Bill. Can't we get you mad enough so you'll circulate The CIO NEWS to your unions too?

As to the War Dept. and the Walsh-Healey Act, this is a story that started with canned beans—without which no army is complete.

When fruit and vegetable canners refused to bid on army orders unless they were exempted from the Act's requirements to pay time-and-a-half for overtime after 40 hours, stark horror stalked the corridors of the War Dept.

The bravest swivel-chaired generals blanched at the thought of what might happen to discipline when the cry went up from the troops, "What, no canned beans!"

They went into action at once, not to crack down on the canners' sit-down strike, but to demand they be exempted from the Walsh-Healey Act—and thus be allowed to pay less wages to some of the lowest-paid workers in the country.

The CIO and its Cannery Workers' Union protested against this attempt to undermine the laws protecting labor; and eventually the brass-hats retreated again—but this time in the right direction. They withdrew the petition for exemption.

The Chamber of Commerce is usually the first body to squawk about strikes. But it recognizes that there are very few strikes nowadays and that anti-strike laws would be worse for everyone than the condition they would be supposed to cure.

In its recent statement opposing federal anti-strike legislation, the Chamber notes the great reduction in time lost through strikes. "Isolated instances of labor disagreements appear to have received undue prominence in the press," it says.

It further expresses its belief "that anti-strike laws will prove ineffective and that they will deny fundamental rights to our citizens."

The Chamber of Commerce is no particular friend of labor, opposing as it does most of the laws protecting labor's rights. But in this instance, it is hardheaded enough to recognize that anti-strike laws would provoke rather than restrict industrial disturbance.

Possibly too, it fears that too much talk of cracking down on labor strikes might provoke talk of cracking down on the sitdown strikes of big business.

Murray Plan Would Smash Bottlenecks In Steel

out, "large steel firms are overloaded with orders, backlogs of orders are running from two to four months, while smaller steel firms are operating their open hearth departments as little as 45 per cent of capacity."

Though the Murray plan listed no specific corporations by name, it is recalled that the anti-union Bethlehem Steel Corp. has received the lion's share of defense steel purchases, while a few other firms were given the bulk of remaining orders.

Blame for this situation was placed by the CIO leader on the "helter-skelter fashion in which steel armaments contracts have been distributed .... one steel firm has such a disproportionate amount of the steel armaments contracts that it presents a bottleneck to the defense program all by itself."

He added that "side by side" one can find both over-taxed and practically idle steel plants, and pointed out that this would be one of the "inefficiencies" which could be corrected through creation of an Industry Council.

Despite reports of 99 per cent production, Murray found that the "steel industry of the United States is falling 5,920,195 net tons below attainable production" and that the industry's employes number 26,106 below the peak of 603,106 in August, 1937.

THREAT TO PUBLIC

That the present production system, if allowed to proceed unchecked, will soon affect all groups in the population was indicated by the report.

"...Next fall", he predicted "the auto industry can be expected to be jammed. Priorities for armament steel requirements will be enforced. Two things, both disastrous to our economy, can be expected to follow unless the CIO plan is adopted:

1. Unemployed auto workers will be walking the streets next winter because their plants will be without adequate steel supplies.

2. Auto customers will bid prices of cars up in order to get speedy deliveries.

"Both of these calamities, and others that will naturally follow in their way, can be avoided by prompt coordination of the steel industry."

Labor Committee Hits Tory Bills

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Sharp criticism of the "model" bills drawn up for submission to state legislatures was expressed in the report of a committee of Labor Dept. officials and representatives of organized labor issued here.

The so-called "model" bills were written at a "Federal-State Conference on Law Enforcement Problems of National Defense" convened recently by Attorney-General Robt. H. Jackson. They were described earlier by CIO Pres. Murray as actually aimed at curbing labor's right to strike and to carry on union activities.

EXPOSE PURPOSES

Reporting on the model sabotage bill, the committee, on which James B. Carey, national secretary, represented the CIO, declared:

"The act in peace time would practically prevent any free individual from doing any act impending production for defense under pain of the heaviest criminal penalties.

"It would seriously curtail or prohibit the rights of labor to strike, to picket peacefully, and to carry on any other lawful union activity when such acts impeded production for defense.

"Under the act a strike, slowdown, temporary stoppage, loafing, quitting work in midshift, and picketing, would be treated equally with violent sabotage, bombing and dynamiting, without regard for existing legal rights or criminal liability."

AMPLE LAWS NOW

Ample Federal protection against real sabotage and other unlawful acts exists now, it was pointed out, not only in state laws protecting property against damage but in Federal statutes as well.

"If there is good reason to enact anti-sabotage legislation such laws should be directed along lines best calculated to prevent the evil feared and to preserve as far as possible the rights of free individuals in peace time and war."

Profits Up-Up-Up, 1940 Records Show

New York, Feb. 1. — Super-profits for 1940 were reported this week by "Big Steel" and by big "Little Steel".

Net earnings of $102,181,321 were announced by the U. S. Steel Corp., employer of a quarter-million workers and the industry's biggest producer.

The profits, largest made by the company since 1930, represented a 148 per cent increase over 1939, when the corporation made $41,000,000.

Bethlehem Steel reported the most profitable year in the corporation's long history. Its $48,679,524 was not onl ya near-100% jump from 1939, but some 6½ million dollars above 1929, the previous record-breaking profit period.

The company's net earnings were 21 million dollars higher than in 1917, its best year during World War I.

Inland Steel showed profits up $4,500,000, more than a 30 per cent increase from the previous year, while Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. jumped from $13,854,000 in 1939 to $18,985,000 for 1940.

Commenting on the huge corporation profits, a writer in the New York Times revealed that management has "some' understandable fears on several matters.

"Taxation is the prime anxiety," the Times columnist suggested. "The effect on labor may rank next, and then there is the public attitude on prices.

"The taxation fear is regarded in a somewhat fatalistic manner, with an admission also that a fair job has been done in passing along the burden. . .

"For labor, of course, there will be ample ammunition in seeking wage advances. These demands rest not only on increased profits but also on expanded organization and the marked reduction in labor supply. The crusade against the Walsh-Healey law may die aborning."

Oregon CIO Convention This Week

Washington, Feb. 1.—The annual convention of the Oregon CIO Industrial Union Council is scheduled to meet this week-end in Portland, Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, announced here.

Two other state councils will hold conventions March 1. The Massachusetts Council will meet at the Bradford Hotel in Boston, with a pre-convention mass meeting on February 28. A special convention of the Washington State Council will open in Tacoma the first of next month.

U.S. Denies Contract To Ford

tested by Sidney Hillman, now Associate Director General of the Office of Production Management. It also brought protests from other government officials because of the preference shown to Ford over another company which planned and perfected the midget truck, for which the $6,300,000 contract was placed.

The denial of the $10,000,000 order to Ford is the first evidence of government determination to uphold such labor laws as the Wagner Act through denying contracts to firms that violate them. Ford's record in Wagner Act violation is one of the worst in the country, and he has been cited in numerous Labor Board orders and in court decisions for his defiance of law.

Reactionaries' Drive On Labor Picking Up Speed

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—The Congressional drive against labor's rights and living standards picked up speed this week as tory statesmen, chiefly from the polltax areas, offered new proposals to prohibit strikes, outlaw union activity in "defense" industries, and generally hamstring the labor movement.

At the same time, state legislatures added their bit to the anti-labor parade with a series of so-called "model" bills ostensibly aimed at curbing sabotage, etc., but actually, as the CIO pointed out, aimed at crippling labor's organizations.

Two principal bills in this week's Federal offerings came from the dime-an-hour belt, one from Rep. Howard Smith of Labor Board Smear committee fame, the other from Rep. Carl Vinson of Georgia—both from states where workers and farmers don't vote because they can't afford to.

Smith's bill is simple. It provides that no part of a new appropriation for shipbuilding can go to firms where employes are required to "either join or not join a labor union." This, of course, would cut out all contracts from firms where the workers have union shop or closed shop agreements—the part about not joining is simply window-dressing.

Vinson's bill is a little more subtle. It provides for an enforced delay of 60 days in strikes on defense construction, for what is in effect compulsory arbitration during that period, and for maintenance of the status quo during the 60 days—that is, the workers must keep on the job under conditions the proposed strike is directed against.

CONDEMNED BY CIO

Bills of this kind to restrict the right to organize and strike were condemned in the 1941 CIO Legislative Program and in a recent press statement of Pres. Philip Murray, in which he said: "The CIO is not going to yield the right of the workers of this country to strike against injustices that may be heaped upon them."

Vinson's bill also picks up Smith's proposal to deny contracts to union shop or closed shop concerns, and though it is nominally aimed at naval construction, the bill is so broadly written that any sort of arms work can be included in the definitions.

Closely following the Smith and Vinson proposals is a bill offered by Rep. Everett M. Dirksen, Illinois, to wipe out the union hiring hall in the maritime industry, to revoke licenses of "undesirable" marine radiomen, to set up a maritime mediation board and to impose a 30 day delay on strikes. Dirksen, who has appointed himself to head a crusade against the CIO maritime unions, was described by Jos. Curran, president of the Natl. Maritime Union and head of the CIO Maritime Committee as working to destroy the maritime unions "by cutting off their right hand, the hiring hall."

STRIKE PROBE

These are three of the chief anti-labor measures introduced in the past few days. In addition Chairman Hatton Sumners of the House Judiciary Committee has promised an investigation into strikes in the arms industries. The Committee, noted for its record of killing progressive laws and approving anti-labor ones, has not set a date for the probe, Sumners said, but has endorsed it "in general."

Sumners' probe, announced with much fanfare about dangers to defense, is not justified either by the record, which shows a decreasing number of strikes since the defense program began, or by statements dealing with this subject by such sources as the Natl. Labor Relations Board, the U. S. Dept. of Labor, the President of the United States, and the Chamber of Commerce—all of which have recently pointed to the decline in strikes during recent months.

Not all anti-labor proposals originate in the Federal Congress, however, as is seen in the series of reactionary bills now being presented in state legislative bodies.

These bills, as President Murray warned some weeks ago, are nominally directed against sabotage and the like, but are actually designed to supplement Federal labor curbs with state counterparts.

Massachusetts and California have passed state "home guard" bills, setting up replacements for the mobilized National Guard with no restrictions whatever on use against strikes or in other labor situations. Arkansas has a bill barring any group from the ballot which advocates "any change in the government."

As the CIO has pointed out, the Federal anti-sabotage act, revised last year, provides sufficient penalties against real sabotage, and further provides for national enforcement rather than leaving it to the judgment or prejudices of local authorities. This view is also expressed in a recent report of the U. S. Labor Dept., as giving rise to "basic abuses" against the labor movement. Such bills, the Department says, are:

". . . aimed crudely at the goal of preventing interference with production by any natural or artificial person. No account is taken of the reasonableness of the nature of the interference, of the primary intent or bona fides of the actor, or of the degree of interference with national defense."

U. S. Chamber Hits Anti-Strike Bills

Washington, Feb. 1 — Labor opposition to anti-strike legislation received support from an unexpected quarter, when the U. S. Chamber of Commerce announced a strong stand against anti-strike and compulsory arbitration laws.

"The Chamber enlists the support of its member organizations in urging all employers to develop plans with their employes designed to promote the amicable and prompt adjustment of labor disputes which may arise, and should these internal plans fail, recommends that existing conciliatory services now available be enlisted and used to facilitate prompt settlement of such dispute," said a statement prepared by the businessmen's organization.

Admitting that the number of man-hours lost in strikes has declined to a fraction of its total in past years, the Chamber warned that " it is entirely conceivable that the imposition of further legislative restrictions may result in a definite reversal of the present trend."

KITTY FOYLES MEET: Ginger Rogers, who played the lead part in the movie "Kitty Foyle," which is concerned with the problems of white collar girls, got a big welcome in New York from CIO office workers. They invited Ginger to the annual stenographers' ball, sponsored by the United Office & Professional Workers.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The basic job of the CIO is to organize the unorganized. This is the task the CIO set out to do in 1935, the job it has done in the five years since that time, and the job it will continue to do until every wage earner in the country has the protection of a strong and united industrial union.

We're doing that job today at high speed in communities all over the country. The workers are ready for our message. They are coming to us by the thousands in every basic industry asking our help in protecting and advancing their living standards, in holding off the attacks of reaction.

AIRCRAFT

The aircraft industry, currently flourishing on the defense boom, continues to offer CIO one of its best opportunities—and CIO is showing that its organizers know how to organize workers and win contracts from employers. We're planning to double our organizing force in the eastern area alone, sending new men into New York, Connecticut, Long Island, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland. A new office is being set up in Hartford, Conn., one of the chief aircraft centers in the east.

The new Brewster plant going up in Pennsylvania will present no problems to our organizing drive, since the contract recently signed in New York will automatically extend to all branches in whatever part of the country they are established. This contract includes the union shop and the checkoff, and now applies to about 6,000 workers in two Brewster plants. The new one will add 10,000 workers under the same agreement.

Activity in aircraft is not confined to the east. Progress is reported from the midwest and southwest, chiefly in Wichita, Kans., and in Texas. Plans are also under way to double the organizing force in the west, to take care of the thousands wanting union protection from the Aircraft Division of UAWA-CIO there.

FEDERAL WORKERS

Many CIO members don't know that the U. S. is the nation's biggest employer, though close to a milion people work for the government. The United Federal Workers, CIO, has made a good beginning in organizing them, and as plans worked out at a meeting this week of over 100 UFWA local leaders mature, more progress will be made.

A short time ago I was appointed Administrator of the UFWA, and this was my first chance to get together with them. We talked about the need for industrial organization among these workers. I told them of progress in other industries; together we discussed their special problems. The U. S., which should be a model to private employers, frequently pays low wages and works long hours.

Wage rates in U. S. Navy Yards are up for discussion, and Pres. Murray has appointed a committee consisting of Eleanor Nelson, Henry Rhine and Darius Kline, all UFWA officials, and Messrs. Green, Van Gelder and George of the IUMSWA, to meet with the Navy Dept.

FORD

The Ford drive is moving ahead rapidly and steadily, despite the vicious tactics of King Henry and his service squad thugs. Asst. CIO Director Michael F. Widman, Jr., in charge of the drive, reports thousands signing up—so many that he's had to put on a night shift of clerks to handle the flow of applications. United Auto Workers locals throughout the country are offering every help, realizing the need to organize the last openshop in their industry.

NEISNER STRIKE

The strike at the Neisner chain stores in Detroit has been settled, according to reports from Tucker Smith, CIO representative with the United Retail and Wholesale Employes. The strike involved 1,400 workers, and was settled with a wage boost of from 20 to 25 per cent, full union shop for regular crews in the 34 stores, job security and other substantial gains. The UAWA and the CIO Regional Office were instrumental in helping the Neisner workers win.

LEATHER CONTRACT

Don Harris, CIO director in duPont empire at Wilmington, Del., reports a closed shop contract covering 700 members of the Intl. Fur and Leather Workers at the Amalgamated Leather Co. The contract brings these worgers $135,000 in pay raises.

War Dept. 'Ceases Firing' On Labor Law

Washington, Feb. 1 — An attempt to yank the protection of the Walsh-Healey Act regulating hours and conditions on government contract work away from thousands of cannery workers came to an abrupt end here after presentation of testimony by the CIO and its affiliated Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union.

Testimony that brought the exemption plea to an end was presented by Anthony Wayne Smith, CIO assistant counsel, and by Leif Dahl for the CIO Cannery Workers.

The attempt was begun by the Army, when it filed a request for exemption from the 40-hour week provision of the act on all canned fruits and vegetables ordered for the troops. It ended after three days of hearings, when the Army announced that it would withdraw the exemption request.

The Army's case rested on the plea that canning companies were refusing to bid on their orders on the ground that they could not meet the 40-hour week or overtime requirements of the law, because, they said, the seasonal nature of the industry makes a week of 80 hours and more necessary.

CIO TESTIMONY

The CIO testimony punctured this argument with the statement that canners could not possibly need a week of more than 40 hours while there are nine million unemployed and that they could use double or treble shifts if 40 hours were not enough.

Furthermore, it was pointed out, the U. S. Government had power to take over the canning plants if the owners continued to refuse to supply the Army's needs, and that granting such exemptions would smooth the way for similar pleas by other industries now operating under the Act.

The problem of defense, the CIO pointed out, involved protection of labor standards as well as the simple procurement of supplies. In addition, under the terms of the law as it has been administered, exemptions from one section cannot be granted; they must apply to other clauses as well.

Army officials appearing before the Public Contracts Section of the Labor Dept. that administers the Act agreed with the points presented by the CIO, and withdrew their application on the third day of hearings.

A representative of the AFL also attended the hearings.

New Mackay Pact Boosts Radio Operators' Pay

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Wage increases estimated to amount to $73,000 a year were won for 375 employes of the Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., the CIO American Communications Association announced this week. Average pay boost for each employe will be more than $12 a month, the ACA said.

A closed shop contract between the union and Mackay expired Jan. 31. Negotiations for a new pact have been going on for the past three weeks.

The agreement finally reached provides $55,000 a year to cover an increase in minimum wages and direct pay rises; $9,700 to be spent in instituting a five-day week wherever the majority of the employes in a given office so wish, and $8,000 for increasing vacations with pay from one to two weeks for those one year's service record, and from two to three weeks after five years' employment.

CLOSED SHOP

Terms carried over from the old agreement include a closed shop; hiring through the union; strict seniority rights; guarantee against loss of jobs or reduction in wages as the result of the introduction of labor saving machinery; sick benefits and paid holidays.

Company and union negotiators are scheduled to continue conferences for another week to work out methods of applying the wage increase and minum pay provisions of the contract. The agreement which is to be effective for two years, will be signed subject to ratification of union members employed by Mackay.

Get Raise At Canadian Goodyear Co.

Bowmanville, Ont., Feb. 1.—A wage increase of five cents hourly was won by four hundred employes of Goodyear Tire & Rubber plant here this week following the convening of a conciliation board.

The latest increase supplements a bonus of $2.00 weekly given the workers last Nov. after they formed Local 189 of the United Rubber Workers' Union. A. H. Brewin, sec.-treas. of Toronto Civil Liberties Assoc. represents the union on the board. The board will discuss other questions soon.

Die Casters Ask New Pact For 6,000

New York, Feb. 1 — Negotiations for renewal of a contract between the CIO National Association of Die Casting Workers and the Doehler Die Casting Co., covering 6,000 men employed in the company's plants in Toledo, Ohio; Pottstown, Pa.; and Batavia, N. Y. were scheduled to open here this week.

The Doehler concern is the world's largest producer of die castings and its three plants are now engaged in filling orders for parts for aluminum gas masks and other articles needed in the defense program.

Edward T. Cheyfitz, NADCW secretary-treasurer, said that a two-year pact with Doehler expired this month. Terms asked by the union for the new contract include pay increases for all classifications of employes; a union shop; extended vacation pay; seniority rights and provisions for the protection of conscripted workers.

NADCW President George Peacock and Secretary Cheyfitz had a union negotiation committee of 16.

Rathborne Gets CIO Council Post

San Francisco, Feb. 1—Mervyn Rathborne, former president of the American Communications Association, has been elected secretary of the San Francisco Council for the coming year. He will take office in March.

Germaine Bulcke, secretary during the past year, who declined to run for re-election, will hold office until the end of the month.

NOT NEARLY ENOUGH: These defense housing units are being constructed by the government for defense industry workers at Newport News, Va. Last week the CIO Committee on Housing pointed out that government housing construction is falling far behind current needs, urged a new U. S. agency to speed use of prefabricated homes.

Ask 15c Wage Raise at Allis-Chalmers

West Allis, Wisc., Feb. 1 — As the strike of 7,000 CIO workers at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. went into its second week, the union — Local 248 of the United Automobile Workers —added a demand for a 15c hourly wage increase.

Local Pres. Harold Christoffel said that the union's action, ratified at a membership meeting, was an answer to company propaganda that the workers had failed to offer definite wage demands.

He pointed out that the union purposely had kept the wage question in a flexible state so that peace efforts might be encouraged. Msgr. Francis J. Haas of Catholic University, who was sent here as a special conciliator for the Labor Dept., has not yet succeeded in effecting a conference between the local leaders and the plant management.

Other union demands include reinstatement of 1,000 laid-off workers in accordance with seniority, union shop and payment for time lost because of the strike, which the local officials have claimed was forced solely through the company's unbending attitude.

In place of pickets, the union has placed groups of observers at all entrances to the factory.

Youth Health Level Low, Study Finds

Washington, Feb. 1. — The "alarming high percentage" of rejections of drafted young men is traceable directly to malnutrition, inadequate or no medical or dental care, and the generally bad living conditions to which a substantial part of the population is exposed," according to a survey made by the American Youth Commission here.

The Commission, of which Owen D. Young, leading industrialist, is chairman, urged more adequate diets, extension of free hot lunches in schools, a national health program, widening of the Natl. Youth Administration program, and greater attenion to recreation as the answer to this problem.

The Commission's statement did not touch on unemployment, estimated at 4,000,000 or more among youth. It recommended, in addition to the points above, that youth have more "physical work or exercise" and "adequate amounts of sound sleep."

The convention also re-elected the three national vice presi-dents — William Peel, Seattle, Wash.; John Chott, Chicago, and Winton F. Dyrden, St. Louis, Mo.

Two new members were elected to the national executive committee and three were re-elected. S. J. Hueston, Mobile, Ala., representing the Gulf Coast and James H. Blake, Detroit, representing the Great Lakes district are the new members.

PEAK MEMBERSHIP

The Officers' report to the convention disclosed that the Marine Engineers are now at the peak of their membership and have raised wage standards to a new high in a number of important contracts signed with various shipowners.

The convention adopted a resolution introduced by Vice President Chott endorsing a plan "outlined by the representative of the U. S. Maritime Commission, whereby with the support of government and employer, the licensed officers of the American Merchant Marine, through proper and diligent selection of competent, efficient, loyal and trustworthy Americans for crews of U. S. vessels and rejection of all not meeting these qualifications, the licensed officers may insure to the American people that ships flying the American flag are manned by crews worthy of that flag and of this nation."

President Hogan sent copies of the resolution to Pres. Roosevelt and to the chairman of the Maritime Commission.

Win Bonus

Brockville, Ont. — Six hundred employes of a plant here gained a bonus of 2½ cents hourly following negotiations by the grievance committee, Canadian vice-president of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Union announced. The increase is retroactive to Jan. 1.

Defense Firm Loses Fight, Lifts Pay

Bayonne, N. J., Feb. 1.—Forced to alter its policy of refusing to bargain, the Babcock & Wilcox Co., today had signed a contract which lifted minimum wages five cents an hour and given an additional five cents differential to workers on the night shift.

The pact, won by Local 439 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, ended a three-week strike against the firm, which holds large contracts for providing the U. S. Navy with boiler equipment.

Readjustment of wages in various categories of work will raise the income of some employes by as much as 14 cents an hour, union officials declared.

The settlement was reached at a conference in Washington, with John Steelman, head of the Labor Dept.'s conciliation service, participating.

CAMERON TO GO ON CARPET

Ford Spokesman To Be Questioned On Citizenship

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—The "Voice of the Sunday Evening Hour" will address a House Committee in his own defense this Wednesday—and Washington observers predict he'll have to be more interesting than he usually is when spieling for his boss, Mr. Henry Ford.

The Voice is W. J. Cameron, high official of the Ford Motor Co., and he will appear at hearings of the House Immigration & Naturalization Committee scheduled for Feb. 5.

BORN IN CANADA

Cameron, born in Canada, will be asked to explain the mysterious background of his U. S. citizenship, first publicized by Friday Magazine. As a result of the Friday article, Rep. Lee Geyer of California called for a Congressional investigation of the Ford big-shot.

Other expected witnesses are officials of the Dept. of Justice and Dan Gillmor, publisher of Friday. If the government officials are unable to have their material ready by Feb. 5, the hearing will be postponed a week.

SEES 'FRAUD'

In asking for the probe of Sameron's citizenship, Geyer said the Ford official's "own statements under oath indicate that he obtained his citizenship by fraud, or was guilty of fraud in exercising the rights of citizenship.

"Mr. Cameron obtained American citizenship in 1935 without the usual five-year waiting period by claiming that he had voted quite regularly from 1900 to 1927. One month later, when he registered to vote in Detroit, he swore under oath that he had never before voted. The records of Dearborn County, where he lived prior to 1927, show that he had never voted there.

"If the hearings show that Mr. Cameron did obtain his citizenship fraudulently. I shall call upon the Dept. of Justice to take proper steps to revoke his citizenship.

"Mr. Cameron's prominence should not be used to allow him to escape equal enforcement of the laws."

'UNDESIRABLE'

In Detroit, meanwhile, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Automobile Workers said the facts in the Cameron case could be easily proved, and added:

". . . it is the view of the overwhelming majority of 400,000 automobile workers whom I represent that Mr. Cameron, during his stay in this country, has been a wholly undesirable alien.

"He has lent his name and efforts to the promotion of racial and religious intolerance. He has encouraged the Ford Motor Co. to refuse compliance with the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act."

To Discuss West Coast Shipbuilding

Washington, Feb. 1.—A conference to discuss plans for a master agreement covering working conditions and uniform wages for the entire West Coast shipbuilding industry will be held in San Francisco, Feb. 3, according to an announcement made by Sidney Hillman, associate director general of the Office of Production Management.

The announcement follows a recommendation made by the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee after an all-day session here under the chairmanship of Morris L. Cooke of Hillman's staff. Representatives of employers and employes in the West Coast shipbuilding industry will attend the conference.

Renew Drive On Coast Utilities

San Francisco, Feb. 1.—Locals of the Utility Workers Organizing Committee in Northern California met in convention here and mapped out plans for the coming year. A survey of the year 1940 found that a healthy growth in membership had taken place.

However, the union is a long way from its eventual goal of a contract with the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., and the organization of all utility workers in this area. Consequently, an intense organizing drive was mapped out, and a joint organizing committee chosen.

'1,000 Times No,' Says King Henry

Washington, Feb. 1 — Like the girl in the old-fashioned melodrama, Henry Ford was this week reported to be screaming "I'd rather die than say yes."

The report came from Rep. Clare Hoffman of Michigan, who usually sees eye-to eye with the billionaire industrialist.

Hoffman said he had heard that King Henry would turn his plant over to the government before agreeing to sign a contract with the CIO United Automobile Workers, now making fast progress in the campaign to organize Ford's open shop.

Ford, who pays the lowest wage of any large auto producer, was said to see red at the thought of his employes paying dues to the union.

"Ford's statement is bunk intended only for the headlines. Ford's objection is not at this moment to a closed shop. He objects to obeying the laws of the U. S.

"I do not believe Ford will ever quit his business as long as he can make a dollar out of it. But if he should retire, it would be a gain for peaceful collective bargaining."

Navy Yard Sees Union—Under Orders

Washington, Feb. 1 — Officials of the Washington Navy Yard agreed today at long last to recognize committees of the United Federal Workers, CIO, as representatives of civilian employes.

The action came on orders from Capt. C. W. Fisher, director of shore establishments, who forced Admiral George Pettengill and Capt. W. E. Brown, key officials in the Navy Yard, to change their anti-union attitude. The two officials had refused over a four-month period to discuss grievances with the CIO union committee.

Strike Closes Chicago IHC Tractor Plant

CHICAGO, Feb. 1.—Some 6,500 employes at International Harvester's big Tractor Works here went on strike this week in protest against the company's continued stalling on wage adjustments and other demands of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee.

"The patience of the union has been exhausted by the unsatisfactory behavior of the management," the FEWOC stated. "The responsibility for a strike now rests squarely on the management which has even refused to discuss ways and means of settling union demands."

VOTED FOR STRIKE

Employes at the Harvester Tractor Works voted overwhelmingly Jan. 21-22 to authorize the calling of a strike if necessary to win their demands. The union is asking for the elimination of the piece work system; increase of minimum hourly pay rates to 75 cents for men and 65 cents for women and recognition of the FEWOC as bargaining agent in Harvester plants.

The strike deadline was held off pending a meeting of U. S. Conciliator David Roadley with the management in a last effort to stave off strike action, but Tractor Works Local 101 in the meantime had set up a complete apparatus for strike action at the huge plant which employs some 6,500 workers.

ROCK FALLS STRIKE

At the Harvester plant in Rock Falls, Ill., a strike called by the FEWOC at the Harvester plant is going strong, with 80 per cent of the workers taking an active part in picketing and welfare work. A mass meeting held last Monday was attended by many of the townspeople who are supporting the workers' demand for higher wages, the FEWOC states.

The situation at the Harvester Works in East Moline is a different story. A ten-day strike called by the Employes Association, an independent union, ended in what the FEWOC terms "a complete fiasco", with members of the independent voting to return to work.

SUPPORTED STRIKE

Local 104 of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers at the plant supported the strike to the extent of refusing to walk through the picket line, at the same time pointing out that the workers "were being misled by the company union leaders."

To Organize 6,500 Paint Workers

Washington, Feb. 1.—A nationwide drive to organize the 6,500 employes of the Sherwin-Williams Paint Co. was launched at a conference here of officials of the Paint & Varnish division of District 50, United Mine Workers.

The drive will be centered in Cleveland where the company's home office is located. Peter Zvara, District 50 representative, will direct the drive from the Cleveland plant, many of whom workers are employed at the Cleveland plant, many of wrom already belong to the CIO.

Haywood Urges Drive By Federal Workers

Washington, Feb. 1. — Leaders of United Federal Workers locals in the District of Columbia were urged today to campaign for higher living standards for all government workers.

Addressing more than 100 local UFWA officials, Allan S. Haywood, director of organization for the CIO and administrator of UFWA, declared:

"You will find the thousand per cent patriots blocking your road. However, the same vision and spirit that the CIO has shown in overcoming similar obstacles in steel, auto, rubber will forward your cause in the federal service.

"You should carry this drive on in the nature of a crusade for your work, not only toward increased job security but toward strengthening democracy in our country."

News Guild Fights Firings In Toronto

Toronto, Ont., Feb. 1. — Labor Unions, Canada-wide, are rallying to the support of Local 87, Toronto Newspaper Guild, in an effort to induce the publisher of the Star Daily & Weekly, largest Canadian newspaper, to resume collective bargaining and cease firings and intimidations.

Mrs. FDR Wins In Guild Poll

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has a new union job—delegate of the Washington Newspaper Guild to the city's Industrial Union Council.

The Guild has eight delegates to the Council. Only seven persons were nominated and had their names on the ballot.

So when 14 persons "wrote in" Mrs. Roosevelt's name, they gave her a one-vote margin for the office. A member of the New York Guild for some time, Mrs. Roosevelt recently transferred to Washington.

Murray Defends Labor Rights In Arms Bill Testimony

Drug Chain Closed By Strike

New York, Feb. 8. — Business in the Whelan Drug Store Co.'s 53 metropolitan stores dropped to nothing this week after a whirlwind CIO strike for higher wages and shorter hours closed every one of the chain's distribution units.

The shutdown, described as the "most successful" in New York retail history, was accomplished by "flying pickets" from Local 1199, United Retail & Wholesale Employes. The strike won quick support from the Greater New York CIO Council and from scores of unions throughout the city.

The local asked all consumers to aid their cause by not patronizing either Whelan or its affiliated United Cigar Stores throughout the country. Picket lines have already been placed around the company's stores in Philadelphia, New Haven, Washington, Dallas, Tex., and other key cities.

ASK PAY RAISE

The CIO union demands a 15% increase for employes getting less than $25 a week, and a 10% raise for those receiving more than $25.

In addition, it is seeking a reduction in hours from 54 to 48 a week.

The union derided company arguments of inability to meet the wage demands, pointing out that last year some $281.000 of the stores' direct earnings had been written off as supervisory expenses over and above the operating costs of the individual outlets.

CIO Wins New Aircraft Poll

DETROIT, Feb. 8. — The CIO won another aircraft election this week.

In a consent poll at the Stinson Aircraft plant, Wayne, Mich., the CIO received 141 votes. Seven United Automobile Workers were cast for no union and one was blank.

The plant is a division of the Vultee Aircraft Co., in which a CIO contract capped a 10-day strike at Los Angeles last fall. Negotiations for a wage agreement will get under way within a few days.

RODEO QUEEN: A bundle of smiles is pretty Lorraine Miller, who was chosen queen of the 8-Day Rodeo and Circus staged by the CIO in Flint, Mich. She's receiving the bouquet from Carl Swanson, regional director for the United Automobile Workers. Miss Miller's father is a member of UAW Local 581, at Fisher Body.

When In Flint, Do As CIO-ers Do!

FLINT, Mich., Feb. 8.—The CIO has taken over the lead in all civic enterprises in Flint, Michigan. In November, CIO-endorsed candidates took a majority of the seats on the city commission and CIO candidates won posts as County Prosecutor, state senators and representatives and all other county and state offices.

Beginning February 2, the Flint CIO sponsored an eight-day rodeo and thrill circus in the cities' huge auditorium. The event is the biggest attraction ever to be shown in the city and overshadows the General Motors annual motor festival.

WIDE PUBLICITY

Flint streets have been decorated with CIO banners for the past six weeks. City officials, including the chief of police, have been constant visitors to CIO Headquarters to pose for pictures with CIO officials. The newspapers have devoted columns to the show and to the activities of the local unions. The local radio station has donated more than a half dozen broadcasts for the event.

The Flint CIO has taken over the entire eleventh floor of the largest bank building in the city. The new quarters includes offices, large meeting rooms and an auditorium seating several thousand. The CIO Headquarters has become a bee-hive of activity, more than four thousand people a week taking advantage of the union facilities. Meetings, educational classes and social events fill the program for the union.

VOICE FOR CIO

Carl Swanson, regional director for the UAW-CIO, has been appointed on several important civic committees. Terrell Thompson, president of Chevrolet Local 659, UAW-CIO, is a member of the Flint Civil Service Commission. All of the members of the city election board are members of the CIO.

In this city where organizers were driven out in 1937, the CIO now completely dominates the scene and, what is more important, the people of Flint like it.

Sign Contract

New York, Feb. 8 — A contract agreement with the Blackstone Drug Products Co., has been announced by the Chemical, Drug & Cosmetics Division of Local 12165, CIO United Mine Workers of America.

CIO Head Urges Clarification Of Foreign Policy

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Pres. Philip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations this week presented testimony to the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on the so-called "lend-lease" bill, calling for guarantees of the protection of labor rights, and raising a number of questions as to its justification and the "intended foreign policy" that may be pursued under it.

Some of the points raised in Murray's testimony were:

(1) The wide powers granted to the President "notwithstanding the provision of any other law" might permit the setting aside of laws protecting labor.

(2) "I believe there must be unqualified opposition to American convoys into the war zones."

(3) "The American people are at least entitled to know the facts which give rise to the grave necessity for such extraordinary legislation."

(4) "The American people have not received the benefit of such complete and full disclosures which would permit them to pass judgment upon (a) the justification for the requested legislation, or (b) the intended foreign policy of this nation which is to be pursued under the projected program."

Murray reiterated CIO opposition to any involvement in the present war and expressed his opinion that the American nation supports aid to Britain on account of its desire to preserve democracy and combat totalitarianism.

News Guild Wins Aid In Fight With Hearst

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Pledges of intensified support for the Hearst unit of the Chicago Newspaper Guild in its current fight against the Herald-American are mounting daily as CIO unions from coast to coast join in the battle to protect the jobs of 90 former Guild strikers.

Many of the leading stores, remembering the bitter, 17-month long strike which the Guild settled with Hearst in April, 1940, have notified the management that this time "they will not be caught in the middle."

5,000 PROTESTS

Guild leaders estimate that more than 5,000 protests have been received through the mails by the management. In addition, hundreds of protests have been sent by telegram and over the telephone.

Ray Edmundson, state president of the United Mine Workers of Illinois, has pledged full support from the state CIO. The national office of the American Newspaper Guild, through Milton Kaufman, executive secretary, has given the Chicago unit a "go" sign for any action it deems necessary.

The Guild charges that the company, in violation of a contract signed in April, 1940, discriminated against CIO union members when it recently fired 90 of the 115 returned strikers.

Two-Day Stoppage Gains Consent Poll At Phelps-Dodge

ELIZABETH, N. J., Feb. 8.—The 1,600 employes of the Phelps-Dodge Copper Products Corporation plant here are back on the job, after a two-day stoppage to win the corporation's consent to a Labor Board election and to halt discriminatory discharges.

The employes are members of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America who scored a major victory, with the strike setttlement, in their three-year fight against Phelps-Dodge and its company-union, the Bayway Copper Products Employes' Association.

The agreement, as announced jointly February 2 by Wylie Brown, president of the corporation, and by Neil Brant and Peter Besch, national representatives for the UE in charge of this area, includes:

1. The corporation will consent to a Board election.

2. Discrimination and discriminatory discharges are to stop. A discharged member of the UE has been reinstated.

3. The corporation and union enter at once into contract negotiations, such contract to become effective when the UE wins the Board election.

4. Prompt negotiation of grievances.

The employes agreed to work next Sunday, at overtime rates, to bring production volume of the plant up to schedule.

The stoppage and demand for an election came when the Company began discrimination against union members in the plant.

Allis Strike In 3rd Week

West Allis, Wis., Feb. 8—The strike of 6,500 workers at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. went into its third week here with the union, Local 248, reiterating demands for wage increases and greater security for the union.

Federal conciliators are working on proposed peace settlements, and meanwhile the union agreed, in the interest of the national defense program, to permit the shipment of completed and partly-complete products involved in a $40,000,000 U. S. order held by the company.

Three Big Contracts In Indiana

Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 8. — Signing of three important new contracts was announced today by James Robb, CIO regional director.

A fivemonth strike at the Ontario Manufacturing Co. in Muncie ended when the firm signed a one-year agreement with CIO Local Industrial Union 354 which raised wages 2½ cents an hour, provided seniority rights and the check-off of union dues.

In Indianapolis, Local 1087 signed a contract covering the 150 employes of the Continental Baking Co. plant. The pact provides for the 40-hour week, three hours' pay guaranteed for reporting to work, wage increases reaching 10c an hour, vacations with pay, and grievance machinery.

Meanwhile, Robb announced that the Steel Workers Organizing Committee has signed its first contract with the Link Belt Co., of Indianapolis, which employs more than 2,200 workers.

MEDICINE FOR DRUG CHAIN: This picket line may not be just what the doctor ordered, but it sure tastes bad to the Whelan Drug chain in New York City. Striking for wage increases, members of Local 1199, United Retail & Wholesale Employes closed 53 of the company's stores.

Shipyard Union Wins Strike In Big Alabama Yards

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 8.—A ten-day strike of the 3,400 employes of the Alabama Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Corporation was brought to a victorious conclusion Feb. 2, when the members of Local 18, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, CIO, unanimously ratified terms of a new agreement providing best wages and conditions for the industry in the Gulf area.

The strike had completely shut down the Company's Pinto Island and Todd yards, both in this city, for ten days. The walkout followed rpeated attempts by the Union to have the management negotiate a new agreement to replace one of indefinite term signed two years ago.

Terms of the new agreement provide for a four cent an hour general wage increase, establish a 50 cent an hour minimum for unskilled laborers, set the first class mechanic's minimum rate at 97 cents an hour, revise seniority rights in accord with the Union's demands, and define an apprentice system in whose administration both Union and management will act jointly. Exclusive bargaining rights, grievance settling machinery, and other benefits of the old agreement were continued in the new one.

PAY UP 15 CENTS

Some of the increases ranged as high as 15 cents an hour for laborers and other unskilled workers, through establishment of the 50 cent an hour minimum. Other workers also received increases greater than the four cent an hour general raise through reclassification of their jobs to higher categories.

Importance of the 50 cent minimum for unskilled workers in this agreement is realized by comparison with rates in other yards in the Gulf, which are paying laborers from 35 to 40 cents an hour. Most of the workers in this category are Negroes who have long been exploited.

John Green, national president of the IUMSWA who directed the Mobile negotiations, pointed out that this agreement established the highest wage scale in the shipbuilding and repair industry south of Baltimore. He emphasized, however, that the Union would continue to fight for a 60 cent minimum at a scheduled Gulf area conference to be held in New Orleans.

Win 27-Day Walkout

Phelps, Wis., Feb. 8—A 27-day strike against the C. M. Christensen Lumber Co. here has ended with a victory for Local 142, International Woodworkers of America.

Matt Savola, IWA organizer, announced this week that the company had signed an agreement with the CIO union providing a four cent hourly increase and other improvements over the old contract.

Federal Union Maps Pay Drive

Washington, Feb. 8 — First steps in a mass drive for needed pay raises in the Federal government service were announced here this week by the United Federal Workers, CIO.

Plans outlined by Eleanor Nelson, UFWA secretary-treasurer, call for a series of conferences and meetings culminating in a mass rally to be addressed by Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization and administrator of the Federal Workers union.

First meeting will be a conference of leaders from Washington's 32 UFWA locals, with more than 200 delegates expected to attend. This will be followed by a National Executive Board meeting to take place February 22, with the mass rally set for the first week in March.

"The primary goal of the conference," Secretary - Treasurer Nelson said, "is to secure public understanding and Congressional action on the UFWA sponsored pay-raise bill, HR 625, introduced by Rep. Jennings Randolph,

Plan GM Pay Demands

Detroit, Feb. 8 — Members of the United Automobile Workers GM Council, who meet here Feb. 10-11 to discuss proposals for a new contract with General Motors, will be urged by Pres. R. J. Thomas and Walter Reuther, head of the union's GM department, to seek substantial wage increases.

The Council meeting, established by a decision of the union's international executive board, will be preceded by a meeting of leaders of the locals in the GM network.

Reuther pointed out that while the union gained $14,000,000 in wage increases from GM in 1940, soaring GM profits and rising living costs have made another wage boost necessary.

COVERS 70 PLANTS

Meanwhile, the UAW announced that the number of GM plants in which the union has a Labor Board-certified majority has risen to 70. Latest unit to designate the UAW as sole bargaining agency was GM Transmission, Detroit.

Big Glass Pact Wins Raises For Thousands

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Feb. 8.—A new one-year contract with the Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Libbey-Owens-Ford companies covering all plate, safety and window glass plants of both companies with the exception of those in Crystal City, Mo., was signed here Feb. 1 by the CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers.

The agreement provides a two-cent hourly increase for 15,000 members; one week's vacation with pay; and time and a half pay for work on Sundays and holidays; and improved seniority and incentive control clauses.

All workers must belong to the union and pay dues or be reported to the management for discipline. This provision has been in effect for the last three months under the old contract.

A five and a half month lockout of members of Local 27, employed in the sand pits of the Dunbar Corp. was settled Jan. 31 with a closed shop agreement calling for a three-cent hourly increase, the Federation's Sec.-Treas. Peter J. Vidmar announced.

"We are now in conference with the independent window glass companies employing about 5,000 workers," Vidmar reported. "The contract expired Feb. 15 and we expect to get an improved wage scale in the new agreement."

Ready For Poll

Los Angeles, Feb. 8 — Encouraged by a Labor Board order sustaining their argument that newsboys are employes of the publishers, the Los Angeles Newsboys Union, CIO Local 75, is making plans to win an NLRB election on four of the city's papers.

Union Closes Venetian Blind Company's Open Shop

OSWEGO, N. Y., Feb. 8.—A modified closed shop contract providing pay increases and paid vacations has been signed by the CIO Textile Workers Union and the Columbia Shade Cloth Co., one of the largest makers of venetian blinds and window shade cloth in the country.

The agreement ended a strike of 500 workers who walked out Jan. 6 in protest against refusal of the management to grant any of the union's demands after six weeks' negotiations.

Milton Rosenberg, TWU director for New York State, said the new contract which replaces an agreement that expired in December, calls for peaceful arbitration of disputes, a 40-hour, five-day week, time and a half for overtime, seniority rights and job protection for workers called into military service.

Baltimore.—A $25,000 wage increase at the Locke Insulator Corp. has been won by a CIO local industrial union, Frank Bender, CIO regional director, announced.

Murray Statement On 'Lend-Lease' Bill Urges Protection For Labor

CIO Asks Ford For Parleys

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Feb. 8. — The United Automobile Workers, CIO this week demanded a collective bargaining conference with the Ford Motor Co. to discuss a list of five demands which include a minimum 10c an hour wage increase for employes in the Rouge, Lincoln and Highland Park plants.

The letter to the company from Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO and Director Michael F. Widman, Jr., of the Ford Organizing Committee declared that the "UAW-CIO has been designated and selected by a majority of your employes in the Rouge, Lincoln and Highland Park plants as the exclusive representative of all of your employes in these plants for the purpose of collective bargaining."

ON SPOT: CIO organizing activities are more successful each day at the Ford Motor Co., and Henry Ford each day grows more worried about the thought of having to obey the law and deal with his employes' union.

FAST-MOVING EVENTS

The UAW-CIO demand was the last of a series of rapidly-moving developments in the contest of Ford versus the union, the public and the government.

The first was the rejection by the War Dept. of Ford's low bid for a defense contract to build $10,000,000 worth of Army trucks. The bid was rejected because Ford refused to comply with labor laws, which was stipulated

W. J. Cameron Hearings Feb. 12

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Congressional hearings on Rep. Lee Geyer's demand for a probe of the citizenship status of W. J. Cameron, Ford radio stooge, have been postponed until Feb. 12.

Geyer's call for an investigation was based on data in FRIDAY Magazine claiming that Cameron, a Canadian by birth, had illegally obtained his American citizenship.

Murray's Blast At Green

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Full text of the statement by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in which he characterized AFL claims to a following among Ford workers as a "ridiculous bluff which will fool nobody:"

"I cannot imagine that the fantastic claims of President Green of the American Federation of Labor will be taken seriously by anyone. Any check-up at Detroit will show that the only union organizing work under way has been that of the CIO United Automobile Workers. The AFL is not even in the picture, except insofar as its officials may have attempted some backdoor intrigues with the Ford company.

"The CIO in conjunction with its affiliate, the United Automobile Workers, has for months been engaged in an intensive and highly successful organizing campaign at the Lincoln, Highland Park and River Rouge plants of the Ford Company. It has 54 organizers working under the direction of the Ford Organizing Committee; distributing 50,000 copies weekly of a special Ford organizing paper; conducts several regular radio programs; and has 29 union offices open in the vicinity of the Ford plants to handle the applications of Ford employes.

A Marked Contrast

"So great has been the influx of Ford employes into the CIO, in fact, that the office force has recently had to be doubled to cope with the queues of applicants, and the main office has to be kept open day and night.

"In contrast, the AFL has but one small store office in Dearborn which by latest reports is not yet even open for business—aside from its hotel room headquarters in downtown Detroit. It publishes no organizing literature, and there is in fact no evidence of its having conducted any organizing activities among the Ford workers.

"Mr. Green's own statement is a confession that the so-called UAW-AFL is not in the picture. He nowhere mentions the name of this organization but speaks vaguely of 'unions chartered by the AFL,' presumably federal and craft unions — a form of union division which the auto workers long ago repudiated in favor of industrial unionism.

"Mr. Green's statement is a ridiculous bluff which will fool nobody—least of all the Ford workers. It is an attempt through unfounded publicity to create the appearance of a jurisdictional dispute and thus to confuse the only real issue—whether Ford will recognize and bargain with the UAW-CIO, which alone can speak for his employes.

Green's Aims

"Incidentally, Mr. Green shows as little concern for the defense program, as does the Ford Company itself, if he is going to inject jurisdictional issues in plants where he has no membership, and where the workers emphatically do not want the form of organization he has to offer. His statement is an apparent attempt to cooperate with Ford in distracting attention from the unfavorable publicity resulting from Ford's refusal to cooperate with the defense program.

"A majority of the employes of the Ford Motor Company have signified their support of the UAW-CIO, which has already applied for a Labor Board election at the Lincoln plant. Our organizing campaign is continuing to gain momentum, and Mr. Green's pitiful attempt at a stab in the back will no more prevent its successful conclusion than did his similar attempts during CIO organization of the General Motors and Chrysler employes."

CIO Won Biggest NLRB Elections, Statistics Show

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Nearly four-and-a-half times as many workers voted in elections won by CIO unions as by AFL unions during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, according to a statement issued by the National Labor Relations Board this week.

total of 314,000 votes as compared to 386 won by AFL unions

CIO unions won 407 elections during the year, carrying a with a total of 70,700 votes, the Board reported. The CIO election victories included two big auto polls, one involving 50,000 Chrysler workers, the other 130,000 General Motors employes.

Affiliates of the CIO won 59 per cent of the elections in which they took part while AFL affiliates won 53 per cent.

The Board conducted 1,192 elections altogether in the 1940 fiscal year, 676 by consent of the parties involved and 516 by order of the Board, a marked increase over the past year when it conducted 746 elections, 481 by consent and 265 ordered.

About 590,000 workers were eligible to vote in the 1940 elections. The fact that 90 per cent of those eligible voted reveals the keen interest taken by the workers in union representation.

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, a total of 207,597 workers were eligible to vote in elections held, 88 per cent of whom voted.

CIO Leads In Coast Poll

Los Angeles, Feb. 8. — The CIO United Automobile Workers took first honors in a Labor Board election at the Menasco Manufacturing Co., here, but by a narrow margin failed to get the majority needed for certification as sole bargaining agent.

The UAW-CIO received 200 votes, while the AFL machinists union polled 190. Sixteen votes, however, were for neither union, and three were challenged.

Requests More Facts On Policy

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Protection for the rights of labor and more facts about "the intended foreign policy" of the United States were demanded by Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO, in a statement submitted to the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs regarding Senate Bill S. 275, the so-called "lend-lease" bill.

Murray pointed out that the bill is of such far-reaching importance that "it will determine the pattern for our future domestic and foreign policy and thereby affect the lives and well-being of every single American."

He declared he based his testimony on two "guideposts": (1) the American people's love of democracy and opposition to totalitarianism; and (2) the American people's determination "not to be dragged into the present foreign wars."

WIDE POWERS

In his criticisms of the bill, Murray noted that the wide powers granted the President under it "not withstanding the provision of any other law" might permit the Natl. Labor Relations Act, the Wage-Hour Act, the Walsh-Healey Act and other labor legislation to be set aside.

A specific provision is included in the bill to protect the rights of patent-holders, but labor's rights are not similarly protected.

Calling attention to the clamor in Congress that labor rights be curtailed or destroyed as part of the defense program, Murray declared:

"Labor must necessarily look askance at any program under which it is urged that for its successful prosecution the rights of labor must be destroyed."

ASKS GUARANTEES

He therefore called for "a forthright and unequivocal declaration that the policies of the government must guarantee the protection of the democratic rights of labor and of all the people of the nation."

The CIO President also called for "unqualified opposition to American convoys into the war zones." He pointed out that the CIO ON THE JOB: Organizers of the CIO United Automobile Workers parade around the Ford plant in Dearborn urging employes to join the union. Note to Bill Green: There wasn't an AFL man in sight!

'YOO-HOO, MR. FORD'

Lost Time

If some of the labor-baiters in Congress were really concerned with maintaining production, they would not be introducing anti-strike bills; they would be getting behind legislation like the mine safety bill, to cut down industrial injuries, and demanding jobs for all the unemployed.

For the CIO Economic Outlook has compiled figures which show that the working time lost through strikes is as nothing compared with the time lost through injury and illness.

In 1940 only one-tenth of a day per worker was lost through strikes, while approximately five days were lost through injury and eight days per worker through illness.

In other words, 130 times more man-days were lost through injury and illness than through strikes.

As to unemployment, the Outlook points out that if last year's more than 10 million unemployed had been given an average of 250 days work each, the country could have had over 2½ billion additional man-days of work.

But our Congressional labor-baiters are less concerned with production than they are with beating down the conditions of American producers and breaking their unions.

It is only the CIO, in fact, that puts any real drive behind a program that will actually maintain and expand production—through its demands for industrial safety legislation, public health services and constructive measures to end unemployment.

Forgotten Men

Peace has its tragedies no less than war. But when the trumpets blow, and war preparations are the order of the day, the quiet miseries of unemployment and slow death through malnutrition get less attention than they ever did.

While the President's budget calls for billions of dollars for armaments, it proposes only 375 million to provide WPA work for the unemployed through the current fiscal year.

Yet there are more than nine million jobless today and it is estimated that unemployment will be reduced little below eight million by June, 1941.

The present budget proposals would leave the WPA providing for the lowest percentage of the unemployed in its history, Chairman James B. Carey of the CIO Unemployment Committee points out in a letter to the House Appropriations Committee. Not less than $500 million is needed, he says, to maintain even the present level of work relief.

Is America so poor that it must starve the poor and defenseless in the name of national defense?

CIO Far Ahead

The CIO continues to maintain its lead over the AFL in the hearts and votes of American workers. In the last three months of 1940, according to a tabulation in the Labor Relations Reporter, CIO unions won 166 Labor Board elections, polling 39,612 votes; as compared with 133 elections and 20,057 votes going to the AFL.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, the NLRB reports a total of 314,000 workers' votes cast for the CIO in 407 elections it won, as against only 70,700 cast for the AFL in 386 elections won.

AFL leaders who have declaimed with great unction against strikes in the present period and who have adopted a "holier-than-thou" attitude on the subject, are invited to study a tabulation of work stoppages in January, 1941, published in the United States News.

This listing shows a total of 150 stoppages reported, of which 76 involved AFL unions and only 57 CIO unions.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

TO GIVE the devil his due, there is something really amazing about William Green. No one but he could go to work, without organizers, without literature and without even letting any Ford workers know anything about it—and suddenly, presto, produce a union without any members.

No one but Green could so unblushingly expose his pink nakedness to the public eye. But Green struts forth with all the pomposity of the story-book Emperor in his imaginary robe, proclaiming himself leader of an imaginary host of Ford workers, and offering to sell them into company-union slavery through powers of seduction which he does not possess.

The whole episode makes one think of the feelings of shame and discomfort associated with those dreams of appearing in public improperly clothed. But in William Green you see such a dream walking and talking—and completely without shame.

The facts of the case are simple enough. There is only one representative union in the automobile industry—the CIO United Automobile Workers.

It has contracts with all the major auto companies except Ford, and has been chosen by hundreds of thousands of workers in Labor Board elections. These elections have almost completely eliminated the remaining fragments of the AFL splinter group which Homer Martin attempted to form.

The UAW, in conjunction with the CIO, has for months been engaged in one of its biggest and most successful organizing campaigns at Ford plants. It has 54 organizers on the job, and 29 union offices open to cope with the thousands of workers signing up.

The AFL, on the other hand, has made no attempt to organize the Ford workers and has no members in Ford's Detroit and Dearborn plants, aside from a handful of building and other craftsmen. Its one small local of production workers at the Rouge plant dissolved of its own free will August 24, 1940, the members joining the CIO.

Green pulled his preposterous publicity stunt at a time when the CIO, by hard organizing work, had become the representative of the majority of Ford employes at the Dearborn, Lincoln and Highland Park plants, and was demanding its legal right to negotiate a contract with the Ford Co. on their behalf.

AFL Tactics

This feeble union-busting stunt of Green's is unimportant in itself. He has simply made the AFL more ridiculous and more of a stench in the nostrils of the Ford workers than it was before—which incidentally is quite an achievement.

Any attempt which Green may make to sell out workers whom he does not represent would be clearly illegal under the Wagner Act. And any election among Ford workers would eliminate the AFL from the Ford picture even more completely than was the case in General Motors and Chrysler.

But the incident is nevertheless interesting for the light it throws on AFL tactics, and on the reasons why the workers in the major mass-production industries will have nothing to do with this outfit.

In the first place, Green has used similar tactics several times in the past. At the very height of the first General Motors strike, he attempted to inject his memberless craft unions, demanding that the company refuse to sign up with the UAW.

John L. Lewis just told General Motors they might as well deal with Haile Selassie as with William Green, so far as having any effect on the auto workers was concerned—and that was that.

Pot Calls Kettle White

Green's attempt in his statement to give the Ford Company a clean bill of health so far as anti-union discrimination against AFL members is concerned, is as nauseating as it is untrue.

Some of the worst cases of Ford's anti-union brutality and discrimination have involved AFL organizers and members at Kansas City and Dallas, as the records of Labor Board hearings will show.

In fact, the secretary of the AFL local at Kansas City resigned at once in protest against Green's "untruth" on this subject.

In another respect, Green's statement is also a confession of the complete bankruptcy of the AFL in the auto industry. He nowhere mentions the so-called UAW-AFL, of which there is little if anything left, but talks of putting the Ford workers in "unions chartered by the AFL."

In other words, all he has to offer is the old federal union and craft setup, which the auto workers long ago rejected in favor of the modern industrial unionism of the CIO.

Henry Ford's book-of-the-week suggestion is said to be: "How Green Is My Valet."

An "Economic Outlook" chart

Outlook Sees Economic Need For Wage Increases

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Organized labor's demand for higher wages, subject of a leading resolution at the recent CIO Executive Board meeting, is "sound economics" according to the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook, released here today.

According to the Outlook, the amount of national income going to wages and salaries is closely connected with prosperity; when this percentage goes down, as it has been going down for the past number of years, the nation has depression.

"This decline in percentage of income going to wages and salaries as the level of national income rises is one of the serious causes of depressions," the Outlook says. "It shows that as a national income rises, the American people become less and less able to buy what they can produce."

Two main factors cause this decline—increased use of machinery to replace men and operation of industry at more nearly full capacity. This is shown by the index of manhour output in steel, which rose from 96.8 in 1938 to 121 in 1940, while the steel wage index rose only two per cent.

In addition, the Outlook points out, this decline in the share of the national income wages take means a corresponding increase in corporation profits, which creates "a large margin of company income out of which substantial wage increases can be paid without price increases."

COST OF SICKNESS

Sickness and injury to workers cost a loss of 130 times as many mandays per year as do strikes, the Outlook says, citing U. S. Labor Dept. figures to show that sickness cost 13 days per man per year, in 1939 while strikes cost only one tenth of one per cent of a day in the same period.

"That is, 130 times more mandays were lost through injury and illness last year than by strikes," the Outlook says. "This indicates that national defense would be well served by more attention to anti-injury and anti-illness measures."

War Dept. Credits Hillman For Action Against Ford

Washington, Feb. 8.—The suggestion that the War Dept. deny a $10,000,000 order for army trucks to Henry Ford on the ground that he would not accept a provision requiring compliance with labor laws was attributed to Sidney Hillman, associate-director of the Office of Production Management, in testimony by Under-Secretary of War Patterson here.

RESULT OF CAMPAIGN

Patterson's statement was made at a hearing before the House Military Affairs Committee in response to a question from Rep. Thomas of New Jersey, a member of the Dies Committee.

Denial of the order was seen as one result of a long campaign by the CIO, initiated more than three years ago by former President John L. Lewis, to withhold U. S. contracts from violators of U. S. laws.

The War Dept.'s action was in accord with Department Circular No. 43, put out December 4, which stated that contractors must be required to comply with Federal laws before bids could be accepted, Patterson said.

Auto Union Demands Parley With Ford

as one of the conditions for bidders.

The second was a fantastic claim by AFL President William Green that his organization spoke for the majority of Ford workers—an obvious move to collaborate with Ford in an attempt to stall the UAW-CIO's whirlwind campaign and distract attention from Ford's reluctance to cooperate in national defense.

FIVE DEMANDS

The five demands served on Ford by the UAW-CIO are:

1. Negotiations of a working agreement to establish collective bargaining.

2. A minimum of 10 cents an hour increase in wages for all employes to bring Ford's wages up to the scale paid by his competitors.

3. Adjustments in departments where inequalities exist, the adjustment to be upward towards the wage scale paid by competitors on the basis of like pay for like work.

4. Time and a half for Saturday and double time for Sunday work.

5. Establishment of the accepted principle of seniority.

"The request for a conference was made in face of reports that Ford and the AFL are cooking up some sort of back-stairs deal in an effort to defeat genuine collective bargaining," Widman said.

WOULD AVOID STRIKE

Immediate bargaining, the letter said, "will avoid the necessity for a strike in your company's plants!"

Ford's refusal to comply with labor laws in bidding for the truck contract was widely and severely condemned by both the press and government officials, including Senator Prentis M. Brown and three Michigan Congressmen.

Green's statement, which followed on the heels of that development, was promptly slapped down by both Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO, and Widman.

MURRAY CALLS BLUFF

"Green's statement is a ridiculous bluff which will fool nobody—least of all the Ford workers," Murray said. "It is an attempt through unfounded publicity to create the appearance of a jurisdictional dispute and thus confuse the only real issue—whether Ford will recognize and bargain with the UAW-CIO, which alone can speak for the employes.

"His statement is an apparent attempt to cooperate with Ford in distracting attention from the unfavorable publicity resulting from Ford's refusal to cooperate with the defense program."

Widman bluntly questioned Green's sincerity and pointed to inconsistencies in his statement.

'GREEN CONFUSED'

"Green seems to be in some confusion about the status of the AFL among Ford workers," he said. "He states they have 'become organized' into the AFL. He also avers that they 'have taken the necessary steps to become organized into AFL unions.'

"Neither of Green's contradictory statements is accurate. There is no organization of AFL among the Rouge or Lincoln workers.

"The AFL is so inconsequential at Ford's and is so discredited among automobile workers, as shown by the General Motors, Chrysler and scores of other NLRB elections, that we can easily afford to ignore its pretense of strength.

"What Green has in mind is not an effort by the AFL to organize Ford workers but rather an effort to sell its services to the Ford Company as a nuisance value in an effort to hinder the CIO campaign.

"The AFL hopes to give the Ford organizing campaign an atmosphere of jurisdictional labor warfare which Ford can use to his own advantage."

WOULD LIFT WAGES

The wage demands made by the UAW-CIO in its request for a conference with Ford would, if granted, bring Ford within the approximate range of the wage scales of his chief competitors—General Motors and Chrysler.

Text of Pres. Murray's Statement To Senate On "Lease-Lend" Proposal

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8. — Following is the full text of the statement on the "lease-lend" bill sent by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Senator Walter George of Georgia, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The statement was filed on Feb. 5.

S 275, which is under consideration, presents problems of deep significance and of far-reaching importance. It will determine the pattern for our future domestic and foreign policy and thereby affects the lives and well-being of every single American.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations embraces and is concerned with the interests of millions of working men and women and the members of their families. We have a vital stake in the future of America and are deeply concerned in the consideration and outcome of this proposed legislation.

At the outset I would like to make two cardinal points which I believe are uppermost in the minds of the American people:

1. The people of the United States cherish their democracy and democratic institution. Every true American despises and loathes totalitarianism. The people of Europe are at present engulfed in a bloodbath for which the leaders of totalitarianism, through their ruthlessness and rapaciousness, are responsible. As a result, innocent working men and women and children are being killed, maimed and starved. I believe I speak what is in the heart and mind of every common man and woman when I say that the burning desire of all of us is to preserve democracy and to combat every form of totalitarianism.

For these reasons the American nation supports the policy of giving full aid to Great Britain.

2. The people of this nation have demonstrated at every opportunity that has been presented to them in the recent past that they are equally determined not to be dragged into the present foreign wars that are raging throughout the world. This does not mean that Americans will insist upon peace at any price, but it should be clear that Americans are determined to remain at peace rather than be drawn into the bloodbath of Europe. The reason for this is that we know war means an end to our democratic way of life, our democratic institutions and the very ideals which we are attempting to preserve.

Problems of Bill

In light of the forgoing two guideposts, the question is presented as to the wisdom of S. 275. I do not pretend to entertain any expert knowledge as to the intricacies of international law which is furnished at length in the report of the House Foreign Affairs Committee in support of the companion bill in the House. I do not speak as any military expert. I speak as an ordinary layman and primarily as a representative of labor, to discuss the uncertainties, the questions and problems over which American working men and women are pondering in relation to this proposed legislation.

(a) The basis for the proposed legislation is the protection of national defense. Under this declared policy it should be anticipated that any interpretation as to the powers bestowed upon the President under the bill will always be at the expense of private rights, whether they be of labor or property, rather than any curtailment of the authority of the President. This is true particularly in light of the growing intensity of public fears regarding the international situation.

Effect On Labor Laws

Section 3 of the Act, which provides the authority for the President to obtain defense articles for transfer to foreign governments, specifically provides that such authority may be exercised "notwithstanding the provision of any other law." This specific quotation would appear to set aside, if it is in conflict with this bill, any other outstanding law. This might include the National Labor Relations Act, the Wages and Hours Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, or any other outstanding labor legislation if, in the opinion of the President, such legislation if enforced bars an effective prosecution of the President's authority under the proposed bill. For instance:

Suppose the President were to determine that in order to achieve the objectives of the proposed legislation it is necessary to alter certain relations existing between management and employes which were established under any of the foregoing laws or on the basis of voluntary agreements which were obtained as a result of the operation of any of the foregoing laws. I pose the question whether a court might not construe the provision "notwithstanding any other law" to the effect that the President has the authority to set aside such existing relations between management and employes in order to effectively prosecute the ends sought under the bill now being considered.

If this authority is present under the bill, labor should not be asked to rely on the mere press statement that it is not intended to exercise it.

It is easy to say that of course this far-reaching authority is not contemplated under the proposed legislation. However, I wish to point out that where the rights of patent holders are affected, a specific provision is incorporated protecting these rights. From this it might easily be argued that the rights of any other private parties, whether they be of labor or other groups, may be set aside where deemed necessary for the successful prosecution of the authority granted under the proposed bill.

Pattern of Policy

(b) Congress is now considering the establishment of a definite policy regarding its foreign relations. This proposed bill purports to determine the pattern. Labor, when considering the impact which such contemplated legislation may have upon its rights and its existence, must necessarily take into account other legislative measures which are being proposed at the same time under the guise that they are necessary to further the foreign policy program.

I have reference to the clamor which is made by a few vociferous Congressmen demanding that the right of labor be curtailed or eliminated as an essential part of a national defense program. I know of no more fatal mistake that can be made than such action.

Labor must necessarily look askance at any program under which it is urged that for its successful prosecution the rights of labor must be destroyed. This is precisely what is being proposed under the bills that have been submitted by several Congressmen at this session of Congress. National defense must include the protection and existence of the economic and political gains of the people of the nation. It is on this basis that the support of the people has been solicited and is forthcoming.

It is therefore essential that in connection with any legislation to be initiated by Congress to guide the foreign affairs of this nation there be incorporated a forthright and unequivocal declaration that the policies of the government must guarantee the protection of the democratic rights of labor and of all the people of the nation.

No Limitations

(c) It must be conceded that under the bill there are no limitations as to the amount or kind of materials that the President may transfer to foreign governments other than that in his determination it is necessary for the defense of the United States. There are no criteria imposed in the Act as to what foreign governments should be aided other than the single requirement that the President decide that the defense of such government is vital to the defense of the United States.

Under the section of the Act which permits the Secretaries of War and Navy to purchase or acquire material in the foreign countries, the President could place orders in any foreign country, pay for such material and have it delivered to the foreign government. This procedure would of course eliminate the need of such country raising its own funds from its own people at the expense of Americans.

Under the President's authority to procure defense articles for foreign governments and to transfer them to such foreign governments, it would seem to be clear that the President could make such requirements that would require American convoys of such material to the foreign governments in order to make certain that they actually arrive in their hands.

The President of the United States has himself stated that: "If one nation can convoy ships, either under its own flag or that of another, through a hostile war, on the doctrine of chance, there is pretty sure to be some shooting and that comes awfully close to war." This statement was made by the President apparently to indicate that he was opposed to American convoys. The present bill does not forbid convoys. In addition, the Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, testifying before this Committee, has stated that he is opposed to a provision which would forbid convoys.

These inconsistent statements merely produce confusion and alarm. I believe that there must be unqualified opposition to American convoys into the war zones. This matter should not be left to administrative determination but should be clearly prohibited by Congress.

Congress has been furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury a very brief and general statement of the alleged dollar assets of Great Britain in the United States available for the purchase and procurement of defense materials. These assets are alleged to be practically exhausted. The statement furnished to this Committee does not purport to include the assets of any portions of the British Empire except Great Britain. In addition, it did not include the available dollars assets of Holland, Belgium, or Norway, to mention but a few of the nations who would be entitled to receive aid under the proposed legislation.

The report of the House Committee in support of the companion measure in the House, specifically states that this Lend-Lease bill does not in any way amend or repeal the Neutrality Act or the Johnson Act. In other words, it is stated that the United States government may make available to Great Britain or other nations if so desired, through direct appropriations by Congress, credits or materials without being in conflict with existing legislation. Yet this is the sole alleged purpose of this bill.

Broad Powers

The powers which are bestowed upon the President under the proposed legislation are more far-reaching than ever suggested at any time in the American history. If this policy is to be adopted, certainly the American people are at least entitled to know the facts which give rise to the grave necessity for such extraordinary legislation.

The hearings before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and this Committee have not produced an abundance of acts either regarding the situation in Great Britain or regarding the policies which are to govern the American government in its foreign relations. Different cabinet officers have taken diverse positions before this Committee on the same basic issues. Certain cabinet officers have even refused before this Committee to accept responsibility for the proposed legislation. The military experts of the government have testified before executive sessions, thereby depriving the American people of the benefit of their expert advice. Vague generalities have been the vogue instead of plain hard facts.

The proper functioning of democracy demands that the American people be advised and informed of all the facts in order that they may intelligently authorize and direct their leaders to conduct themselves in accordance with an approved policy. I submit that the American people have not received the benefit of such complete and full disclosures which would permit them to pass judgement upon (a) the justification for the requested legislation, or (b) the intended foreign policy of this nation which is to be pursued under the projected program.

Murray Asks Protection For Labor

lend-lease bill does not forbid convoys, and that Secretary of War Stimson testified that he is opposed to a provision which would forbid convoys—despite an admission by Pres. Roosevelt himself that when ships are convoyed through war zones "there is pretty sure to be some shooting and that comes awfully close to war."

Murray declared that the powers bestowed on the President by the bill are so far-reaching that "the American people are at least entitled to know the facts which give rise to the grave necessity for such extraordinary legislation."

"Vague generalities have been the vogue instead of plain hard facts," he said.

"I submit that the American people have not received the benefit of such complete and full disclosures which would permit them to pass judgment upon (a) the jutification for the requested legislation, or (b) the intended foreign policy which is to be pursued under the projected program."

In submitting his statement, Murray said he wished "to make two cardinal points which I believe are uppermost in the minds of the American people:

"1. The people of the United States cherish their democracy and democratic institutions" and have a "burning desire . . . to preserve democracy and to combat every form of totalitarianism. For these reasons the American nation supports the policy of giving full aid to Great Britain."

"2. The people of this nation have demonstrated at every opportunity . . . . that they are equally determined not to be dragged into the present foreign wars that are raging throughout the world."

DANGER OF WAR

American determination not to be "drawn into the bloodbath of Europe," Murray said, is due to the fact that "we know that war means an end to our democratic way of life, our democratic institutions and the very ideals which we are attempting to preserve."

In elaborating his opposition to totalitarianism, he stated: "The people of Europe are at present engulfed in a bloodbath for which the leaders of totalitarianism, through their ruthlessness and rapaciousness, are responsible. As a result, innocent men and women and children are being killed, maimed and starved."

Murray also declared that the American people's opposition to any involvement in the present war did not mean "peace at any price."

In questioning the necessity for the lend-lease bill, he pointed out that the House committee had stated that the bill does not in any way amend or repeal the neutrality Act or the Johnson Act.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Director of Organization, CIO

The affiliated organizations of the CIO are getting into their full organizing stride. Meetings of representatives of National, International Unions and the CIO have been held throughout the nation, for the purpose of working out the most effective plans to bring about the maximum degree of cooperation to meet this ever-growing demand for organization.

Recently such conferences were held in Philadelphia, Pa., Wilmington, Del., Charleston, W. Va., St. Louis, Mo., and Columbus, O. Heretofore state conferences of national, international unions and CIO have been held in Indiana and other points.

Regional Director George Craig of Philadelphia reports that a large number of organizers attended the conference. Regional Director Don Harris of Wilmington reports the conference in Wilmington was a real success. The Charleston, W. Va. conference was attended by Brother John B. Easton, President, W. Va., IUC; CIO Regional Director Wm. Blizzard and President Martin Wagner of District 50, UMWA.

COLUMBUS MEETING

At Columbus, Ohio, there were 175 representatives of our affiliated unions present. Regional Director John Owens presided. Real practical cooperation was demonstrated between national, international unions, city, county and state councils and CIO. I had the pleasure of attending the conference and addressing them, pointing out the spheres of organization and how cooperation could be applied. Secretary-Treasurer, Ted Silvia, Ohio State IUC, prepared an agenda which permitted the representatives to discuss many subjects; the main one being ORGANIZING. Discussion also took place on Labor Board elections, etc.

In St. Louis, through the cooperation of the St. Louis IUC and organizers of national and international unions and CIO, plans were laid there to intensify organization campaigns. Regional Director A. F. Kojetinsky attended the conference and John Brophy, Director of Industrial Union Councils addressed it.

It is to be expected out of such conferences there will develop a willingness to cooperate with one another regardless what particular group each one is attached. They are sure to find a way to be helpful to each other. This kind of action, if properly coordinated and with the one objective dominant in their minds, to ORGANIZE the unorganized will lead to progress.

FORD AND GREEN

Henry Ford is quoted as saying he is willing to manufacture articles for Defense at "cost". Yes, Henry, at cost to the workers employed in your plants—cost of rights guaranteed to them under the law and which every other automobile concern is required to respect. Ford's defiance of the Government by refusal to manufacture articles for Defense in compliance with Federal labor laws exposes his real attitude. Labor now wants to know what the government will do now that Ford is on strike against the United States, against the security of the nation and of all the people.

William Green gave a statement to the press to the effect that the AFL has already organized the majority of the Ford workers; that Ford's labor policy is a fine one. This puts the National Labor Relations Board in an embarrassing position, since they recently found Ford guilty of unfair practices against members of the AFL.

Green's statement brings to mind the fake pact that was arranged with Homer Martin and Harry Bennett and we can expect, now that Messrs. Green, Ford and Bennett are all occupying the same bed, that they will soon announce a "collective bargaining arrangement"—via the back-door policy.

NOBODY DECEIVED

The CIO will expose all such maneuvering as it did in the past and the automobile workers will not be deceived by this dressed-up hypocrisy. It will be quite in order now for Bennett to turn over his so-called "Liberty Legion" group to Mr. Green, as he, Green, has demonstrated his willingness to be the Charlie McCarthy of this vicious anti-union institution.

The United Automobile Workers of America and the CIO Brother Michael F. Widman, Jr., and his organizers, will take care of Ford & Green, the gold-dust twins by applying some old-fashioned dutch cleanser and by continuing to build a clean, strong union, truly representing the workers in the Ford plants.

Recent meetings held by the workers in Bethlehem Steel, addressed by Brother Van A. Bittner, were so successful that the Buffalo, N. Y. gathering was described as the largest meeting of its kind ever held in that city. A great deal of enthusiasm for the CIO is being shown by the workers of this corporation throughout the country.

From Atlanta, Ga., Regional Director Charles Gilman reports good progress in organizing power company workers, government employes, and furniture workers. In New Orleans, Regional Director Pieper reports a Labor Board election victory for the United Furniture Workers. The score, 99 for the CIO, 31 against.

Edmundson Gives Formula To End Strikes

Chicago, Feb. 8 — A way for employers to avoid strikes was suggested today by Ray Edmundson, president of the Illinois district of the United Mine Workers.

"The way to stop strikes is for employers to obey the law and meet with the accredited representatives of their workers to bargain collectively in the American way," he told a meeting of the Chicago chapter of the National Lawyer's Guild.

He charged that present demands for curtailing the right to strike during the national emergency concealed a "cannonnade of anti-labor legislation," and added:

"In 1858, Abraham Lincoln said: 'Thank God we live in a country where workers have the right to strike.' I live in Springfield, and that still goes."

The Illinois mine union leader asserted that there is "nothing sinister or subversive" in the CIO program.

Construction Union Enters Building Service Field

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Jurisdiction of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee has been extended by the Congress of Industrial Organizations to cover the field of building service workers.

Over the nation are hundreds of thousands of building service workers who have either been unorganized or else exploited by racketeers under the craft union setup. George Scalise, the No. 1 AFL racketeer in this industry, has just been convicted of a series of charges in federal court in New York City.

BADLY EXPLOITED

These workers have been among the worst exploited group in the United States and are mostly unorganized. The few unions that do exist have withered away to mere shells as a result of the dictatorial and racketeering policies tolerated by the craft unions. Thousands of these workers are looking forward to the entry of the CIO into their industry.

Chairman A. D. Lewis of the UCWOC has prepared a letter of instructions to all UCWOC organizers on the subject of building service employes. The letter explains the new jurisdiction of the UCWOC and offers suggestions on how to organize it and the type of agreement to seek.

FIVE NEW LOCALS

Moving ahead swiftly in this field the UCWOC has already set up five new building service locals, four of which were transfers from the CIO and one recently organized by the UCWOC. These locals are two in New York, one in Detroit, one in St. Louis, and one in Grand Rapids. The second New York local, newly organized, includes employes of Lord & Taylor, big department store, and is gaining recruits daily in other stores.

Action of the CIO broadened the jurisdiction of the UCWOC to cover upward of 2,000,000 workers, of whom about 250,000 are in New York City alone. All metropolitan areas have thousands of these employes in office buildings, apartments, lofts, apartment stores, hotels, and etc. The field includes a wide variety of workers from char women to highly skilled mechanics, chefs, clerks, waitresses and bell boys.

BAD CONDITIONS

Hours are long, wages are low and working conditions extremely unsatisfactory due to the demoralization by craft leaders of the Scalise type and the general absence of union organization among these workers. Certain basic standards are being set by the UCWOC as its goal in all wage agreements negotiated for building service workers.

Boston CIO Backs Murray Defense Plan

Boston, Feb. 8—Support for the Murray defense plan and other industrial planning programs of the CIO was voted at a "reorganization" meeting of the Greater Boston Industrial Union Council.

The resolution, after approving the Murray and Reuther plans, lauded "the recommendations embodied in these plans for the establishment of industry councils composed of representatives of management, labor and government." It urged "officers and the affiliated unions of the CIO to publicize and promote this policy with all the resources at their command."

Earlier the conference had heard John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, give a detailed analysis of the plans and of the CIO program during the national emergency and in the post-war period. Other speakers included Hugh Lyons, CIO regional director for New England, and John Tompkins, council president.

About 80 delegates, representing 25 local unions, attended the meeting.

St. Louis CIO Attacks AFL Thuggery

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 8.—Charging that the AFL building trades are intimidating and coercing contractors against using CIO construction workers on their jobs, the St. Louis CIO Industrial Union Council has gone on record as serving notice on all concerned that it will not tolerate these unfair tactics.

"In a democracy," the resolution declared, "it is the right of every individual to belong to any organization of his or her choosing."

3½ More Years For Scalise

NEW YORK, Feb. 8. — George Scalise who was president of the AFL Building Service Employes International until he was sentenced recently to Sing-Sing prison for a 10- to 20-year term for grand larceny and third degree forgery, last week had three and a half more years added to his prison sentence for evading his income tax.

CIO Demands Larger WPA Appropriation

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8. — The $375,000,000 WPA deficiency appropriation proposed by President Roosevelt is wholly inadequate, the CIO said here today in presenting a demand to Congress for a minimum of $500,000,000.

The demand was made in a letter from James B. Carey, chairman of the CIO Committee on Unemployment, to Rep. Edward Taylor, Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

The letter said in part:

"The sum of $375,000,000 proposed by the President, is wholly inadequate. This amount would force a reduction of the WPA rolls from present levels of more than 1,900,000 to below 1,300,000 in June, 1941.

"It is clear that the President's estimate has failed to assess the situation of the unemployed in the light of the available information. The same mistake was made in the budget figure for WPA during the current fiscal year. The President's budget last year, although the enormous defense expenditures were not then contemplated, provided for only $975,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941."

Unemployment will not be reduced to more than 8,000,000 between now and June, the CIO statement declared, in calling for an absolute minimum of 2,000,000 WPA jobs. This minimum would require $500,000,000 in deficiency appropriations, the letter said. "Armament manufacturers are now piling up profits unprecedented in their corporate history," the letter concluded. "How can people without jobs, seeing these things, be satisfied with further cuts in the meager provisions made for them?"

Army in New Move To Help Canners

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Army withdrawal of a demand for exemption of canneries from the Walsh-Healey Act was only a temporary retreat, it was learned here when the Army was reported to have renewed the demand. This time through the Defense Commission.

The demand for exemption from the Act, which calls for prevailing wages, payment for overtime work and a ban on child labor in work on government contracts, was made last week when the Army appeared before the Public Contracts Division that administers the act. The Army explained at the time that canners would not bid on its orders unless they were exempt from the overtime provisions.

DENY ARMY CLAIM

This demand was denied by the Contracts Division, on the technical ground that exemptions could only be secured from all provisions of the act, not from single clauses.

Folowing this, it was reported that the army would buy its canned goods from stocks already packed, thus evading the act which applies only to goods in process of production.

Now the army has changed its tactics again, and has put the matter up to the defense commission by the device of asking the commission to suspend its announced policy of requiring defense contractors to pledge compliance with U. S. laws before bids can be considered.

Canneries already enjoy exemption from the Wage-Hour Act giving them freedom to work any number of hours without overtime pay during their 28-week season.

This further exemption on government contracts would remove all restrictions on working conditions in the canneries. Observers here noted that such an exemption would prompt similar pleas from other industries.

Jones Blasts Wire-Tapping Bill

Condemns 'Instrument Of Blackmail'

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—Passage of the wiretapping bill (HR 2266) now in hearings before the House Judiciary Committee "would bring back an instrument susceptible to the uses of tyranny, of blackmail, of oppression," John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, told Congressmen in testifying against the bill today.

The bill, offered by Rep. Emmanuel Celler of N. Y., would legalize government eavesdropping on phone conversations on the authority of the head of a government investigating body, and is the successor to one introduced at the past session of Congress which failed to pass.

Jones reminded the Judiciary Committee that the CIO, both in convention and at the recent Executive Board, had gone on record emphatically against wiretapping, describing it as "a dangerous invasion of civil liberties and constitutional guarntees," and that the CIO had made opposition to the bill one of the points of its 1941 legislative program.

CITES RECORD

Legalizing this kind of spying on private conversations would result in making innocent people suffer rather than the guilty, Jones pointed out, since no real saboteur or spy would be likely to reveal details of plots to overthrow the government over the phone. In addition, wiretappers would be in a position to reveal matters which they might overhear in carrying out assignments.

"Would it be easy for a person schooled in wiretapping for the government to forget the practice when in private service?" Jones asked. "Would there not be a strong temptation to use wiretapping against the government, against labor unions, against persons active in private life?"

This danger led Congress during the last world war to outlaw the practice, Jones said, an action that was followed up by similar laws in some 20 states. And again, in a Supreme Court opinion of 1928, the late Justice Brandeis declared: "As a means of espionage, writs of assistance and general warrants are but puny instruments of tyranny and oppression when compared with wiretapping."

BANNED IN 1934

Congress again banned wiretapping in the Communications Act of 1934, Jones said, and in 1939 Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, head of the FBI and now said to be backing the present bill, declared:

"While I concede that the telephone tap is from time to time of limited value in the criminal investigative field, I frankly and sincerely believe that if a statute of this kind was enacted the abuses arising therefrom would far outweigh the value which might accrue to law enforcement as a whole."

The dangers that would rise from passage of the present bill are known to Congress, to the public and to the courts, Jones said in concluding his testimony.

"The practice is abhorrent to Americans," he declared. "It stems rather from the secret espionage tactics of the dictators' secret police . . . Let us combat the enemies of democracy without suspending the Bill of Rights."

Harvester Strikers Get Pledges Of Support

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Pledges of support to the 6,500 striking employes of International Harvester's Tractor Works here from other CIO unions have been pouring in, officials of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee said this week.

Ranks of the strikers are holding firm as union negotiators pressed the Harvester management for a settlement of the workers' demands for pay increases, elimination of piece work and other terms.

An election victory won this week by the CIO Farm Equipment Workers at the LaPlante-Choate plant in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Caterpillar Tractor Corp. subsidiary, has acted as a powerful stimulus to the strike. The vote was 278 for the CIO to 81 for an AFL union.

SEEKING SHOWDOWN

Meanwhile workers in Harvester plants in Milwaukee, Richmond, Ind., and East Moline, Ill., as well as at the McCormick and West Pullman Works here, are clamoring for a showdown with the company, and are preparing for strike action if necessary.

At the Rock Falls, Ill. Harvester plant, where the workers are already on strike, ranks are holding firm against a company-sponsored "back-to-work" movement which fizzled completely.

Powers Hapgood, national CIO representative, who has been sent to Chicago to aid the FEWOC, served notice on the Harvester Corp. this week, that it "will have to contend with the entire CIO", unless the union's demands are met.

Plan CIO Low-Cost Housing In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 8. — Plans for building homes with CIO labor at a cost ranging from $3,000 up have been announced by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee here.

Members of a CIO low-cost housing committee will meet Feb. 10 to work out further details of the home-building program which was launched some time ago. CIO-built homes are already half built in Garfield Heights, and others will be under way soon.

"If enough prospective home-builders join in the program it is believed that mass production, pre-fabrication and other modern developments can be utilized to build homes for as low as $2500 or $3000 with CIO skilled workers," a spokesman for the committee said.

The Cleveland CIO Industrial Union Council has sent out questionnaires to be filled in with data on the kinds of homes wanted, number in family, and other necessary information needed to get the program under way.

The committee plans to reduce cost of building by cutting through the expensive red tape established by AFL business agents and building materials corporations."

CIO Union Aids Housing Survey

New Kensington, Pa., Feb. 8 — Officials of Local 2, Aluminum Workers of America, took a hand today in a community campaign to end this city's critical housing situation.

The union will mobilize 150 active volunteers from its membership to participate in a city-sponsored house-to-house survey to determine how much defense home building is required in the boroughs of New Kensington and Arnold.

Mayors Dick Reeser of New Kensington and Mayor M. F. Horn of Arnold will proclaim the period from Feb. 8 to Feb. 16 as "Defense Housing Week" in the two communities.

TO SUBMIT DEMANDS

The AWA members will cooperate with other citizens who volunteer to help conduct the survey, which is aimed at finding facts to substantiate a demand upon the U. S. Defense Housing Coordinator for a local project.

Union and city officials asserted that such a building program is urgently needed in this expanding industrial area, where increasing employment, serious overcrowding and rising rents are causing discomfort and hardship for hundreds of workers in defense industries.

MEMO TO TRIBUNE: Wives of CIO strikers at Intl. Harvester Co. picket the Chicago Tribune to answer anti-union lies.

Pittsburgh In Tribute To Murray

Pittsburgh, Feb. 8. — More than 1,500 trade unionists, civic and social leaders in Western Pennsylvania honored CIO President Philip Murray here recently at a testimonial banquet sponsored by the CIO Steel City Industrial Union Council.

The crowd included leaders and members of a score of CIO unions in this district, as well as representatives from several AFL unions.

The role of Murray in the American labor movement was hailed in speeches by Judge Michael A. Musmanno, Mayor Cornelius D. Scully, of Pittsburgh and County Commisioner John J. Kane, who is an official of the AFL.

Most Rev. Hugh C. Boyle, Bishop of Pittsburgh, paid tribute to the CIO president as meriting every cooperation of union members and their prayers for the success "of his great work."

AFL Paper Exposes AFL Union

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 8 — Not waiting for Labor Board certification of a phony AFL union, the National Distillers Co. fired 17 CIO members from its plant here. The CIO Distillery Workers Organizing Committee immediately filed discrimination charges with the NLRB.

The AFL union barely won the election, Chairman Joseph Cannon of the DWOC declared, after announcing it planned to spend $25,000 to carry the vote.

Cannon said that the dismissal of CIO workers came despite the fact that the company had promised to hold off placing into effect its back door pact with the AFL union until after NLRB certification.

PAPER'S EXPOSE

An interesting commentary on the nature of the AFL's distillery workers national union appeared in "The Tobacco Worker," official organ of the AFL Tobacco Workers Intl. Union, which has headquarters in this city.

The paper pointed out that a recent convention called by Green and Sec. Meany of the AFL was dominated almost entirely by wholesale salesmen, many of whom are rumored to "have connections with underworld rackets". Production workers locals received notice of the parley only three or four days in advance, and in most cases were unable to send delegates.

Said the AFL paper:

"Production workers are unlikely to get proper representation by the salesman-controlled executive board, since salesmen are too closely linked with the management to represent the factory workers."

CIO Leaders Condemn Bills To Outlaw Basic Labor Rights

TORY BUBBLE BUSTS:

Vultee Aircraft Ahead of Schedule Despite '40 Strike

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Feb. 15.—Remember the propaganda at the time of the Vultee Aircraft strike last fall that the CIO was causing fatal delays in the national defense program?

Well, officials of the United Automobile Workers wrote "finis" to that story today.

They pointed to the fact that Asst. Sec. of War Robert Patterson has announced that Vultee finished its first contract for 300 basic U. S. Army training planes 40 days ahead of schedule.

Work on the second batch of trainers is already under way.

Declaring that the record delivery is proof that well-paid, union workers "are the most competent in America," Lew Michener, UAW regional director added:

"This should end for once and for all the lie that the CIO is not interested in national defense or that CIO workers are guilty of holding up the defense program.

"Work at Vultee is going ahead full blast and chief credit should be piven to stabilized labor relations as guaranteed by the CIO contract."

Other developments in the CIO plane drive:

2. Prepared for a Feb. 20 Labor Board election among the 7,000 employes of the North American Aviation Corp.

Anti-Strike Plans Would Endanger Morale, Is Charge

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—Absolute opposition to all laws denying or restricting the right to strike, outlawing the union shop, emasculating the Wagner Act and providing criminal penalties for other union activities was expressed by Pres. Philip Murray, Secretary Carey and the six CIO Vice-Presidents.

The statement declared that the "rights of workers to organize into unions of their own choosing, to be free from coercion or interference from their employers and to strike if necessary are the means of making Americans free men rather than economic slaves."

It cited U. S. Government reports showing that collective bargaining as practiced by the CIO is the best way by which "the demands of labor can be met with a minimum of disturbance in our industrial life."

Destruction of these rights "would be the surest means of destroying the morale of the people, and to that extent weakening their faith in democracy," the CIO officers said.

Some New Alibis!

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 15 — All the old alibis, and a couple of new ones, were used by the Mayor of Norfolk—who owns and operates the Wood Towing Co.—during negotiations with a committee representing the Natl. Maritime Union.

The mayor told the group wage increases were out of the question, since his first duty was to stockholders and his second to the consumers, who would allegedly be affected by price rises if the firm lifted its wage rate.

The closed shop, the union committee was informed, was opposed by the mayor because it was against his principles—and because, since his firm had received some national defense orders, any American should have a right to work for him.

After the first conference, the mayor began to weaken. He said he'd be willing to sacrifice his principles about the closed shop if the union would give up its wage increase demands. The answer was no.

Strikes Trail Accidents As Cause of Time Loss

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—Industrial accidents caused more than four times as much loss of working hours as strikes during 1940, Sidney Hillman, associate director-general of the Office of Production Management, said this week in announcing the results of a special study of the status of industrial relations.

Less than two hours per worker were lost because of strikes, he said, and only a few of some 300 threatened disputes actually resulted in appreciable stoppages, all of short duration.

The study, made by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics at Hillman's request, also shows that the number of man days lost by strikes during the first six months of the defense program is only half that lost during the corresponding period for 1939, and 47 per cent less than the time lost by strikes when the U. S. was at war 24 years ago, although total non-agricultural employment is 22 per cent greater today than 1917.

"Chief credit for this remarkable record," Hillman said, "should go to the patriotism of organized labor and to that vast majority of responsible industrialists who have accepted the orderly processes of collective bargaining."

Map CIO Organization Drive In Philly

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 15.—A concerted drive to organize the 100,000 potential CIO members in the Philadelphia area was mapped out at a conference of CIO organizers held here at the call of Regional Director George Craig. Over 40 CIO representatives attended.

Pointing to the almost two billion dollars worth of defense contracts placed here by the U. S. Government, the conference outlined plans for a campaign to bring wages and working conditions up to the mark justified by rising profits of the big manufacturers and other firms.

A canvas of organizing opportunities showed that a staff of 90 volunteers was ready to help in making contacts, distributing CIO literature, etc. The conference voted to make all CIO local offices available to workers who want to join any of the Philadelphia CIO affiliates.

A committee of four was set up to speed the drive. It is headed by Regional Director Craig, and includes Council President Carl Bersing, Secretary Howard Kirsch, and Joseph Kline, vice-president of Branch 1 of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

Three-Year Drive Wins Contract

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 15. — After three years' effort Clendenin Local 418 of the Oil Workers International Union has won a signed agreement with the Elk Refining Co. A threatened strike was averted last month, when the company agreed to negotiate. U. S. Conciliator Arthur Reilly was sent in to aid in settling the dispute.

The agreement provides for check-off of union dues, two weeks' paid vacation instead of one; arbitration of grievances; time and a half for overtime work; joint meetings to discuss the application of working rules, and negotiation on wage increases on 30 days' notice.

Transit Union Asks 33% Pay Raise

New York, Feb. 15.—A general wage boost of 33.3 per cent and payment for all workers' pension contribution are the principal demands to be raised during coming negotiations between the Transport Workers Union, CIO, and the N. Y. Transit System.

Hours, working conditions and other job problems will be worked out by each section of the union according to its own needs, the announcement said. "In preparation for the campaign to win the best contract for the employes of the N. Y. Transit System, sections of the union, under the guidance of the Executive Board, are mobilizing their membership for a maximum of unity and solidarity."

LABOR AND THE LAW

Unions Immune From Trust Laws

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

The United States Supreme Court in its decision on February 6th confirmed the principle, laid down in the Apex case, that the anti-trust laws cannot be used to prevent strikes and other union activity to establish collective bargaining standards. The court in its majority opinion held that unions are subject to the anti-trust laws only when they join a combination of employers engaged in practices which suppress competition and affect prices in the market.

This decision was handed down in the prosecution brought by the Department of Justice against William Hutcheson and the Carpenters Union. The Department of Justice claimed that the strike and boycott called by the Carpenters during a jurisdictional dispute with other AFL unions over work at the Annheuser-Busch breweries was a restraint of trade and not within the "legitimate objectives" of labor unions.

Far-Reaching Effects

This prosecution of the Department of Justice affected more than just the jurisdictional squabbles of AFL unions. If successful, it would have laid down a rule that the Courts are entitled to examine whether or not a labor union is acting within its "legitimate objectives" and thereby empower the courts to pass upon the wisdom and justification for specific union activities.

If this prosecution had been successful, the courts would then be in a position to say that a particular type of labor union activity was not "legitimate" and consequently subject the union to the criminal and civil penalties of the anti-trust laws.

But the Supreme Court quashed the indictment and flatly overruled the theory behind it. The Court relied upon the history of the anti-trust laws and gave full effect to Section 20 of the Clayton Act, which legalizes strikes, picketing and boycotts by labor unions. It said:

"So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and illicit under Section 20 (of the Clayton Act) are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the sefishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means."

Protection For Unions

In short, the Supreme Court held that labor union activities during the course of a labor dispute are protected against any action under the anti-trust laws because of the provisions of Section 20 of the Clayton Act and of the general Congressional policy laid down in the Norris-LaGuardia Act as well.

While it is true that there was no claim of violence in the Hutcheson case, the Apex case has squarely held that if the acts of a union, when conducted peacefully, are exempt from the anti-trust laws, then the fact that these same activities are accompanied by violence does not bring them under the anti-trust laws. Violence and other lawless acts, if any, must be dealt with by other laws.

The net result of these two decisions of the Supreme Court, in the Apex and Hutcheson cases, is to give labor immunity from the anti-trust laws which was won in Congress, only to be lost in the courts. These decisions are a vindication of labor's insistence upon its right to be free from the anti-trust laws and its claim that the anti-trust laws were intended, not to punish labor unions, but to punish the monopolies of big business that suppress competition and fix prices.

High Court Picket Decisions Being Studied

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—Implications of two decisions involving the right to picket handed down this week by the U. S. Supreme Court were being studied today by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel.

In one decision, written by Justice Frankfurter, the court held that state courts are entitled to hand down injunctions where the picketing is associated with violence.

In the other ruling, the High court held that an Illinois injunction was an illegal and unconstitutional abridgement of free speech. The injunction was based on claims that the pickets were not employes of the firm against which the unionists were calling the public's attention.

Both cases involved Illinois AFL unions.

The Frankfurter decision in the Chicago milk wagon drivers union case noted the existence of a background of violence and maintained that a "state can choose to authorize its courts to enjoin acts of picketing in themselves peaceful when they are enmeshed with contemporaneously violent conduct which is concededly outlawed."

Justices Black, Reed and Douglas formed the dissenting minority.

Black warned that the precedent might well lead to a "prior censorship of views." Pointing out that criminal prosecution for lawless acts would remedy the situation without need of enjoining picket rights, he wrote:

"Illinois, like all the other states of the Union, is part of a national democratic system on the continued existence of which depends the right of free discussion of public affairs—a right whose denial to some leads in the direction of its eventual denial to all.

"I am of the opinion that the court's injunction strikes directly at the heart of our government, and that deprivation of these essential liberties cannot be reconciled with the rights guaranteed to the people of this nation by their Constitution."

Council Urges U. S., British Labor Confab

Pittsburgh, Feb. 15.—Calling of a joint conference between representatives of British and American labor unions to study war aims and "long-range purposes of the democratic causes" was urged here recently by the CIO Steel City Industrial Union Council.

"Leadership in the achievement of both immediate and ultimate democratic objectives," a resolution adopted said, "must come promptly from organized labor in the British Commonwealth of Nations and the United States."

Suggestion for calling the international conference has been turned over to national CIO officials, it was announced after the CIO council adopted the resolution.

BACK CIO PLANS

At the same time CIO members in Western Pennsylvania launched a drive to force government and defense leaders to take affirmative action on CIO proposals to bolster and expand the National Defense Program. The CIO Council called on President Roosevelt, Cabinet officers, Defense Commission officials and Congressmen, to take steps to put constructive CIO defense proposals into effect.

U. S. Agency Called Unfair To Negroes

Washington, Feb. 15 — Negro workers in the U. S. Dept. of Commerce are being systematically discriminated against, despite denials by department officials, according to charges made by Local 23 of the United Federal Workers, CIO, here.

"Negroes are systematically relegated to jobs that pay the least, are least valuable as experience in obtaining other positions, and are of the shortest duration," the local said.

These discharges have resulted in reducing a force of 350 Negro clerks in two divisions to 80, the local charged in a brief filed in answer to denials of discrimination by the Acting Director of the Census Bureau of the department.

Allis Strike Parleys Move To Capital

West Allis, Wis., Feb. 15.—Negotiations for settlement of the Allis-Chalmers strike here were transferred to Washington this week. Six representatives of the United Auto Workers, CIO, including three officers and one bargaining committee member of striking Local 248, were called to confer with Defense Commission representatives.

At the same time Allis Chalmers Co. negotiators, including Leo Mann, notorious anti-union attorney, were summoned to the national capital.

Speaking to six thousand strikers who jammed the State Fair Park Coliseum here, Harold Christoffel, president of Local 248, promised that the union's bargaining committee would accept no settlement terms other than those the membership had voted: A union shop and a substantial wage increase.

Transfer of the negotiations to Washington followed a victory by the union against a company attempt to brand it as a "saboteur" of national defense.

Rayon Workers Vote CIO

Hartford, Conn., Feb. 15. — Workers of the Hartford Rayon Corp. at Rocky Hill near here voted 597 to 92 for the CIO Textile Workers Union at an election held by the National Labor Relations Board Feb. 7, according to Herbert W. Payne, director of the TWU synthetic division. This represents 86 per cent of the 738 workers eligible to vote, Payne said.

The mill was organized with the aid of Elizabeth Nord, a member of the TWU executive council, and Jeanne Antonaccio, working under the direction of Payne and Joseph Leeds, state director.

The victory has spurred up the TWU organizing drive throughout New England, Payne declared. Negotiations for an agreement will open this week, he said.

Union Asks Certification At R. H. Macy's

New York, Feb. 15.—A petition for certification as bargaining agent for about 900 employes in the service division of R. H. Macy & Co., has been filed with the State Labor Board by the Macy Organizing Committee of the United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes.

Macy's signed union contracts in the warehouse, delivery, receiving and cafeteria departments covering some 2,300 workers. The Organizing Committee is continuing its drive to complete organization of the sales and clerical divisions which will bring all Macy employes under union contract.

Alaska Unions Hold Confab

Juneau, Alaska, Feb. 15.—The third annual All-Alaska Labor Convention sponsored by the Maritime Federation of the Pacific which met here the end of last month was attended by 40 delegates representing 25 unions and central labor bodies, CIO, AFL and independents.

A. E. Harding, MFP president, opened the convention, and John Olofson, Ketchikan branch of the CIO Alaska Fishermen's Union was elected convention chairman.

Tories In New Attack On Marine Union

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The tory attack on the union hiring hall, basis for decent conditions in the maritime industry, jumped ahead this week with two Congressional maneuvers designed to hamstring the Natl. Maritime Union, the Longshoremen and Warehousemen, and other CIO marine organizations where the union hall has replaced the abuses of the old shape-up and other anti-union hiring methods.

Not satisfied with his bill, HR 2662, which would wipe out the union hall, Rep. Dirksen of Illinois tried to slip over an amendment to an appropriations bill that would prohibit subsidized vessels from hiring through the union.

This maneuver was defeated on the floor of the House, largely through a speech of Rep. Bland, chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, who asked: "Are we going to jeopardize . . . by scare, by suspicions, by interference with the collective agreements which the men themselves have made, by a denial to the men themselves an opportunity to be heard, the splendid results that have been obtained?"

FIGHT BILL

Bland pleaded for a full hearing from the maritime workers when the Dirksen bill comes up. This bill, described by NMU leaders as aimed at smashing first the maritime unions and then the labor movement generally, is being vigorously opposed by all the CIO maritime industry organizations.

Acording to the CIO Maritime Committee, the bill would not only wipe out the union hall and union conditions, but would permit shipowners to weed out militant union members on the ground that they were "subversive" and to hire non-union crews.

MarinePact Lifts Pay By Millions

New York, Feb. 15.—Renewal of the Natl. Maritime Union's contract with shipowners has increased wages of 30,000 seamen by close to $3,500,000 annually, NMU officials said here in announcing successful conclusion of the negotiations with the American Merchant Marine Institute, representing the employers.

The new contract brings an increase of $7.50 per month, plus a $10.00 "temporary" boost won last May and now made permanent. In addition, the seamen get from $30.00 to $40.00 per month war risk bonus, the rate depending on the destination of the trip.

NMU officials pointed out that the contract renewal brings wages up 25 per cent above the level of last May, when the temporary increase was won. In general, they said, seamen's wages have increased more than 65 per cent since organization of the union.

Bridges Faces New Ouster Hearing

Washington, Feb. 15 — A new drive to deport Harry Bridges, leader of the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen and California CIO Regional Director, is in full steam with announcement of new deportation hearings by U. S. Attorney General Robert H. Jackson. The hearings are set for March 31 at San Francisco, and are based on an FBI report ordered by Jackson.

Bridges, whose naturalization was blocked by an Immigration Service clerk's error in setting the date for a hearing in 1928, was cleared of all charges after a seven-week hearing conducted for the U. S. Labor Dept. by Dean James M. Landis of Harvard University.

FILED NEW BILL

Following this, Rep. Allen of Louisiana put in a bill in June, 1940, calling for Bridges' immediate deportation "notwithstanding any other provision on law." Commenting on this bill, Attorney-General Jackson said at the time:

"This alien has been accused, investigated, and tried at great length, and judgement has been rendered that he had not been proved guilty of the charges made against him. By this bill the U. S. would deny faith and credit to its own duly conducted legal proceedings."

Rap U.S. 'Spy' Plan As Splitting Move

New York, Feb. 15.—A proposal by Daniel Ring of the U. S. Maritime Commission that licensed officers on U. S. merchant marine ships report "subversive" members of the unlicensed men was branded by the Natl. Maritime Union as "an attempt to split us apart by making stoolpigeons of the licensed men."

The NMU urged licensed officers to reject the proposal, and to keep in mind the fact that wages and conditions of both licensed and unlicensed men improve as they work together, and decline as they "start fighting and bickering with each other."

Text Of Statement On Anti-Labor Bills

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—The following statement on pending anti-strike and other restrictive legislation was issued today by President Philip Murray, Secretary James B. Carey and the Vice-Presidents of the Congress of Industrial Organizations:

There are now pending in both Houses of the Congress of the United States, a number of bills which would impose criminal penalties upon workers who may be engaged in strikes or who attempt to seek union shop agreements. For instance, one bill would impose a death penalty for specified activities, including strikes, in national defense industries. Another bill, introduced by Congressman Howard Smith, would impose life imprisonment as a penalty for anyone engaging in such activities.

In addition, there are other bills which would impose waiting periods upon labor in the event any change in wages, hours or working conditions is sought before action could be taken by way of strike. Severe criminal penalties are imposed for violations. Finally, there are several bills which seek to emasculate the National Labor Relations Act in a manner similar to that sought in the last session of Congress without success.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations is absolutely and firmly opposed to all of these proposed bills.

Survival Of Democracy

The issue before the people of the world today involves the question of the survival of democracy. The rights of workers to organize into unions of their own choosing, to be free from coercion or interference from their employers and to strike if necessary are the means of making Americans free men rather than economic slaves. Free and unimpaired collective bargaining between unions and employers is the best guarantee and assurance for industrial peace. Legislation which would curtail or eliminate the rights which the workers now enjoy under the National Labor Relations Act or other labor legislation would be a serious blow at the very ideals which we now seek to protect and maintain.

A recent report issued by the Department of Labor and the Office of Production Management through Mr. Hillman demonstrates that the extension of collective bargaining in the mass production and basic industries through the CIO has furnished this country the instrumentality whereby the demands of labor can be met with a minimum of disturbance in our industrial life.

In addition, recent financial reports of the large corporations of the country have revealed extraordinary profits during the year 1940, and particularly the last quarter of that year. This year industry will be accelerating its production even more than last year through increased demands of our national defense program which will mean additional profits.

With these facts in mind, it is essential that recognition be accorded to the needs of labor through increased wages and improved working conditions. This can be accomplished through the collective bargaining machinery which has been established by the CIO in the mass production and basic industries. In this manner, through democratic machinery and voluntary action, we will be increasing the standard of living for millions of people which will assure the protection of democracy against any attack.

On the other hand, any attempt to impose anti-strike legislation or other measures which would destroy the rights which labor now enjoys under the National Labor Relations Act and other social laws would be the the surest means of destroying the morals of the people, and to that extent weakening their faith in democracy.

Chicago Hearst Papers Back on Unfair List

The action was taken by the Chicago Guild, which branded recent dismissal of all Herald-American employes who took part in the 17-month strike as a lockout and filed discriminatory firing charges with the National Labor Relations Board.

The Guild statement of policy said that recent dismissals brought to 90 the number of CIO Union members fired since the contract settlement of the strike in April, 1940. The dismissals, the Guild said, constitute a violation of the contract and of the Wagner Act.

ASK UNIONS' HELP

It urged unions throughout the country to place the Chicago Hearst papers on their unfair list and asked labor papers "to remind their readers constantly of the Chicago Hearst newspaper's unfairness to labor."

When the strike ended, according to the Guild, the Hearst management expressly promised that it was not rehiring the 117 workers merely to fire them at a more opportune moment.

Nevertheless, "with one or two minor exceptions, none of the strikers was returned to his former classification. Every officer of the Chicago Newspaper Guild (on the Hearst papers) and every member of the original strike committee, was fired."

CIO Leaders Blast Bills Against Labor

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15—The CIO is "absolutely opposed" to all bills outlawing the right to strike, enforcing waiting periods before strikes can be begun, prohibiting the union shop, attempting to emasculate the Wagner Act and imposing criminal penalties (including death) for "specified activities, including strikes, in national defense industries."

The CIO stand was made clear in a statement issued by Pres. Philip Murray and approved unanimously by Secretary James B. Carey and the six CIO vice-presidents at their meeting here.

"The rights of workers to organize into unions of their own choosing, to be free from coercion or interference from their employers and to strike if necessary are the means of making Americans free men rather than economic slaves," the CIO statement said.

"Free and unimpaired collective bargaining between unions and their employers is the best guarantee and assurance for industrial peace. Legislation which would curtail or eliminate the rights which the workers now enjoy under the National Labor Relations Act or other labor legislation would be a serious blow at the very ideals which we now seek to protect and maintain."

CITE PROFITS

The statement cited corporation reports showing "extraordinary profits" during 1940 and even greater dividends expected during 1941 as evidence of the need for collective bargaining to secure higher wages and better working conditions.

"This can be accomplished through the collective bargaining machinery which has been established by the CIO in the mass production and basic industries," the statement said. "In this manner, through democratic machinery and voluntary action, we will be increasing the standard of living for millions of people which will assure the protection of democracy from any attack."

POINT TO FACTS

The statement also cited recent reports the U. S. Labor Dept. and by the Office of Production Management through Sidney Hillman showing "that the extension of collective bargaining in the mass production and basic industries through the CIO has furnished this country with the instrumentality through which the demands of labor can be met with a minimum of disturbance in our industrial life."

The statement concluded with a warning that laws destroying the rights of labor would also destroy both the morale of the American people and weaken their faith in democracy.

"On the other hand," it said, "any attempt to impose anti-strike legislation or other measures which would destroy the rights labor now enjoys under the Natl. Labor Relations Act and other social laws would be the surest means of destroying the morale of the people, and to that extent weakening their faith in democracy."

Murray Hits Wire-Tap Proposal

Washington, Feb. 15 — CIO opposition to the proposed wiretapping bill (HR 2266) was reaffirmed by Pres. Philip Murray in a letter to Acting Chairman John H. Tolan of the subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee now considering the bill. Pres. Murray's letter was approved by Secretary James B. Carey and the six CIO vice-presidents at their meeting here.

The proposed bill would permit government agents to listen in on phone conversations at the discretion of heads of government departments, and would make evidence gathered this way admissible in the courts.

"I know of no procedure which would undermine the morale and sense of freedom on the part of the American people as much as the knowledge that the executive departments of the U. S. government are free to engage in wholesale wiretapping and censorship of the mails," Murray wrote.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE late Huey Long once remarked that if a real American fascist movement arose it would probably be promoted under the guise of anti-fascism.

If that sounds paradoxical, just consider some of the schemes for the systematic destruction of American democracy which are now being promoted in the name of national defense.

Examine the un-American proposals made by people who scream loudest about "Americanism."

The 'American' Way

Democracy and the "American way of life" are words which mean something real to most plain Americans.

They suggest freedom of speech, for instance—the right to say what you please without fear of snoopers or spies.

They suggest the right to quit work—and not to be bound to a job like a slave or a serf.

They suggest the right to organize freely with one's fellows for the improvement of conditions.

They suggest the right to vote, equal justice before the law, an "American standard of living"—and other rights and privileges for which the common people have fought and are still fighting in many cases.

Un-American Bills

Yet today there is a bill before Congress which would curtail every American's freedom of speech by legalizing wiretapping.

There are also a number of bills to reduce free American people to involuntary servitude, by denying them the right to quit work when conditions become intolerable.

There are bills to destroy the right to organize, to curtail civil liberties and to do away with nearly everything else we associate with the "American way of life."

And all of this anti-democratic un-American legislation is actually being promoted under the pretext of combating un-American elements and preparing the country for a war on behalf of democracy.

Democracy at Home

Among the most active supporters of measures tending to involve America in a war to "defend democracy abroad" are the reactionary Congressmen from poll-tax states, who also shout loudest for bills to destroy democracy at home and who wouldn't even be in Congress if they had democratic elections in their own states.

This, however, is not so paradoxical as it may seem. For war hysteria has always provided an opportunity for the forces of reaction to get in their dirty work under cover of the prevailing excitement.

In such a period all sorts of counterfeit currency can be passed. Jingoism can be passed for patriotism. Labor organizers can be denounced as subversive, and ordinary union activity called sabotage.

Yet the true patriot is he who keeps his head in times like these; who redoubles his vigilance on behalf of his country's essential liberties; and who is ready to defend them from domestic as well as foreign enemies.

True Patriotism

If you are looking for true patriotism and Americanism and a genuine concern for democracy, you will find these nowhere better exemplified than in the position of the CIO.

The CIO is opposed to any involvement of the United States in foreign wars because, as Pres. Philip Murray recently told a Senate committee, this would mean "an end to our democratic way of life, our democratic institutions and the very ideals we are attempting to preserve."

At the same time. the CIO has repeatedly expressed and demonstrated its determination to defend this nation "not only against our foreign enemies who may dare to attack us but also against those forces within our nation who place the profits of their financial and industrial enterprises above the well-being of the millions of common people."

The CIO therefore opposes such un-American measures as the wire-tapping bill, to legalize snooping and establish an American Gestapo.

It opposes all the measures before Congress to curtail or destroy the right to organize and strike.

It calls for abolition of the poll-tax, which denies the democratic right to vote to millions of Americans.

It defends American living standards by opposing curtailment of social benefits and work relief, and by working constantly to raise the wages of the underpaid.

It believes that the best defense of a free people is to maintain their freedom and to make it worth defending.

Higher Wages

The CIO calls for the raising of wages not only because the workers are entitled to higher wages and industry can afford to pay them—not only to offset rising living costs—but also because the failure of labor to get its fair share results in serious trouble to our whole economy.

While national income has been rising ntntnal

While national income has been rising since 1932, the CIO Economic Outlook points out, a decreasing percentage of this income has been going to wages and salaries. Labor's share, in fact, has declined from 77.2% in 1932 to about 61% in 1940.

The declining percentage of national income going to labor is "one of the serious causes of depressions," the Outlook notes. It means that the American people become less and less able to buy what they can produce.

A sound economy depends upon an expanding domestic market. But the present trend to huge and huger profits, while wage costs per unit of production decline, means a lopsided economy.

To right this situation, more purchasing power must be given to the people with the greatest consuming power. That means higher wages, payable from present profit surpluses—and the CIO is performing a socially beneficial duty when it negotiates such increases.

Soaring Profits

The financial pages of the papers are full of reports of soaring profits. The United States Steel Corp. reported profits of more than $100,000,000 in 1940, for instance, 148% higher than in 1939. Republic Steel doubled its profits to more than $21,000,000. The DuPonts reported net profits of $87,000,000 before deduction of federal taxes their profits amounted to more than $144,000,000.

Comparison of profit and payroll figures shows that many leading industrial concerns made more profits per worker than they paid out in wages per worker.

The total DuPont payroll for 63,800 employes in 1940, including all high-salaried executives, amounted to $129,600,000, which was nearly $15,000,000 less than the total profits.

In other words, the company reaped an average profit of $2,250 from each worker employed (or $1,530 per worker after federal tax deductions). While company figures do not separate wage workers from salaried executives, government figures indicate that the wage earners must have averaged considerably less than $1,500.

Just think over these figures for a moment, and then ask yourself if labor isn't entitled to higher wages and if there isn't plenty of money in the profit till to raise them, without price increases.

Workers must eat. Their real wages are cut when food costs rise. That's what is happening now. Government figures show that retail food prices rose as much as 8 per cent in some cities in January as compared with a year ago and that the average increase for the country as a whole was 3.2 per cent.

Birthday Greetings

Little publicity was given to the fact that February 12 was the birthday of John L. Lewis. Yet congratulatory messages poured in to headquarters of the United Mine Workers from workers all over the country in every kind of industry.

In countless homes the founder and first president of the CIO has a warm place in the hearts of millions who may have never met him, but who have benefited from the conditions he helped to win and who have been inspired by his fighting leadership.

Ask Probe Of Defense Contracts

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15—Congress is going to have a chance to look into the business of letting lawbreaking corporations have U. S. defense contracts, under the terms of a resolution offered in the Senate today by Senator James E. Murray of Montana.

The resolution, which calls for a study of the extent to which Federal contracting firms are violating the Wagner Act, the Wage and Hour Act, the Walsh-Healey and other labor laws, will set up a three-man committee whose function will be to bring out the facts and to report to the Senate the effect this practice has on the progress of the national defense program.

"The resolution calls for a study of the facts" on observance and operation of these laws, Senator Murray said in presenting it. "There is considerable clamor today about these laws and their effect on defense. Most of it simply serves to obscure the issues, which concern the rights of workers and the problem of furthering the defense program in full accord with the principles laid down by Congress in passing these acts.

"The study proposed by this resolution will help to clear up the impressions created by a mass of misinformation and frequently deliberate distortion of the actual situation. It will help to show the real forces that are affecting the progress of the national defense program."

TWO POINTS

The resolution contained two main points, plus a preamble naming the legislation in question. It will set up a three-man Senate committee to study:

"1. To what extent, if any, such laws have been, or are being violated by employers who have received contracts in connection with the program of national defense;

"2. Whether this situation is interfering, substantially or otherwise, with the efficient and expeditious prosecution of such program."

Halting of the practice of rewarding lawbreaking corporations with U. S. Government contracts has long been a main point in the program of the CIO. Legislation to stop it was passed three times by the Senate, only to be blocked by a tory clique in the House Rules Committee. The CIO has also tried to get an Executive Order to the same effect from the President, but this has been refused. Such an Executive Order was made one of the main planks in the 1941 CIO legislative program.

Dorsey Off Unfair List

Philadelphia, Feb. 15.—Jimmy Dorsey's swing band has been removed from the CIO unfair listlist, following assurances to Regional Director George Craig and the CIO Hotel and Restaurant Workers that the incident of crossing a picket line would not be repeated.

The assurance was received from the band's managers, the General Amusement Corp., with the added promise that no other bands would be sent to struck places following notification from CIO. Dorsey was put on the unfair list when he crossed the Hotel and Restaurant Workers line in front of the Penn A. C.

DETROIT, Feb. 15.—In an historic decision, the Michigan Unemployment Commission has ruled — that a Ford employe fired for laughing on company time is entitled to jobless compensation.

The ruling, bitterly opposed by counsel for Ford, gave the last laught to John Gallo, a veteran of five years' service at Ford Motor Co. Not only did Gallo laugh on the job, but he even smiled after having been warned by a foreman about his previous misdemeanor.

The decision of Unemployment Commission Referee Charles Rubinoff observed:

"While at a remote period in our history, laughter was treated as though it were some slip or misdemeanor on the part of nature, which had to be explained away on weekdays and banished on the Puritan Sabbath, no one in this enlightened age considers such an 'irreverent' act a transgression amounting to misconduct. To put in effect a shop rule against mirth would curtail production and bring back the old overseer and make life in a modern plant a vale of tears.

". . . It is reasonable to hold that his (Gallo's) single indulgence in 'laughing with the other fellows' and thereby stopping the line for 'maybe half a minute' is not a just reason for bringing about his economic purge . . . Therefore he is entitled to benefits without disqualification, if otherwise eligible."

New Bill, Favored By CIO, Would Aid Home Buyers

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—Action long advocated by the CIO housing committee to liberalize the Federal Housing Administration home-purchase plan was taken this week with introduction in Congress of an amendment to the National Housing Act.

Under the amendment, which defense officials attribute in large part to the demands of the CIO, it will be possible for workers to buy low-cost homes without any down payment. The homes can be occupied at once and paid for on a monthly basis just like rent.

Present procedure under the FHA setup calls for a home buyer to put up 10 per cent in cash at the time of purchase of a home. This usually means anywhere from $250 to $500, a sum which the average worker does not have in one lump. The FHA does not permit the buyer to borrow any of this down-payment money.

EASIER TO WORKERS

Now, however, if the amendment passes as expected, all that the worker must do is show that he is steadily employed and able to meet monthly payments. These payments on homes costing less than $4,000, the maximum mortgage under the amendment, are about equal to rent. In view of rising rents everywhere in defense areas, the purchase installments may actually be less than workers are now paying for rent.

Builders in defense areas are expected to take swift advantage of the new FHA provisions which are known as Title Six. It will enable a builder to obtain an insured loan for 90 per cent of the cost of a project. The other 10 per cent he obtains over a period of months from the home buyer.

Title to homes bought under this FHA plan is vested in the owner-occupant when he has paid in 10 per cent of the cost. Meanwhile, he occupies the home on a lease-purchase agreement. In this way, the worker risks little and has the prospect of eventual home ownership.

CIO HOME PROJECTS

Defense housing officials are supporting the FHA amendment in the hope that it will cause considerable impetus to private building of homes for industrial workers. These officials look with favor on projected CIO housing projects under the amended FHA and have offered to co-operate in planning such projects.

Already, the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, CIO affiliate, has started projects of this type in Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit and elsewhere. The UCWOC Washington office is in position to provide information and help on such projects.

Meanwhile, defense housing officials are speeding plans for erection of thousands of prefabricated homes as advocated by the CIO Housing Committee in a recent memorandum. Some of this work is being transferred from Public Buildings Administration, which the CIO charged with slowness and inexperience, to Farm Security Administration, which has a good record in this type of construction.

ers of Congress have condemned wiretapping as "dirty and filthy business," Murray said. "Today is certainly not the time that our government should undertake any such practice with its attendant dangers to our democratic institutions."

Legalizing wiretapping would "necessarily result in the very invasion of privacy and interference with other civil liberties which have been guaranteed to the people through the Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the U. S.," he added.

Thomas Calls South Bend Housing 'Inadequate'

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 15.—R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, declared this week that a 500-unit defense housing Federal Government project in South Bend, Ind., is inadequate. Thomas said that the CIO Auto Union has agitated for improved housing in South Bend for three years.

"The 500 house unit just approved by the President is a good beginning, but only that," Thomas stated. "We believe that the first project should be of at least 2500 units.

"Housing conditions in South Bend are deplorable. Rents have gone up steadily. Only last week the real estate group in South Bend ordered another 10 per cent general increase in rents."

In Camden, N. J., Thomas said, the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers Union is co-operating with the government on a 500-unit defense housing project, taking part in planning the job, selecting the architects, and conducting negotiations for the Government with local officials.

Brophy Urges Labor Plan For Future

St. Louis, Feb. 15—The Murray Defense Plan, which calls for formation of defense councils with equal labor and business representation in each major industry, is a step towards "building up a bulwark of democracy through labor."

So declared John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, in an address to the St. Louis CIO Council in which he warned that labor must now begin to deal with problems arising after the present war emergency.

The meeting, attended by several hundred persons, heard a number of the speakers call for further organization of the unorganized workers in the St. Louis area, with particular emphasis in steel, shoe and construction work.

Court Ruling Hits Ford, Speeds CIO Drive

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Feb. 15.—The already swollen stream of applications for membership in the UAW-CIO from Ford Motor Co. employes rose still higher this week after the U. S. Supreme Court had ruled against the Flivver King in the long drawn-out National Labor Relations Board case.

The court refused to review Ford's appeal from the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals decision which had sustained the Labor Board.

In effect, the court's refusal meant:

1. Ford must comply with the NLRB order to cease and desist from discouraging membership in the UAW-CIO. Failure to comply can be prosecuted as a contempt of court action, punishable by fine and imprisonment.

2. Ford must post notices conspicuously throughout his plants, stating that he will comply with the Board's order.

3. Ford must reinstate 23 men discharged for union activities in 1937 with back pay for all time they lost from work since their discharge.

4. The Supreme Court sustains the Labor Board and the union in placing full responsibility on Ford for the attack on union members and organizers by thugs and goons on Miller Road, May 26, 1937. The court also sustains the union's and Board's contentions as to the strong-arm and espionage methods used by the company in its attempt to thwart organization of its employes.

MANY JOIN

The Monday night following the court's decision saw a flood of new applicants for membership throng the offices of the UAW-CIO Ford Organizing Committee, confirming the statement that day of Michael F. Widman, Jr., director of the committee, who said:

"The highest court in the United States has offered its protection to Ford workers in their efforts to win a union contract and establish real collective bargaining."

THOMAS COMMENTS

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO pointed out that the decision definitely rules the company a "lawbreaker" and called for the withholding of all defense contracts until Ford "agrees to obey the law."

"The highest court in the land has ruled that Ford is a lawbreaker," he said. "There can be no further quibbling on this point. We look for immediate action from the government in withholding any defense contracts until Ford agrees to obey the law."

Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood said:

"The court's decision knocks into a cocked hat the recent statement by William Green that there had been no discrimination because the AFL has no members in the plant. Green didn't know of any discriminations because the AFL has no members in the plant. It is to the interest of the public that the company now get down to the business of negotiating a contract with the UAW-CIO, the only representative of its employes."

ASK COMPLIANCE

Maurice Sugar, counsel for the UAW-CIO, declared that the union will demand that the Labor Board prosecute the company for contempt of court at the first sign of failure to comply with the order.

"We expect the notices ordered by the Board to be posted in the plant within ten days," he said. "We shall take immediate steps to press for prosecution at the first violation of the order by the company."

AFL 'DRIVE'

As the UAW-CIO drive gathered even greater momentum, there was still no sign of any AFL activity beyong the statement of Green two weeks ago.

The AFL office in Dearborn has been opened only spasmodically and with only one representative in attendance—and no Ford workers.

A newspaper photographer went there this week to take pictures.

"We'll have our signs up and everything painted by next week," said the AFL representative. "Tell the Ford workers they can come in and join then," he added hopefully.

Oregon CIO Backs Wage Demands

Portland, Ore., Feb. 15 — The Oregon CIO Industrial Union Council at a special three-day convention held here earlier this month voted unanimous approval of the wage increase program of the International Woodworkers of America in the fir belt, nominated officers to be elected by referendum and changed the method of electing executive board members.

John M. Brost, incumbent, and Henry Luch, both members of the Portland local of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, were nominated for president.

Nominated for vice president were F. E. Wing, incumbent, Boxhook & Veneer Workers IWA local and Don F. Helmick, Forest Grove IWA local.

Ralph W. Peoples, incumbent, IWA Local 63, Siletz, and Frances J. Murname, Plywood and Veneer Workers local, Portland, were nominated for secretary-treasurer.

CHANGE METHODS

Method of electing the six executive board members was changed so as to have three come from specific areas and three from the state at large. Election of all board members will be on a statewide basis.

Resolutions were adopted by the convention concurring unanimously with the action taken at the CIO national convention condemning Communism, Naziism and Fascism; praising John L. Lewis for his efforts in behalf of security, democracy and peace; and demanding preservation of the right to strike.

Low Pay for Air Plane Technicians

New York, Feb. 15.—Draftsmen and engineers employed in the southern California aircraft industry are paid the lowest rates in the United States, the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians charged after a survey of rates paid by firms in that area.

GM Council Backs Reuther Plane Plan

Detroit, Feb. 15.—Voicing a fear that heavy defense demands for steel may lead to curtailed operations and unemployment in the automobile industry, spokesmen for 160,000 General Motors workers, members of the United Automobile Workers, today urged President Roosevelt and defense authorities to give favorable consideration to the CIO's plans for mass production of aircraft and for stepping up steel production.

The aircraft plan, drafted by Walter P. Reuther, director of the union's GM department, proposes that facilities and man-power in the automobile industry be utilized for mass production of defense planes. President Philip Murray of the CIO has also submitted to President Roosevelt a program designed to achieve an output of steel sufficient to meet normal and emergency needs.

League Lists Bills Affecting Labor

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—Descriptive lists of bills affecting labor now before Congress are carried in the current issue of the National Bulletin of Labor's Non-Partisan League, just released from League headquarters here.

The lists also show the present status of the bills, what committees they are, what Congressmen or Senators should be written to, etc. The Bulletin carries a complete list of the members of all important Congressional committees, with instructions on how to address them.

Copies of the Bulletin can be secured from Labor's Non-Partisan League, 1037 Earle Bldg., Washington, D. C. Price, 10 cents each, $5.00 per 100.

ON CAPITOL HILL:

'Vigilance' Must Be Labor's Slogan During 1941

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative

Labor's guiding policy in Congress during 1941 will have to be "eternal vigilance" if our union and civil rights are to be protected.

In the course of four weeks, bills and resolutions have been introduced into the United States Congress which would take away from labor every basic right won in the past 50 years — and some of these would practically revoke the Bill of Rights.

ANTI-LABOR OUTPOURING

Behind a smokescreen of defense talk, reactionary Congressmen are proposing bills which would virtually outlaw unions and would impose life imprisonment and even the death penalty for interference with industrial production.

Bills are pouring daily into the Congressional hopper which would deny unions the right to strike, the right to accept dues, the right to carry on organizing work, and would outlaw union-shop agreements.

That every parliamentary trick will be used to get some of this legislation passed is already evident from Congressional actions during the first four weeks of this session. Bills dealing with the basic rights of labor are being referred to committees which have shown little concern for labor's rights. Such bills have in the past generally been referred to the Labor Committees, which have many members with a sympathetic understanding of labor problems.

This year many of these bills are being referred to the House Judiciary Committee, whose chairman has opposed some of the most important labor laws.

TRICKS OF THE TRADE

Attempts to rush out bills from committees, some without adequate time for hearings, is another method used. Still another, more dangerous, method used is that of introducing unexpected amendments from the floor during debates on bills. Amendments to outlaw the union-shop and seamen's union hiring-halls have already been introduced, but were defeated through prompt action on our part.

To protect labor from all such legislation we find it necessary to maintain a constant watch on Capitol Hill, to keep continuously informed on what bills are being introduced, to which committees they are being referred, what the plans of the Congressional Commitees are, to secure advance information on anti-labor amendments that might come up on the floor of Congress, to maintain a minute-to-minute watch during House and Senate debate for any unexpected anti-labor action, to arrange testimony before committees, etc.

NEED UNIONS' HELP

This is some of the work which we are now carrying on in Washington. But to fight off this legislation it will be necessary to have the cooperation of every labor organization throughout the country.

A bill on which immediate action is needed is the wiretapping bill (H.R. 2266). I have appeared before the Committee on behalf of the CIO against this bill. Communications in opposition to this bill should be sent to Hatton W. Sumners, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and to your Congressmen.

In future articles I will give more detailed information on important bills and what action is being taken on such legislation in Congress.

Charter 3 Locals

Akron, O., Feb. 15.—Locals of the United Rubber Workers have been chartered in two Goodrich rubber plants in Cadillac, Mich., and Clarksville, Tenn., and at the Schact Rubber Co., Firestone subsidiary in Noblesville, Ind., URW Secretary-Treasurer Frank Grillo announced this week.

LABOR SCHOOL IN ACTION: Plans are being made for the next session of the Southern Summer School for Workers, Asheville, N. C., which for the past several years has helped teach workers about the aims and history of the labor movement, and to prepare them for active roles in the struggle for labor's rights. Shown here are union workers who attended last summer's session cleaning up the kitchen and (in inset) working out the class schedule.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The General Motors Corporation, one of the largest in the world, is also one of the most profitable. Last year the Corporation took in $195,500,000—after all taxes were deducted. This represents an increase of 40.5 per cent over the previous year, a tidy sum for any company to account for in one year's operations.

On the basis of these figures, it has been calculated that every GM worker made an average profit of $890.00 for the company in 1940, over and above the wages he earned.

It is no wonder, then, that GM workers, organized in the UAWA-CIO, are interested in the coming negotiations for a renewal of their contract. I was present at one of their preliminary meetings a few days ago, and can testify that the workers are on their toes and fully aware of GM's fianancial rating.

THE GREEN-FORD AXIS

The William Green-Henry Ford axis seems to be heading for a slight rift—if Green's latest statement can be taken at face value. Only a few days ago Green was praising Henry Ford's labor record. Today Green is agreeing with the U. S. Supreme Court for its verdict upholding the Natl. Labor Board's orders against Ford. As everybody knows, the Board has been pretty severe with Ford on the matter of his labor relations. It has issued half a dozen or more stringent orders, and all of them have been upheld by the courts.

Now Green praises the Supreme Court for slapping Ford. Which is right—Green's praise of labor policies or his praise of the Supreme Court for condemning them?

And while we're on the subject of Ford, there's the case of the Ford worker (a member of the UAW-CIO) who made the mistake of laughing on the assembly line and who was promptly fired for his levity. Denied unemployment compensation on the ground that he had quit "voluntarily", the discharged worker appealed to the Michigan State Board and was put back on the benefit rolls.

As the Board said: "A shop rule against mirth would curtail production and make life in a modern plant a vale of tears."

PROGRESS IN RUBBER

Good progress is being made in the rubber industry, where the first of the great drives got under way five years ago. The Los Angeles Goodyear local of the United Rubber Workers has won increases of from three to five cents an hour. The Goodyear Akron local is negotiating for increases. In Jackson, Mich., CIO Representative Robt. Davidson reports that the local has won committee relationships with the company for the first time in its history.

REPUBLIC, MINE MILL

Similar reports come from the drive in Republic Steel, where Steel Workers Organizing Committee officials tell us that they're having trouble keeping up with the flow of applications.

The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, one of the founders of the CIO, is starting a big drive to organize scores of thousands of unorganized workers chiefly in the non-ferrous metal fabricating plants in Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and other centers where the defense program is rapidly adding new workers to the payrolls.

District 50 of the United Mine Workers also has a new drive under way, putting on additional organizers to sign up the thousands of workers in the chemical and by-products industries. Among the concentration points in this drive are the midwest, New York State, and big plants in West Virginia.

ELECTION WON

Proof that the CIO doesn't accept even a temporary setback comes in a letter from F. C. Peiper, regional director in New Orleans, reporting an election victory at the M. Trellis Co., where 339 voted for CIO as against 235 for an "independent." This was a runoff from a previous election in which CIO lacked three votes of a clear majority.

Pieper further reports that five Locals have been added here since Jan. 1, two in the Oil Workers, one at a sugar refinery, one at a bed manufacturing company, and another of general workers.

Large numbers of construction workers in the New Orleans area employed on defense projects are showing great interest in the United Construction Workers, Pieper adds.

Ore Miners Lick Attack On Five-Day Week

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Feb. 15.—The American Mining Congress took its second straight licking within a few weeks when iron ore miners employed by the wealthy Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. this week went back on the five-day workweek as a result of quick action by the International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

Only a few weeks ago, the mining operators tried to put over a six-day, 48-hour week in the rich Anaconda Copper Co. mines at Butte, Mont. The 6,500 copper miners, members of Butte Miners Local 1 of the IUMM&SW, said "no." And they kept their five-day, 40-hour week.

This was followed by a similar move by TCI late in January in its iron ore mines in Alabama, the company actually putting the six-day workweek into ecect. Representatives of all locals involved, accompanied by IUMM&SW Executive Board Member Van D. Jones, went right to bat on the issue. And the company agreed "to return to its regular schedule of operations."

Both attempts to lengthen the workweek for underground miners came under the pretext of boosting production for national defense. The union maintained that plenty of unemployed miners are available to help raise production and that a shorter workday would make it possible to run three shifts a day, thus shooting production higher than the limit under the company's plan.

MEDICAL PLAN IN ACTION: The CIO baby is Robert, age 10 months, the center of attention. Robert is the up and coming young son of William Schultz, committeeman of Cleveland's Midland Steel Local 486 of the United Automobile Workers of America. With him are his sister. They all gain by Cleveland CIO medical plan.

Cleveland CIO Medical Dept. Cuts Expense For Members

By TED COX

CLEVELAND, Feb. 15.—Establishment of a CIO Medical department today has added one more widespread benefit which the 75,000 CIO members and their families in this city can count in cold cash as a part of the dividends received in return for their investment of union dues and organizing effort.

Joining in the policy established by many other CIO union groups, the Cleveland Industrial Union Council began organizing its own medical service a year ago. The objective: To cut the annual doctor bill of workers' families in half.

Today the bureau is established, fully staffed with doctors located in all sections of the city and with specialists in every medical field. The bureau offers 24-hour a day service from physicians and specialists ranking among the top in the city and at special CIO rates which average just about 50 per cent of what non-CIO members must pay for the same service. A telephone call to the bureau at any time during the day or night brings the service.

The result: A dozen typical families in one plant are averaging a $25 per year saving in medical bills. They add this cash benefit to a $100 per year wage increase won this year by the union and get $125 a year as part of the dividend received in return for an investment of $12 in union dues.

CONSULTED DOCTORS

Here's how the department was organized. The Cleveland Industrial Union Council consulted a large number of physicians. It was agreed that:

1. These doctors were extremely interested in extending preventive medicine (that is, calling the doctor when you get sick rather than waiting until you develop serious complications and diseases). The only way this can be done, they found, was to provide medical service at lower costs so workers could afford treatment.

2. But individual doctors treating an individual clientele could not afford to lower their rates because of high overhead cost of offices and equipment.

3. However with thousands of CIO families using the same group of doctors there would be enough steady clientele to permit sharp reduction of rates.

FORMED DEPARTMENT

The result of this agreement was the establishment of the Cleveland Industrial Union Council Medical Department.

The service and the special rates costs the CIO nothing. It costs the worker nothing. It works simply. Any CIO members whose local is affiliated to the council gets the special CIO rates simply by producing his paid-up union card.

Thus a member in good standing gets special rates approximately 50% of that paid by others to the same doctors. An office call in Cleveland costs non-CIO members at least $2, for instance. By producing his card, the CIO member pays only $1.

There are similar reduced rates for home calls, baby deliveries including pre-natal care, X-Ray, dental work, occulist care and all other branches of medicine.

SAVE $1,000

On the basis of partial reports, A. E. Stevenson, CIUC secretary estimates that CIO members have saved more than $1,000 in the past six weeks.

With more and more members taking advantage of the plan as it develops, it is believed that savings will run into many thousands of dollars soon while doctors find satisfaction in providing much more needed medical service to workers' families.

Workers Education Leaders Meet Feb. 22

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—The annual conference of teachers and leaders in workers' education sponsored by the Labor Education Service, Inc. will be held here the Washington's Birthday week-end, Feb. 22-23, Miss Eleanor Coit, director, announced today.

A number of unions, labor schools, YWCA industrial groups, WPA and farmer's organizations are co-operating in the conference which will be held at the offices of Labor Education Service, 437 West Fifty-ninth Street.

CIO unions taking part include the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; United Office & Professional Workers; United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

PANEL DISCUSSIONS

Seminars and discussions on materials and methods in workers education will be held at the afternoon session, Feb. 22, starting at 2:30. On Feb. 23, there will be a panel discussion on trends in the work situation and their effect on workers' education.

CEREMONY: CIO members, pleased by a sweeping NLRB order against Intl. Harvester Co., held a mock funeral for the dead company union. No tears were visible.

Strikers Cheer Order Dissolving Harvester Fake Union Set-Up

CHICAGO, Feb. 15.—Final decision of the National Labor Relations Board issued last Saturday ordering the International Harvester Co. to throw out company unions in six of its main plants was received here with cheers by the company's 6,500 striking workers.

The delay in deciding the case which has been dragging along since 1937 when the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee filed charges with the Board against the company has aroused much bitterness.

An intermediate report made to the Board by a trial examiner in May, 1940, recommended that the company be ordered to abolish the company unions maintained in its six major plants, and for ten months the union has been pressing the Board to hand down its final decision.

TWO ON STRIKE

Two IHC plants, the big Tractor Works here and the agricultural implement plant at Rock Falls, Ill., have been on strike for several weeks, and the FEWOC is threatening to shut down the company's other plants if IHC continues to stall on granting the union's demands for pay increases, elimination of piece work, job security and other standard union terms.

As soon as the Labor Board's decision was made public bargaining committees for FEWOC locals in all plants affected by the decision immediately asked to be allowed to enter negotiations.

"We demand recognition in all six plants," FEWOC chairman Grant Oakes stated, "and we are prepared to produce membership cards and any other proof needed to prove the justice of our demand."

Frank Sliva, FEWOC director, declared that "Harvester is stalling on the question of recognition of locals in the non-contract plants and is trying to prevent the workers there from negotiating the same demands as the strikers."

Following are the six IHC plants where company unions were outlawed by the Labor Board's final decision:

McCormick Works, Chicago, manufacturing agricultural implements generally.

Rock Falls, Ill., agricultural implements.

Farmall Works, Rock Island, Ill., tractors.

East Moline, Ill., agricultural implements.

Milwaukee, Wis., tractors, engine and dairy machines.

The Board found that company officials and foremen in these plants attempted "to discourage membership in all outside labor organizations, and the CIO in particular," and encouraged and solicited support of the "independent" unions.

Stoppage Shuts Air Brake Plant

Wilmerding, Pa., Feb. 15—Some 3,500 employes of the Westinghouse Air Brake Co. here put down their tools Feb. 6 and walked out of the shop for one hour to demonstrate "their solidarity and strength in the face of extreme anti-union pressure by the company," reports Albert L. Smith, business agent of Local 610, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Two weeks previously, the Local had submitted the draft of a proposed contract to the company. The management thereupon offered a counter-proposal which the local said would turn the union into a company stooge outfit.

At a mass meeting attended by 3,000 union men and women working at the Air Brake Co., a resolution was passed rejecting "the anti-union proposals of the company" and instructing the negotiating committee "to continue negotiations with the company on the basis of the original demands of the union".

Correction

Last week's CIO NEWS incorrectly stated that Rep. Emmanuel Celler of New York was the author of the present bill to authorize wiretapping, HR 2266, in a story describing CIO and other opposition to the measure. Rep. Sam Hobbs of Alabama, noted for repressive measures against the foreign born, was the author of the wiretapping bill.

The CIO NEWS regrets the error and offers apologies to Rep. Celler.

Six Oppose More Dough For Dies

Washington, Feb. 15.—The Dies Committee this week got a new lease on life, and a $150,000 additional appropriation to boot.

The strain was apparently too much for Martin Dies, Texas poll-tax Congressman and head of the Committee, who shortly afterwards collapsed from what his physician described as "overfatigue." Dies will be able to resume work at the old stand in about a week, the doctor said.

Only six votes were cast against continuing the committee's work, which in the past has been marked by a frenzied rush to air Tory charges against labor, and to whitewash American fascist forces.

The House temperature began to rise when Rep. Samuel Dickstein of New York used the one minute allotted him during the debate to assert: "I charge that 110 fascist organizations have the key to the back door of the committee." Dies denied the charge.

The six dissenting votes to the motion for continuance of the committee came from Dickstein, Marcantonio, N. Y.; Eliot, Mass.; Hook, Mich.; Scanlon, Pa.; and Tenerowicz, Mich.

Marine Labor Spy Gets Long Sentence For Killing

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Jerome Madeiros, alias Jerry King, former head of a maritime labor spy ring, today had been sentenced to from 2½ to 10 years in Sing Sing prison for the brutal waterfront killing of Bruce Cameron, member of the Natl. Maritime Union.

Convicted with Madeiros of complicity in the murder were James Costello and Thomas Harmon, who received 5-to-15 year sentences.

Madeiros, who during his years of activity as a labor spy, managed to worm his way into the position of secretary-treasurer of the NMU, had two principal witnesses at his trial: S. W. Birmingham, a Dies Committee investigator; and Leland L. Rounds, secretary of the notoriously anti-union Natl. Civic Federation.

BEATEN ON STREET

Cameron died last autumn of a broken neck, after a beating and kicking administered by Madeiros, Costello and Harmon on a street not far from NMU headquarters.

During the trial, the defense unsuccessfully sought to picture the defendants' labor spy activities as a "crusade" against alleged "Communist" activities in the union.

But NMU records showed that the stoolpigeon had turned information over to the employers, organized violence squads and done his best to disrupt the union. Costello, his accomplice, has a record of eight convictions in various parts of the country during 20 years. Harmon, the third man convicted, was described as a "dupe" of the labor spy gang.

Ford 'Voice' A Citizen, Committee Learns

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization this week tabled an inquiry into the citizenship of W. J. Cameron, radio Charlie McCarthy for Henry Ford.

The action followed testimony by Major Lemuel Schofield, official of the Dept. of Justice's Immigration Bureau, that Cameron had voted at frequent intervals between Sept., 1908, and Nov. 1913, and at a later period starting in 1924.

Though cleared of the possibility that he might have gained his citizenship illegally, Cameron still has to explain why his voting registration card in Dearborn—which was sworn to by the Ford official in 1935—carries the word "never" after a question: "Where was the last place you voted?"

CONTRADICTIONS

Both Rep. Lee Geyer of California, who sponsored the investigation petition, and Daniel S. Gillmor, publisher of Friday Magazine, which first exposed the case, pointed to the contradictory statements in Cameron's citizenship application and in his voting registration blank.

Cameron gained citizenship in 1935 by pointing out that although born in Canada, he had assumed he held U. S. citizenship and voted frequently until discovering his mistake.

Under an old law, Cameron thereby became eligible for quick naturalization as a U. S. citizen.

Both Geyer and Gillmor asked the Congressional committee to investigate the case, pointing out that if Cameron's sworn statement on the Dearborn registration card were correct, he would automatically be exposed as having obtained his citizenship under false pretenses.

Although the government witness's testimony later cleared Cameron of that charge, many members of the Committee appeared reluctant to go into the case.

FORD'S PALS BUSY

Rep. Clare Hoffman of Michigan—considered one of the most reactionary men in the House—an J. B. Matthews, an aide of Rep. Martin Dies, flitted about the committee room during the hearing. For a time the hearing seemed destined to become an investigation of Friday Magazine, and close questioning about Friday's policies vied for time with a lengthy debate about the meaning of the word "never" on Cameron's voting registration card.

It was finally decided that "never" means "never."

Leather Workers Defy Cops, Win 12-Day Strike

WILMINGTON, Del., Feb. 15.—A wide breach has been made in the duPont open-shop stronghold here by the International Fur & Leather Workers.

Defying police terror that brought serious injury to several and near death to one of their ranks, 800 ILFU workers won a 12-day strike against the Amalgamated Leather Co.

A one-year union shop contract signed with the firm and ratified unanimously by the strikers, provides a minimum scale of 50 cents for men and 45 cents for women, a 25 per cent increase over the previous rate. Other terms call for a 40-hour, five-day week, job seniority, a shop steward and grievance system and arbitration procedure.

Amalgamated Leather is one of the largest plants organized in this area, and is the first large Wilmington company to sign a union shop agreement. Winning of the strike has spurred up organizing in leather plants and other industries throughout Delaware.

Workers adopted a resolution pledging to provide the best medical care and other aid to a woman striker who was ruthlessly run down by a truck transporting hides into the factory under police protection.

Ford Drive Zooms; Union Asks Poll At Rouge Plant

DETROIT, Feb. 22 — The CIO's Ford Organization drive, already moving at a fast clip, doubled speed this week on the heels of the U. S. Supreme Court order sustaining the Natl. Labor Relations Board's decision in the Ford case.

Union headquarters were jammed with applicants for membership, and so great was the demand among Ford employes for auto union buttons that the supply was quickly exhausted.

In a direct challenge to the open shop manufacturer, the CIO and the United Automobile Workers meanwhile filed a petition for an NLRB poll at the big River Rouge and Highland Park plants, employing over 80,000 workers.

Michael S. Widman, Jr., head of the Ford drive, and UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas said a vote would show that 90% of the men want the CIO union as their bargaining agency.

Several weeks ago Ford turned down a UAW offer for a consent election among his employes. Shortly afterwards, the union asked the Labor Board for an election among the 4,000 employes of the Ford-owned factory.

Prosperity Note: Wages 15c An Hour

Indianapolis, Feb. 22. — Indiana's need for a state wage hour law was demonstrated before the state legislature here in testimony by John Bartee, secretary of the state CIO Council.

According to Bartee's testimony, waitresses in this city work 57 hours a week for an average of $8.34—15 cents an hour. Drugstore clerks average 62 hours, make $14.40—23 cents an hour, porters work 62 hours at six cents an hour, cab drivers up to 84 hours, gas station attendants put in 56 hours a week at 26 cents an hour.

Workers spent most of their money for food, clothing and shelter, Bartee pointed out, and a wage hour law bringing these starvation levels up to something approaching decency will immediately and permanently benefit business and farmers throughout the state.

Gadsden Thugs' Attack Brings CIO Protest

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—A new outbreak of anti-union violence in Gadsden, Ala.—the "terror town" of the South—today brought forth a vigorous demand from Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, for a federal investigation.

Haywood asked Atty.-Gen. Robert H. Jackson for a Dept. of Justice probe to determine whether a vicious attack on John House, organizer for the United Rubber Workers, was in violation of the federal Civil Rights Statutes.

Haywood also reported the attack to Sidney Hillman, associate director-general of the U. S. Office of Production Management.

House was accosted in his office by a gang of thugs, who beat him so mercilessly that he required 86 stitches in his head. He is now in a serious condition at the hospital.

Gadsden is the home of southern plants of Tom Girdler's Republic Steel and the anti-labor Goodyear Rubber Co., which House was seeking to organize. Five years ago URW Pres. S. H. Dalrymple and Sec.-Treas. Frank Grillo were similarly beaten during an organizing expedition to the city.

FALSE ALARM

The city police, according to reports, work in close collaboration with the corporation goon squads. Just prior to the attack on House, a false fire alarm was turned in, which gave the cops an excuse to "look the other way."

Authorize Strike At 4th Tractor Plant

CHICAGO, Feb. 22.—With three plants of the International Harvester Co. already shut down tight by strikes involving 8,000 workers, employes of a fourth plant—the huge McCormick Works—authorized a walkout.

Leaders of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee declared that "the whole Harvester chain is going CIO with a bang, if the high morale of the strikers is any proof."

The plants now on strike are the big Tractor Works, here and the works at Rock Falls, Ill., shut down more than a month ago, and the Richmond, Ind., plant which was struck last Monday.

COMPANY DESPERATE

The recent decision of the National Labor Relations Board outlawing stooge outfits in six of the company's major plants, FEWOC officials said, "has left the Harvester management casting about frantically for some means of saving the doomed company unions."

The FEWOC said that AFL officials were trying to "chisel their way in by chartering the illegal company unions." Two fake unions have been chartered by the AFL and two other company outfits under new names have been "reorganized," the CIO group said, to stall recognition of the CIO in the six plants covered by the Labor Board report.

84-CENT WAGES

Toledo, Ohio.—A wage-hour suit against the S. S. Kresge store chain today revealed that Zelda Butler, a former employe, received exactly 84 cents for one week's work in December, 1938.

RICHARD FRANKENSTEEN

Frankensteen Heads Drive In Aircraft

Washington, Feb. 22 — CIO Pres. Philip Murray today announced appointment of Richard T. Frankensteen as Director of the CIO's organizing campaign in the aircraft industry.

Murray announced that Frankensteen will have a staff of organizers which will be enlarged as circumstances require. Walter Smethurst was named as assistant to Frankensteen.

Frankensteen is a member of the International Executive Board of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, and director of that union's Chrysler department. He will make his headquarters in Detroit and will set up regional offices in Southern California, New York City and other areas in which aircraft production is going forward.

IMMEDIATE DRIVE

"The CIO" Murray said, "contemplates an immediate and thorough campaign to bring the aircraft workers the benefits of collective bargaining. We shall endeavor to effectuate constructive agreements which will ensure peaceful labor relations in a most vital defense industry."

CIO Leads In Big Aircraft Poll; To Ask 'Run-Off' Election

BULLETIN

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 22.—A petition for a run-off election at the plant of the North American Aviation Co. here will be filed at once, the CIO United Automobile Workers announced today.

The CIO union won a plurality of 42 out of 6,418 total votes cast in election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board Thursday. To win collective bargaining rights, a union must carry a majority of all votes cast.

Lew H. Michener, West Coast UAW Director, reported that the final results in the election, the largest ever held in southern California gave 2,739 votes to the CIO; 2,693 to the AFL; 986 for neither; 2 blank; 3 void and 39 challenged.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 20.—The block-long, three-story new CIO building in the heart of industrial Los Angeles is humming with intense activity from dawn to midnight these days. A dynamic organizing drive, reminiscent of the early days of the CIO, but balanced by a greater maturity, is in full swing.

Most spectacular segment of the drive, of course, is aircraft organizing. Since the successful Vultee strike, the United Automobile Workers, Aircraft Division, is rolling up the membership in rapid strides among the 100,000 workers in this industry in southern California. The aircraft drive is intensified by the fact that new workers are being hired by the thousands each week. By June 1, 1941, when peak employment is reached, it is estimated that there will be 150,000 workers in this industry alone in southern California.

At present all eyes are turned to the election in North American Aircraft, scheduled for Feb. 20. CIO leaders declare that the winning of this election will break the back of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, whose proud boast it is that it has kept Los Angeles open shop for 50 years.

The Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, meeting the challenge of the North American election, launched an intensive ten-day drive to victory. Daily mobilizations were held at the main plant gates where the 8,000 workers must pass to and from work.

The windup was to be a general mobilization of all workers on Feb. 19, the day before the election. This gigantic demonstration, with thousands of workers expected to take part, was accompanied by union bands, massed flags and union banners, half a dozen sound trucks and all the trappings worthy of a great climax to a great drive.

Each union participating distributed a special leaflet of greeting to the North American workers, describing the benefits to be won by joining the CIO.

Issues at stake for future collective bargaining are the same as in the Vultee strike — raising of the 50-cent minimum wage, freedom from discrimination and speedup, and job security.

First contract was signed in the Los Angeles brass industry the other day, between Public Brass Service Co. and Local 468, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers. It calls for full closed shop and union hiring hall, and practically doubles minimum wages. Other brass plants are rapidly being organized. Furniture workers, steel workers, construction workers and other Internationals are bringing in new membership by the hundreds each week.

Court Upholds Order In Dow Case

Washington, Feb. 22.—A Labor Board order against the Dow Chemical Co. requiring the firm to stop discouraging membership in District 50, United Mine Workers, was upheld Feb. 6 by the Sixth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court modified the Board's order by striking out the part calling upon the company to refund to public relief agencies any money paid out to discharged workers ordered reinstated.

Fur Pact Parleys Break Down

New York, Feb. 22 — With the rejection by the employers of the union's last minute proposal to submit all its demands to arbitration by an impartial committee, the collective labor agreement covering 20,000 fur workers employed in the New York fur market expired February 15, with conferences between the Furriers Joint Council, affiliated with the International Fur & Leather Workers Union, CIO and the Associated Fur Coat & Trimming Manufacturers deadlocked.

Negotiations between the union and the association went on daily during the past two weeks but brought no substantial progress. Main demands presented by the union some sixty days ago were no discharge of any worker during the life of the agreement and 12½% increase in the minimum wage scales.

Bethlehem Plant Faces Shutdown

That was the warning sent today by Chairman Philip Murray of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee to Sidney Hillman, U. S. defense labor head, following a lockout of 300 workers at the plant's coke oven department.

Murray charged that the company, following its law-of-the-jungle labor relations policy, has hired some 200 deputy sheriffs and private police, together with a large number of professional strikebreakers.

"The SWOC is prepared to submit all matters in dispute leading up to the present situation, to arbitration," the CIO president told Hillman.

SOUGHT PARLEYS

"Our organization has repeatedly requested effective mediation of these long-standing grievances and has publicly offered to submit matters in controversy to arbitration so that there would be no interruption of production," the wire said.

"The company has refused to accept any such proposals. Unless the Commission is prepared to see that Bethlehem Steel Co. discontinues its unlawful and discriminatory practices at once, it will be impossible to prevent a shutdown of the entire Lackawanna operations, involving some 14,000 men."

NLRB Raps Youngstown

Youngstown, Ohio, Feb. 22 — Nearly four years after the Little Steel strike of 1937, the National Labor Relations Board today issued a formal complaint of Wagner Act violation against the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.

The complaint, charging discrimination against union members listed nearly 150 charges against the Little Steel firm. An almost equal number were dropped by the Board. Attorneys for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, which has been pressing for action on its petition, hailed the NLRB move and predicted their charges would be borne out at future hearings.

Reason for the long delay in the issuance of the complaint was the corporation's practice of offering projected "out-of-court" settlements, which never met union demands but which served to delay government action.

Predict Bethlehem Shipyard Pact Soon

NEW YORK, Feb. 22. — A contract within the next two weeks covering three shipyards of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. was predicted here by Sec.-Treas. Philip Van Gelder of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

Van Gelder, speaking at a luncheon conference of the League for Industrial Democracy, reported negotiating conferences have been progressing smoothly. Some 5,000 workers, at Brooklyn, N. Y., Hoboken, N. J., and East Boston, Mass., will be covered by the agreements, the first to be signed by the Bethlehem Steel subsidiary.

Meanwhile, at Quincy, Mass., 11,000 employes of the company's big Fore River Yards awaited management's reply to their nine demands for wage boosts and improved working conditions.

The company recently recognized an independent union, which the CIO affiliate describes as a successor to the outlawed company-dominated outfit which met with Labor Board disfavor.

The demands include 15c hourly pay increases, seniority, vacations with pay, bonuses for night workers and protection for draftees.

Honolulu Dockmen Vote CIO, Win Fight

HONOLULU, Feb. 22.—Hawaiian longshoremen employed at the Castle and Cooke Terminal Docks voted 402 to 126 for the CIO Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union in an election conducted here by the Natl. Labor Relations Board among Matson dockmen.

Harry Bridges, ILWU president, predicted before the election that victory in the Matson-NLRB poll would mark a "turning point in the destiny of the Hawaiian workers."

Stevedores here were jubilant at the news of the smashing victory won by the ILWU, after a five and a half year's fight for union recognition. Union officials said the election marks the completion of the most important event in the history of the island labor movement.

Textile Union Parley Apr. 21

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—The national convention of the Textile Workers Union of America will be held at the Hotel Capital, New York City, from April 21 to 25, the TWUA announced this week.

The convention had been set earlier to meet in Washington, but was transferred to New York City at the executive council meeting in Atlanta recently, when it was found that no hall was available in the national capital.

New York White Wings Going CIO

New York, Feb. 22.—A whirlwind campaign to organize New York City's 14,000 Sanitation Dept. employes started off this week with predictions that the first four days of the drive would find 1,500 men joining the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers.

Announcement of the campaign was made at a press conference held by CIO Vice-Pres. Joseph Curran, head of the Greater New York CIO Council and Abram Flaxer, national president of the SCMWA.

HITS 'FAKE UNIONS'

Pointing out that the Sanitation Dept. employes — known to the public as the "white wings" —had been clamoring for CIO organization activities, Curran said the men are "preyed upon by a group of corrupt racketeering fake 'unions' headed by an unsavory quartet called the 'four horsemen.'

"These leeches have for years been collecting dues from the Sanitation men through various forms of intimidation," he said, "and they have done nothing to improve working conditions in the Sanitation Dept.

ROOT OUT RACKETEERS

"The CIO intends to root out this racketeering gang and replace it with a clean, businesslike, democratic organization in which the men will elect their own officers and manage their own funds."

Elected by the CIO council to the Sanitation Workers Organizing Committee were Flaxer, the chairman; Curran, Pres. Michael S. Quill of the transport workers, Sec. Julius Emspak of the Electrical Workers and Council Sec. Saul Mills.

800 Dyers Strike, Seek Pay Boost

Norwich, Conn., Feb. 22 — Demanding a pay increase, better working conditions and recognition of the Dyers Federation as their bargaining agent, more than 800 workers of the U. S. Finishing Co. went on strike here Feb. 10 with a 24-hour picket line. The Federation belongs to the CIO Textile Workers Union.

At a mass meeting held the evening the strike was called, the workers jammed Pulaski hall to capacity and voted to affiliate with the Dyers Federation.

For years the Dyers Union has been trying to organize the company's employes and on several occasions succeeded in signing up a good number, but it was not until the present situation, that real progress was made.

Anti-Strike Bills Unnecessary, House Told

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22. — New legislation abolishing or restricting the right to strike is unnecessary, Congress was told here in testimony from Director General Wm. S. Knudsen of the Office of Production Management and his Associate Director, Sidney Hillman.

Hillman's testimony cited the small number of strikes in defense industries, and the "greater spirit of cooperation" between employes and management as evidence that restrictive laws were not needed. Both defense leaders testified before the House Judiciary Committee, now conducting hearings on the general subject of strike restrictive bills.

Director Knudsen, former president of the General Motors Corporation, told the committee that strike situations are much better handled by negotiations and by administrative action than by law. The "cooling-off period" proposed in a number of the bills would not be effective, he said, since a grievance of any duration would not be forgotten during the delay enforced by law.

"You cant make a man a criminal because he's striking," Knudsen said. At the same time, however, he described the Smith bill which would impose a waiting period, outlaw the union shop, and impose enforced mediation and arbitration on the workers as containing "good suggestions."

PRESS BUILDUP

Hillman spoke of the false impression given by the newspapers to the effect that a tremendous number of strikes are going on. "With the emphasis on strikes in the daily press, the man on the street can hardly fail to conclude that strikes are increasing greatly. This is simply not true," he said.

Both men agreed that they had no suggestions for new legislation, adding that present laws were ample to handle any situation that might threaten the success of the arms program.

Several members of the Judiciary Committee, known for its record in blocking passage of labor laws and for its speed in approving anti-labor bills, questioned Knudsen and Hillman along lines designed to bring out the need for new restrictive measures.

Rep. Hobbs of Alabama and Michener of Michigan were especially anxious to build up a case for new strike restrictions, Hobbs raking up the auto strikes of four years ago to support his arguments. Knudsen's reply referred to the "growing sense of responsibil-

Murray Again Warns Of 'Model' Bills

Washington, Feb. 22.—The so-called "model anti-sabotage" bill now being offered in state legislatures is evidence that "the attack against labor organizations is becoming most acute," Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, warned in a circular letter sent to all CIO affiliates today.

"It is clear that this bill, if passed, will afford an opportunity to the enemies of labor to attack existing unions and seriously curtail, if not eliminate, future organizing activities under the guise of preventing sabotage in national defense industries," he said.

Consumer Head Lauds Murray Plan

New York, Feb. 22.—CIO Pres. Philip Murray's industry council plan and proposal for full utilization of steel production capacity, today received favorable mention by a leading government consumers' expert.

Speaking at a League for Industrial Democracy luncheon here, Donald Montgomery, consumers' counsel for the Dept. of Agriculture, advocated as his program for consumer protection "maximum output all the time."

Philip Murray, he noted, "has proposed a way of keeping the book open in every important industry and of getting the goods produced both for defense and for consumers."

LABOR VICTORY

Detroit —(FP)— All candidates indorsed by the CIO and AFL in Wayne County (Detroit) judicial and school board election primaries on Feb. 17 won nominations.

FOLLOW-UP: Last week the U. S. Supreme Court upheld an NLRB decision which ordered "King Henry" Ford to rehire more than a score of workers fired in 1937. Symbolizing CIO progress in the four-year period, members of the UAW ladies auxiliary distributed union leaflets. Ford thugs, restrained by the law, didn't interfere.

Ford Workers Swarm to CIO; Union Asks Poll At 2 Plants

NLRB AGAIN RAPS FORD

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Ford Motor Co. was again ordered to stop discouraging membership in the CIO United Automobile Workers, in an order issued yesterday by the National Labor Relations Board involving Ford plant in Richmond, California.

Ford was also ordered to bargain with the UAW-CIO and to put the terms of any agreement reached in a signed contract; to reinstate with back pay 142 employes fired for union activity and to stop circulating among employes any written material which interferes with rights guaranteed by the Labor Act.

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Feb. 22. — The UAW-CIO drive, which had already won a substantial majority of Ford workers to the union, entered the boom stage this week, when the company posted notices on Wednesday throughout the Rouge plant that it would comply with the NLRB order upheld a week ago by the United States Supreme Court.

The immediate effect was a flood of applications for member-ship in the union from the still unorganized workers, who swamped the main Ford Organizing Committee Office and all of its branches from Wednesday through the rest of the week-end.

At the same time a flood of union buttons appeared in the Ford plant as workers gained new courage from the Supreme Court decision and the progress of the CIO drive.

So great was the demand for buttons that the supply was quickly exhausted at Ford Organizing Committee headquarters and other UAW locals throughout the city were asked to send over any spare ones in their office.

This development came only three days after CIO Pres. Philip Murray addressed on Sunday a mass meeting of Ford workers, who filled and overflowed the auditorium of Cass Technical High School.

President Murray's prediction at that time that the Ford workers would make a good citizen out of Henry Ford was well on its way to coming true by the week-end.

22 REHIRED

Just preceding the posting of the notices was the rehiring of 22 Ford employes discharged for union activities in 1937. These men will also receive back pay for all work lost since their discharge—another result of the Supreme Court's decision sustaining the NLRB. All 22 of the men reported to the plant on Monday and all were back to work by Tuesday.

An apparent attempt by Ford to soften the effect of the posting of notices boomeranged. Side by side with the notices was a second notice which said workers need not join the CIO but might use the services of the Ford Sociology department or the employment office for the adjust-

Auto Union Head To Discuss Ford

DETROIT, Feb. 22. — R. J. Thomas, head of the United Automobile Workers and a CIO vice-president, will address a nation-wide audience over the network of the Columbia Broadcasting System at 10 P. M., eastern standard time, on Friday, Mar. 7.

A major portion of Thomas' speech will be devoted to a discussion of Ford labor policies.

Auto Union Claims 90% Majority

Detroit, Feb. 22.—The CIO and the United Automobile Workers today had backed up their claims of a majority at Henry Ford's River Rouge and Highland Park plants by petitioning for a National Labor Relations Board election.

Well over 80,000 workers are employed in the two Ford factories.

The petition, announced by Ford Organizing Director Michael S. Widman and UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas, asserted the CIO has been designated as bargaining representative by 90 per cent of the workers. The union has already petitioned for a poll among the 4,000 employes of the Ford-owned Lincoln plant.

"The UAW-CIO believes the Wagner Act can be used to bring the Ford workers' dispute with the Ford Co. to an early and satisfactory conclusion and a union contract," Thomas said.

Auto Union Seeks 10c Raise in New GM Pact

DETROIT, Feb. 22 (FP)—A 10c blanket raise, two-week paid vacations, the union shop, adequate bonus for conscripted employes and recognition of the shop steward system are the principal demands to be presented to General Motors Corp. by the CIO United Automobile Workers.

This was decided at a conference of delegates from 70 GM plants where the UAW-CIO has contracts and was indorsed by the international GM council of the union.

The present contract went into effect June 24, 1940, and continues in force until terminated by either party or changed by consent of both parties. Either party may terminate or ask modification by 60-day notice in writing.

FORD LOWEST

The Ford average was conceded by the Ford Motor Co. in a paid advertisement. The GM and Chrysler rates were calculated from available data by the UAW-CIO research department.

House Group OK's Mine Safety Bill

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Mine Safety bill has been reported out for Congressional action. The bill, designed to cut the slaughter of miners in disasters due to lack of proper inspection, was passed by the Mines Committee by a vote of 16 to two.

Passage of the bill has long been a special item in the CIO legislative program. It was passed by the Senate in January of last year, but has been held up in committee since that time.

Rep. Flannery, of Pennsylvania, sponsor of the present bill, indicated that he would ask the Rules Committee for a special ruling to get it out on the floor as quickly as possible.

The bill has also been a special assignment of John T. Jones, director of Labor's Non-Partisan League and CIO legislative representative, and has been the subject of several statements and communications to Congress from John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and former president of the CIO.

THE SPIDER AND THE FLY

Brotherhood Week

Every nationality, every race and every creed have gone to make up the American people and their beliefs.

Our people include 60 million whose background is Anglo-Saxon; 10 million, Irish; 13 million, Negro; 15 million, Teutonic; 9 million, Slavic; 5 million, Italian; 2 million, French; 4 million, Scandinavian—and millions of others of every national and racial strain.

As to American creeds—40 million Evangelical Protestant; 2 million, Episcopalian; 22 million, Roman Catholic; 4½ million, Jewish; 1 million, Greek Catholic—and millions of others of every religion.

The figures are those quoted by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, which calls for the observance of the week of Washington's Birthday, February 22-28, as Brotherhood Week.

It is a week dedicated to tolerance and mutual respect, and to the creation of a real brotherhood out of the diverse elements, national, racial and religious, that make up the American people.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations joins wholeheartedly in the pursuit of this most worthy objective, which coincides completely with its own principles, precepts and practices.

In fact, the CIO by its very nature perhaps does more than any other American institution to make brotherhood and tolerance between people of all nationalities, races and creeds a living reality.

The CIO constitution calls for the organization of all workers regardless of race, creed, color or nationality. In its industrial unions, all workers learn to work together as union brothers in their common interests. Industrial unity is our strength; while intolerance and divisions along national, racial and religious lines are the weapons of labor's enemies to split and weaken our organizations.

The CIO therefore, in this Brotherhood week, rededicates itself to the American ideals of democratic tolerance and brotherhood on which it is founded and which it is pledged to promote.

Guard Labor's Rights

Labor has had to struggle long and hard to win some betterment of its conditions. Through union organization it has freed itself from some of the worst tyrannies to which it was subjected, and has established collective bargaining rights through which to work for further improvements.

Now all these rights and conditions are threatened with destruction at one fell swoop by arbitrary legislation proposed in the present Congress.

Consider the Dirksen bill, for instance. The CIO maritime unions had to fight long and hard to do away with one of the worst curses of their industry, the so-called "fink halls," with all the discrimination and favoritism in hiring that went with them. Through collective bargaining agreements with the employers they established in their place a fair system of union hiring.

The Dirksen bill would turn back the clock of progress, by rendering such union conditions null and void and reestablishing the fink hall. It would also provide a method of blacklisting union members and put into effect a censorship over what American seamen may read.

Then there is the Hoffman bill to abolish the union shop on defense projects; the Cox bill, which would make it a criminal offense to collect union dues on government contract work; the Smith bill to punish strikers with life imprisonment; the Vinson bill to provide endless delays before wages may be improved and to outlaw the union shop.

The CIO opposes all these and similar bills to filch away labor's rights and to destroy union conditions. It calls upon its members to guard jealously the rights they have won through unionism, and to urge upon their representatives in Congress the defeat of all these slave bills.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

EVEN the right to laugh is under attack these days. Ford fired a man for laughing on company time. And the Michigan Unemployment Commission had to render a decision that a man who could laugh on a Ford assembly line was a marvel rather than a miscreant.

It has been said that the meat packers make some use of every part of a pig—except the squeal. Henry Ford has succeeded in harnessing almost every bit of human energy to his machines. But it still baffles him how to make a profit out of human laughter.

Such laughter is dangerous, Henry. Downright subversive, you might call it. For so long as mankind has the heart to laugh at some of the ironies of its oppressions, it will also have the heart and courage to fight against them.

It took Congress one day to dispose of the citizenship charges against W. J. Cameron, Ford's anti-union propagandist and preacher of race hatred. A House committee tabled the Geyer resolution on this subject, at the very time when the Dept. of Justice was renewing the seven-year persecution of Harry Bridges. Bridges has been convicted of organizing unions and preaching labor solidarity. He was cleared of all other charges.

The American flag is daily desecrated by profiteering tories and other racketeers, who wrap it around them while they spit and stamp upon every freedom for which it stands.

But Neil Brant, CIO organizer, was arrested and is threatened with three years in jail, on the charge of a company stooge that he "mutilated and defiled" the flag by using his gavel on a table on which the flag was draped, while presiding at a union meeting.

The right to laugh has also been challenged—as un-American and communistic—in New York City. When CIO strikers made fun of attempts to revive a company union that was supposed to be dead and buried, by carrying a coffin labeled "Lowenstein Employes Assn., June, 1937 to March, 1938," they were arrested. Magistrate Thomas Aurelio screamed at them in court, "It's shameful and disgraceful, it's un-American, it's communism!"

Meantime Gadsden, Ala. police chased an imaginary fire, while the United Rubber Workers office there was mobbed and John House, organizer, was so brutally beaten that he had to have 86 stitches put in his head.

This is the second assault on Organizer House in a city where the union's president and CIO's vice president Sherman Dalrymple, was also beaten within an inch of his life. Yet the papers report no anguished magisterial screams that this is "disgraceful and un-American."

A newspaper columnist, H. I. Phillips by name, opines that the soldier boys get sore when they read about strikes and about "those guys with nice warm jobs" who "squawk about the hours and pay." He represents one as saying that if he was out of the army and had a job, he "would mow down anybody who tried to sell me the idea I was not getting a square deal."

If any soldier boys get sore like this at low-paid workers, how must they feel about a family like the McCormicks which drew some 4½ million dollars in dividends last year from Harvester and yet compelled the workers to strike for union conditions and a living wage?

While twelve members of the McCormick family were rewarded with their 4½ million dollars for the arduous toil of clipping coupons, some 20 million other Americans are living on an average of five cents per meal, according to the U. S. Secretary of Agriculture.

Wonder if Phillips' imaginary soldier boy still feels like "mowing down" anyone who thinks the nickel-a-meal millions are not getting a square deal?

War is a hideous business, and even a period of war preparation like the present brings the basest and ugliest social elements to the surface. Look some of them over:

Profiteers who seek to make fortunes from war production, while denying labor its rights and a decent wage.

Propagandists who seek to turn race against race, and workers in khaki against workers in overalls, stirring up mob violence against strikers and union organizers.

Politicians who would imprison or deport labor unionists and pass laws to cripple all effective union activity.

It's still no crime to give the horse-laugh to these gentry and their hangers-on, when they seek to wrap the flag around them.

ON CAPITOL HILL:

Anti-Labor Bills Get Hearings

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

The House Judiciary Committee is holding hearings to decide whether to rush through anti-strike or other anti-union bills now. Even if it should decide against immediate action, it will retain jurisdiction over most anti-union bills and will be in a position to act on them at any time it chooses. How dangerous the bills which are before this Committee would be to labor is indicated in the summaries given below:

H. R. 2695 — (Howard Smith, Dem., Va.) This bill provides life imprisonment for interference with defense production, it would establish compulsory mediation and would outlaw the union-shop.

LIFE IMPRISONMENT

The bill would permit a jury to imprison for life any person who "wilfully . . . by any means whatever, directly or indirectly" interferes with defense production, transportation, repair, storage or the use of property for defense production.

The mediation provision would require workers in defense industries to give 30 days' written notice to the Secretary of Labor of grievances and intention to strike. The Secretary is to appoint a mediator or mediators and if mediation fails is to recommend arbitration.

One section would outlaw union-shop agreements in establishments handling defense orders and would require 30 days' notice from an employer to the Secretary of Labor before any changes in wages or other working conditions.

H. R. 1407 — (Clare Hoffman, Rep., Mich.) This bill would make it a crime to strike, advocate strikes, or to picket any establishment handling Government orders, or in any other way interfere with production. It would require that agreements on working conditions in private plants should be made between the workers and the United States Government, or the agency which places the order. It would forbid strikes and would require that all grievances and disputes be handled by the Department of Labor. Violations would be punished by a $1,000 fine, six months' imprisonment, or both.

The two bills below are ostensibly directed only against the exorbitant initiation fees charged by some AFL unions. Actually they would cut off all income of labor unions.

H. R. 2694 — (Eugene E. Cox, Dem., Ga.) This bill would make it a crime for unions to "solicit" or "receive" dues, initiation fees, or union assessments from workers employed by firms handling Government contracts, and would make it a crime for workers to pay such dues or other union fees. It would also outlaw union-shop agreements. Violations would be punished by $1,000 fine, one year in prison, or both.

H. R. 1403 — (Clare Hoffman, Rep., Mich.) This bill would, in effect, outlaw the union-shop and union dues in establishments handling Government orders. It would make it a crime to "directly or indirectly induce any person" employed or seeking employment in such establishments to join any organization or pay any fee as a condition of employment. Violations would be punished by $5,000 fine, five years' imprisonment, or both.

Another important anti-strike bill, introduced by Congressman Vinson, which is in the House Naval Affairs Committee, will be described next week.

Liberals Halt 'Putsch' Behind Wiretap Bill

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—A reactionary drive to whip the wiretapping bill through Congress before anyone could rise up to protest it has been set back here through the efforts of witnesses from CIO, from progressive groups, from business and professional associations.

The bill, proposed by Rep. Hobbs, a polltax democrat from Alabama, was referred to the House Judiciary Committee. Plans were laid to rush it through with a favorable report from a subcommittee, bringing it on the floor almost without hearings.

These plans were blocked when a number of witnesses stepped forward to insist on being heard—and on being heard by the full subcommittee, not just by the one Representative who sat this week. Called from New York to testify at the request of the American Labor Party, Morris Watson, vice-president of the Newspaper Guild, refused to go when only one committee member appeared. Similarly the representative of the Natl. Federation for Constitutional Liberties refused to testify before the one member.

As a result, hearings were postponed until the full subcommittee could be brought together. Earlier witnesses who did testify before the subcommittee included John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League; Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel; Louis McCabe of the Natl. Lawyers Guild; Bjorne Halling, secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee; Henry Rhine, national organizer of the United Federal Workers Eugene Connolly of the Labor Party; Donal Sullivan, president of the Newspaper Guild, and others.

ity" of union leaders and management as the answer to this situation.

SMALL LOSSES

Hillman's testimony, both in written form and through answers to questions, stressed the extremely small amount of man-days lost due to strikes despite the increased industrial activity under the stimulus of arms orders.

In aluminum, for example, only one day of every 222 worked in the industry was lost through strikes less than one half of one per cent. In machine tools and engines, only one day for every six years of working time was lost.

"This whole analysis shows what should be self-evident," Hillman said, "strikes are the rare exception in defense industry."

Following his appearance at the committee hearing, Director Knudsen announced at his press conference that Henry Ford would receive "an educational order" for a large production of airplane parts to be built for plane companies making the complete aircraft.

CIO Asks Election At Ford

ment of their grievances. The hundreds of Ford workers who applied for CIO membership gave an emphatic statement of their preference.

Just before Pres. Murray spoke on Sunday, the UAW-CIO filed charges with the National Labor Relations Board that the company was fostering the AFL in its plants as a company union completely dominated and supported by the management.

FOUR CHARGES

The UAW-CIO charge declares that:

1. The company and its agents are conspiring with AFL officials in an attempt to prevent and interfere with the organization of Ford workers into the UAW-CIO.

2. That in these efforts the company and its agents, Harry Bennett and Homer Martin, are supporting and dominating the AFL.

3. That Bennett agreed to negotiate with the AFL, knowing that organization does not represent a majority of Ford employes.

4. That the company and its agents are attempting through it supervisory staff to force Ford workers to join the AFL and threatening them with loss of their jobs if they refuse to join.

Million-Dollar Raises Won By Rubber Union

By ROBERT CRUDEN

AKRON, Feb. 22.—CIO rubber workers will get at least a million dollars more in their pay envelopes this year as the result of agreements signed recently by the United Rubber Workers, CIO, and the U. S. Rubber and Seiberling Rubber companies.

The wage increases in U. S. Rubber apply to its URWA-contract plants in Detroit, Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Eau Claire, Wis., Chicopee Falls, Mass., and Mishawaka, Ind. The increases, ranging from 2½c to 5c an hour, will amount to about $1,032,000 on an annual basis.

UNION MEMBERS GAIN

URWA officials pointed out that workers in U. S. Rubber plants not covered by contracts with the union received wage increases much less than those obtained by the organized plants.

Intensive organizing campaigns in this company's plants at Passaic, N. J., and Naugatuck, Conn., employing some 8,000 workers, are now under way.

The Seiberling Rubber workers in Barberton, Ohio, boosted their pay three cents an hour through negotiations with the company after the URWA local had taken a strike vote. This will boost their pay some $70,000 a year.

"These recent wage increases simply dramatize the steady campaign of the United Rubber Workers to raise wage standards in the rubber industry," declared Pres. S. H. Dalrymple. "During the past year we have obtained wage increases in 41 plants, out of the 100 with which we have contracts. These increases have ranged all the way from one cent to 25 cents an hour."

"This is our contribution toward protecting and improving the American worker's standard of living in these critical times," he added.

Dalrymple pointed out that the rubber union's record in the field was steadily winning new members.

'Make Ford A Decent Citizen', Murray Advises Auto Workers

DETROIT, Feb. 22. — Following are excerpts from the speech of CIO Pres. Philip Murray to members of the United Automobile Workers in Detroit February 16:

MY good friends, I don't think that there is any one single man in the United States of America—who though he may believe it—is bigger than the people of the United States and bigger than the government of the United States.

One of these days Ford is going to behave himself because if the National Labor Relations Board can't do it, the Ford employes are going to make him behave himself anyhow.

There have been a lot of industrialists in the United States down through the years that have assumed the attitude of Mr. Ford. They have created servicemen's organizations. They have indulged in all forms of espionage. They have indulged in all kinds of discrimination and blacklisting. But each one of them is falling by the wayside. They can't—and I say this in all truthfulness—resist and prevent the attainment of legitimate organization of the workers in these great industries.

Why, despite the tendencies of Mr. Ford and a few others, the dues-paying membership of the CIO in the past few months has gone up 275,000 throughout the United States.

Do you know that there is not a day that passes throughout life but that some employer of labor somewhere in the United States is executing a collective bargaining agreement with some CIO organization?

Ford's Era Passed

Mr. Ford, my good friends, can't maintain that mighty empire of his out here in the City of Dearborn; he can't continue to rule like a king over all that he surveys. He cannot possibly continue the maintenance of this system of espionage of discrimination and discharge. That day—that day has passed in the United States of America.

No working man or woman employed by Mr. Ford or any other unfriendly employer can continue successfully the domination of his employes. That day is done. No man need be afraid to join a union any more.

The Congress of the United States in the enactment of its several recent statutes declared to all 130,000,000 people that every worker employed in American industry can exercise the right—the constitutional, the legal right—to join a union of his own choosing free from restraint or hindrance upon the part of his employer. That law has been validated by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest court in the land.

And yet this thin, scrawny, elderly man who is living in the ancient past, dares defy the law of the land—the law of the people. Is it to be that a man now in his proverbial dotage, devoting the balance of his elderly life to the purchase of antique coal buckets and antique rocking chairs, should endeavor because he possesses great wealth to apply antique labor conditions upon his workers in the great Ford empire? Oh no.

Take heed, my friends here today, this Sunday afternoon; you who are employed by Ford. You are bound to win.

Neither Henry Ford, nor any other single employer of labor or any group of employers, can prevent the constructive, orderly development and establishment of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, in the Ford properties here and throughout the country.

VETERANS: Some of the 22 workers fired by Henry Ford for union activity in 1937—and ordered rehired by the Labor Board in a decision which recently won Supreme Court endorsement — line up on the stage at the big Detroit Ford workers' mass meeting.

The Answer: Organize

You know the best way to whip an unfriendly employer who would intend to deny and prevent your economic freedom and civil liberties, there is only one answer to it, Ford people. Just one legitimate answer to it, and that is to organize. Organize into this union.

There is no one in the Ford plant—I don't care who the foreman may be, who the superintendent of the plant may be or whether they have a Harry Bennett or a Homer Martin—there just is not any single individual in the United States or group of individuals who can deny the Ford workers their right to join this union.

For example on this platform this afternoon, are 22 of your people who were discriminated against in 1937 and their case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. It may have taken a while to bring it up there but in their case, and these are Ford workers, the law again prevailed. And tomorrow morning, these men, these young men that are sitting on the stage this afternoon will be back at work in the Ford plant, although Henry Ford and Mr. Bennett and all of their satelites said that they never should come back to work for the Ford Motor Company.

Now, my good friends, the presence of these men on the platform—the fact that they have a Supreme Court decision that puts them back to work — demonstrates that we have a law in the United States that can be enforced and certainly the only way to secure the enforcement of the law is through the development of a powerful organization such as you have in the UAW-CIO.

UAW's Record

You have eliminated, with the possible exception of Ford, all forms of discrimination. You have established shop stewards and grievance committees. You have succeeded in making effective your collective bargaining contracts throughout the country. Through the instrumentality of your international union you have increased wages, you have shortened hours of labor, you have improved conditions of labor. There is not only a maximum of actual independence throughout the industry today (with the possible exception of the Ford plants) but there is also an absolute air of complete political independence throughout the entire industry.

Ford Defies Law

Mr. Ford is a mighty man. His agents are evil men. He has a well knit, closely knit organization with perfect controls and no doubt perfect discipline. He is attempting, at the moment, to defy not the Ford workers alone. He is operating in actual defiance of the United States government. He is operating in defiance of the law.

He had the perfect audacity only last week or the week before last to notify the government of the United States of America that if he was required to negotiate a contract with the UAW-CIO, he would give his plants to the government of the United States for a dollar.

Well, I can't understand why the government didn't take him on up on that. At least it would be the business of the Ford workers to see to it that Mr. Ford in a short time is placed in that kind of position—asking for his dollar and getting it!

Mr. Ford has thrown the government of the United States of America into one of the most unique, most embarrassing situations that our government has ever experienced throughout its entire history. He has flaunted the government and defied to produce certain goods to be sold to the government of foreign nations.

Jekyll & Hyde

He has defied the National Labor Relations Act at the same time insisting that his rights be protected as a citizen in securing business from the National Defense Commission: the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

He refuses to obey the law over here and insists over here that his rights should be protected as a citizen.

He has publicly castigated the President; he has castigated the Congress of the United States on repeated occasions. He has defied the government and has violated the laws while at the same time he assumes an attitude of "holier than thou". The operation of his mind would very well indicate that he is suffering at least from some mental quirks. That is indicated in his most recent release of only yesterday: "Supply them with all the ammunition they want and let them go out and mow each other down". An unhealthy and irresponsible statement. And he is accredited to be an industrial statesman!

A man in that frame of mind, a man whose mind operates in that direction is undoubtedly a dangerous man because he possesses great wealth.

Everyone's Job

What kind of reasoning prompts a man to give utterance to statements of this description? He must be irresponsible, he doesn't know what he is talking about. He has manifested such hatred, such contempt for everything that is worthwhile in the United States that he is solely responsible for much, much of the prejudices and hatreds that have developed in industry within recent years.

My friends, it is your business—you of the Auto Workers—you from the Ford plant. It is our business; it is the business of your International Union; it is the business of the churches here; it is the business of your politicians here; it is the business of good government; it is the business of the people of the United States to see to it that Mr. Ford is made a good citizen.

Brophy Urges Councils Back CIO Defense Plan

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22. — Outspoken support for the Murray defense plan and other CIO defense proposals was asked of all industrial union councils today by John Brophy, CIO councils director.

"If these proposals are to be put across, it is imperative that CIO organizations make their attitude very clear to Pres. Roosevelt," Brophy wrote. "I ask accordingly that all state councils send telegrams immediately to the President of the United States at the White House, urging the adoption of the CIO proposals for the strengthening of national defense.

"I ask also that each city and county industrial union council write to Pres. Roosevelt at once, expressing support of the plan and explaining at some length the views of the council in the matter."

STILL PRESS DEMAND

Explaining that while the newly-created Office of Production Management is charged with "certain of the duties" which would be assigned to the Natl. Defense Board under the Murray plan, Brophy told the councils:

"We adhere to the Murray proposals in preference to this newly-established agency and continue to urge them. It should be pointed out, however, that the heart of the Murray plan is the proposal for Industry Councils.

"We are confident that events will soon prove the vital need for such Councils, and that they will be set up as suggested."

Suffolk, Va., Feb. 22 — A major victory for employes of the Suffolk Peanut Co. ended a 21-day strike by Local 232, United Candy & Nut Packers Union.

Murray to Speak

Atlantic City, N. J., Feb. 22 — "Labor's Part in the Solution of America's Problems" will be discussed here Feb. 25 by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Murray, a member of the Pittsburgh Board of Education, will deliver his address to the American Assn. of School Administrators.

Ask Changes In Explosive License Bills

Washington, Feb. 22.—Amendment of the "model explosives act" being submitted to various state legislatures to avoid undue hardship for coal miners who use dynamite in their every-day work, was urged today by the CIO.

In a letter to state CIO bodies, John Brophy, director of Industrial Union Councils, pointed out that "while we do not oppose an explosives act which is reasonable and serves a good purpose, it is important that proper exemptions be made."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Two major drives of the greatest importance to New York CIO affiliates are under way this week, one by the American Communications Assn. in Western Union and the other by the State, County and Municipal Workers among the city's 14,000 "whitewings"—the men who carry away New York's refuse.

The whitewings are paid less than similar workers in private industry. They don't get overtime pay, there is no grievance machinery, and a number of other benefits enjoyed by organized workers are denied them. In addition, their right to join a union of their own choice has been sharply interfered with.

Western Union is one of the most notoriously anti-labor corporations in the country. Its company union, ordered dissolved by the Labor Board, is one of the oldest in existence. William Green has recently been conniving with this company-dominated outfit, true to his standard form.

HEADS AIRCRAFT DRIVE

President Murray has appointed Richard T. Frankensteen, Auto Workers Board Member, as Director of Aviation Organizing, with Walter Smethurst as his assistant. Director Frankensteen's experience in the auto drives will be of great value in the new field.

GIRDLER ON 'INFLATION'

Tom Girdler is worried about inflation, claims it is bound to come if wages are increased. Tom's salary for 1940 was $176,000. Republic workers have decided that Girdler is the only case of inflation they know about, and they're enrolling in SWOC's Republic drive by the thousands. Economists and workers both know that Tom is wrong again—that the best way to stop inflation is by a more equitable distribution of profits and of the national income, and that the only way to do this is to raise wages by collective bargaining.

GADSDEN OUTRAGE

Gadsden, Ala., evidently doesn't consider itself part of the United States. For the second time organized thugs have entered the CIO office and beaten up John House, CIO representative. House had to have 86 stitches taken in his head. CIO protests were immediately sent to Federal authorities here and an investigation demanded. Gadsden recently assured defense officials that labor's rights would be guaranteed in any defense contract work awarded to the city's industries.

AFL'S CHANCE

The AFL is going to have a chance to prove its recent assertion that it had organized the workers at Ford, if the UAWA-CIO petition to the Labor Board for an election in the River Rouge plant. The results of this election will again expose the hollowness of Green's claims—and will write finis to the William Green-Harry Bennett conspiracy against the Ford workers.

MORE ELECTIONS WON

Regional Director Ernest Pugh reports that the UAWA-CIO blanketed an "independent" at the Malleable and Steel Castings Co. in Chicago by 282 to 78. Field Representative John Whitson reports an AFL textile local coming over to the Textile Workers Union, CIO, in Alabama. A new Construction Workers local has been set up in Dayton, Ohio. Director Paul Fuller also notes a contract won by the CIO Paper Workers at Franklin.

The Retail and Wholesale Employes are starting a nationwide drive to organize the workers of the huge Sears, Roebuck mail order chain.

Union Spots Waste, Urges Firm Accept Aid

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—A CIO union today had told a corporation how to run its business—and backed up the general advice with proof of waste and inefficiency.

The union is the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. The corporation is the Lebanon Steel & Iron Co., Lebanon, Pa., whose prospective shutdown would destroy the jobs of some 650 employes.

In a letter to the company's board of directors, Clinton Golden, eastern regional director for the SWOC, offered the services of the union "to increase productive efficiency, eliminate wastes, and otherwise reduce costs to save your company from liquidation."

Golden's letter, which followed newspaper reports of the company's plan to go out of business, added:

"In regard to the feasibility and practicality of this union-management cooperation program. . . . we shall be glad to refer you to the presidents of several other firms in the steel industry. . . . These firms have found the program successful, and in three particular instances the companies were saved from bankruptcy."

The SWOC official's letter pointed out that "our chief concern is the welfare of your employes, who are members of our organization, most of whom will suffer if the plant is abandoned, and many of whom are advanced in years beyond the age that they can reasonably expect to secure other gainful employment in private industry."

Accompanying Golden's letter was a survey of production practices at the Lebanon firm as reported to the SWOC by members of Local 1275.

WASTE RUNS RAMPANT

The report indicated that management honored industrial efficiency more in the breach than in the observance.

Excerpts from the report:

"The experienced operator on the crane that carries ladles to the electric furnace asked for more money. He quit when they told him they couldn't afford it. These broken chives and ruined cable that resulted when a green man was put on the crane, cost more than the wage increase for which the original operator asked."

DRAIN ON FUNDS

"The smoke stack on the sixteen inch mill was seldom repaired. It blew over two years ago. Money spent for brick used because of the false draft would have paid for repairs many times over."

"When we are working steel on the machines, we never know when we will run into hard (scrap) steel. As a result, dies made for working soft steel break. In one day, about two hundred dollars worth of dies were destroyed."

"The heads on an order of rivets were cracked. We told Donelly they were no good. 'Send them anyway,' he said. They came back. The company paid the freight both ways."

"The management won't listen to our suggestions. 'We can't afford it,' they say." This report is only an indication of what could be done to increase efficiency if we, the employes, had a chance to help out."

Sec. Carey Named To Defense Body

Washington, Feb. 22.—Appointment of James B. Carey, CIO Secretary, to the newly set-up Production Planning Board headed by Harry L. Hopkins was announced here today.

The new board will advise the government on industrial planning during the present arms program and will work out plans for peace-time production when the program is ended.

Other members include representatives of business, the army and navy, and the AFL.

See Need To Extend Democracy

New York, Feb. 22. — The American people can emerge victorious from the present world crisis not by curbing democracy but by extending and preserving it.

Delegates to the New York State Conference on Legislation for Democracy received this message from CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman and from Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board.

"The people of the nation today are not joining this hysteria," Pressman pointed out. "The working men and women are still as determined as they ever were to fight for what they understand democracy should mean to them in their daily lives."

While the CIO has not diminished its activities for seeking broader social and economic legislation, Pressman noted that "unfortunately our efforts have been diverted toward defending a rear guard attack."

NLRB Member Smith warned the conference that "the cry for national unity must not still the voice of those who rightfully insist that the preservation of constitutional liberties is the first line of democratic national defense.

PLAN CONFAB

New York—(FP)—Locals of the CIO United Office & Professional Workers in New York have called a conference for March 29 on the theme, "How to influence legislators."

CIO Greets Mexican Labor Parley

Washington, Feb. 22 — Fraternal greetings to the national Congress of the Mexican CTM labor organization were sent today by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The CIO leader's wire, addressed to CTM General Secretary Vicente Lombardo Toledano, said:

"Please convey to the delegates at the national Congress of the Federation of Mexican Workers the warmest fraternal greetings of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

"We extend to you a brotherly hand in our joint efforts to bring industrial democracy to all workers of this hemisphere, and to establish between our nations a friendly cooperation based upon mutual regard for the rights of the working people."

Carey Pledges CIO Aid To Farm Groups

DES MOINES, Ia., Feb. 22.—A pledge to the country's great farm organizations that their legislative programs will receive the support of organized labor was voiced at the Natl. Farmers Institute today by CIO Secretary James B. Carey.

Theme of Carey's speech was the joint interests of the nation's farmers and workers and the need for cooperation in solving fundamental economic and social problems.

He commented on the "twin evils of our economy: on the one hand, nearly 50 per cent of our farmers reduced to the state of tenantry, and of those who technically 'own' their farms, some million and one half heavily mortgaged—on the other hand, nine to ten million workers without their jobs. . .

"And from this desperate struggle for jobs and farms and enough to live on, flow all the present-day evils which vex and harass us today."

COULD END SURPLUS

The so-called agricultural surplus, Carey said, would vanish almost over-night if the ten million unemployed had jobs and earning power sufficient to maintain decent living standards.

FIGHT BUDGET CUTS: Members of New York CIO unions pose for the cameraman on the steps of the State House at Albany, where they went to protest a threatened slash in funds for education and relief. The demonstration was sponsored by the Greater New York Industrial Union Council.

New York CIO Unions Hit Budget Cuts

New York, Feb. 22. — Organized labor's protests against the New York state budget, which contains deep cuts in appropriations for education, relief and social services, were forcefully expressed by some 5,000 workers who marched on Albany to attend the legislative hearings on Gov. Lehman's proposed budget.

The march, led by representatives from virtually every CIO union in the state, broke into a smaller group to testify at the hearings. William P. Mangold, Legislative Representative of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council, acted as chief spokesman for the Council.

"These are times when democracy and democratic government should be made to mean more and to promise more in the daily lives of the American people," Mangold said.

"We believe that the proposed budget does exactly the opposite. It proposes less education, less relief, less of the things that democracy is supposed to stand for."

Trial Exposes AFL Racketeering

His sensational story included accounts of dynamite plots, extortion from contractors, racketeering and orders to murder — all commanded by Stirone. Among those put on the death list were two UCWOC organizers.

Russell spilled all this in the course of his trial on charges of dynamiting a 10-ton steamroller of a Philadelphia contractor who had resisted Stirone's gangster tactics. The jury found Russell guilty of this charge but his testimony opened a much wider field for investigation into the affairs of this AFL union.

ORDERED MURDERS

Highlights of Russell's testimony told of receiving orders from Stirone to "bump off" Paul Nothern and J. V. Carter, UCWOC organizers; of receiving dynamite and orders to blow up contractor's machinery; of orders to extort money from contractors; and of orders to "muscle in" on the numbers racket in Johnstown.

It was Russell's refusal to carry out these orders, he declared, that led to his being framed and brought to trial. He sought in this way to clear himself of the dynamite charge, previously confessed by two AFL henchmen, but the jury refused to believe he was innocent of all the sordid incidents he recited.

AFL Actions 'Challenge CIO', Is Warning

Washington, Feb. 22. — An emergency situation requiring the immediate attention of all CIO affiliates is set forth in a circular letter from Chairman A. D. Lewis, United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, on the basis of reports from St. Louis and other defense centers.

Accompanying Lewis' letter was a memorandum from CIO Regional Director A. F. Kojetinsky, St. Louis, who told how AFL building trades unions through strong-arm methods are building a war chest with which to fight the entire CIO. He forwarded also resolutions of the St. Louis Industrial Union Council exposing the situation.

USING DEFENSE PROGRAM

Lewis' letter said:

"Through collusive agreements, boycotts, and discrimination against CIO members, the craft unions of the AFL are using the defense program to build themselves a war chest to fight the entire CIO. The facts recited herein are not peculiar to St. Louis, but are also true of many other areas.

"Here is a situation that deeply concerns the welfare of the CIO as a whole and one which calls for vigilant effort on the part of all CIO affiliates. Here is a challenge to the CIO.

"We cannot sit back while the AFL building trades pile up a war chest of millions through picking the pockets of helpless workers who ask only a chance to work on defense projects. We cannot tolerate boycotts that endanger the existence of CIO unions of long standing. The time has come when we must strike against the racketeer who preys on national defense."

RECITES INCIDENTS

The Kojetinsky memo told of denial of employment to local CIO members while AFL unions bring in men from outside, of back-door agreements between AFL unions and contractors, of AFL-sponsored boycotts of CIO materials, and of discrimination against Negro CIO members and others.

Sharp protest is voiced in the resolution of the St. Louis IUC against the AFL boycott which it refers to as "a public scandal and threat to the future development and reputation of the entire labor movement."

Board Orders Splinter Elections

Washington, Feb. 22.—Elections among the employes of two lumber companies in Longview, Wash., on a splinter craft union basis have been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board.

In the saw mill division of the Long-Bell Lumber Co., the Board called for two elections—one for boommen, rafters and slipmen who will vote for or against the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America. In the other, production and maintenance employes will choose between the IWA, a joint group of four AFL craft unions or neither.

Two separate elections were also ordered among employes of the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. On the ballot for one group of production and maintenance employes will be the CIO Woodworkers Local 26 and six AFL craft unions. In the second group, the CIO union will compete with four AFL unions. Space to vote for neither will be on both ballots.

Seamen Ask Admiral Inspect Hiring System

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—The Natl. Maritime Union wants Admiral Land of the Maritime Commission to come up and see them. They want to show him just how the union hiring hall works, in order to clear up some misinformation contained in his recent testimony before the House Appropriations Committee to the general effect that the union's control of hiring was "a highly inefficient apparatus."

"I would like to make clear to you exactly what the rotary hiring system is," Joseph Curran, NMU president, wrote in inviting the Admiral to call. "It was adopted by the unions to cure an evil situation that had caused great hardship to the seamen and was the basic principle which established the unions in the first place."

Before the union set up the rotary system, Curran explained, seamen had to patronize certain boarding houses, walk from dock to dock seeking jobs, spend hours hanging around shipping offices, and be subject to a highly efficient blacklist every time they came off a ship and looked for a new berth.

Today the seaman goes to the union hall, presents his card, and waits — knowing that the man with the oldest card will get the first job. The company can refuse to accept him, but must show reasonable cause.

"No ships are held up and no restriction is placed on the operators' right to hire and fire," Curran added. "We merely ask for cause of discharge, which procedure is followed in every industry throughout the country. It is the right of any employe to discover why he has been discharged or rejected."

800 Sugar Workers Strike For Pay Boost

BALTIMORE, Feb. 22.—Eight hundred striking CIO sugar workers maintained their picket line today at the local plant of the American Sugar Co. as their demands for increased wages and improved working conditions went into its third week.

The strike, conducted by United Sugar Workers Local Industrial Union 276, received additional support last weekend when 11 leaders of CIO and AFL locals in five of the firm's east coast refineries met in Baltimore and pledged their cooperation.

Major grievance of the 800 strikers is the company's wage differential, which keeps their base pay rate at 50c an hour while the base rate in the Philadelphia refinery amounts to 63c an hour.

The local has appealed to all CIO affiliates to place the firm's products—Domino, Franklin and H. & E. sugars on the unfair list, and to assist their struggle with cash donations and food.

Allis Strike Still On As Parleys Fail

West Allis, Feb. 22 — The strike at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. went into its fourth week with no prospect of immediate peace at the West Allis plant, which normally employs 7,000 workers.

The union, Local 248 of the United Automobile Workers, has been seeking higher wages and the union shop.

Sports Parley In Connecticut

Waterbury, Conn., Feb. 22.—A conference to build a state CIO sports program in Connecticut has been called here by Pres. T. R. Molloy of the State CIO Council.

"Organized labor is opening its eyes to the importance of sports in attracting young workers and consolidating them in their unions," Molloy said in explaining the CIO body's interest in a well-rounded sports program.

Chinese Laundry Signs With CIO

New York, Feb. 22 — The first labor agreement reached with a Chinese steam laundry in the Bronx was signed today after an eight-hour strike by the CIO Almalgamated Clothing Workers.

The closed shop pact signed by Chin Lok, head of the China Wet Wash Laundry, lifted wages for the 50 employes, and brought vacations and holiday with pay, reduction in hours and improved working conditions.

1,420 Fatal Accidents in Coal Mines

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Death enjoyed a highly successful year in the nation's coal mines, the CIO United Mine Workers Journal reported today.

The figure represented an increase of 342 over the previous year and marked the highest level since 1931.

"In addition to having the largest number of fatalities since 1931, the year 1940 had more deaths from major exploson disasters than in any year since 1928," the UMW paper reported.

Commenting on the 1940 death record, the Bureau of Mines declared:

"The accident record of the coal mines of the United States in 1940 gives those engaged in the industry very little cause for rejoicing. In fact, the situation is one which must be given very serious thought and relatively quick action if the coal mining industry of this country is to be saved the stigma of causing not only a national but even a worldwide scandal in the callousness with which the lives of workers in the coal mines of the United States are being sacrificed.

". . . The six major coal mine explosion disasters in 1940 averaged 46 fatalities per disaster in coal mining in the United States since 1906, except the average of 58 per major disaster in 1913 and the average of 51 in 1907."

Unsuccessful in its effort to get mine safety legislation passed by Congress at its last session, the UMW is now putting all its strength behind the Federal Mine Inspection Bill introduced by Rep. Flannery of Pennsylvania.

CIO Wins Bethlehem Strike; Union Files Notice At Ford

Ford Gets Walkout Threat

(See Story Page Three)

Detroit, Mar. 1.—"A strike is impending" at the Ford Motor Co., the CIO United Automobile Workers today notified federal and state officials.

"We prefer the methods of conciliation and collective bargaining; the Ford Motor Co. apparently does not understand that language," UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas and Ford Organizing Director Michael S. Widman wired to Pres. Roosevelt.

Note of the intent to strike was filed with the Michigan Mediation Board, which under state law requires 30 days notice in cases involving defense production.

The UAW action followed a series of discharges made in defiance of a Labor Board order, upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court, directing Ford to obey the Wagner Act and end discriminatory practices.

Meetings of volunteer organizers and key workers throughout the Highland Park and River Rouge plants ratified the UAW action at a series of three mass meetings.

CIO Wins Aircraft Election

LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y., Mar. 1. — The CIO United Automobile Workers today added another aircraft plant to their string of Labor Board election victories.

Employes of the B. & H. Aircraft Corp., which manufactures airplane parts, voted 115 for the UAW-CIO to only 38 against.

Immediately after the results were known, the management of the firm — where a strike was called a week ago—announced it would enter contract negotiations with the union. The workers are seeking a union shop, 15% wage increases, and a minimum pay of 65 cents an hour.

PICKET 'LITTLE STEEL': Thousands of pickets surrounded gates of the Bethlehem Steel Corp.'s Lackawanna plant, near Buffalo, N. Y., within a few minutes after the Steel Workers Organizing Committee strike went into effect. Union leaders said the strike effectively stopped production in the big mill, which normally employs 14,000 workers.

Haywood Warns Nation Against Anti-Strike Bills

WASHINGTON, Mar. 1.—CIO opposition "to all bills now before Congress for destroying labor's rights on the pretext of national defense," was voiced on a Mutual Broadcasting System network by Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization.

Speaking on the American Forum of the Air program, Haywood asserted:

"We contend that such bills are not necessary to maintain defense production; that they would not have the effect of ending strikes, but on the contrary would increase industrial dictatorship; and, most important of all, that they would strike at the very basis of the democracy which we seek to defend."

Haywood added that "we of the CIO yield to nobody in our patriotism and in our desire to maintain industrial peace, but we maintain that free and unimpaired collective bargaining between unions and employers is the best guarantee and assurance for industrial peace."

CIO BROUGHT PEACE

The CIO official said that the much smaller number of strikes in defense industries in 1940, compared with 1917, was due to the widespread CIO organization which has brought industrial peace to hitherto open shop areas.

"The anti-union bills now before Congress," he pointed out, "would throw a monkey wrench into this peaceful industrial progress."

DEBATES HOFFMAN

Following his address Haywood took part in a lively discussion with Congressmen Clare E. Hoffman from Michigan, who with Senator Joseph H. Ball from Minnesota and Francis P. Fenton, AFL director of organization, also made addresses on the same program.

To Hoffman's statement that two battleships, or 60,000 tons of bombs or quantities of other munitions could have been produced in the time lost by strikes in this country, Haywood replied:

"Does the Congressman recognize that in Great Britain last year they lost 884,000 man-days through strikes, fighting a war for democracy?"

In a tilt with Senator Ball, Haywood said: "Senator, I am a coal miner. We have a very hazardous industry. Under your bill, if we had a dangerous condition in the mine that would blow the mine up and blow every man up in the mine, we wouldn't be allowed to strike now to protect our lives. We would have to petition for time, go down and be killed. I guess we could settle the strike after we attended the funerals."

20th Publishing Firm Signs Pact

New York, Mar. 1—Chalking up its twentieth agreement with publishing firms, the Book and Magazine Guild, representing the employes of Astro Distributing Corp. and Your Guide Publications, Inc., signed a contract with that company on Feb. 24.

The agreement was negotiated in less than a week and provides for a five-day week, recognition of the principle of union wage standards, severance pay, sick leave and vacations with pay, ten holidays annually with pay, time and a half for over-time on week days and Saturdays and double pay for Sundays and holidays.

Bittner Hails Big Victory

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 28. — Striking Bethlehem workers ended their two-day strike at the big Lackawanna plant after hearing a report by Van A. Bittner, Steel Workers Organizing Committee leader, that they had won "one of labor's greatest victories."

The strikers cheered the proposition and voted unanimously to return to their jobs at the plant, where some 14,000 workers are employed.

Bittner said the company had agreed to terms suggested by the OPM officials in Washington — rehiring of the workers, negotiations with the union over grievances at the Lackawanna plant, and a plan by the OPM to "explore with the National Labor Relations Board the possibility of holding an eection to determine the bargaining agency at the Lackawanna plant."

The proposals were a marked set-back for Bethlehem Steel, which in the past has refused to recognize the union or negotiate with it.

CIO Under Ban In India!

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 1. — CIO organizing literature is now banned from India, even in the form of waste paper.

This was disclosed when officials of CIO longshoremen's local 1-6, which has jurisdiction over the baling and shipping of waste paper, were notified that the British Government had sent back one crumpled leaflet, issued during the UAW organizing drive at the North American Aviation plant. The leaflet had somehow been swept up, baled with other waste paper and shipped to India.

There it had evidently been carefully spread out, deciphered, and returned. Future shipments will be watched, union officials were told, to make sure that no such waste paper again offends the British Government officials.

Coast Longshore Pact Boosts Pay $2,500,000

SAN FRANCISCO, Mar. 1.—Wages for all Pacific Coast longshoremen will be boosted more than two and a half million dollars a year under a two-year contract signed between the International Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union and the Waterfront Employers Association. The agreement went into effect at midnight, Feb. 20, Harry Bridges, ILWU president, announced this week.

The terms of the wage increase call for five cents more an hour on straight time and ten cents on overtime, Bridges said.

The increase will also apply to some 900 AFL longshoremen in three Northwest ports, the same group that Joseph Ryan of the AFL Intl. Longshoremen's Association is fighting to have recognized separately at a re-hearing granted by the National Labor Relations Board, Bridges declared.

"It is somewhat ironical," he said, "that at the time we were negotiating the wage increase for these same AFL longshoremen, they were attempting to break the coastwise bargaining unit that made it possible to get a two-year contract and a wage increase."

PRAISES LEWIS' HELP

"It should be remembered," Bridges declared, "that it was to a great degree through the help of John L. Lewis that we were able to secure the contract in the first place and now the wage increase."

He noted that the new wage increase "puts West Coast longshoremen far out in front of any AFL longshoremen in all respects —hours, wages and working conditions (except those AFL longshoremen in West Coast ports for whom we bargain and who have benefited through our efforts).

"Joe Ryan's men on the East Coast, some of whom receive $1.05 per hour straight time when working deep water ships, receive $8.50 per day for eight hours, as against our $9 under the new increase."

There are three wage scales on the East Coast — deep water, intercoastal and coastwise, with wages of $1.05, 95c and 85c per hour straight time for an eight-hour day, as against the CIO West Coast scale of $1 per hour for straight time for a six-hour day and $1.50 per hour after 3 P. M. and for all work on Sundays and holidays.

ARBITRATOR STAYS

Both sides agreed to have Dean Wayne L. Morse of the University of Oregon continue as coast arbitrator. Bridges said that "both sides respect and have tremendous faith in him" and that "he has proved himself impartial, honest and fair."

Two officials of ILWU locals—Ed Morton of Seattle, and E. P. Murray of Portland—were also mutually agreed upon as arbitrator's agents, who are subject to call on the job when a dispute arises, to determine how the work shall proceed pending a final decision by the arbitrator.

Captain White, who was selected as a third agent, for the Southern California area, "is well known and liked by the men," Bridges said. "It means real progress that we have been able to get our employers to agree to this type of man."

Parley Due At Southern Textile Mill

Leaksville-Spray, N. C., Mar. 1—(FP)—Contract negotiations with two more mills of the Marshall Field Co. started here as Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi of the CIO Textile Workers Union met with management officials.

Employes of the Marshall Field finishing mill gave the TWU a smashing 17-1 margin, with 306 voting for the union and only 18 against. In the silk mill, once the home of a company union, the CIO got a 5-1 majority, 183-37.

The victories in these mills brings to 11 straight the number of elections won by the union in this area. Seven of the eight Marshall Field plants are now enjoying union representation, and plans are already in progress to ask for an election in the bleachery, sole remaining Marshall Field plant outside the union.

The rug, bedspread, woolen, blanket and sheeting mills of Marshall Field have been operating under union contract for nearly a year and a half.

Murray Greets Whelan Strike

New York, Mar. 1 — Units of the Whelan Drug Store chain today remained closed as the strike of Local 1199, United Retail and Wholesale Employes gained national as well as local support.

From Washington, Pres. Philip Murray sent this wire to Secretary-Manager, Benjamin Gudes of the local:

"Please give my greetings to the strikers at the United Cigar-Whelan Stores Corp. I believe you will be victorious in your efforts to improve the wages and working conditions of your members.

"You may be assured the CIO will support your organization in every possible way."

The local is maintaining pickets in front of United Cigar stores throughout metroplitan New York advising the public that the chain is on the unfair list. All 53 Whelan drug stores in the city are closed by the strike.

Settle Store Strike After 3 Months

New York, Mar. 1.—One hundred striking employes of Vim Electric Co.'s 28 radio and sporting goods stores in the metropolitan area have returned to work under a stipulation calling for discharge of strikebreakers. The strike lasted three months.

Questions of hours, wages and working conditions will be arbitrated by Ben Golden, prominent New York arbiter. The union is Local 830, United Retail & Wholesale Employes, CIO.

In an effort to win customers at the picketed stores, the company had offered two free movie passes to any youngster accompanied by a parent.

MINE DEATHS

Washington. — Some 1,420 coal miners lost their lives in fatal accidents during 1940, the U. S. Bureau of Mines reports.

Unionists Aid Ill Worker

CLEVELAND, Mar. 1. — Members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee—two busloads of them—turned out this week to help a union brother injured in an automobile accident.

Arthur Hogue, employed as a truck driver by the Otis Steel Co., was struck by a car as he walked across a road near Barberton, 35 miles from here.

Taken to the hospital, Hogue was recovering steadily until he suffered a sudden relapse. Physicians called his wife and asked that she find blood donors.

Mrs. Hogue called the SWOC local office. Soon, about 50 steel workers, in two chartered buses, left for Barberton to offer their services to their brother unionist.

Toy Workers Sweep Poll, 598-18

Glendale, W. Va., Mar. 1 — The United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers International Union scored a smashing victory in the Ohio Valley when it swept an NLRB election in the Marx Toy plant of this city, by a vote of 598 in favor and only 18 against.

International Organizer Nicholas Vrataric, ably assisted by sub-Regional Director Adolph Pacifico, had been working for a number of weeks on this plant which is one of the largest toy plants in the world employing some 850 workers.

When fully 85 per cent of the workers were signed up, the firm was approached with the request for recognition as sole bargaining agency. But the firm demurred claiming that it was not convinced that the union really represented a majority of their employes. Upon the consent of the firm an NLRB election was held on Feb. 20 with the results as already indicated.

With this election out of the way, the International hopes to score similar results in the other plants of the same firm. Negotiations for a contract with the Marx Toy Co. are expected to begin soon.

New Jersey Strike Wins Pay Boost

Carteret, N. J., Mar.1—(FP)— Management concessions, including payment of $15,000 a year in bonuses and an increase in minimum wages from 60 to 65 cents an hour, brought to an end the one-week strike of 800 workers at the Foster-Wheeler Corp. here.

The contract, negotiated by the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, also provides for 2- week vacations after five years, prohibition of strikes or lockouts, time-and-a-half for Saturday and Sunday work, the 40-hour week and job protection for draftees.

Dyers Win Three-Day Walkout

Norwich, Conn., Mar. 1 — A three-day strike of 800 workers at the U. S. Finishing Co., here has ended with a smashing victory for the union. The Dyers Federation, affiliate of the CIO Textile Workers Union, won recognition and a general 10 per cent pay increase in a three-year agreement signed with the company.

The walkout was precipitated by the management's refusal to bargain collectively with the union. By the second day of the strike every worker in the plant had left his job. A 24-hour picketline was on duty and the workers refused to go back until the company negotiated an agreement.

Main terms of the contract, reached after conferences lasting from 10:30 p. m. until five the next morning, in addition to the 10 per cent pay boost, call for one week's paid vacation; preferential union shop, arbitration of unjust discharges; 50 cents hourly minimum pay for men and 45 cents for women and the right to reopen wage negotiations yearly.

650 Strike BVD Plant

New York, Mar. 1 — [illegible] support of the 650 employes of the BVD Corp., Baltimore, Md., who went on strike Feb. 19, has been promised by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Jacob S. Potofsky, general secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated, said the Baltimore strike was a spontaneous walkout not called by the ACW, but that the union is giving the strikers its fullest support.

The BVD workers are demanding union recognition, pay increases and adjustment of grievances.

HOPE FOR PEACE

Potofsky expressed the hope that the BVD Corp. with which the union has had unofficial relations for some time, would agree to a settlement of the dispute on the basis of union agreements covering the largest part of the industry.

"We know that the BVD workers do not desire loss of time due to a stoppage," Potofsky said, "but they must have had great provocation to quit work. They are only demanding the reasonable wage and working conditions established under Amalgamated contracts in the unionized section of the industry."

CIO Backs Strike On Jewish 'Day'

New York, Mar. 1.—Mass picketing and publication of a daily strike paper were introduced here by the New York Newspaper Guild in its strike at the Jewish day, Yiddish language newspaper.

The paper's commercial department and a large number of the editorial workers walked out after the management fired a number of persons and instituted wage cuts running up to 50 per cent.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, announced that the "CIO will give full support to the Guild in this strike and do its utmost to bring about a settlement with the employer."

Jack Ryan, organizer for the Guild, said charges would be filed with the Labor Board asserting that pre-strike firings were clearly for the purpose of keeping workers from joining a union of their own choice."

Placards carried by the strikers were printed in both English and Yiddish. One said: "A scab is a scab in any language."

CIO Wins Big Strike At Bethlehem Steel

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 28.—Settlement of the Bethlehem Steel strike was voted today by cheering members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee after they were informed the big corporation had bowed to their major demands.

Van A. Bittner, head of the SWOC's Bethlehem drive, said that the company had agreed to rehire workers with full seniority, negotiate with the union on grievances and consent to an NLRB election within 30 days.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 28—Bethlehem Steel Co. today reaped the dividends of its long anti-labor policy as 14,000 CIO members at the big Lackawanna plant went out on strike.

Bethlehem Steel, second largest corporation in the industry, has over a billion dollars in U. S. national defense contracts. The firm has consistently refused efforts of the SWOC to bring about a peaceful settlement of difficulties, and at the present time is contesting a National Labor Relations Board order in the courts.

Van A Bittner, veteran union leader who directs the Bethlehem organizing campaign, said: "We will give them all we have."

John Riffe, Bittner's assistant, emerged from a conference with federal conciliators just before the union's deadline and said:

"The strike is on. We have had no statement from the Bethlehem management showing that they are willing to negotiate."

SOUGHT PEACEFUL METHOD

As the company continued its die-hard anti-union policy, the SWOC took all possible steps to avoid a strike. Bittner came to Washington, conferred with OPM associate director-general Sidney Hillman and then traveled to Pittsburgh for final parley with SWOC Chairman Philip Murray.

Hillman immediately dispatched two assistants—C. F. Ching and Vice-Pres. Thomas Burns of the United Rubber Workers—to make a "factual study" of the situation and report back within 48 hours.

THREE DEMANDS

Three principal demands were listed by Bittner during his visit to Washington:

"1. Bethlehem Steel must return those employes who have been suspended or discharged to their jobs with full seniority.

"2. Bethlehem Steel should comply with the order of the National Labor Relations Board which is outstanding, and discontinue its unfair labor practices.

"3. Bethlehem Steel must consent to an immediate election under the auspices of the NLRB among the employes of the company in the Buffalo area and engage in collective bargaining with the SWOC in the event it is chosen by the majority of the employes as their representatives."

In Buffalo, meanwhile, the

Auto Union Files Strike Notice At 3 Ford Plants

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Mar. 1.—The UAW-CIO on Wednesday notified the State Labor Mediation Board that "a strike is impending" in the plants of the Ford Motor Co., and at the same time informed President Roosevelt that unlawful acts of the company had resulted in "an accumulation of grievances which constitute an intolerable situation."

The union's action grew directly out of a series of discharges Tuesday and Wednesday in defiance of a labor board order, sustained by the U. S. Supreme Court and the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, directing the company to cease its interference with the organiation of Ford workers into the UAW-CIO.

The notice to the state board is required by the State labor mediation act which stipulates a five-day waiting period in any case, and in cases where public interest is involved of thirty days. The state board in recent months has interpreted the 30-day provision as applicable to companies engaged in national defense work.

UAW'S STATEMENT

"We prefer the methods of conciliation and collective bargaining; the Ford Motor Co. apparently does not understand that language," the union's telegram, signed by Pres. R. J. Thomas and Ford Division Director Michael F. Widman, Jr., said.

"We are mindful of the particular need in these days of emergency for peaceful adjustment of labor disputes. We are wholeheartedly in support of our national defense program. If there can be avenues opened for adjustment of our grievances without a strike, we are ready to use those avenues."

The day before the strike notice was filed the union had asked the National Labor Relations Board to proceed against the company on

War of Nerves Getting Ford

DETROIT, Mar. 1.—Ford's mad.

The Ford Motor Co. has withdrawn from participation in the Michigan Hospitalization Service Plan because of the presence on the board of Richard Frankensteen, official of the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Frankensteen commented: "The action of the Ford Motor Co. penalizes the Ford workers. There are apparently few steps the Ford Motor Co. will not take in its efforts to resist the growth of our union."

CIO Lifts Pay $500,000 In Campbell Soup Pact

CHICAGO, March 1.—Campbell's Soup Co., the world's largest cannery, today had signed its first CIO contract and agreed to lift wages by 500,000 a year.

The agreement, covering the Chicago and Camden, N. J., plants, was hailed by Pres. Donald Henderson of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers as a major triumph in the CIO drive to organize the nation's low-paid cannery workers.

The 5,000 year-round employes, and the 3,000 seasonal workers will receive a flat wage increase of 7½ per cent, Henderson said, with individual pay boosts running all the way from four cents to 25c an hour.

WON ELECTIONS

Signing of the contract followed UCAPAWA victories in Labor Board elections conducted at the two plants in October and December of last year.

"In addition to securing wage increases for Campbell's Soup workers which puts their wage scale at the top of the canning industry," Henderson commented, "these contracts contain gains for the workers including paid vacations and holidays, plant wide seniority, plant and department grievance machinery and a policy on the part of the company to give all its regular employes forty hours of work a week.

"Cannery workers everywhere will be encouraged and stimulated to join the CIO in increased numbers as a result of this splendid achievement by the Campbell Soup workers."

SET BASIC PAY

Minimum pay under the contract was established at 62 cents an hour for men, 50½ cents for boys and 48½ cents for women. Time and a half will be paid for work done over the basic eight-hour day, 40-hour week. Saturday and Sunday work will also bring time-and-a-half pay, except during August and September, when a 10 per cent bonus will be paid. Work done between 6 P. M. and 6 A. M. will also be at the 10 per cent bonus rate.

UCAPAWA officials reported that signing of the contract spurred the union's organization campaign at the big Seabrook plant in Bridgeton, N. J., and at the Libby, McNeill and Libby plant in Chicago.

" 'Eat Campbell's Soup' can now become a slogan throughout the entire labor movement with the unionization of this company's workers and the conclusion of this outstanding union contract," Henderson said.

Industrial Profits Soar, Workers' Income Held Down, Murray Tells School Men

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Mar. 1.—American big business, enjoying the greatest profits in a decade or more, is flatly refusing to share its prosperity with the millions of American workers, CIO Pres. Philip Murray charged in a speech delivered here to the American Assn. of School Administrators.

Six leading corporations, he told the school officials, made a profit in 1940 of $699,780,000 from the work of 885,000 employes.

General Motors, he recounted, made a net profit of $977 on each of its employes. American Telephone & Telegraph netted $528. Standard Oil of New Jersey made $2,000 per worker. DuPont did even better, with $2,220 per worker. General Electric earned $826 per employe, U. S. Steel $420.

IS IT FAIR?

"Is this a fair economic system?" Murray asked. "Does this kind of system provide American workers with an equitable distribution of corporate profits?"

Murray said he has had frequent conversations with leading industrialists during the past few weeks and explained that some of these super-profits should be used for wage increases.

"Unfortunately, the attitude of American industry today is one of absolute, positive refusal to make wage concessions of any description," the CIO leader declared.

FAT BOYS WANT WAGES DOWN

"They contend that if the wage structure is improved and men and women are given more money that it might result in something they call 'inflation'. The country might go haywire under the impact of inflation—so they suggest, these leaders of American industry, very bluntly, very boldly, that nothing should be done in the U. S. A. during the period of national defense to improve living standards or to increase wages."

If the nation's defense program is jeopardized, Murray warned, it will be "attributable to the unwillingness of these large employers of labor" to recognize the needs of the workers.

In a reference to a corporation that was obviously the Bethlehem Steel Co., Murray pointed out that despite all the talk of an emergency, "one single corporation is producing approximately 70 per cent of our nation's armor plate, building approximately 70 per cent of our nation's merchant marine.

INDUSTRIAL BOTTLENECK

"It has $1,250,000,000 of government business on its books right now and it cannot hope to execute the performance of these contracts within 3½ years. Now there is a bottleneck."

The CIO leader declared he had been told by a government official that only 30 per cent of 12,000 corporations capable of producing national defense materials had received U. S. orders.

That indicates, he charged, "a complete, total lack of understanding of these productions problems as they relate themselves to questions of national defense."

Edmundson Hits Illinois 'Gestapo' Plan

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 1.—Illinois CIO Director Ray Edmundson today warned state officials of the dangers involved in "using gasoline as a fire extinguisher."

Edmundson, who heads the Illinois district of the United Mine Workers, wrote to Atty.-Gen. George F. Barrett and voiced severe criticism of plans announced by Barrett to set up a volunteer, semi-official agency against "subversive activity."

"As a patriotic citizen devoted passionately to his country and its heritage of liberty, I must express my unqualified fears that your proposal is a big step in the directon of the very totalitarianism all America hates, despises and will fight," Edmundson declared.

Two Outlaws

If two desperadoes ran amuck, violating the property rights and threatening the lives of honest citizens, and refusing to obey the laws—the police would be on their tails in no time.

But when such outlawry is on a mass-production scale, it seems to make a difference.

The Ford Motor Co. and the Bethlehem Steel Corp. have long been running amuck. They have violated the rights of countless union men, and deprived many of them of their livelihood. They have refused to obey the labor laws and to bargain with their organized employes.

The conviction of these outlaw companies has been upheld from court to court. But instead of being punished, they have been rewarded by the government with the juiciest of war contracts.

It has been left up to the workers themselves to protect their rights and to compel these companies to obey the law.

The great organizing campaigns of the CIO among the tens of thousands of employes of Ford and Bethlehem have been labor's answer.

These campaigns have been so successful that the CIO now represents a majority of the employes of both companies, and is confident of winning the Labor Board elections for which it has petitioned.

But the reaction of both outlaw companies to the organization of their workers has been similar. Both have refused to negotiate union agreements or to agree to elections. On the contrary, they have responded with wholesale firings of union members; and the Ford company has even attempted to intimidate workers into joining an AFL company union.

Ford has driven his employes to serve notice of intent to strike; though the UAW-CIO has also notified Pres. Roosevelt that "if there can be avenues opened for adjustment of our grievances without a strike, we are ready to use those avenues."

Similarly Bethlehem has provoked strike action at its plants, to compel the company to obey the Labor Act; to rehire discharged unionists; and to agree to an election and to collective bargaining with the workers' chosen representative.

In other words, all the CIO asks is that these two outlaws be made to obey the labor law, so that the workers may not be compelled to strike to defend their rights and their livelihoods from lawless depredations.

Inflation

The favorite excuse of American big business in its present refusal to agree to long-overdue wage increases in the major industries, is that they might result in "inflation."

This is, in effect, an attempt to tie wages and prices together—a threat to make price increases a condition of granting wage increases.

So far, the only "inflation" in evidence is the inflation of profits. Wage increases, labor contends, would reduce and remedy this lopsided and unhealthy inflation. They could be paid from the present huge profits, without any need for price increases.

Profiteering industrialists are raising the bogey of inflation to distract attention from labor's claim to a share of their profits. They are trying to bulldoze the government into either backing their refusal to raise wages or approving of their price increases.

But the real choice is not between low wages and inflation; it is between inflated profits, on the one hand, and a healthier distribution of earnings on the other.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

PHILIP MURRAY threw down a challenge to labor as well as to industry, in his outstanding speech before the American Assn. of School Administrators at Atlantic City.

It was a fighting labor speech, delivered extemporaneously and from the heart, and dealing with domestic issues.

It cut like a searchlight through the midsts of hatred, prejudice and confusion that are spreading to our country from the European war and even seeping into labor's ranks.

It was a reminder to labor that if it is true to itself, and to its principles, it cannot then be false to any man — or to its country.

Confusions and Hatreds

"There is in the United States today more confused thinking than there has been at any time during the course of my life," Murray said.

"We talk of the hatreds that have developed between the leaders of the British Empire and the leaders of the German government.

"These confusions and hatreds are making themselves evident in the U. S. A. today. All leaders in the field of statecraft are giving voice to their opinions in the spirit which indicates prejudice, hatred and confusion.

"I do not read in the newspapers of any distinguished leader in the field of politics arising upon the floor of the federal Congress discussing the internal economic upheavals that are taking place in the United States today."

Murray on his part arose to talk about the "internal ramparts" of our country and the economic well-being of its population — the all-important defenses of a people's welfare that tend to be overlooked in a period of war fever.

He quoted profit figures to show the enormous toll which the owners of industry are taking from the labor of their employes.

Six corporations alone made net profits of $699,780,000 in 1941 from labor of 885,000 workers.

General Electric made a net profit of $826 per employe; Standard Oil of New Jersey, $2,000 per employe; and each worker for the DuPonts contributed as much as $2,220 in the year to their coffers.

Breeding Conflict

In face of these enormous profits, in face of this glaring inequality between the rewards of capital and labor, Murray reported from his own recent experience that leading industrialists are refusing to agree to wage increases.

"Unfortunately," he said, "the attitude of American industry today is one of absolute, positive refusal to make wage concessions of any description.

"They suggest, these leaders of American industry, very bluntly, very boldly, that nothing should be done in the U. S. A. during the period of national defense to improve living standards or to increase wages.

"At the same time they say nothing should be done in the United States by government, labor or industry to disturb the profit-making opportunities of American industry."

Murray made it very clear that it is this kind of attitude on the part of industrialists — and the refusal of some of the biggest to obey the law and bargain collectively — that breed industrial conflict.

Challenge to Labor

These are but a few of the high spots of a speech which sharply called attention back to unemployment, low wages, post war depression and other internal problems.

It was a reminder to labor of the seriousness of the domestic situation that confronts it; a reminder to look to the solidarity and unity of its own ranks, and not to allow them to be split by the "prejudice, hatred and confusion" engendered by foreign wars.

For right today, the CIO is confronted with its most serious challenge from two giant industrial despots — Ford and Bethlehem Steel.

Both these companies, among the biggest war profiteers, are refusing to recognize or negotiate with their workers' unions, or to agree to elections; and are ruthlessly firing union men — in an apparent attempt to force a showdown on their workers' right to organize.

Meanwhile, in most of the major industries, the employers are offering an organized resistance to all demands for increased wages, as Murray pointed out.

They are standing together, guarding their inflated profits against any and all labor claims; and in effect, daring labor to exert its utmost power to get its due.

At the same time, the Fords, Bethlehems and the rest are hopefully waiting for passage of anti-union and anti-strike legislation which will bind labor into helpless subjection to their profiteering exploitation.

It is in the light of all these dangers and opportunities that Murray called labor's attention back to its own problems and its own foremost duties, in his Atlantic City speech.

FERDINAND PICKETS: Ferdinand Sonneborn, head of a New York Paint firm, told striking CIO office workers that he "is not able to talk" when asked why he wouldn't bargain in good faith. Union retorted with a picket line around Sonneborn's residence at the swanky Savoy Plaza Hotel and a sign, "You know that's the bull, Ferdinand." Union even had a paper mache bull, representing Ferdie, on the picket line.

CIO Files Strike Notice At Ford Plants

contempt charges for violating the board's order.

40 WORKERS FIRED

The immediate cause of that action was the discharge of 40 union members in the Rouge glass plant—an incident which ended in a notable victory for the union. After the demand for contempt citation had been made, everyone of the 40 were rehired by the company and went back to work Wednesday morning.

The company had insisted that the men walked off the job and that all they had to do to go back to work was tell why they walked off. That question was put to each of the 40 by Employment Manager Miller and the response of each was the same—because they had been ordered off the job by the plant superintendent, as the union had stated all along. So they were all rehired.

BILL OF COMPLAINTS

In the notice filed with the state board, Maurice Sugar, counsel for the UAW-CIO, said:

"The Ford Motor Co. has over a long period of time discharged, discriminated against, intimidated, coerced and assaulted and continues to discharge, discriminate against, intimidate, coerce and assault thousands of its employes because of their membership in, or activity for, the UAW-CIO; the company is flagrantly and repeatedly disobeying the order of the NLRB, forbidding it to engage in unfair labor practices, both before and since the order was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States."

The temper of the Ford workers rose to a high pitch this week as the company continued its discriminations, despite the labor board order and despite the posting of notices in the plant last week stating it would comply with the order.

Its actions are having the opposite to the effect intended by the management, for the Ford workers continue to flock into the union and to demand that steps be taken to stop the illegal practices of the company.

APPROVED BY WORKERS

In their telegram to the President, Thomas and Widman explained that their action was taken on authority voted to the officers of the union "at departmental meetings of Rouge, Lincoln and Highland Park employes. These meetings represent the overwhelming majority of the workers in these plants.

"Within the ten days provided by the NLRB for notice of compliance with its decisions, the Ford Motor company has flagrantly and on a wholesale scale disregarded and violated an order of the board which has been validated by the U. S. Circuit Court and the Supreme Court of the United States," the telegram continued.

LAY-OFF AT LINCOLN

"Numerous active members of the UAW-CIO have been discharged yesterday and today at the Lincoln plant. Although the company claims the Lincoln layoffs are due to seasonal decline in production, the fact is that the most active union men have been laid off, regardless of their length of service.

"These acts have taken place since Feb. 10, when the Supreme Court, by refusing to review the Rouge case, upheld the orders of the NLRB and the Circuit Court that discriminatory discharges and company opposition to the rights of men to join our organization must cease."

Protest Use Of Anti-CIO Textbooks

Oakland, Calif., Mar. 1 — Officials of the Alameda Industrial Union Council have filed a vigorous protest against the use of anti-CIO textbooks in the public schools.

In a letter to the Dept. of Education of the state of California, Council Pres. Paul Schlipf called particular attention to a volume entitled "The Story of Our Land and People" by Glenn W. Moon of the Stamford, Conn., public schools.

On one page, the Council president noted, the author said the story of the CIO "cannot yet be told because we know too little about it." Then, Schlipf wrote, "he proceeds to damn the CIO with faint praise and outright lies."

"Many children in the public schools know that the statements referred to in this book are false," he added. "Continued use of such material will only create skepticism and contempt in the minds of our children toward the whole educational system and toward those responsible for its direction."

New York CIO Unions Condemn Tory Bills

ALBANY, N. Y.—Leaders of CIO and AFL unions in the Empire State joined forces today to attack proposed "model anti-sabotage" bills under consideration by the New York State Legislature.

The bills, drawn up after a conference of federal and state law enforcement officers sponsored by the Dept. of Jutice last year, have been frequently condemned by CIO Pres. Murray and other leaders of the organization as a direct threat to labor.

Testifying against the model bills at the legislative hearings here were Gustav Strebel, president of the State CIO Council; William Mangold and Harry Sacher, legislative representative and counsel for the New York City CIO Council; Vice-Pres. Leo Jandreau of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; and T. J. Lyons, head of the New York Federation of Labor.

Sacher, offering the opinion that present laws fully covered the situation and that the proposed legislation would be used almost entirely to hamstring labor, quoted from an article by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, to the effect:

"We are being offered a model 'denial of free speech, free press and free assembly bill' which will insure a rich harvest of local Hitlers."

Shipyard Union Hits 'Freeze-Wage' Effort

CAMDEN, N. J., Mar. 1. — Weeks of peaceable and cooperative negotiations between the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and three employers were thrown into confusion recently by "an unprecedented meddling by two government agencies," the Shipyard Worker, official organ of the union, declared this week.

"Five yards were involved in this potentially most dangerous situation ever faced by the union," the paper said. The danger was averted only by the quick action of the union's national officials.

"On Feb. 14, Secretary of the Navy, Frank Knox, and Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the U. S. Maritime Commission, dispatched telegrams to all commercial shipyards holding contracts with their agencies to make no changes in existing wage scales until authorized by the government.

UNION IN PARLEYS

"This order came through at the very moment that Local 3 was negotiating with Pusey & Jones; Local 15 with Bethlehem Hoboken Works; Local 25 with Bethlehem's two East Boston yards, and Local 31 with the Maryland Drydock. It meant that employers, ready and willing to negotiate wage increases, were being told not to by the government.

"The effect of this on the local's negotiating committees need scarcely be described. Outraged indignation would be a mild way of putting it."

This action by Knox and Land was taken "as an unwarranted violation of collective bargaining rights, and as a life and death challenge to the IUMSWA," the Shipyard Worker said, and Union President John Green and Secretary Philip Van Gelder "went to bat on the issue."

Wires hummed between the national union office and Washington, as protests were lodged with various government agencies. A conference was arranged between the ship union officials, and Sidney Hillman, associate director general of the Office of Production Management. A naval and a Maritime Commission representative also attended.

"The outcome of this conference was a sweeping victory for the IUMSWA," the Shipyard Worker declares. "Sustained was a decision of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee at its Jan. 22 meeting that its wage freezing proposal, in order to attempt working out of uniform coastwide standards, would not apply to yards currently in negotiations with the IUMSWA."

Lawyers Guild Hits Tory Proposals

Washington, Mar. 1 — The National Lawyers' Guild's executive board today had adopted a policy statement viewing "with deep concern the efforts now being made to break down our civil liberties, the rights of labor and the whole fabric of social legislation."

The statement, adopted at a board meeting in Washington, declared:

"We repudiate the proposition that our democracy can be protected or our national defense served by the destruction of democracy itself.

OPPOSE 'MODEL' BILLS

"We oppose all attempts to curtail labor's rights to organize and to strike, or to impose upon labor any form of compulsory mediation or arbitration. We oppose pending legislation to legalize wire tapping and the so-called 'model' bills recently introduced in several state legislatures, which, under the guise of national defense against sabotage, might provide an effective instrument for interference with free speech and labor's rights."

The lawyers' organization also opposed deportation of Harry Bridges, condemned anti-Negro discrimination in the defense program, criticized efforts to cut relief and unemployment benefits and urged "the unimpaired protection of all labor legislation and labor's rights."

Super-Profits & Low Wages

Excerpts from the speech of Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO, before the American Association of School Administrators, February 25, 1941 at Atlantic City, N. J.:

I come to talk to you about the economic well-being of the greatest nation in the universe and what it is that you and I, and the millions of this nation can do in a constructive way to not only maintain the economic well-being of our people here but to improve very definitely the lives and the social outlook of these countless millions of wage earners scattered throughout this great country of ours.

I had occasion to glance through reports of some of our industries and those reports indicated some rather startling revelations. The reports in themselves have created a feeling of wonderment in the minds of the people, and I should like, in passing, just to make reference to a few of them in order that you may have a greater appreciation of the things that I am going to talk to you about later.

'Blue-Chip' Profits

General Motors Corporation, giving employment to some 200,000 profited to the extent of $195,500,000 on those 200,000 employes during 1940.

Standard of New Jersey netted a profit of $110,000,000 on some 55,000 employes.

DuPont Corporation net profit $99,900,000 with approximately 45,000 employes.

The total net profits of these six corporations for the year 1940 being $699,780,000 on 885,000 employes. Now you might ask, what is this all about?

It means this—that the General Motors Corporation on each employe for the year 1940 had a net profit of $977 per employe. The figure based on the average of the employes of the General Motors Corporation are approximately $4 per day profit on each employe.

The American Telegraph & Telephone netted $528 per employe. The Standard of New Jersey netted $2,000 per employe. The U. S. Steel Corporation netted something approximating $420 per employe. DuPont netted $2,220 per employe. The General Electric had a net profit of $826 per employe.

Is this a fair economic system? Does this kind of a system provide for workers employed in American industry an equitable distribution of the profits derived from individual efforts and initiative in American industry?

I have had an opportunity within the past few weeks to engage myself in discussion with some of the most outstanding industrialists in the United States. I was talking to them about improved living standards. I also suggested to them that there should be taken from these enormous profits some money that should be given to their employes in the way of wage increases.

'Information' Bogey

Unfortunately the attitude of American industry today is one of absolute, positive refusal to make wage concessions of any description. They contend that if the wage structure is improved and men and women are given more money that it might result in something they call "inflation". The country might go haywire under the impact of inflation — so they suggest, these leaders of American industry, very bluntly, very boldly, that nothing should be done in the U. S. A. during the period of national defense to improve living standards or to increase wages.

At the same time nothing should be done in the United States by government, labor or industry to disturb the profit-making opportunities of American industry.

You read from day to day about strikes taking place here and there. I read yesterday in the New York Times of some 17 strikes involving 23,000 people at plants having government contracts, and those 23,000 workers were involved in strikes after collective bargaining had broken down and the employers had resisted their efforts to improve the standards. The employers contend that under no consideration could they yield or make concessions of any description to their employes if these concessions meant increased labor costs.

Industry & The Public

It is these attitudes on the part of mighty, important business men that create conflict. It is these economic disturbances that not only cause strikes and the spilling of blood but international convulsions. We are talking about breeding better world relations. We are talking in the United States today of supporting the enactment of legislation which will tend to promote democracy and yet we have employers of labor in the U. S. A. even today, that refuse to recognize their labor when their labor is organized into labor unions. We have a law upon the statute books which states to employers throughout the nation that "thou shall not interfere with the right of labor to join organizations of their own choosing for the purpose of collective bargaining . . ."

And yet we have a number of very substantial employers in the U. S. A. who violate that law. They are quite frank and candid about it. They defy the law and use the system of espionage. They incarcerate people in prison because those people seek to join an organization of their own choosing.

Just a few days ago, a mighty Steel Corporation addressed 600 letters to 600 employes, discharging them because the men had participated in a local strike to redress grievances. This particular company, when it addressed these letters, stated that they were being discharged because employes who were striking were interfering with national defense.

Yet this particular company has violated the law—not once, but often; was found guilty by the National Labor Relations Board, and despite this has succeeded in procuring $1,250,000,000 of government contracts.

This effects the morale of people. It disturbs people and makes them resentful. Surely in a great country such as ours, there is room for understanding. Surely the council table should be taken advantage of and the rule of reason should be applied.

Labor's Attitude

Constructive, individual thinking out of these problems should be the order of the day. But if America, in the days of national defense, is going to be menaced with industrial turmoil, then that condition will be altogether attributable to the unwillingness of these large employers of labor to recognize the common, ordinary needs of men, women and children who are aspiring to secure for themselves just a little more of this sunlight that God, in His infinite wisdom decrees human beings should have.

It is not the purpose of labor to create conflict or contribute in any way toward interruptions in the continuity of the production of any industry — military or not. It is the purpose of labor to achieve its logical aspirations through the use of reasoning intelligence, counsel and collective bargaining.

Those are labor's methods. It is the way in which labor strives to solve its problems. The problems are the most difficult of solution when these owners of large industrial enterprises, in a state of complete defiance, ignore the problem of collective bargainng, and defy the worker's right to organize and summarily dismiss them when they join labor organizations . . .

We all have a contribution to make to this nation—the big and the little alike—the mighty and the lowly. It is the understanding of labor that we are all striving for a common cause, struggling toward the achievement of a common ideal—the perfection of a better understanding between capital and labor. We in the field of labor have been told that that is what democracy means: — The right to achieve and aspire and improve conditions of labor and the conditions of men, women and children.

Time For Thinking

There is in the United States today more confused thinking than there has been at any time during the course of my life. I think that perhaps some of it is deliberately thrust upon us through the use of propaganda. In the presence of this confusion would it not be well for the U. S. A., those leaders in the field of education, industry, government and agriculture, to do a little checking up with each other and find out what really is wrong — what our problems are, and if through the use of joint reasoning, we cannot apply some sensible solutions to the internal problems now confronting the U. S. A.?

We talk of the hatreds that have developed between the leaders of the British Empire and the leaders of the German government. These hatreds are making themselves manifest from day to day Those confusions, hatreds are making themselves evident in the U. S. A. today. All leaders in the field of statecraft, ea[illegible] giving voice to their opinions in the spirit which indicates prejudice, hatred and confusion.

I do not read in the newspapers of any distinguished leader in the field of politics arising upon the floor of the Federal Congress discussing the internal economic upheavals that are taking place in the United States today. I do not notice any particular leader in the field of statecraft introducing bills or resolutions in the Federal Congress to maintain a degree of stability in our internal national situations after national defense has passed.

For over three years I beseeched Federal Congress and the leaders of both branches of Congress to introduce legislation for the purpose of having the government to commit itself to some system of economic planning to give to those idle million of able bodied citizens an opportunity to work in American industry and American business — and for four years nothing has happened. I think that if the problem of unemployment is going to be solved in the United States it will be solved only after you and the millions back home manifest a greater interest in its constructive solution. . . .

Strikers Bitter As Harvester Reveals Big Profits

CHICAGO, Mar. 1.—Announcement by the International Harvester Corporation of profits exceeding $23,000,000 for the last fiscal year aroused a wave of indignation this week among the 8,000 Harvester workers now striking for higher wages.

"Nothing exposes the untenable position of the company so much as the announcement of such tremendous profit taking," declared Grant Oakes, chairman of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee.

"The fact that the corporation made three times as much in 1940 as in the previous year coincides with the fact that the speed-up of the Harvester Workers has increased three-fold during the recent period," Oakes said.

With the ranks of the workers at the three IHC plants on strike holding firm in the fifth week of the walkouts, other CIO unions in the Chicago area and throughout the country, sent in messages of encouragement and rallied to their support in picketing and mobilizing aid, the FEWOC stated.

THREE PLANTS STRUCK

The three plants on strike are the Tractor Works employing 6,500, and the smaller plants at Richmond, Ind., and Rock Falls, Ill. Employes at the big McCormick Works have also voted to authorize a strike. The union charges that the company is still maneuvering through the use of fake unions and dealings with the AFL, to stave off genuine collective bargaining.

At a conference held in the office of the National Labor Relations Board at which the FEWOC sought to obtain an election at the East Moline Works of International Harvester, the CIO union stated that eight other organizations intervened—five AFL craft unions, one federal AFL local and two independent or company unions.

"We had regarded our petition for an election at the East Moline plant as a test of the company's sincerity," a FEWOC statement declared. "However, the appearance of the old company union with a new name leads us to the conclusion that the company still has demonstrated no intention of creating conditions making possible free and democratic elections.

Negotiate Cluett Strike

Troy, N. Y., Feb. 28 — Negotiations looking towards a settlement of the four day strike at the Cluett-Peabody shirt company were under way here today by the management and leaders of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The strike involved several hundred workers, who sought higher wage rates.

Murray Plan Seen as Boon To Consumers

Washington, Mar. 1 — The defense plan of CIO Pres. Philip Murray was recommended to the Temporary National Economic Committee as "the best consumer program that has been suggested since the war began," when Consumer's Counsel Donald E. Montgomery testified before the committee.

Montgomery pointed out that the protection of American consumers lies in maximum production. He referred to the Murray plan as follows:

"Philip Murray two months ago proposed that the government set up industry councils whose function would be to assure full use of capacity to produce war materials and consumer goods.

"Philip Murray's proposal, within its limits, is in my opinion the best consumer program that has been suggested since the war began. It doesn't attempt to olve all consumer problems, but it goes to the roots of the most vital one —production. I recommend that it receive the Committee's most earnest consideration."

Steel Union Strikes At Bethlehem

SWOC local added a demand for a 25 per cent increase in Bethlehem's sub-standard wages.

About 1,000 workers were dismissed or suspended inside of a week for their union activities, and the demand for union action to meet the company's threat quickly spread through the plant.

Defying a howling blizzard which made streets almost impassable, some 7,500 Lackawanna plant workers walked to union headquarters and voted by 6-1 for the strike of the corporation refused SWOC demands.

"We have been asking for conferences to settle these grievances for the last year and a half," Bittner said. "That is what brought on the discharges. The men asked for a conference to settle the grievances. The company refused and ordered these men to go home."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Demands for organization and aid in negotiating contracts which continue to pour into the national CIO office daily from all quarters, are being met as rapidly as men and resources will permit. Reports received here show that the CIO is going ahead by leaps and bounds.

IN UTILITIES FIELD

Outstanding gains in the utilities field were reported this week in Ohio and West Virginia, with a new contract signed in Youngstown, and a new local organized among employes of The Monongahela West Penn Public Service Co., Fairmont, W. Va.

Harold Straub, director of organization for the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, aided Local 118 of the UWOC in negotiating an agreement with the Ohio Edison Co. calling for sole bargaining rights and substantial pay increases for all employes.

The new local in Fairmont was organized through the efforts of CIO Regional Director Joseph Angelo with the support of the West Virginia and Marion county CIO Councils.

MACK TRUCK PACT

A general five cent pay increase and seven to ten cent bonus for night shift workers was won in a contract signed between the United Automobile Workers and the Mack Truck Corp. in Allentown, Pa. Walter Harris, CIO representative, aided in negotiationg the agreement. Plans are now under way to organize other Mack plants.

DISTRICT 50 WINS STRIKE

Another victory was chalked up at the Niagara Falls plant of the Vanadium Corp. where District 50, United Mine Workers, won a strike last week, and a signed agreement providing a number of gains for the union. Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director, aided District 50 local officials in settling the dispute.

RUBBER UNION AT PEAK

President Sherman Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers announced the winning of an election recently at the Inland manufacturing Co., Dayton, Ohio, where a company union has been functioning for 11 years. The dues paying membership of the URW for January 1941 was the highest in the union's history, Dalrymple said.

The Rubber Workers also won a seven to one victory in an election at the Depew Container Corp., Depew, N. Y.

CLOTHING WORKERS STRIKE

Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and a CIO vice president, reports that strikes at Troy, N. Y. and Atlanta, Ga. against the Cluett-Peabody Co., the large shirt and collar concern, is progressing splendidly, with the spirit of the workers high.

OIL UNION WINS PACT

A contract covering the terminals of the American Oil Co. in the nation's capital has just been concluded, reports B. J. Schafer, representative of the Oil Workers International Union. Terms of the agreement, won only after a strike vote was taken and a 24-hour deadline set, provide pay increases averaging $10 to $15 a month for all workers, and other outstanding gains.

POLL IN COLORADO

An important election is coming up soon at the plant of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., in Pueblo, Colo. CIO Field Representative Frank Bonacci is being sent there to assist the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the election.

GAINS IN MEMPHIS

A closed shop contract signed recently with the Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., Memphis, Tenn., covering nearly 300 Workers at the company's Riverside plant, brings the total number of agreements won by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers in this city up to nine.

HENRY FORD

Henry Ford is again demonstrating his pay-patriotism. Some of the men recently reinstated as a result of a decision by the U. S. Supreme Court have again been ruthlessly discharged. Many other members of the UAWA-CIO also have been fired. This Gestapo terrorism is being practiced against active union men while Ford's Man, Friday, William Green, basking in the Florida sunshine, announces the AFL is conducting a quiet campaign inside the Ford plants. The Ford bosses and service men are acting as AFL organizers. These un-American practices are being challenged and the Ford workers will give the answer to them.

The CIO has asked for an election in all the Detroit area Ford plants and has filed notice that a strike will be called to put an end to the Ford-Bennett brutalities.

Things are popping in the Bethlehem Steel Corporation plants, another vicious anti-union set-up where workers are being denied their lawful rights. SWOC is demanding that the workers' rights be respected and are taking the necessary steps to see that it is done.

THEY LENT A HAND: Banners representing various CIO unions in Los Angeles bear witness to the city-wide CIO cooperation given the United Automobile Workers in their drive to win an NLRB election at the North American Aviation Corp. UAW-CIO led in the poll, will seek a majority in a coming "run-off" vote.

Wire Union Maps Opposition To Communications Merger

NEW YORK, March 1.—Unregulated merger of communications companies will be the main target of a new nationwide campaign being launched by the CIO American Communications Association, Acting President Joseph P. Selly announced today.

Selly, who is Pres. Philip Murray's appointee to represent the CIO on the Labor Advisory Committee of the Defense Communications Board, called upon the entire labor movement, particularly the workers in the communications industry, to help protect the jobs of thousands of wage-earners by participating in the ACA fight.

The name of the committee which has been set up to organize the campaign will be the Merger Defense Committee of ACA. Larry Kelly, ACA leader employed by Mackay Radio, is chairman. One of the main jobs of the committee, acording to Kelly, will be to organize Merger Defense Committees in each of the ACA locals throughout the country.

WARN OF DANGER

In its first public statement, the MDC warned that the Defense Communications Board probably will be "the springboard for uncontrolled merger of land line telegraph companies and consolidation of radio, telegraph and cable companies."

"There is, unfortunately, nothing in the record of the Federal Communications Commission to justify any feeling of confidence that the interests of communications workers will be adequately protected by a board in which the FCC has considerable voice," the committee said.

FCC FAVORS MERGER

"The FCC has recommended merger legislation to Congress and is preparing to introduce a specific measure at this session, the union has been advised.

"The primary danger of the DCB is its wide powers which can be used to wrap uncontrolled merger in patriotic phrases and stuff it down the throats of the workers.

"It is apparent that the drive for unregulated merger is reaching its peak and will require the energies of our entire membership and the support of the labor movement generally to defeat the companies' plot for the creation of a communications monopoly. Merger of the various companies, if not accompanied by guarantees of job security to labor, must not be foisted upon the American public."

Gotham CIO Drive Hailed By City Workers

NEW YORK, Mar. 1—Sold down the river for 20 years by a corrupt racketeering company union. . . .

Sold down the river for over ten years before that by an AFL union that took the attitude, "You can't fight City Hall."

That's the sorry story up to this year of organization among the 14,000 street cleaners, garbage collectors, dump laborers and others in New York City's giant Department of Sanitation.

But now there's a different story! The CIO has come into the Department of Sanitation. Ten days ago the CIO announced its drive to organize the New York Sanitation workers. Since the drive opened they have been pouring into the union by the hundreds every day.

At the end of 10 days of the open CIO campaign, Abram Flaxer, President of the State, County & Municipal Workers of America, which is directing the drive, smilingly reported that the CIO was already firmly established in 56 out of the city's 60 Sanitation districts.

LEAFLET DISTRIBUTORS

Two hundred leaflet distributors from locals of the SCMWA and other CIO unions have turned out at 5:30 a. m. the past two Monday mornings to cover the 200-odd job locations spotted all over the city. Everywhere the Sanitation men greeted them with smiles. Most of the men remarked: "It's about time!"

No wonder the Sanitation men are standing in line to sign their CIO application cards! New York's Sanitation men have an injury rate twice that of the police and fire departments, and a terrific illness rate as a result of working outdoors in all kinds of weather handling all manner of filth. Yet they have the worst sick-leave policy in the City!

They work for wages $10 and $20 a week less than the "prevailing rate" the city is supposed to pay. They work Sundays without pay. They get no overtime pay. They suffer under a feudal system of tyranny which provides heavy fines for infractions of a "code of discipline." This code contains hundreds of petty rules many of which the men are forced to violate in the course of their work. Sure, "It's about time!"

"The biggest drive for the New York CIO in a new field in two years" is the way the Sanitation campaign is described in local CIO circles. To translate these words into deeds the New York CIO has set up a Sanitation Workers Organizing Committee consisting of the following union leaders: Abram Flaxer, chairman; Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union and vice-president of the national CIO; Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union; Julius Emspak, international secretary-treasurer of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and Saul Mills, secretary of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council.

These five leaders, backed by the Industrial Union Council, which last week sat spellbound for two hours during a special order of business on the Sanitation drive, have thrown the whole weight of the New York CIO behind the campaign.

Off Unfair List

Chicago, Mar. 1—The Chicago Printing Trades Unions announced today they had removed from their unfaid lists the publications National Sportsman and Hunting & Fishing.

The two magazines have stopped printing at the notoriously anti-union R. H. Donnelley Co. in Chicago and will be published at a union shop in Philadelphia. The printing unions are now starting a campaign to persuade Time and Life magazines to move from the Donnelley plant.

Win Raise At Pittsburgh Hospital

Pittsburgh, Mar. 1. — David Kanes, President of District 3 of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers of America announced that maintenance employes of West Penn Hospital, organized in Local 255 of the SCMWA, after a threat of strike action have received wage increases granted by the management amounting to $18,000.00 annually.

Action was taken by the West Penn Hospital Board of Directors on February 18th, after the local had distributed leaflets to the employes calling them to a meeting on February 20th to take a strike vote. The increases, which amounted to from $2.00 to $10.00 a month depending on length of service, were granted only to those departments of the hospital organized in the union. Maintenance employes are members of the union, while technical and professional staff are not.

PICKET BVD PLANT: Members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers picket the BVD plant in Baltimore for higher wages and a union contract.

Seamen Rap Dirksen Bill; Defeat Seen

By CORBY PAXTON

WASHINGTON, Mar. 1.—"Who wants the Dirksen Bill?" CIO maritime union leaders were asking this question this week as hearings opened on H. R. 2662, an omnibus bill introduced by Republican Congressman Dirksen of Illinois. The bill would destroy maritime unions by abolishing the union hiring hall, institute compulsory continuous discharge books, force mediation of all labor disputes and virtually outlaw strikes.

The only actual support for the bill, as it came up for hearings before the House Committee for Merchant Marine and Fisheries, came from its author, Rep. Dirksen, and from a John Thomas Taylor, Legislative Chairman for the American Legion.

The American Merchant Marine Institute, speaking through its Attorney Francis Walker, stated that the bill, as written, would create discontent and would undoubtedly create industrial disturbances. Walker further pointed out that there has been virtually no maritime strikes since 1937 and that relations between the shipowners and the CIO National Maritime Union are constantly improving.

DANGEROUS THREAT

Notwithstanding the opposition voiced against this bill however, it remains the most dangerous threat maritime labor has ever faced. The fact that such an anti-union bill would be considered for hearings is an indication that reaction is running wild against organized labor in this country.

Maritime labor—both AFL and CIO—is against the bill. Testifying at the second day's hearings, Samuel J. Hogan of the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, declared: "I would never have believed that such a fascist bill would be considered if I hadn't read it, black on white. It looks like something which would be proposed in Hitler's Germany—but never in free America."

AFL LEADER TESTIFIES

Speaking for the Master, Mates and Pilots' Association (AFL), President James J. Delaney criticized both the newspapers and Rep. Dirksen for having announced that his organization would support the bill. "We are against it," he said. "It is unnecessary because there is plenty of discipline aboard American ships. This bill would create turmoil in the industry."

CIO maritime leaders consider the bill, in its present form, as good as beaten. They charge, however, that its proponents are using it as a smoke-screen to cover up something just as bad.

Meanwhile, literally thousands of seamen are wiring their protests to Rep. S. O. Bland, chairman of the House committee now conducting hearings on it.

Technicians Hit Plan To Slice Pay

New York City, Mar. 1—An emphatic protest was wired to Secretary of the Navy Knox by President Lewis Berne of the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians last week charging that Knox's request for maintaining the status quo in the shipping industry was interfering with the union's negotiations.

"Shipyards have already taken advantage by refusing to bargain collectively with unions of marine draftsmen and designers, or to consider wage adjustments despite millions of dollars in unprecedented profits," Berne declared in his telegram.

ALREADY IN EFFECT

At Federation headquarters here Berne announced that he had learned that a "stand-still" agreement sponsored by the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee — under which shipbuilding companies and unions were not to seek to change the status quo, increase wages or negotiate agreements — had been in effect for some time.

Berne claimed that employers have been stalling negotiations, refusing wage adjustments and paying substandard wages to highly qualified men doing key work in shipbuilding. He also charged that employers with the encouragement and approval of the Navy Dept., have been attempting to perfect a gentlemen's agreement to "freeze" men to their jobs and present salaries.

Office Union Presses For NLRB Poll

New York., Mar. 1. — A mock funeral procession, to remind a New York textile converting firm that its company union was legally and official dead, landed two CIO office union pickets in the hoosegow.

The girls, Nathalie Greenberg and Frances Alper, are members of the United Office & Professional Workers. They were arrested in a novel picket line demonstration at the property of M. Lowenstein Co., which the UOPWA charges has been seeking to avoid a Labor Board election.

Since filing the election petition, a new employes' association has sprung up resembling the company union dissolved by NLRB and court order some time ago.

Allis Strike In 8th Week

West Allis, Wis., Mar. 1 — The strike of 6,500 employes of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. went into its eighth week here as leaders of Local 248, United Automobile Workers, awaited management and government reaction to their six-point peace proposal.

To show their solidarity, 5,000 strikers marched in a parade through the city streets last week.

Leaders of the local said that if the firm failed to accept within three days the union's offer, it would revert to its earlier union shop demand. The proposal calls for the placement of 1,000 workers who are laid off on a preferential hiring list, a blanket wage increase retroactive to January 2; and appointment of a referee in accordance with an agreement wroked out with Labor Dept. and OPM officials in Washington.

Councils Back CIO Defense Plan

Washington, Mar. 1. — An increasing number of CIO council affiliates are urging federal government authorities to adopt the Murray defense plant, John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, announced today.

In Pittsburgh, the executive board of the Steel City Industrial Union Council endorsed the Murray plan and the Reuther plane plan, and sent notice of its action to Pres. Roosevelt. It called on all affiliated locals to take similar steps.

PENNSYLVANIA

CIO unions throughout Pennsylvania were advised by Pres. John Phillips of the state industrial union council to record their support for the plan.

In Toledo, Ohio, Exec. Sec. Kenneth Cole of the city CIO council predicted that body would soon take action to endorse the Murray plan.

James Robb, CIO regional director in Indiana, wired Pres. Roosevelt that adoption of industry-wide councils "would do more than any other suggestion offered to assure adequate supplies for our civilian and military needs."

Nicholas Fontecchio, district director for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in Baltimore, wired the White House that the proposed industry councils "could plan for and make effective the total production which all American citizens seek and desire without sacrificing the social and political rights of the workers in the defense industries."

Cite Farm, Labor Mutual Dependence

Washington, Mar. 1 — Labor and Agriculture have the same goals — increased income and greater purchasing power for the workers of the United States — and can best attain them by meeting their problems together. This was the gist of farmer-labor discussions that marked two recent conferences of corn belt farmers at which labor leaders were invited speakers.

Meetings held at Kansas City, Mo. and Cleveland, Ohio, attended by 200 committeemen and farmer fieldmen of the Federal government's AAA farm program heard both CIO and AFL speakers. Neil Beam, CIO regional director in Missouri, who was himself born and reared on the farm, told the Kansas City group that labor has long recognized the community of interest that should unite agriculture and labor.

Ted Silvey, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO Council, who spoke at the Cleveland meeting, cited unions as an essential of complete democracy and said that when farmers and workers face their common problems as consumers, the things that rightly belong to both will be obtained.

Accuse Firm Of Halting Defense Work

Cleveland, Mar. 1—Five hundred employes of the Standard Tool Co. here went into the sixth week of their strike for a union contract this week with the plant closed completely and with charges that the management is sabotaging national defense.

The plant produces taps, drills, cutters, reamers and other machine tools. These tools are vital in the production of aircraft parts, machine tool building and auto parts, according to A. J. Peterson, international representative of the United Automobile Workers of America.

Products of the plant are ordered by the government and by numerous plants handling war orders. The striking union, Local 217, charged the company with deliberate refusal to produce the orders until it is guaranteed that it will not have to establish union wages and working conditions in a UAW contract. (The UAW won a collective bargaining election under the NLRB months ago.) But the charges made by the union and the proof produced by it were censored out of every local newspaper except the CIO Union Leader, while the bit dailies screamed against unions for "sabotaging national defense."

ON CAPITOL HILL:

More Anti-Labor Bills on Docket

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

Opening shots against labor unions have been fired in Congressional committees on Capitol Hill within the past few days. Congressman Howard Smith of Virginia, who never voted for a labor bill in his life, and has sponsored or supported every anti-labor bill, tried to tell the Judiciary Committee that he has proposed his anti-strike and anti-union bill, H.R. 2695, only in the interest of national defense.

Hearings were also started this week before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee on a bill—H.R. 2662—which would destroy the maritime unions. This bill would institute an anti-union blacklist system in the industry by abolishing the union hiring halls, and reintroducing the compulsory continuous-discharge book, which the seamen call the "fink" book.

It would allow ships' officers to write any comment about a discharged seaman into such book and no seaman could get employment without showing this book to his prospective employer. The bill also would establish a compulsory mediation system for the maritime industry and would permit ships' officers to bar union literature from seamen.

UNIONS OPPOSED

The CIO maritime unions are strongly opposed to this bill, and charge that it is designed to wreck the unions in the maritime industry. Sharp opposition to this bill or similar legislation will be voiced before the Committee by representatives of the maritime unions and by other CIO representatives.

Congressman Dirksen, Republican of Illinois, is the author of the bill. He claims he has no intention of harming the unions, and that he is advancing the bill solely in the interest of national defense. Labor, however, can judge Dirksen's real intent from his previous record against labor legislation.

During 1939 and 1940 Dirksen supported the Smith investigation of the Labor Board, the Smith amendments to destroy the Labor Act, and the Walter-Logan Bill. He voted for amendments to the Wage and Hour Act which would have excluded about 2½ million workers from its protection. He also opposed increases in relief appropriations, voted against appropriations for the food stamp plan and opposed low-rent housing legislation for poor families.

Plant Goes CIO After 8 Years' Anti-Union Fight

PASSAIC, N. J., Mar. 8.—The object of an eight-year organizational campaign signed a closed shop CIO contract this week.

The firm is the Passaic Piece Dye Works, which for years has resisted organizing efforts of the CIO Dyers Federation.

The contract, which runs for 18 months, guarantees the union minimum scale, the 40-hour week, time-and-a-half for overtime, arbitration and seniority and a military service squad.

Set Reward For Arrest of GadsdenThug

Gadsden, Ala., Mar. 8— (FP) — Rewards totaling $300 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the thugs who beat up John D. House, field representative of the United Rubber Workers, on Feb. 18, have been offered by Gov. Frank H. Dixon and the Gadsden City Commission.

The offers followed vigorous protests by Director Robert J. Davidson of the URW's Goodyear Organizing Campaign, CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood and the Workers Defense League.

After a partial investigation of the beating, an Etowah county grand jury recessed until Mar. 24, when House will be well enough to shed what light he can on the identity of his assailants. The organizer is now in the hospital, where 86 stitches were sewed into 15 head wounds.

WITNESS: Asserting they would be fired if their employers learned their identity, two pretty girls appeared before Massachusetts minimum wage officials to urge lifting of office workers' base pay to $16 a week. Permission for the girls to wear the masks was won by the Boston local of the CIO United Office & Professional Workers.

Steel Pact Won for 650

Indianapolis, Mar. 8 — Signing of a new contract by SWOC Local 1148 with the Schwitzer-Cummins Co. here was announced by James Robb, CIO regional director.

The contract gives the SWOC exclusive bargaining rights for 650 workers, provides for substantial pay raises, paid vacations, bonus for night work, seniority rights, grievance adjustment machinery, etc. The contract was ratified by unanimous vote of the local at a recent meeting.

Coal Contract Conferences Start Mar. 11

WASHINGTON, Mar. 7 — Contract negotiations with some of America's largest corporations were in progress today or due to start soon.

At Pittsburgh, Philip Murray, CIO president and chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, called a conference of the leaders of all union locals in the plants of the U. S. Steel Corp. The meeting was believed to be a preliminary to the opening of contract discussions with "Big Steel."

In New York, meanwhile, leaders of the United Mine Workers are gathering for the biennial Appalachian Joint Wage Conference, which directly sets the wages of some 350,000 coal miners and sets the standards for another 150,000. The UMW negotiators, led by Pres. John L. Lewis, were expected to ask for higher wages and improved working conditions.

Federal conciliation service officials in Detroit, have been given the basic contract demands of the United Automobile Workers, to be submitted to the Ford Motor Co. The UAW wants an NLRB election immediately, to be followed by negotiations, with the union seeking wage increases of at least 10 cents an hour.

At Lackawanna, N. Y., steel workers continued to celebrate their two-day strike victory over the powerful Bethlehem Steel Co. SWOC leaders are seeking an NLRB poll at the local plant, where 14,000 workers are employed.

URW Officials On Industry Committee

Washington, Mar. 8 — Four representatives of the United Rubber Workers have been appointed by Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Wage-Hour administrator, to serve on a committee to set minimum wages for the rubber industry.

The committee is empowered to recommend minimum wages up to 40 cents an hour. URW representatives said they would try to have this 40 cent figure set as the minimum for the industry.

URW representatives appointed are Pres. S. H. Dalrymple; George Cummins, Local 65 president, Mishawaka, Ind.; Margaret Hemrick, pres., District 7 Council, Ravenna, Ohio; and George R. Bass, pres., Goodrich local 5, Akron, Ohio.

Strike Shuts Plant

Pottstown, Pa., Mar. 8 — The plant of the Stanley G. Flagg Co., manufacturer of forgings, was shut down Mar. 4 by a strike of some 800 workers. A 62c hourly minimum, a closed shop and the checkoff are being sought by the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Church Leader Cites 'Distortion' On Strikes

CLEVELAND, Mar. 8.—"The public has been given an utterly distorted impression of the frequency or seriousness of strikes in defense and other industries," declared James Myers, Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, at a church forum here.

"This false impression," he continued, "is probably due not so much to anti-labor bias on the part of some newspapers as it is to the fact that it is considered 'news' only when there is labor trouble. When unions get along well with employers, there is seldom any mention of the fact in the newspapers. The fact is that if on any given day the papers were to print even a list of union plants where there is no trouble, there would hardly be room for any other news in the paper!

"If the public were to judge the institution of marriage only by reports in the newspapers, it might get as distorted an impression of matrimony as it does of labor unions. For it is seldom 'news' when a man gets along well with his wife. If, on the other hand, he hits his wife over the head, or seeks a divorce, he makes the headlines."

Myers said he had observed "over a period of many years, that in general there are fewer strikes where labor is organized and accepted on an industry-wide basis, than there are where there are no unions or where employers are still fighting against the formation of unions. After unions have been accepted by employers, machinery exists for the peaceable adjustment of differences."

Store Union Wins First 40-Hr. Week

New York, Mar. 8.—(FP)—The 5-day, 40-hour week was established for the first time in a big New York department store under a new contract between Local 1250, United Retail & Wholesale Employes, CIO, and the Hearn Department Stores, Inc.

The pact, covering 2,000 workers, in two stores, was signed on the deadline of a threatened strike. The workweek was formerly 45 hours.

Other union demands, such as the $1 weekly wage increases and improved vacations, will be negotiated further and arbitrated if necessary. The average weekly scale at Hearn's is $18.

Clothing Union Wins Strike In Big Shirt Firm

TROY, N. Y., Mar. 8.—Ten per cent wage increases, the preferential union shop and improved working conditions were won today by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in a contract with Cluett Peabody & Co., largest shirt manufacturers in the nation.

The agreement, which the ACWA described as "inaugurating a new era in industrial labor relations" followed a two-week strike of 6,000 employes at the firm's factories in Troy and Corinth, N. Y., Leominster, Mass., and Atlanta, Ga.

ACWA General Sec.-Treas. Jacob Potofsky said the wage increase will implement current union demands for a general increase throughout the industry, which would affect 100,000 workers.

HIGH MINIMUM

In explaining the settlement to the 3,800 workers at Troy, Potofsky and strike leader Gladys Dickason laid particular stress on the union's winning of a 40c minimum. Present minimum for shirt makers under the wage-hour law is 32½ cents, but the union has inauguarated a campaign to lift that level to 40 cents.

The pact won unanimous acceptance in Troy and at the other plants, though in the Atlanta plant a group of company unionists adopted by the AFL walked out in a rear-guard fight against the sole bargaining contract won by the CIO affiliate.

Running for 18 months, the agreement provides a 10% wage increase, equitable distribution of work, and arbitration machinery for the settlement of grievances.

PREDICTS CLEAN SWEEP

Predicting a clean sweep for unionism in the cotton garment industry as a result of the Cluett Peabody agreement, union officials said the Amalgamated has 50 organizers ready in the South to capitalize on the pact below the Mason-Dixon line.

Potofsky paid tribute to the "cooperative spirit and statesmanship" of the company, adding that the agreement "marks a change in the labor policy of the company."

"I am hopeful," he said, "that out of this agreement will develope one of the finest examples of proper labor relations in the cotton garment industry.

HAILS 'FORWARD STEP'

"I wish to praise the company for the introduction of the 40-cent an hour minimum, which was done voluntarily and which represents a long, forward step in the establishment of this minimum for the entire industry."

Potofsky also praised the workers for their "splendid spirit and discipline."

The strike started at the Atlanta plant on Feb. 19, and soon spread to the New York state and Massachusetts factories.

Murray Aids Whelan Drug Store Strikers

New York, Mar. 8 — CIO Pres. Philip Murray today urged the Whelan drugstore chain to negotiate a "sound agreement" with striking members of Local 1199, Retail Drug Store Employes, in a wire sent to Pres. Walter C. Baumhogger of the corporation.

"I urge that you resume negotiations with the union of your employes," Murray wired. "The national CIO is interested in the conclusion of a sound agreement so that your employes may go back to work under conditions satisfactory to them and you."

Meanwhile strikers made plans to file state labor board charges against the firm after it refused to recognize their union as bargaining agent for pharmacists.

Benjamin Gudes, secretary-manager of Local 1199, Retail Drug Store Employes, announced the union's intentions after the Whelan management announced its refusal to participate in peace talks suggested by Mayor F. H. La Guardia of New York. The strike, in effect for five weeks, has closed the Whelan stores throughout the city.

Newark City Employes Get $175,000

Newark, Mar. 8 — Wage increases totalling approximately $175,000 for about one thousand employes of the Newark Department of Public Affairs were agreed upon today by Mayor Ellenstein and Chief Engineer Costello, representing the City, and Carmine Ventola, president of Local 277 of the State, County & Municipal Workers, CIO, and Philip Prince, Regional Director of the Union.

The increases, which average about $3.00 per week per man, will go at once before the City Commission and the membership of Local 277 for ratification.

Also granted were nine paid holidays a year, seniority rights, time and a half pay for overtime, reclassification under proper titles, and full machinery for settlement of grievances.

SIZEABLE GAINS

Commenting on the conclusion of negotiations, Carmine Ventola, president of Local 277, said:

"While we did not obtain the full prevailing wage rate, which would have cost the city $400,000, we were able to win substantial gains for the employes of the DPA. It wasn't easy; in fact it took us more than three months of negotiating to covince the mayor that the rise in costs of living since pay scales were originally established made it absolutely necessary to grant increases."

$100,000 Boost In New Pact

WATERBURY, Conn., Mar. 8. — A new vacation clause which will bring benefits of $100,000, and recognition as sole bargaining agency, were won in a new contract negotiated with the American Brass Co. today by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The pact, covering 8,500 workers in three plants, was reached after a 16½-hour parley between management and the union. Several minor improvements over previous agreements were also gained by the union.

Electrical Union Gains In Dayton

Dayton O., Mar. 8 — Another division of the Chrysler Corporation signed a CIO contract, and another division of General Motors came under CIO bargaining here last week, when Chysler's Airtemp Division reached an agreement with Local 753, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, and the Moraine Products plant of GM voted to be represented by the same local.

The Chrysler contract provides wage increases, in addition to a 2c general increase last December, of 3c per hour for 49 employes, 4c for 121 employes, 9c for 63 employes, and increases of from 5c to 19c per hour for fifteen others. The contract also sets up seniority for the first time in the Dayton plant, and establishes a grievance procedure based on the UE plan of complete department representation.

The Moraine election brings this key bearing plant into the Dayton UE fold, which already includes 10,000 workers at Frigidaire and 5,000 at Delco Products. The vote for the UE was 132-26. A rush of dues-paying members into the Moraine unit of Local 753, indicates that a 100% UE shop is near at this plant.

Win 2 Polls On Coast

Los Angeles, Mar. 8.—Locals of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers today had rolled up two important Natl. Labor Relations Board election victories.

Following up its first brass contract in the Los Angeles area—won after a strike at the Pubco Co.—Local 468 swept an NLRB poll at the Price-Pfister Co. The vote was 142 for the CIO, 36 for no union and five for the AFL.

At San Lorenzo, Calif., CIO swept an election at the Trojan Powder Co. by 48-2. Negotiations with both firms are due to get started shortly.

Employes Win Raise

Newark, Mar. 8 — The New Jersey District Water Commission and the Wanaque Local of the State, County & Municipal Workers of America, CIO have reached an agreement with regard to wages and other working conditions.

Philip Prince, Regional Director of the CIO affiliate, stated that the Union won a minimum of 60c per hour for laborers and a raise for all of the skilled workers.

Mine Union Opens Drive On W. Va. Open Shop Area

Gary, W. Va., Mar. 8—A United Mine Workers drive to organize approximately 4,000 miners in the united States Coal and Coke Company operations at Gary, the last-ditch of non-unionism in the Tug River and Pocahontas fields of District 17, came out into the open Sunday.

The organizational drive was mapped out by William Blizzard, vice-president of District 17, who spoke before approximately 1,500 miners at a meeting in Welch.

The company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, operates eight mines in Gary Hollow, about seven miles from Welch. A company union, the Independent Associated Miners Union, which exists only in Gary Hollow, is composed of most of the U. S. Coal and Coke company employes.

Blizzard, in outlining the organizational drive before representatives of 127 UMW locals, called the unorganized Gary miners a "threat" to any future United Mine Workers' plans. He urged the establishment of groups of 25 men from each local union to organize and sign up Gary miners living outside the eight company operations.

Estimating the number of men living outside of Gary as 2,500, Blizzard declared that the organization of the men would constitute more than a 51 per cent majority of Gary miners.

Jesse Aquino, Tug River and Pocahontas representative at Welch, asserted that "Gary will be organized or there won't be any work in the mines after March 31."

U. S. Court Slaps Fake Union Groups

Philadelphia, Mar. 8.—(FP)—If a union chosen as collective bargaining agent by a majority subsequently loses its majority as a result of anti-union practices, the firm is still required to bargain with it.

The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals here so ruled in two recent cases. The court upheld orders calling upon the Windsor Manufacturing Co. to bargain with the CIO Textile Workers Union and the New Era Die Co. to bargain with the AFL machinists.

The ruling in the Windsor case reversed a previous 2-1 decision of the court asserting that the TWU would have to show that it still represented a majority of the employes before the court could affirm an NLRB order for union recognition.

CIO Ladies 'Graduate' Class of 30

New York, Mar. 8 — New York's CIO Auxiliaries Council has graduated its first class from the school operated for the past several weeks to train CIO wives in the basic elements of trade unionism. Thirty students graduated, receiving congratulatory wires from the N. Y. Council and from numbers of CIO locals in the city.

Miss Kathryn Lewis, chairman of the CIO Auxiliaries Coordinating Committee, was guest of honor and a featured speaker. Other speakers included Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union, Jack Lawrenson, national organizer of the Natl. Maritime Union, and Lewis Alan Berne, president of the CIO Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians.

Washington, Mar. 8.—CIO auxiliaries here have announced a 13-week radio program designed to bring the benefits of CIO organization and its contribution to the welfare of Washington working men and women to a wide public.

The program, scheduled once weekly, will include discussion of problems involving city schools, relief and welfare, unemployment, health, recreation and the like. Cecil Owen, Washington CIO Council president, will speak on housing, Sidney Katz, state CIO secretary-treasurer, on unemployment compensation, and Helen Miller of the UFWA on the need for organization among government employes.

Coal Mine Pact Parleys Open Mar. 11

NEW YORK, Mar. 8.—Negotiations on the nation's biggest union contract—covering 500,000 bituminous coal miners—get under way here March 11.

Led by Pres. John L. Lewis, the United Mine Workers will present its demands for a new Appalachian Joint Wage agreement scheduled to go into effect on April 1.

Formulation of the UMW's specific demands will be made at a meeting of the union's International Policy Committee on March 10—a day before the first meeting with the coal operators association.

What those demands will be is as yet unknown. But the United Mine Workers Journal said this week that "it is generally believed that the policy committee on March 10 will decide upon specific proposals embodying the following general objectives among others: an increase in wages, shortening of the hours of labor, improvement in working conditions, ironing out of inequitable differentials in and between districts, and the establishment of the principle of vacations with pay."

Heads Coal Negotiators

The Policy Committee held a meeting at Atlantic City, N. J., in November, just prior to the third CIO convention, and discussed the general problems of the industry and the union. But, according to the union paper, "it declined to tie the hands of the union's negotiators with specific proposals so far in advance in view of the uncertainties arising out of the national defense emergency."

Members of the National Policy Committee include Pres. Lewis, Vice-Pres. Murray, Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy and a large number of representatives of the UMW's bituminous districts.

The Appalachian Joint Wage Conference is the largest collective bargaining unit in the country. Some 350,000 miners are employed by mines represented in the conference, and another 150,000 mine workers in outlying districts are covered by agreements based on the Appalachian pact.

Negotiations for the anthracite coal miners will begin next month, since the present anthracite agreement runs until April 30.

SIGNED IN 1939

The present bituminous agreements were signed in April, 1939, after a six-week lockout which represented an effort by large financial interests to weaken both the UMW and the entire CIO movement. The union forces held intact through the long struggle and emerged with the first national union shop contract in the coal industry.

That agreement marked doom for AFL efforts at the time to chisel into the industry and weaken the United Mine Workers. In addition to stopping the AFL in its tracks, the UMW strengthened its position in a number of the districts — notably Harlan County, Kentucky, scene of a years-long attack by operators on the union.

Appearance of UMW Pres. Lewis at the negotiations in New York will mark this return to active union work after a long siege of illness which overtook him shortly after his retirement as president of the CIO last November.

Big Steel Union Heads Confer

Pittsburgh, Mar. 7.—The presidents of all local unions of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee located at the plants of the United States Steel Corp. have been summoned to be in Pittsburgh, Friday, March 7, Philip Murray, chairman of the SWOC, revealed.

Also called to the meeting are the SWOC sub-regional directors and field men having supervision of those locals.

Letters have gone out to each of the individuals from David J. McDonald, SWOC secretary-treasurer.

"At this conference,' the letter stated, "we shall discuss problems incident to the negotiating of a new wage agreement with United States Steel Corporation and also decide upon our policy in respect thereto."

SIXTY-SIX LOCALS

The SWOC has 66 local unions in U. S. Steel properties—Carnegie-Illinois, American Steel & Wire, National Tube, Columbia Steel, Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad, American Bridge, Virginia Bridge, Scully Steel, Universal Atlas Cement, Oliver Iron Mines, Duluth Messabe Railroad, Union Railroad, Oil Well Supply, Cyclone Fence and Wilson & Snyder.

With the local union presidents, SWOC representatives and national officers there will be approximately 150 at the meeting which is scheduled for the William Penn Hotel.

To Negotiate In Alaska

Fairbanks, Alaska, Mar. 8 — Leaders of the CIO Fairbanks Mine Workers local today made plans for contract negotiations with the U. S. Smelting, Refining & Mining Co. following certification by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The union, affiliated with the CIO Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, has been seeking recognition for more than two years. Some time ago it won an NLRB vote, and the certification followed.

HAIL VICTORY: Pleased by the success of their two-day strike, Bethlehem Steel Co. employes at Lackawanna, N. Y., paraded around the union hall. Being carried on their shoulders is Van A. Bittner, head of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee drive at Bethlehem Steel.

Steel Union Shows Power In Bethlehem Victory

By VIN SWEENEY

LACKAWANNA, N. Y., Mar. 8.—Through one of "the greatest victories in labor history,"—the SWOC victory in the two-day strike at Bethlehem Steel's plant here—organization of steel workers employed by that corporation was coming to a quick climax.

This was the report reaching Van A. Bittner, SWOC director of the Bethlehem campaign, as operations at the Lackawanna plant returned to normal, after a strike that was settled on these union terms:

1. All workmen, including those locked out by Bethlehem, returned to their jobs with full seniority.

2. Immediate conferences with management to settle grievances which arose in the plant.

3. A Labor Board election.

On the third point, the Office of Production Management, which recommended the basis of settlement, is to make an investigation.

Some 3,500 cheering strikers gathered in Memorial Hall accepted the plan of settlement, after it had been recommended by Mr. Bittner, John Riffe, executive director under Mr. Bittner, and Rev. Charles Maxwell, pastor of the Church of the Nativity, Buffalo, who did yeoman service on the picket line during the strike.

And as a climax of the meeting, Bittner was swept from the stage and carried triumphantly around the hall on the shoulders of steel workers—a demonstration of their faith in SWOC leadership and their appreciation of the victory over Bethlehem.

From the hall, the steel workers marched down to the plant and paraded past each gate. Pickets on duty and thousands of other union steel workers joined the parade until there was a marching throng of men nearly two miles long.

The strike began at 9 p. m. Feb. 26 and ended at noon on the following Friday.

Steel workers in almost every other stronghold of Bethlehem Steel staged spontaneous demonstrations after word of the victory reached them.

PROVED SWOC POWER

"We proved to Bethlehem Steel Corp., and the U. S. Government — and ourselves — that we could close the plant," said Bittner. "The next time we're forced to threaten a strike in any Bethlehem plant they'll take us more seriously.

"We proved that we could protect our men by winning reinstatement of the fellows who were suspended."

WIRE FROM MURRAY

Philip Murray, chairman of the SWOC, wired his congratulations to the strikers and said that "this capitulation of Bethlehem Steel to our demands after a two-day strike is a great tribute to the union men of Lackawanna."

"This marvelous display of strength brings that much nearer the day when Bethlehem Steel must sign a contract with our union," his telegram said in part.

It was estimated that at least 12,000 workmen went on strike. Even Bethlehem Steel's most extravagant claims placed the number of men in the plant—including supervisory officials—at 2,000.

Auto Union Submits Program On Ford

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Mar. 8.—A five-point program, including an immediate conference on wage demands and other grievances, was presented this week to the Ford Motor Co. by the UAW-CIO through Federal Labor Conciliator James Dewey.

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, and Michael F. Widman, Jr., director of the UAW-CIO Organizing Committee, stated that only negotiations on the demands can avert a strike at Ford's three plants in the Detroit area—Rouge, Lincoln and Highland Park.

This development followed the serving of formal strike notice last week on the State Labor Mediation Board and notification to President Roosevelt of the situation.

FIVE MAIN POINTS

The main points in the letter presented by the union to Dewey are:

1. Immediate reinstatement of all discharged Rouge and Highland Park employes.

2. Immediate reinstatement of all discharged Lincoln employes.

3. Immediate cessation of discrimination by the company against union members.

4. Immediate NLRB election.

5. Immediate conference between company and union officials on a contract, which shall include a general wage increase of not less than 10c an hour.

NEW MEMBERS

The rush of new members into the union, which began the week of Feb. 10 with the posting of notices in the plant that the company would comply with the NLRB order, has kept up at a constantly increasing pace.

Last Saturday was the biggest day to date in the enrollment of new members.

In the meantime, the Ford workers are gaining a confidence and courage in dealing with supervision which, to observers acquainted with Ford policies, is almost incredible.

FOREMEN NOW BARGAIN

Union committees have bargained with foremen and building superintendents during working hours on the question of transfers or discharges and in many cases have been able to prevent acts of discrimination.

This is true to such an extent that a foreman in the "B" building consulted the union's building chairman before he transferred six men from the cushion to

Mine Union Leaders Re-Elected

WASHINGTON, Mar. 8.—Present leaders of the United Mine Workers were re-elected to two-year terms without opposition, it was announced today.

The union's International Tellers certified the referendum re-election of Pres. John L. Lewis, Vice-Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy.

Chosen as delegates to the next CIO convention were the three International officers and Van A. Bittner, Michael J. Kosik, John O'Leary, Mart F. Brennan and John Yourishin.

YOU TAKE THE LOW ROAD, AND I'LL TAKE THE HIGH ROAD

Success to the UMW

The eyes of the whole labor world are upon the United Mine Workers of America as it opens its negotiations in New York for a new agreement.

The Appalachian Joint Wage Conference is the largest collective bargaining agency in the country. The operators who participate represent 70 per cent of the nation's bituminous tonnage; and 350,000 coal miners in the Appalachian area are directly represented.

The contract negotiated here will also be the basis for contracts in outlying districts affecting 150,000 more miners.

But the signficance of these negotiations goes far beyond their size. For Pres. John L. Lewis and the UMWA, through the CIO, have played a splendid and matchless role as builders of the modern American labor movement.

The UMWA enters these negotiations flanked on every side by great industrial unions which its initiative, its leadershp and its support have done most to organize.

What it achieves will have an effect on every other union, for the UMWA is truly the keystone of the CIO. And if ever there was a union that is entitled to the wholehearted solidarity, cooperation and support of the whole labor movement it is the UMWA.

Attempts to Tie Labor

When production increases and the golden stream of profits grows greater and greater, it is natural that labor should expect to share in the increased prosperity which it produces.

Where labor is organized, the regular processes of collective bargaining will bring increased wages without undue disturbance. For the workers have greater bargaining power in such times, due to employer reluctance to see the profit stream interrupted by strikes which might be caused by refusal to give labor its due.

At the present time, however, big business interests are trying to hog all the profits for themselves and to prevent labor from raising wages through unimpeded collective bargaining.

Behind the smokescreen of a huge propaganda campaign about strikes interfering with national defense, every sort of bill and proposal is advanced to deprive labor of its present bargaining power.

In addition to the dozens of anti-strike and anti-union bills introduced by Congressional stooges of the profiteers, the past week has seen two more proposals from other sources that would have the same kind of net result.

One of these is the plan proposed by William S. Knudsen to the House Judiciary Committee. This would prevent any speedy strike votes being taken and interpose more compulsory delays of all sorts, compelling workers to remain on the job against their will under penalty of losing all rights under the Labor Relations Act.

The effect of the interminable delays which the Knudsen plan would impose would be to tie labor's hands from taking any effective action, so that an employer could refuse its demands with impunity and have months in which to sap the union's strength.

The other proposal is for a defense industries labor board, which would give three "representatives of the public" the power to inject themselves into collective bargaining situations and make recommendations which would have the weight almost of arbitration decisions.

Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO has pointed out that such a board would almost inevitably work to maintain the status quo, and under present conditions would tend "in the direction of stopping wage increases or improved conditions for labor."

The CIO opposes all such bills and proposals to curtail labor's rights and interfere with collective bargaining. It holds that "free and unimpaired collective bargaining between unions and employers is the best guarantee and assurance for industrial peace."

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

"Labor-stealing is again developing," according to business publications. Pretty awful, isn't it? We're used to kidnappers enticing children with candy. But now, if you read the financial pages, you will find that full-grown men in overalls are being "lured" to new jobs by offers of higher wages and better conditions.

Employers are actually "competing" for labor in some cases, it is said, despite efforts of chambers of commerce to make it clear to employers that the net result of such attempts to "steal" workers can only be "wage-spiraling."

"Fear of higher wages" is the phrase used again and again. (Doesn't that make you shudder?) And the business writers who used to object to "government interference" are now demanding that the government do something to "put a ceiling on wage rates", to "freeze wages", to "stabilize" them, "standardize" them, or do anything but let them rise.

But don't get these folk wrong. They don't object to all competition. It is perfectly all right with them for a thousand unemployed workers to compete for a dozen jobs. That is just the healthy functioning of our economic system. The inexorable law of supply and demand must be allowed to bring wages down to their natural level, they say. It just ceases to be "inexorable" when there is danger of its working the other way around.

It is only on the financial pages and in business publications, however, that there is such frank talk about the terrible menace of higher wages.

In Congress other language is used. There the talk is all about the necessity for labor to make sacrifices, and about strikes interfering with national defense. The demand is for anti-strike legislation, cooling-off periods and all sorts of other curbs on union activity.

But the purpose of all this talk and these demands is just the same, namely to prevent wages from being raised.

This purpose is obvious in the more extreme anti-union bills before Congress. But it does not take much investigation to see that proposals like those of William Knudsen or the proposed Labor Defense Mediation Board would also have a similar result.

Knudsen's plan would interpose so many delays before labor could strike, that the power of a union to bargain for better wages would be almost completely destroyed.

Similarly the proposed defense industries labor board would operate to maintain the status quo as much as possible which, as Philip Murray points out, would mean to stop wage increases or improved working conditions for labor.

What is this "status quo" that all the big business interests and their Congressional and governmental spokesmen are so anxious to maintain? What is this wage level they want to "freeze"?

According to government statisticians, $1,300 a year is the average income which a manual worker's family of four (with two small children) needs for a bare maintenance standard of living.

Such an income allows of only 30 cents per person per day for food; for rent about $18.50 a month; for transportation little more than $1 a week. It does not allow for an auto, even second or third hand.

With such an income, a worker can afford only one warm suit and one overcoat every three years; and his wife can have only one coat every three years, one rayon dress every year and one warm dress every two years.

It allows for only 65 cents a week for the family's entertainment; ten cents a week for tobacco; and for the education of each child the sum of $3.50 a year!

Yet such a miserable standard of living as this is beyond the means of more than 60 per cent of America's wage workers, whose yearly earnings are less than $1,300.

A minimum health and decency standard calls for $2,200 a year for a family of five, according to the Heller Committee study of living costs in San Francisco in 1940.

Yet such a standard (possible only for a minority of wage earners) allows for but 34 cents per person per day for food; $5 a year for education; $34 a month for rent; and $220 a year for all costs of buying and maintaining an automobile.

When boards and bills are proposed, therefore, to prevent labor from raising wages, they are aimed at the shrunken bellies of millions of under-nourished men, women and children. They would stop the unions from fighting for decent clothing, for the most modest home comforts, and for just a chance in life for countless kids who are not getting any kind of a break today.

They would put a ceiling on hope, freeze poverty and stabilize hunger and want—at a time when the sky is the limit for soaring profits and flaunting wealth.

Oil Union Fights Long Week

Baytown, Tex., Mar. 8 — Efforts of leading oil companies to lengthen the work week from 36 hours to 40 received a resounding setback today from the Oil Workers Intl. Union.

The companies, led by the Humble Oil Corp., have been conducting a long-range campaign to throw out the short work week won by the CIO affiliate over a long period of years.

Beating the companies at their own game, Local 333 — which consists of Humble employes — held a poll of their own to test sentiment on the long hours proposal.

The workers voted 8-1 for the present 36-hour week.

In a wire to Gov. Lee O'Daniel of Texas, Sec. P. B. Rawson of Local 333 declared:

"The people who make up our industries feel such changes unnecessary until the masses of unemployed have been absorbed. Please ask these industries . . . to consider these masses of unemployed before going on the longer work week."

Rap Rent Gouging In Akron

Akron, Mar. 8 — Akron real estate interests were accused of hostility to a defense housing project of 300 units because they want "to force an increase of rents of five to ten dollars a month and to unload sub-standard houses on defense workers at exorbitant prices," in telegrams sent to Rep. Dow Harter and Defense Housing Coordinator Charles F. Palmer by Frank Grillo, general secretary-treasurer of the United Rubber Workers, CIO.

In his message of Harter, Grillo cited the 11 per cent rise in Akron rents in the past year and declared, "Labor cannot and will not tolerate further increases."

Grillo urged both officials to "go through with the project and to consider its expansion at an early date." He said that officials of CIO unions in Akron and Barberton would be called into a conference some time this week to consider the defense housing situation and to take action to see that the housing pressure is relieved.

Firm 'Ran Away,' Left Workers

New York, Mar. 8. — Meyer Bernstein, Manager of Local 169 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, declared in a statement issued today that The Gotham Novelty Co., which formerly operated in New York City, Freeport, Long Island and Garfield, New Jersey, employing approximately 125 workers throughout its three plants, has recently moved its quarters to Bristol, Rhode Island, under the name of The Paragon Novelty Co., Inc., leaving its workers in Garfield, Freeport and New York City completely stranded.

The Gotham had an agreement with Local 169 since 1933 and broke is last January, 1940. Consequently charges were placed by the Union with the Impartial Chairman, Walter Bower, for this change as well as for several other violations of the terms of the agreement with the Local.

Thomas On Radio, Tells Of Grievances At Ford

DETROIT, Mar. 8.—The Ford "myth" — that King Henry pays the industry's high wages and that he maintains its best working conditions—came in for a thorough going-over in a radio speech by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, heard last night over the Columbia Broadcasting System national network.

Ford, it was recalled by Thomas, was the first company to institute the $5 day, for which he has "received due recognition—all too great recognition, we feel, when the facts of today, as contrasted with those of 1914, are known.

"Ford today pays lower wages than any major automobile corporation," he added, pointing out that Ford average pay is at least five cents an hour under the figure for the industry published by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"These are the facts of the basic economic grievance of the Ford workers," the union official declared.

"There are matters which American workers, free men, born with the guarantees of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, value as highly as they do wage rates. There is the right to join a labor union, the right to give a day's work without the pressure of spies, the right to expect an amount of security on his job . . .

"The Ford workers make the charge that there is no American freedom in a Ford plant, that they must work continually under the surveillance of service men and company spies whose tactics range all the way from intimidation to violence and discharge."

the body line. The transfer was made only after a union committee had verified the foreman's claim that the men were needed because six other employes failed to report for work. Verification was obtained by examining the time cards.

Dewey has already presented the union's written statement of its position to Harry H. Bennett, Ford personnel director, but the company so far has given no answer.

Labor Dept. Booklet Discusses Job Safety

WASHINGTON, Mar. 8.—"Labor and Safety on the Job in National Defense," a short booklet of practical safety hints for workers, has just been issued by the Division of Labor Standards of the U. S. Department of Labor. "For ourselves —for our families—and for national defense—we must conserve our skill, our strength, our manpower," says the pamphlet, addressed to workers by the labor members of the National Committee for the Conservation of Manpower in Defense Industries.

"Nobody wants to get hurt — but they do get hurt. The question is, what can the worker himself do to keep from getting hurt?"

"Of course, the employer has the primary responsibility," the booklet points out. "He must prevent industrial accidents and diseases by providing a safe and healthful plant, and safe machinery and equipment to work with. But that is not the whole story. The worker has a share in this responsibility, and his share is just as important."

Specific ways are listed in which the worker can, as an individual and through his union, work more safely and thus "help safeguard his job and his family's income, and make reasonably sure he will continue to produce the material and equipment his country needs."

Labor members of the National Committee for Conservation of Manpower in Defense Industries, who supervised the preparation of the pamphlet, are: John P. Coyne and John P. Frey, of the AFL; Clinton S. Golden, Steel Workers Organizing Committee; Ralph Hetzel, CIO Research Director; Herbert W. Payne, Textile Workers Union of America; and Eric Peterson of Machinists.

Copies for distribution are available, without charge, from the Division of Labor Standards, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

Metal Miners Win Strike

Hancock, Mich., Mar. 8 —(FP) —More than 500 members of the CIO Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers won a 10c increase in a three-day strike that tied up the Quincy Mine Co. plant.

The strike was the first in this area since the historic 1913 struggle led by the Western Federation of Miners.

The new contract provides an additional 10c wage increase for each half-cent advance in the price of copper.

Murray Scores Plan For New U. S. Board To Act On Strikes

WASHINGTON, Mar. 8.—The proposed Federal labor board to settle disputes involving defense industries will present "an obviously impossible task and one that will not meet the needs of the situation," Philip Murray, CIO president, warned in a memorandum presented to the Labor Policy Committee of the Natl. Defense Commission. The memo was presented by Allan S. Haywood, CIO organization director.

The new board proposal, which has been backed in Administration circles, was described in Murray's memo as having anti-labor implications.

"Under the new program," Murray wrote, "in effect three public representatives are charged with the responsibility of understanding and formulating solution for the labor problems of all the industries in the nation. This is obviously an impossible task and one that will not meet the needs of the situation."

INDUSTRY COUNCILS

Murray referred to the industry council plan presented to the Administration last December, which "would have given labor representation on councils for each industry where management and labor, with a thorough and complete knowledge of their industry, could formulate the policy that would be more applicable to that particular industry."

FIVE OBJECTIONS

Murray's memo listed five principal objections to the new proposal:

1. Such a board "will necessarily find its attention directed against labor in order to maintain the status quo as much as possible," and will strive to stop "wage increases or improvement of working conditions for labor."

2. Compulsory arbitration will result from board activities, since it would enter situations where collective bargaining was in process to "bring terrific pressure to bear on labor to agree to arbitration in practically all situations."

WOULD INTERFERE

3. Policy-making powers assigned to the board could easily bring about interference with the workings of the Wagner Act, the wages and hours act, and the Walsh-Healey act, since the agencies administering those acts would be unable to resist the board's pressure.

4. This in turn would make the Labor Relations Board merely a formalized agency "confined entirely to avoiding labor disputes," stripping it of the power to require employers to bargain collectively under the Wagner act.

5. The setup of the proposed board carries strong anti-labor possibilities in the three members supposed to represent the public. These members "are to settle controversies, make special investigation, hold hearings and issue reports, and arbitrate disputes," making them the real powers in the board, since the other members representing labor and industry would simply have advisory powers.

"It has been the experience of labor that representatives from the public are usually taken from the ranks of retired businessmen," Murray wrote.

Knudsen Reversal On Anti-Strike Bills Under Fire

WASHINGTON, Mar. 8.—CIO resistance to the barrage of labor restrictive measures proposed in Congress and other agencies developed in further concrete forms this week with strong objections from Pres. Murray to a proposed new mediation-arbitration labor board and with resolutions of protest against anti-strike proposals by defense chief Wm. S. Knudsen from CIO councils in New York and Washington.

Murray's objections to the proposed board centered on the factors of compulsory arbitration, nullifying of labor laws such as the Wagner Act, maintenance of status quo in labor relations, and the unhappy experience labor has had in the past with boards controlled by men who are supposed to represent the public but usually are drawn from the ranks of business. (See story in adjoining column.)

The Knudsen proposal, calling for a "cooling-off period" before strikes could be called and for severe penalties against strikers drew sharp condemnation from the Greater New York and the Washington, D. C., CIO Councils, which described it as "legalized strikebreaking."

KNUDSEN REVERSAL

Earlier testimony by Knudsen before the House Judiciary Committee, now investigating labor disputes in defense industries, put him on record as opposed to anti-strike legislation at this time, which he described as unwise and unnecessary.

His new proposal, made only a few days after the testimony, flatly contradicted this stand and a similar stand taken by associate defense head Sidney Hillman.

It was pointed out that all CIO contracts guarantee continuance of work during negotiations, that such negotiations frequently took several months to complete, and that CIO unions only struck when all possible avenues for settlement were closed by company refusal to bargain collectively. No possible use could be served by an enforced "cooling-off period" after a strike was forced by employers other than to disarm the workers of their chief economic weapon.

Knudsen's proposal was further described by the N. Y. CIO body as an attempt "to place the blame for interference with defense production on labor, instead of on law-violating employes, the real saboteurs of the defense program."

PENALIZES WORKERS

One section of the Knudsen proposal, presented in the form of a memo to the House Judiciary Committee, would penalize workers by denying them the protection of the Wagner Act for strikes called during the waiting period. A similar proposal to deny the same rights to employers was described as meaningless, since the act is designed to protect workers against employers who refuse to bargain collectively.

"Mr. Knudsen's proposals mean forced labor for American workers and virtually legalize strikebreaking," the N. Y. CIO declared. "Those practices are abhorrent to every American. Nor can they be made respectable by presenting them in the name of 'defense'."

In the meantime the House Judiciary Committee carried on its hearings by calling Westbrook Pegler, notorious labor-hating columnist, to the stand to give his views on labor and defense.

FDR'S STATEMENT

Roosevelt pointed out to the reporters that strikers have affected only about one-quarter of one per cent of defense production, or about 1-400th of the total defense effort.

Misconceptions about the effect of strikes on defense production, the President indicated, came from apparent erroneous impressions created by certain published articles. He declined to specify the names of the writers or of the publications.

CONFERENCE SLATED

Dayton, Ohio. — A Dayton-wide CIO Political Action Conference here, to include delegates from locals representing over 23,000 Dayton workers in the CIO, has been called for March 9 by the Montgomery County Industrial Union Council. Over 19,500 of Dayton's 23,000 CIO members are in the UE fold.

Ford Sued For Million Damages

Detroit, Mar. 8.—The Ford Motor Co. today was on the receiving end of a million-dollar damage suit filed by Herbert Harris of Salem, Mo., who was badly beaten up by Ford service squad thugs in Dallas, Tex., during 1937.

The suit, filed in Wayne County court, named the Ford Company; Harry Bennett; and three other executives of the company.

NAME FORD THUGS

Fearing union organization of its Dallas assembly plant, the Ford Company gave Harris a beating, and tarring and feathering, after he addressed a public meeting on the advantages of union organization, the suit asserted.

". . .A group of men. . .without provocation. . .disrupted the meeting, turned over the speaker's platform. . .seized the plaintiff and beat him into insensibility.

"Plaintiff was thereupon carried to a waiting automobile where he was transferred to a lonely country spot near Dallas. Most of the plaintiff's clothing was then removed from him and two coats of tar applied by a brush from his knees to his neck. Feathers were then thrown upon the sticky tar. . .and the plaintiff was transported in this condition to the city of Dallas and thrown out of the car to the street in front of the Dallas Daily News, where a photographer was waiting and took a picture of the plaintiff."

Probe Mine Deadlock In Nova Scotia

Halifax, N. S., Mar. 8 — Deadlocked wage negotiations between the United Mine Workers of America, District 26, and four of the larger coal operators in Nova Scotia were investigated by the McTague Conciliation Board which opened its sessions in Halifax February 27.

More than 12,000 UMW mine workers are employed by the four operators whose affairs will be examined by the Board. The operators are the Dominion Coal Company, Old Sidney Collieries Limited, Acadia Coal Company and the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.

Deadlocks in negotiations between the operators and the union broke down when the operators refused to grant satisfactory wage increases. One of the basic factors in the union's demands for higher rates of pay is the increased wartime living costs which the mine workers have to meet.

PLAN RODEO

Buffalo, N. Y., Mar. 8 — A three-day rodeo under CIO auspices gets started here on March 10. The show will be held in the municipal auditorium and thousands are expected to attend.

ON CAPITOL HILL:

Wire-Tap Bill May Reach House Floor

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

A wiretapping bill may be reported out by the Judiciary Committee any day. The committee is discussing the final draft of such bill. An attempt will unquestionably be made to rush it through the House as soon as it is reported out. It is therefore important that communications opposing this legislation should reach Congressmen as soon as possible.

Wiretapping legislation has been condemned by the CIO Convention, and the Executive Board, by CIO President Philip Murray, and by all CIO representatives who appeared before the House Judiciary Committee.

Such legislation will not catch spies, since real spies are not likely to use the telephone to give away their secrets. But it could be used to harass unions and union members. Under it no union or member would be safe from spying. It would give legal sanction to secret prying into the affairs of any organization or individual.

The House Rules Committee is delaying passage of a bill which would provide $150,000,000 for urgently needed housing in defense areas.

The Committee has been asked for a special rule on the bill (H.R. 3486) which would enable the House to act on it quickly. It is reported that the Committee is refusing to grant such a rule unless certain changes are made in the bill. Some of these changes would, in effect, increase the rents and would make tenants pay for certain equipment that might otherwise be supplied with the houses.

Anti-strike hearings continued last week before the House Judiciary Committee with Assistant Secretary of War, Robert P. Patterson as the only witness. He favored curtailing of strikes through a compulsory mediation board appointed by the President.

Several members of the maritime unions testified against the Dirksen anti-union bill (H.R. 2662) this week on which hearings are being held by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The Allis-Chalmers Corporation's latest refusal to bargain collectively in good faith once again demonstrates the basic policy of this company—an unyielding attempt to break the union—and their flat disregard for the defense program.

The UAW-CIO was forced out on strike by the company's attitude in the first place. All attempts to settle the strike on the basis of collective bargaining have broken down through the refusal of the corporation to show good faith. Last Monday brought a new showdown, when the workers voted to accept the settlement proposed by the Office of Production Management, only to have it rejected by the company.

The OPM must now realize that the fault for this prolonged strike rests squarely on management—not on the workers.

And the Allis-Chalmers Corporation must learn that their attempt to run the plant with a handful of renegades will not succeed—that the UAWA-CIO will stay on the picket line until their just demands are won.

DIE CASTING WORKERS PROGRESS

Recent progress by the Die Casting Workers, as reported by Secretary-Treasurer Cheyfitz, includes three elections won, followed up by contracts covering more than 1,000 workers. The three elections were won by better than three to one majorities, and in one plant by a 90 per cent share of the votes cast. Two of these firms are in Detroit, the third in Cleveland.

CONTRACT IN KANSAS CITY

From Kansas City Regional Director Neil Beam reports signing a contract between SWOC and the Security Stove Co. The contract covers 160 workers and includes a six per cent wage boost, seniority rights and sole collective bargaining. The SWOC has also won an election at the Koch Refrigerator Co. in the same city, beating the AFL 72 to 54. Negotiations for a contract will begin this week.

CONTRACTS IN INDIANA

The Packinghouse Workers have won an agreement with the Elkhart Packing Co., securing a $22,000 pay raise ,a closed shop and check-off, seniority rights, etc. Local Industrial Union 1090 has won an election at the Noblesville Milling Co., by a two to one vote. Regional Director James Robb reports setting up three new SWOC locals in Anderson, Auburn and Albany.

Regional Director Pugh reports establishing a 100 per cent CIO local of the United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers at the Kwik-Kover Co. there.

THE AFL AGAIN

The AFL we always have with us — usually in the role of strikebreaker. This time it's Frank Fenton, AFL organizing head, acting in the role of company unionist. Fenton has just announced that the AFL will "intervene" in the Intl. Harvester Co. strike at the big McCormick works in Chicago.

Fenton will be remembered as the front man chosen by Green for his alleged organizing drive at the Ford plants in Detroit. He will also be remembered by Ford workers — and others — as nothing more nor less than an ally of union-hating employers.

Harvester Strike Parleys In Capital

WASHINGTON, Mar. 8.—Negotiations for a settlement of the strike involving 15,000 workers at four mid-west plants of the International Harvester Co. were transferred here this week, when Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins summoned representatives of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee and the company to Washington to confer with Dr. John Steelman of the Conciliation Service.

Allan Haywood, CIO director of organization, represented the national CIO at the conference, along with Powers Hapgood, CIO field representative, who has been in Chicago for several weeks aiding the FEWOC in the dispute with Harvester.

FEWOC Chairman Grant Oakes headed the union delegation of 11 officials from the striking locals and from the national FEWOC office in Chicago.

6,000 MORE OUT

The union's position was greatly strengthened by the walkout last week of more than 6,000 workers in the Chicago McCormick plant, a statement issued by the union declared. "This walkout was regarded as being in itself a union victory, since the management had always considered this plant a company union stronghold," the union stated.

Mounting support is pouring in from the CIO. Telegrams were received from 17 national union heads, the FEWOC reported.

SUPPORT FROM UNIONS

Philip Murray, CIO president, wired:

"Our representatives in the field will give you every degree of cooperation."

A wire from John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers said: "I sincerely hope that your efforts will receive the wholehearted support of your fellow workers in other industries throughout the country."

James Carey, CIO secretary, sent "warmest greetings" and urged the FEWOC to continue its struggle "to get a fair deal from this powerful and wealthy corporation."

Telegrams supporting the strike were also received from R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers; Pres. Joseph P. Selly of the American Communications Workers; Pres. Donal Sullivan of the American Newspaper Guild, Pres. Harry Bridges, Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, and other CIO union heads.

Besides the McCormick concern, the other IHC plants on strike are the big Tractor Works at Chicago, and plants at Rock Falls, Ill. and Richmond, Ind.

HARVESTER STRIKE SPREADS: With Intl. Harvester Co. fighting to maintain its open shop, strike of CIO Farm Equipment Workers spread to the big McCormick Works in Chicago. Several of the firm's branches are closed by the walkout for union recognition.

LABOR AND THE LAW:

Supreme Court Ruling Seen As Danger to Unions

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

A majority of the Supreme Court of the United States recently decided a Labor Board case which may seriously curtail the protection which labor has enjoyed under the National Labor Relations Act. (National Labor Relations Board v. Express Publishing Company, decided March 3, 1941). Justices Black, Reed and Douglas wrote a minority opinion in this case and voted to uphold the order of the Labor Board.

Since the enactment of the Labor Act, where the Labor Board has found that an employer had engaged in any of the unfair labor practices prohibited under the Act, the Board has issued an order directing the employer to cease and desist from engaging in the particular acts which it had committed in the past and also in any other unfair labor practices covered by the Act.

NLRB'S REASONING

The reason for this is quite simple. Where an employer has been found to have violated the rights of labor in any respect the Board simply adopted a common sense attitude and ruled that that employer has indicated his intent and practice not to recognize any rights of his employes as guaranteed under the Labor Act, and therefore should be restrained from violating any of the provisions of the Act and not merely the particular provision which he had violated in the past.

In the field of industrial relations it is immaterial to the employes whether—individual members of the union are discharged; labor spies are employed; a company union is sponsored and financed; new employes are selected who promise not to join an outside union; or the employer refuses to engage in collective bargaining. The employer simply chooses that practice or practices which will best serve his ultimate purposes, namely, to destroy union organization among his employes.

PRACTICAL EFFECTS

The practical effect of this Board practice was this: If under such an order issued by the Board, and affirmed by a court decree, an employer commits any unfair labor practice, the Board could institute contempt proceedings in the court for violation of the court decree. Such a proceeding not only could be initiated and completed with speed but also could subject the violating employer to fines or imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

On the other hand, if such an employer had not been put under the complete ban, but had merely been prohibited from committing the particular unfair labor practice in which he had engaged in the past, then as to any new unfair labor practice the Board would have had to initiate a new Board proceeding with all the attendant delays.

In the recent case before the Supreme Court an employer was found by the Labor Board to have refused to engage in collective bargaining with a union that represented a majority of his employes and to have committed other acts which prevented the union from engaging in such collective bargaining.

A RECENT CASE

On this basis the Board ordered the company to engage in collective bargaining and also to cease and desist from in any way interfering with the rights of his employes guaranteed under the National Labor Relations Act. The majority of the Supreme Court ruled that this portion of the Board's order, which covered unfair labor practices other than the specific ones the employer had committed in the past, should be stricken out. This means that if that employer commits a new unfair labor practice hereafter the Board must initiate an entirely new proceeding against him and cannot rely upon the old order which has been affirmed by the court and made the subject of a court decree.

MINORITY DISSENT

The minority Justices were far more realistic. They held that where the National Labor Relations Board, the administrative agency directed by Congress to administer the Act and protect the rights of labor, determines that in order to effectuate the policies and purposes of the legislation, it is necessary not merely to restrain the employer from repeating his misdeeds of the past but also to restrain him from violating any of the provisions of the Act, the court should not interfere with such a finding and ruling.

The majority opinion does not prohibit the Board from issuing the type of broad order which it did in the particular case but it does make it exceedingly difficult to obtain this type of relief. The opinion would require that hereafter, in cases involving specific unfair labor practices on the part of an employer, the evidence must show and the findings of the Board so hold that (a) the practice of the past is reasonably related with the other unfair labor practices prescribed under the Labor Act and (b) what the employer has committed in the past reasonably suggests the danger of the commission in the future of not only similar acts but also of the other unfair labor practices.

This artificial and restrictive approach to the administrative problems of the Labor Board when it attempts to protect labor should be compared with the majority opinion of the same Supreme Court Justices in another recent case which upheld an injunction issued against a labor union prohibiting all peaceful picketing and other union activities because of certain acts of violence that had been committed. (Milkwagon Drivers Union vs. Meadowmoor Dairies, Inc., decided February 10, 1941.)

Education Leaders Discuss World Crisis

New York, Mar. 8.—Delegates to the annual conference of teachers and leaders in workers' education held in the offices of the American Labor Education Service last month took part in panel discussions and heard speakers on the general theme of the conference—"Workers' Education and the World Crisis."

More than 125 representatives of CIO unions and other labor, government and educational groups attended the conference from 30 communities in the East, Middle West, South and Canada. Mrs. Marie Elliott Algor, director of the Hudson Square Labor School, conducted a seminar for teachers and educational directors.

Massachusetts CIO Hails Gains; To Push Drive

BOSTON, Mar. 8.—The largest convention of the Massachusetts State CIO Industrial Union Council last weekend laid down a program of militant defense of labor's rights and demonstrated time and again its enthusiastic desire to give all possible support to the CIO's big organizing drive against the Ford Motor Company.

The delegates cheered a report by President Salerno that the CIO had organized 35,000 members in Massachusetts in the past year and adopted resolutions defending the right to strike, charging many employers with using the defense program to fight labor, demanding a five-day week for state employes, a state wage-hour act, a "New England TVA" and a state fund for workmen's compensation, and urging unions to fight harder than ever to extend organization and improve the living standards of workers.

Thunderous ovations were given to Michael J. Widman, Jr., head of the Ford campaign, when he reported on progress of the drive and declared to the shouts of delegates, that "we are either going to get an election before the National Labor Relations Board" or the United Automobile Workers will launch "the biggest strike ever conducted in the country against one company."

UP TO FORD

"A strike," added Widman, who is a former president of the Massachusetts CIO, "can be avoided whenever Mr. Ford wants to sit down at a conference table with us."

The convention adopted a resolution pledging united support to the auto workers in whatever action they have to take to bring Ford to book.

James B. Carey, president of the United, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and secretary of the CIO, spoke along with Widman at a pre-convention rally and at the convention itself, urging the delegates to forget any differences over political or ideological views in the interests of uniting on defense of union rights and improvement of living standards.

RAPS MISS PERKINS

Carey criticized Secretary of Labor Perkins for saying the CIO strike against Bethlehem in Lackawanna, N. Y., was called on short notice. He declared "the CIO gave the government more than three years' notice, for we warned the government against giving contracts to law violators."

The convention also heard Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union of America; John Brophy, national director of industrial union councils, and Leo Krzycki of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

MUST PRESERVE GAINS

Brophy, calling attention to CIO organizational gains in many industries, said that "1941 holds promise of being a banner year for the CIO."

He stressed the need for state councils to recognize the importance of their legislative work and for protection of the social gains won by labor during recent years.

"We are for adequate national defense, and along with that must go the strengthening of the rights of labor," Brophy added.

SALERNO RE-ELECTED

Joseph A. Salerno, New England director for the ACWA, was re-elected president by a 376 to 140 vote over James J. Chenery of the International Fur and Leather Workers. Salvatore Camelio of the United Rubber Workers, first vice-president, was the only other executive officer re-elected.

Albert J. Fitzgerald of the UERMWA was elected secretary-treasurer; Francis Carmichael, United Mine Workers, legislative agent, and William Beanger, TWUA, assistant legislative agent. The constitution was amended to increase the number of vice-presidents from 11 to 16 and give greater representation to large unions, and all to be elected at large instead of seven from districts.

Editor On Air

New Kensington, Pa., Mar. 8— Taking note of increasing public interest in labor affairs, radio station WKPA here has arranged for twice-a-week broadcasts by Walter Peters, editor of the Allegheny-Kiski Valley edition of The CIO NEWS.

Peters will comment on highlights in the labor news of the nation and of western Pennsylvania.

Indiana CIO Backs Anti-Bias Bill

Indianapolis, Ind., Mar. 8 — A resolution passed by the Indiana House of Representatives to prohibit discrimination because of race, creed or color, has full support from the CIO, John Bartee, secretary of the Indiana Industrial Union Council, said today.

The bill is now being considered by the state senate.

In a wire to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Walter White of the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, urged full labor support for the measure.

"Negroes are taxed at the same rate as other Americans for the defense program and are entitled on a basis of merit to employment, which is now being denied them by many employers and some labor unions," White declared.

"Nothing can so completely destroy the faith of the Negro in the American system of government than continuation of the discrimination which this bill attempts to end."

PICKET PAPER: Members of the New York Newspaper Guild picket the offices of the Jewish Day, on the city's lower East Side. Placards in English and Jewish point out that employes were fired or suffered drastic wage cuts. Strike has CIO support.

Anti-Seamen Bill AimedAt All Labor Curran Declares

WASHINGTON, Mar. 8.—Passage of the Dirksen bill to outlaw the union hiring hall is designed to "destroy our only guarantee against discrimination, blacklist and other unfair labor practices" and to force maritime workers back to the conditions that made the industry a national scandal before it was organized, according to testimony by Joseph Curran, president of the Natl. Maritime Union, before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries here.

Curran's testimony, delivered at a two-day committee session, emphasized that the Dirksen bill, though aimed first at the maritime unions, would be an opening wedge for union-breaking attacks on all organized labor.

Destruction of the union hiring system would bring back the old system of hiring through "crimp-herders," who preyed on seamen before they were organized, Curran declared.

"If this machinery is destroyed," he said, "the industry would be thrown back to the unstable, anarchistic condition which prevailed before the union was formed. A vote for this bill is a vote for anarchy and disruption. A vote against it is a vote for peace and stabilization."

FINK BOOK

In addition to destroying the hiring hall, which protects seamen and other maritime workers from company discrimination for union activity, the bill would fasten a whole series of repressions on the marine unions, Curran pointed out.

Included in these are the "continuous discharge book," various penalties against "subversive elements" which would be used solely against militant union members, compulsory mediation, and a direct attack on the right to strike.

The continuous discharge book, known to seamen as the "fink book," is a method of spotting active unionists by which employers would be permitted to enter any comments they wished on the seamen's papers, thus providing future employers with a perfect record of each worker. This proposal, made by shipowners some time ago, was defeated once before in Congress, Curran explained, and should be defeated again as an attempt to destroy the seaman's right to freedom of speech and of action within his organization.

NINE LOCALS

New York — The CIO United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers Intl. Union chartered nine new locals in January, it was announced today. The new locals are situated in Pennsylvania, Oregon, New York, Indiana, Connecticut, and Massachusetts.

PLEASED: First New York department store employes to win the 40-hour week, these CIO members employed at Hearn's took time out to celebrate. The shorter week was won by United Retail & Wholesale Employes shortly before a strike deadline.

U. S. Workers Plan Wage Raise Drive

New York, Mar. 8 — New York locals of the CIO United Federal Workers today made plans for a conference to set off a campaign of wage increases.

The meeting, scheduled for Mar. 12, will urge passage by Congress of a bill to provide federal employes with annual pay raises, recently introduced by Rep. Jennings Randolph of West Virginia.

Declared Ann Wharton, New York representative of the union: "Workers in private industry, particularly where organized into the CIO, have gone out and won pay raises. Why should Uncle Sam's workers be worse treated?"

U. S. Workers Set Pay Raise Campaign

Washington, Mar. 8 — Emphasis on a drive to bring Government pay up to decent levels, plus a wide campaign of organizing unorganized workers, marked the session of the United Federal Workers Executive Board just concluded here.

The pay raise drive will center on passage of HR 625, the Board indicated, which is now in Congress and will provide for automatic pay increases annually. Intensive drives in Washington will be undertaken around this bill, as well as in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

The UFWA Board, headed by Administrator Allan S. Haywood and Secretary-Treasurer Eleanor Nelson, pointed to declining wage and hour standards in the U. S. Navy Yards as a primary example of the need for such campaigns, citing the fact that several Yards are already working a 10 hour day and a seven day week.

SUPPORT MINERS

The Board voted full support to the United Mine Workers, both in their campaign for the Mine Safety Bill and in their approaching negotiations for renewal of the contract. It went on record opposing new attempts to deport Harry Bridges, CIO leader in California and president of the Longshoremen and Warehousemen, and reaffirmed the CIO policy against involvement in foreign war as outlined at the Atlantic City convention.

Coal, Steel Unions Ask Pay Increases

Affects 750,000 Workers In Mines, At U. S. Steel

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—Two of the CIO's most powerful affiliated unions this week served notice on employers that they will seek increased wage rates for an estimated 750,000 members.

In New York, the United Mine Workers entered the biennial Appalachian Joint Wage Conference with demands for $1 a day increases, vacations with pay, 200 days' guaranteed employment each year and substantial improvements in working conditions.

In Pittsburgh, Chairman Philip Murray of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee served formal notice on U. S. Steel that the union wants a 10c hourly wage increase, exclusive bargaining rights on a company-wide basis, and improved seniority and vacation plans.

Under terms of the existing agreement with U. S. Steel, which was signed in 1938, failure to reach agreement on new clauses automatically terminates the current contract in 20 days.

The United Mine Workers' demands were presented to the coal operators by UMW Pres. John L. Lewis, who said that a decent share of approaching inflation should reach the "shrunken bellies" of underpaid workers. He warned of impending price increases, predicted failure for government price regulation efforts, and said the coal miners were determined to be protected against such price fluctuations.

5 From CIO On Textile Committee

Washngton, Mar. 15.—Appointment of a new industry committee to recommend minimum wages for textile workers was announced today by Gen. Philip Fleming Wage,Hour Administrator.

The textile industry is now operating under a 32½ cent minimum based on recommendations of an earlier industry committee. The 32½c base rate brought wage increases to about 175,000 employes when it went into effect in October, 1939. About 650,000 persons are employed in the industry.

Appointed to the committee, whose first meeting will be on April 14, were five officials of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America: Pres. Emil Rieve, Edward Doolan, Fall River, Mass.; Elizabeth Nord, Manchester, Conn.; Roy Lawrence, Charlotte, N. C.; Horace White, Greensboro, Ga.

PICKET SIGNS APLENTY: Transport Workers Union picket squads scoop up placards as deadline passed on union's demands for wage increases from New York buslines. All buses went off the streets in one of the most effective—and peaceful—walkouts in Manhattan history. The men are seeking wage increases and better working conditions.

Union Asks Contract At Harper & Bros.

New York, Mar. 5.—Employes of Harper & Brothers are seeking to bargain collectively with the management with a view to securing a union contract covering four departments, acording to an announcement made today by the Book and Magazine Guild, Local 18, United Office and Professional Workers of America, CIO.

The departments in which the Guild claims a majority membership for whom it is asking bargaining rights are: the department of Medical Books; the shipping department; the Mayfair Lettershop, which is owned and operated by Harpers; and Harpers Magazine.

Ford Stoppage Wins Job Return; Election Set

DETROIT, Mar. 15. — Frank H. Bowen, director of the Seventh Region NLRB, today set the date for hearings on and election in the Lincoln and River Rouge plants for Monday, Mar. 24. Indications are that elections will be rushed as much as possible.

At about the time Bowen made his announcement, 3,000 Ford workers in the open hearth and rolling mill of the Rouge plant spontaneously stopped work when the building superintendent refused to reinstate 23 men discharged for union activities last December in their old jobs.

Through Federal Conciliator James Dewey the UAW-CIO had conducted negotiations for the reinstatement of the men since their discharge, and although personnel director Harry Bennett of the company had promised reinstatement the building superintendent wanted to put the skilled men on ordinary production jobs instead of on their old jobs.

The rolling mill and open hearth men stopped work when one of the discharged men emerged from Supt. Drysdale's office and told a union shop committee that the superintendent had offered him only production work.

RIOT CALL

A riot squad of 25 service men, summoned by Drysdale when the stoppage started, found themselves confronted by about 600 UAW-CIO members when they came into the building to "quell" the disturbance. The service men modestly retired to another part of the building and assumed attitudes so peaceful they were almost angelic.

After the stoppage had continued for an hour, company officials promised to reinstate the eight rolling mill and 15 open hearth men on their old jobs.

A union committeeman and a company representative were dispatched to the offices of the Ford organizing committee to get any of the 23 men who were there. They found four and returned with them to the plant, where they were again assured by Bennett himself that all would be reinstated—rolling mill men on Friday and open hearth men on Monday.

Call Strike To Cut Out Piece Work

Detroit, Mar. 15 (FP) — An attempt by the Midland Steel Products Corp. to remove machinery from its plant forced 1,700 workers to strike Mar. 10 before schedule.

The company manufactures auto frames for General Motors, Chrysler and Ford. The strike was called by the CIO United Automobile Workers.

In answer to a warning by State Conciliator Edward Owen that the strike should not be called until conclusion of the 30-day notice period, union officials said the firm has practically no defense work. Only four men are working on defense orders, they said.

The UAW is demanding abolition of piece work, equal pay for equal work and wage increases.

Order Poll Hearings At Bethlehem

Lackawanna, N. Y., Mar. 15. — Hearings to determine whether an election should be held among the 14,000 employes of the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s Lackawanna plant.

The factory was the scene of a two-day strike recently which ended in a victory for the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee in its fight for a union contract from the big open shop corporation which holds a billion and a half dollars' worth of national defense contracts.

Efforts of the company to squirm out of the concessions granted at the conclusion of the strike meanwhile brought forth a sharp warning from Nathan Cowan, SWOC district director.

The union official charged that Bethlehem has welched on its promise to meet with union representatives to discuss grievances, and warned that the company will be faced with another walkout unless its policies are quickly changed.

NAMED: Charles Brown Sears, retired justice of the New York state court of appeals, who has been appointed by Atty.-Gen. Robert Jackson to act as trial examiner in the forthcoming deportation hearing against Pres. Harry Bridges of the CIO longshoremen's union. The case opens in San Francisco on March 31.

Blame Allis For Long Walkout

West Allis, Wisc., Mar. 15 — Refusal of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. to accept a government-sponsored compromise was cited today as the stumbling block to settlement of the two-month-old strike conducted by Local 248, United Automobile Workers.

The compromise was worked out in Washington, and accepted by the strikers at the suggestion of UAW leaders and the Office of Production Management.

HITS ATTITUDE

Ed Hall, UAW international representative, said the company's reservations "would nullify the entire Washington formula, which was designed to cover and did cover, the union's demands for a guarantee of union security.

"The company says it will negotiate, but states in advance what result the negotiations must have. That is not negotiation."

A statement issued by the OPM in Washington last week also indicated that the company's attitude has prevented resumption of work at the plant, which holds large defense orders.

"The company," the OPM declared, "was unwilling to accept the referee clause contained in the proposed agreement discussed with OPM officials at a meeting here Feb. 12, without guarantees that the referee could not judge it a union membership protection agreement."

Celotex Pact Covers 1,800

New Orleans, Mar. 15. — More than 1,800 workers at the Celotex Corp. plant near here are under contract with the CIO United Construction Workers, it was announced by Fred C. Pieper, regional director of the CIO.

The contract wins wage boosts totalling $100,000 for the workers, plus the eight hour day, 40 hour week, overtime pay, paid vacations, sole collective bargaining, grievance and arbitration machinery and other benefits.

CIO Head Opposes Dirksen Bill, Aimed At Seamen

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—Opposition of the entire CIO to the Dirksen Bill, designed to outlaw the union hiring hall, to impose enforced arbitration and to set up a blacklist in the maritime industry, was expressed by President Philip Murray in a statement sent today to the House Marine and Fisheries Committee now considering the measure.

The CIO joins "in the opposition to this bill not only because it is a fundamentally unsound approach to maritime labor relations, but because its proposals threaten the development of democratic and peaceful labor relations throughout Ameri industry," Murray said.

Murray particularly objected to the section of the bill that requires a continuous discharge book, which he said would provide "a most effective means of blacklisting union seamen," to the section prohibiting "subversive literature" on shipboard, which he said would be used against union literature, to the elimination of the hiring hall, and to the mediation proposals which would in effect establish compulsory arbitration.

SABOTAGE OF DEMOCRACY

The bill would amount to "sabotage of the defense of American democracy," Murray said. CIO opposition to the bill is in "the best interests of the entire American people," as well as that of maritime and other organized labor, he added.

Earlier the committee heard testimony against the bill from Bjorne Halling, CIO Maritime Committee Secretary, from Wm. Standard, Nat'l Maritime Union attorney, and Murray Winocur, vice-president of the American Communications Ass'n.

Martin| Popper, secretary of the Nat'l. Lawyers Guild, appeared to describe the bill as "an attempt to destroy a basic right of labor by a back-door method, and to set the clock back to the time when strikes constituted criminal conspiracy."

AFL AND SHIPOWNERS

Covert support for the purposes of the bill came from Harry Lundeberg, president of the AFL's Int'l. Seafarers Union, a splinter group organized in opposition to the NMU, and from Captain W. J. Petersen, of the Pacific American Shipowners Ass'n.

Lundeberg's testimony consisted largely of wild charges of "radicalism" against the CIO maritime unions and enthusiastic backing for the sections of the bill designed to deny certificates to "subversive elements."

Captain Petersen, though he did not favor abolition of the union hiring hall "just now," did favor the government taking over the hiring halls "as a matter of principle." The captain, who cited his former rank in the U. S. Navy as a basis for his knowledge of the industry, also favored the sections on "subsersive literature," and agreed with Lundeberg on the need to weed out the "radicals."

Though these two witnesses disclaimed support of the bill as written, their testimony was characterized by Maritime Committee Secretary Bjorne Halling as part of an anti-CIO drive to pass "some broad bill that will provide plenty of opportunity for discrimination against workers in the maritime industry."

Harvester Feels Pinch As Strike Holds Firm

CHICAGO, Mar. 15.—With farmers pressing for delivery of equipment for spring plowing, the International Harvester Corporation is feeling the pinch of the strike which has tied up production all along the Harvester chain, officials of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee said this week.

Four plants are shut down tight by the strike, now in its seventh week at the big Tractor Works here and at the plants in Richmond, Ind. and Rock Falls, Ill., and in its third week at the Chicago McCormick Works. Production at other plants is curtailed by lack of parts from the struck plants.

Support of the strike is growing stronger daily, the union stated, with indications pointing to a favorable settlement with the company. Thousands of workers turn out for the picket lines, and the strike organization is functioning on a huge scale.

LOTS OF FOOD

Strike leaders report that in one week 40 barrels of coffee, 2,000 bowls of soup, 10,000 doughnuts hundreds of loaves of bread and other food in similar quantities was given out at the McCormick and Tractor Works strike kitchens.

Threats of strikebreaking attack at McCormick Works this week failed to materialize, the union stated, after a call brought some 4,000 men and women out on the picket line early Monday morning. A rank and file movement in the AFL was reported under way to prevent top AFL officials from trying to lead a back-to-work movement at McCormick.

Negotiations to settle the strike around the conference table were stalemated last week, when representatives of the union and the company, calld to Washington by Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, failed to reach an agreement.

Dr. John R. Steelman, U. S. Conciliator, in whose offices the conference continued almost steadily for several days, finally called it off when he was convinced that the two sides were hopelessly deadlocked.

Win Strike In Memphis

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Mar. 15 FP) — Described as the first all-Negro strike victory in Memphis, an agreement between the CIO United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers and the De Soto Cotton Oil Co. was signed after a five-week walkout.

The contract covers 90 workers, all Negroes.

Shoe Union Hits Army Contract to Law Flouter

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—Sec. James B. Carey of the CIO today assured leaders of the United Shoe Workers that he would look into an Army contract to a shoe firm found guilty on 56 counts of violating the U. S. Wage-Hour Act.

Carey's decision followed receipt of a letter from Sec. James J. Mitchell of the USWA and Research Director Leo Goodman, who asserted that if the contract is allowed to stand, the Defense Commission's statement of labor policy, made last Labor Day, "will become an open farce."

The shoe union letter named the A. G. Walton Shoe Co. of Chelsea, Mass., as the recipient of the Army awards. Three executives of the firm were indicted late in 1939 on 49 counts each, following USWA complaints to the Wage-Hour authorities, the letter pointed out.

"While the indictments were still outstanding in November and December, 1940, the company received close to $300,000 in orders for 90 pairs of shoes for the War Dept.

Union protests to the Army were met with the reply that the company had not yet "had its day in court," Sec. Mitchell wrote.

Yet two days after the company was found guilty of violating the wage-hour law, the army on March 1 granted the company another order for 60,000 more pairs.

"I urge you to obtain the full facts regarding the award from the Office of Production Management and join in protest in behalf of the CIO against this further example of government agents going out of their way to benefit labor law violators," Mitchell wrote to Carey.

$1-Day Raise Demanded By Mine Union

NEW YORK, Mar. 15.—Negotiations for a new agreement covering 350,000 soft coal miners opened in New York this week, when Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers presented to the Appalachian Joint Conference the union's demands for $1 a day increase in wages, vacations with pay, a guarantee of 200 working days a year and other improvements.

Two days later the operators announced their rejection of these demands, making a counter-proposal that the present agreement be extended for another two years.

Lewis immediately replied that this counter-proposal was entirely unsatisfactory as any basis for settlement. On behalf of the UMWA, however, he offered to keep the mines working under present conditions beyond the contract expiration date of March 1, if an agreement was not reached before that date—with changes that might later be agreed upon to be made retroactive to April 1.

OPERATORS REFUSE

This proposal was voted down by the operators, and the miners' wage demands were referred to subcommittees of four from each side for further negotiation.

A similar proposal to continue work beyond the expiration of the agreement was made by the Mine Workers two years ago, but the refusal of the operators to agree to it then resulted in a prolonged lockout.

In presenting the miners' demands, Lewis declared that they did not want to repeat the experience of the last war, when record profits were piled up but the Mine Workers "were forced to fight the rapidly rising living costs. . .on wage rates far below those paid in comparable industries, simply because out of patriotism they signed a period-of-the-war wage agreement."

POST-WAR PROBLEMS

Lewis warned that there is likely to be a "different economic aftermath" to this war to that which followed the last war. "Instead of the United States replenishing the world with mass production equipment and other goods and services, which served as a cushion 22 years ago, we will likely find ourselves confronted with the most serious and distorted economy in our history.

"Our economy will not again stand profit loots, such as occurred during the last war," he said. "Profits cannot be piled into banks and invested in foreign loans.

MORE FOR WORKERS

"There must filter through into the pay envelopes of the men who man the mines, factories and other services a larger share of the profit-producing leverages that result from steady operations, regardless of what has heretofore been determined by engineers' charts and graphs as labor's share of increased volume.

"Stable relations are an industrial and democratic asset. Stable purchasing power is the economic axis around which our

N. Y. Bus Drivers Strike To Lift Wage Scale

NEW YORK, Mar. 14.—The most effective transportation strike in New York history today had removed every bus from Manhattan streets as 3,500 drivers, members of the CIO Transport Workers Union, pressed their demads for wage increases and improved conditions.

Conferences with Arthur S. Meyer, head of the State Media-tion Board, got under way during the third day of the strike with TWU Pres. Michael Quill, CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood and other union leaders participating.

The strike was marked by complete absence of violence, a factor which worked against the wild red-baiting campaign conducted by all but one of the city's newspapers.

BUSES OFF STREETS

No buses appeared on Manhattan streets, and TWU pickets carried signs directing the public to the nearest subway stations. Some 900,000 persons normally use the buses each day.

In a long statement, the union showed that the two struck companies—the New York City Omnibus Corp. and the Fifth Avenue Coach Co.—had made substantial profits but were seeking to cut wages and slice sick leave and holidays with pay.

Countering long statements of the companies' case, which appeared in expensive newspaper advertisements, the TWU recalled that shortly before expiration of the old agreements, "we submitted to the two companies proposals for new contracts which would provide for increased wages, a uniform eight-hour day and improved working conditions.

"These proposals were submitted not as an ultimatum, but as a basis for the negotiation of new contracts. And, in view of the fact that we live in a war period during which a substantial rise in the cost of living is universally expected, we felt that a reasonable attitude on the part of these companies would, in the light of their financial experience, require a reasonable increase in our wages, and an improvement in our hours and working conditions."

Leaders of the TWU were at a loss to explain a bitter attack on the union's action by Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia. Observers pointed out, however, that the Mayor, as head of the city-owned subway lines, will soon be bargaining with the TWU when contracts on two subway systems expire.

The mayor's statement, and a special red-baiting release by the Dies Committee in Washington, provided ammunition for a flood of hostile editorials and headlines in every paper except the tabloid PM, which gave considerable space to the strikers' viewpoint. Scripps-Howard and Hearst vied for lurid details of what they described as a "red plot" to paralyze the city.

But aided by the TWU members, commuters were directed to the nearest subway stations, and transportation was easily maintained.

Ask 10c Raise At U. S. Steel

By VIN SWEENEY

PITTSBURGH, Mar. 15.—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has served notice on U. S. Steel to reopen its contracts with the company.

This action climaxed a series of informal conferences started on Nov. 7, 1940 between Philip Murray, SWOC chairman, and officials of U. S. Steel for an increase in wages, improvement in the vacation plan and scores of other changes in the contracts held with the subsidiaries of "Big Steel."

It followed a two-day meeting of presidents of SWOC locals in U. S. Steel plants, held in Pittsburgh March 7 and 8 and marked by:

1—Rejection of a company offer of a 2½-cent an hour increase based on the production rate.

2—Approval of a nine-point SWOC program for a 10-cent-an-hour wage increase and other improvements.

3—Voting of authority for the executive officers of the SWOC to take whatever action is necessary for the purpose of securing improved wages and working conditions, in accordance with the nine-point program.

MURRAY'S LETTER

The letter giving the 10-day written notice, as provided in the existing contracts, said in part:

"The changes which are desired by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee have to do with question of recognition, wages, hours of work, vacations, seniority, adjustment of grievances, including disposition of discharge cases, equalization of wage rates in various classifications of labor, job protection for employes inducted into military service, and collection of dues."

Procedure for re-opening the contracts was set forth in the agreement signed with the various subsidiaries of U. S. Steel on Feb. 9, 1938. It provides that if no agreement is reached within 20 days, the contract automatically terminates.

NINE-POINT PROGRAM

The SWOC's nine-point program in addition to the ten-cent an hour increase in wages, asks for exclusive bargaining rights when the union shows a majority, amendments to the section of the contract relating to hours of

CIO Presses Demands At Westinghouse

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Mar. 15.—Fifty delegates representing 40,000 employes in the 22 Westinghouse plants in which the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America is certified as exclusive collective bargaining agent, met here Sunday and unanimously adopted a five-point plan of action to compel the company to negotiate the union's demands for a national agreement. a ten-cents-per-hour general wage increase, and other improvements in working conditions.

COMPANY REFUSES

Despite the formal consent, however, Westinghouse has continued to refuse to negotiate the union's demands.

Actions of the National Westinghouse Conference of UE locals were transmitted to the Company on Monday by Sec.-Treas. Emspak and James J. Matles, Director of Organization.

Delegates also voted to send greetings and pledges of support to the United Mine Workers of America and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee as brother CIO unions who are also engaged in campaigns for wage increases.

Vote For CIO By 7-1

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—Packinghouse workers at the Cudahy plant in Newport, Minn., showed a seven to one preference for the CIO in a Labor Board election. They voted 710 for the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, 93 against.

The vote was a strong contrast to the AFL's showing in a craft unit election among engineers, in which the vote was a six-six tie.

Relativity

One does not have to be an Einstein to understand the relatively of profits and wages, or of prices and wages.

Everyone who works for a living knows that it is possible to get higher money wages and yet to find that one's real wages are lower, because there has been a greater relative increase in prices.

It is also clear that wage rates can increase somewhat and yet labor's share of the fruits of industry may be decreasing at the same time, because there is a greater relative increase in profits.

That is just what has been happening in the past few years. There has been a rapidly increasing spread between the greater and greater share going to profits and the smaller and smaller share going to wages.

A chart in the current CIO Economic Outlook shows how this has happened in the steel industry. Since the middle of 1938, the profits per dollar of steel shipped have risen substantially, while the wages per dollar of steel shipped have steadily decreased.

The rate of steel profits has risen from 4¼% in 1939 to 8½% in 1940 and is likely to be at least 12% in 1941. This means, the Outlook points out, that a 10% increase in wages could be taken entirely from profits in 1941 and still reduce profits only to 9%—a higher level than in 1940.

In the other major industries, the same relationship between profits and wages prevails.

It is therefore clear that present CIO demands for wage increases can be granted without necessitating price increases, or even making too big a hole in profits. They should just have the healthy effect of reducing the present increasingly unhealthy spread between profits and wages.

Aimed at Our Defense

The notorious Dirksen bill (HR 2662) is a sample and forerunner of the attacks on labor and democratic rights being prepared by anti-union reactionaries in the present Congress.

CIO President Philip Murray points out that it would "open the gates to a flood of discrimination for union activity in the maritime industry" by blacklisting through the so-called continuous discharge books; barring union literature from ships; eliminating union hiring halls; and restricting the right to strike.

"Strong trade unions and well-established collective bargaining procedures are the only guarantees of maritime labor stability," he says.

The CIO opposes this and all similar bills and proposals, not only in the interests of all labor, but also in the best interests of the entire American people, for whose democratic rights and economic welfare labor unions are the first line of defense.

Profit Hogs to Blame

Just think over the following figures for a moment, if you've been confused by all the full-page ads which blame unions for strikes:

The latest annual report of the International Harvester Co. (for the year ending Oct. 31, 1940) shows an increase of 191% in profits, from $7,952,810 in 1939 to $23,161,110 in 1940.

Yet this wealthy corporation, which has increased its own take by three times, insists on holding up production and keeping thousands of employes on strike rather than to sit down and negotiate wages increases with their union.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

JOHN L. LEWIS made his first public address since the Atlantic City CIO convention at a gathering which is as unique in character as it is far-reaching in importance.

In the great ballroom of a New York hotel were assembled hundreds of coal miners and operators for what is known as the Appalachian Joint Conference.

The employers and union men sit side by side like delegates to a convention. They elect a chairman and other officers. Credentials and rules committees report. And then the conference gets down to its main business—the negotiation of a new agreement covering 350,000 soft coal miners in the Appalachian area.

After both sides have presented their position to the conference, subcommittees carry on the more detailed negotiations. But the final power of ratification rests with the joint assembly.

Lewis arose as president of the United Mine Workers of America to present the miners' demand to this big gathering of employers and workers.

The Appalachian conference is always of crucial importance to the whole coal industry. The agreement it negotiates offers a basis for later contracts covering 150,000 additional soft coal miners outside the Appalachian area; and it naturally affects the anthracite negotiations that follow.

But this year, the significance of this conference extends far beyond the coal industry. It is held at a time when hundreds of thousands of workers in the steel, automobile, electrical and other industries are presenting wage increase demands, as are the miners; and are being met by unified resistance from the big financial interests behind all these industries.

All of the CIO unions, therefore, are backing the miners in their demands, and at the same time looking to them for leadership in breaking the log-jam of opposition to long over-due wage increases.

In his presentation, Lewis dealt with the specific demands of the UMWA and the problems of the coal industry. But his generalizations had a message for millions of other workers as well.

Lewis noted that the present war is upsetting all previous calculations, and that there will probably be "quite a different economic aftermath to that which followed in the wake of the world war.

"Instead of the United States replenishing the world with mass production equipment and other goods and services, which served as a cushion 22 years ago, we will likely find ourselves confronted with the most serious and distorted economy in our history," he said.

Lewis declared that "stable purchasing power is the economic axis around which our whole future and the American standards of living revolve."

He warned that we cannot again stand the profit-looting that went on in the last war. "Profits cannot be piled into banks and invested in foreign loans," he said. "There must filter through into the pay envelopes of the men who man the mines, factories and other services, a larger share of the profit-producing leverages that result from steady operations."

Pointing to the huge profit increases of the past year, Lewis emphasized that the modest wage demands of the workers can bet met out of these profits without causing any upsets.

At the same time he scouted the idea that inflation can be prevented in a war period by price controls or attempts to keep down wages.

He called attention to the inflated prices of the last war in the United States, and to the fact that in all European countries, despite complete dictatorships over economic life and price controls, huge price increases have already resulted in wiping out "all margins of safety between income and barest sustenance levels of working men."

"There is going to be inflation," Lewis declared, "and the United Mine Workers are determined that some of this inflation shall be in the shrunken bellies of the mining population."

Fully recovered from his recent illness, Lewis was in fine fighting trim. He struck out vigorously time and again at evil practices that afflict the coal industry and injustices to which the miners are subjected—including the "indiscriminate butchery" that results from inadequate safety provisions.

In the course of his serious argument for paid vacations, he took occasion to josh the operators about their own fondness for Florida vacations, while they deny similar opportunities to their employes.

Lewis said that on his recent visit, he was the only coal miner in Florida—"but coal operators, my word! From Santa Maria to Ponce De Leon, in any clump of royal palms you could flash from one to six coal operators.

"And what attire! Herringbone Irish tweeds, Holland Dutch sky-blue pantaloons, and Czechoslovakian sandals!"

He said he didn't begrudge the operators their vacations, nor even their attire, but the miners should have a chance to find out whether they too liked such vacations.

Lewis Speech At Mine Parley

These are perilous times.

What the ultimate economic fate of the people of any nation, now participating in world destruction or other causes unannounced and unknown, will ultimately be, constitutes a problem that has the intelligensia of business and science, as well as the practicing politician and writers, completely lost. Their factual reasoning simply does not operate. History, past, present, and future, becomes a blank. The social sciences have completely failed to foresee or understand economic crash and impoverishment, war or peace. Everything happens in reverse gear to their alleged intellectual forecasts.

Whenever truce, stalemate or victory finally comes, there is every likelihood that there will be quite a different economic aftermath to that which followed in the wake of the World War.

NEW PROBLEMS

Instead of the United States replenishing the world with mass production equipment and other goods and services, which served as a cushion 22 years ago, we will likely find ourselves confronted with the most serious and distorted economy in our history. Our problems will be just as grave as those of Europe and Asia, using the American standard of living as a yardstick.

From extravagance, waste, guns, ships, cantonments, political debate and marching men, we shall return to the economic axis of the consumers' ability to buy in sufficient volume to keep the wheels of industry turning.

If we are to face the hard realities of our economic status in the days to come, then American industry and American political thought should decide now that equally important as munitions is the future welfare of the American people which demands the maintenance of wage levels that will insure reasonably satisfactory consumer purchasing power.

To obtain this result, it is essential that we maintain our industrial relationships on an economic basis that moves wage rates and purchasing power in complete coordination with mounting costs of goods and services necessary to clothe, feed and house the American people.

Our economy will not again stand profit loots, such as occurred during the last war. Profits cannot be piled into banks and invested in foreign loans. There must filter through into the pay envelopes of the men who man the mines, factories and other services, a larger share of the profit producing leverages that result from steady operations, regardless of what has heretofore been determined by engineers' charts and graphs as labor's share of increased volume.

A NATIONAL ASSET

Stable labor relations are an industrial and democratic asset. Stable purchasing power is the economic axis around which our whole future and the American standards of living revolve. If we throw economic caution to the winds, in the frantic haste of the moment, then we might as well resolve ourselves into economic despair.

The Mine Workers wage requests are not excessive. They contain no revolutionary provisions dictating policies of management or of conquest of present or future profits beyond the time accepted formula governing shop practices and collective bargaining in coal, as well as other industries. The wage increases asked can be paid for in a large part out of present earnings, insofar as the bulk of bituminous coal tonnage is concerned. . . .

BIG PROFITS

Let me assure the industrial and economic analysts, who are so fearful and disturbed lest the bituminous coal industry confiscate the assets of steel, railroads and all manufacturing as well as the Government's bonding power, that the few cents per ton, asked by the Miners, can be met out of industrial profits without disturbing present earning ratios.

A compilation by the New York Times, as of February 23, 1940, shows that 501 industrial concerns, reporting as of that date, thus far in 1940 had a total net income of $1,203,354,199 against $959,668,680 in 1939, an increase of $243,665,519.

Steel companies, producing 80 per cent of the total ingots, reported 1940 profits double those of 1939. Eleven producers had an aggregate net of $231,961,517 after all charges against $117,112,474 in 1939, and they covered all sorts of new charges by applying the tuckaway system for all contingencies, real and fancied.

Class One railroads increased 1940 earnings over 1939 by $94,000,000, after paying increased taxes of $41,000,000. All this, while the coal bill of the railroads remained practically stationary.

General Motors, Chrysler, Du-Pont and the whole roll call of allegedly tax-burdened American Corporations, showed earnings doubled and ranging upwards from 10 to thirty-five per cent over 1939.

Certainly, the earnings record of American industry is not one that a few cents per ton increase on four hundred and fifty million tons of bituminous coal, of which more than one hundred million tons move into domestic consumption, can be held a threat to industrial economic security, or productive of economic chaos for the national rearmament program. . . .

RISING PRICES

In the World War, the big advance in commodity prices began late in 1915. The inflation prices continued and reached 150 per cent increase by 1920.

We have only to look ahead to discover what the future holds for the consumer's dollar in inflated prices.

Government spending, high taxes, excess bank reserves, speculative buying of goods and materials, plus competition for skilled and productive labor, all constitute the makings of inflated prices.

LABOR'S PROBLEM

Labor is as anxious about its own ability to meet the threatened rising cost of food, materials and services, as industry. Labor does not possess the recovery advantages which the business structure and tax laws bestow upon corporate setups. Industry insists on amortizing the cost of armament plant costs over a brief period, and as a further assurance of protection, industry demands cost plus profits and fixed fees for management counsel and direction.

Labor, however, must secure its fair division, in keeping with mounting costs, at the time the man-day service is rendered, otherwise equitable pay is lost forever. There are no recapture or retroactive safeguards in the background to protect the day worker or ordinary salaried employe.

The United Mine Workers have a duty, and the coal industry has a duty, insofar as it is possible of accomplishment, to protect the coal miners from the uneconomic lot that befell them in the last World War.

Now is not the time to be misled by propaganda of newly discovered price controls. The history of the past belies any such devices or genius.

When the conversion of our productive plants from consumer goods to armaments is well on its way, we Americans, like the Europeans, will face scarcities and inflated prices.

Coal Miners Demand $1-A-Day Increase

whole future and the American standards of living revolve."

The Mine Workers did not press any demand for a shorter workday, but declared that "without sacrificing the principle of the six-hour day," they were willing to extend the present seven-hour, five-day week for another two-year period.

PRINCIPAL DEMANDS

Their demands included the following:

1. An increase of 12c a ton in combined cutting and loading rates, and an increase of $1 a day for all day men.

2. A guarantee of not less than 200 working days a year.

3. Two weeks annual vacation with pay.

4. Seniority provisions, calling for priority rights to jobs, in event of layoffs, on basis of length of service.

5. Right of Mine Workers safety committees to inspect any mining operations and authorize stoppage of work when dangerous conditions are found. "Mourning periods" for the dead in the industry to be authorized, during which coal production shall cease.

6. Elimination of existing inequitable differentials within and between districts, including north-south differentials.

BENEFITS OF UNION

Lewis pointed to the beneficial results of the union-shop provisions won by the Mine Workers two years ago.

"The industry is completely unionized," he said. "Our relations in the past two years, throughout the geography of the industry, probably have been more satisfactory from the standpoint of contract observance, peaceful adjudication of grievances and harmonious relationship, than in any comparable industry."

He warned the operators against allowing themselves to be used as a catspaw for large industrial coal consumers and other financial interests outside the industry.

"Let me say to you gentlemen, who represent the operators of the bituminous industry now," he declared, "this is neither the time nor the place for John Aldens."

He urged that they act in the industry's interests "regardless of big consumer attempts to dictate coal policies, or controlled tonnage management's fears of the influence of a mine wage increase into other branches of far-flung company holdings."

Longshore Union Meets April 7

Los Angeles, Mar. 15.—The CIO International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union will hold its fourth annual convention here in the new CIO building, 5851 Avalon Blvd., beginning April 7.

One of the most vital problems to be taken up by the delegates will be how to defeat the attempts of the discredited AFL Intl. Longshoremen's Assn. to break up the coast wide bargaining agency held by the ILWU as a result of an NLRB decision in 1938, CIO officials said here.

Another important issue facing the convention will be the defense of ILWU President Harry Bridges against whom renewed deportation charges are pending. The U. S. Dept. of Justice has scheduled the hearings to open March 31. Bridges has asked for a postponement on the basis that the hearings will interfere with his attending the ILWU convention.

CIO Optical Union Gets Pay Boost

New York, Mar. 15. — A total pay raise of $28,500 was won by 76 members of the CIO United Optical Workers Union after an eight-week strike at the Optical Products Co. here, the union announced.

The contract also included the closed shop, paid vacations, a guarantee of 45 weeks work a year, grievance machinery, and a clause forbidding the company to move out of the city during the life of the three-year contract. A similar pact for the company's workers at Charlotte, N. C., is being negotiated.

Electrical Union Wins 4 More Polls

New York, N. Y., March 15.—The international office of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America (CIO) announced four Labor Board election victories during the past week:

The UE got 1,287 votes in an election March 7 at the Phelps-Dodge Corporation, Bayway, N. J., amounting to 92.5 per cent of the vote. "No union" got 8 votes; the company union got 48 votes, and the IBEW (AFL) got 44 votes. The company had consented to the election as part of the terms of settlement of the union's recent two-day stoppage at the pant.

Workers at the Monroe Calculating plant, Orange, N. J., cast 392 votes for the UE on March 8, giving a company union 283 votes.

The UE won by 111 to 78 against a company union at Brown, Brockmeyer Company, Dayton, Ohio, and by 107 to 39 against "no union" at the Egry Register Co., also at Dayton.

Police Strike-Breaking Fails

Memphis, Tenn., Mar. 15.—Police intimidation is not breaking the strike of CIO Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union members at the J. R. Watkins Co., here, union strike leaders report. The company makes medicines and household supplies which are sold direct to the consumer.

Among other anti-labor tricks the cops have been picking strikers up for "loitering" and slapping a $25 fine on anyone caught near the plant.

Strikers are not even allowed to park cars in the same street that the plant is on, and they are constantly forced out of neighboring restaurants, etc.

CIO MEMO TO FDR:

Murray Flays Proposal For Mediation Board, Urges Defense Plan

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—"The current suggestions for the establishment of an independent labor board and for alleged 'cooling off' restraints to be imposed upon labor are wholly unrealistic, will not further the program of national defense, and will operate to the complete detriment of labor," President Philip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations declared in a memorandum submitted this week to President Roosevelt.

The memorandum was devoted to an elaboration of the CIO plan for industry councils, which Murray discussed with the President during a recent meeting.

"Labor problems cannot be tackled in a vacuum, which would be the practice under a separate labor board", the CIO president declared. "They must be integrated with all other problems affecting industry. The imposition of 'cooling off' restraints would be a negation of collective bargaining rather than its encouragement. The voluntary system of collective bargaining is essential to afford the greatest assurance of peaceful industrial relations.

INDUSTRY COUNCILS

"This program can be accomplished only through the use of industry councils as has been proposed by the CIO, which must incorporate full and adequate representation of labor."

In a section of the memorandum dealing with "Labor Relations in the Industrial Unit", Murray declared:

"Modern labor relations are an integral part of industry planning. Such relations, encompassed in collective bargaining, are inevitably directed towards industry-wide agreements. The older collective bargaining relationships, as in the coal industry, are already carried on by joint conferences of the entire industry.

"A number of the industry problems are closely integrated with labor relations. For example, the schedules of hours worked become a problem of productive capacity. Employers consider that their prices are affected by wage costs. The efficiency of production is profoundly affected by labor morale.

"It is therefore clear that an industry council is the only proper place for consideration of labor relations in each industry. Labor relations have now advanced to the stature of industry-wide problems, to be discussed in the light of conditions in the industry as a whole."

UNWIELDY SET-UP

Murray, in his memorandum, declared that "the present organization of government machinery to speed defense production is unwieldy, inefficient and unfunctional.

"Its continuation will create a chaotic situation most harmful to defense production and to the production of goods for civilian needs", he said. "The establishment of defense councils by industry and labor, equipped with proper administrative machinery and coordinated by one central representaive board, will provide a most efficient basis for defense production and labor relations."

The Murray plan for industry councils calls for the establishment of such councils in the major defense industries, composed of equal representation from labor and management, with a government representative as chairman. Over all the various industry councils there would be established a central policy-making and coordinating board, with equal labor and management representation and with the President as chairman.

INDUSTRY UNITS

Murray declared that "to get the most efficient production, and the soundest planning, each industry must be thought of as integral production unit. It is obviously impossible to plan the most efficient use of any industry by uncoordinated and often conflicting government pressures."

As an example of "the present disorganization", Murray cited the aluminum industry.

"The plans of the aluminum industry," he said, "are now being affected by a multitude of official forces — by the Army and its various purchasing agencies buying aluminum products, the Navy and its various purchasing agencies concerned with aluminum products, the Production Division and its aluminum section, the Priorities Division and its aluminum section, the Price Division and its aluminum experts, the Labor Division on labor relations, the Consumer Division representing consumer demand, and various other agencies of the federal government as affecting the use of aluminum production.

LACK OF PLANNING

"No planning is being done for the aluminum industry as such. It makes it therefore exceedingly difficult for a proper unified production plan to be made for aluminum, although it is one of the most essential of materials.

"For each major and essential industry the picture is the same: no unified industry plan, but a large number of pressures from disparate and uncoordinated agencies.

"Thus, for example, in the steel industry there is no plan for the proper distribution of contracts, for the determination of possible necessity for expansion, or the full utilization of available capacity. The industry is treated not as an industry, but as a conglomeration of individual companies under a hundred pressures for hundreds of different products.

"Competent planning and the sound direction of production require the industry unit for administration."

work, seniority, and adjustment of grievances.

It also asks for a clause to protect employes called into military service and for the creation of a joint commission of representatives of the Corporation and the Union for the purpose of giving consideration to and establishing equalization of rates in various classifications of labor.

Provision would also be made, under the nine-point program, for the establishment of adequate machinery to permit the Union to collect dues from all employes who are receiving the benefits of the basic agreement.

OTHER CHANGES

An amendment is also sought in the section of the contract relating to vacations with these two improvements:

1—Employes from one to five years should receive one week's vacation with pay. Pay to be on the basis of 40 hours and the vacation week to consist of 7 days. Employes from 5 years or more to receive 2 weeks vacation with pay for 80 hours, and vacation period to consist of 14 days.

2—Continuity of service and eligibility to be based upon specific factors and not related entirely to any pension fund.

At the two-day meeting of presidents of U. S. Steel local unions, Murray reported in detail his meetings with William Beye, vice-president in charge of personnel for U. S. Steel, and Benjamin Fairless, president of U. S. Steel.

REPORTS ON MEETINGS

The first meeting with Mr. Beye was held Nov. 7. At that meeting, Murray submitted the nine-point union program. Other meetings were held, and on Feb. 27, Fairless submitted a counter proposal of 2½-cents an hour wage increase and "some improvements" in the vacation plan.

The offer of 2½-cents an hour was tied to the rate of production. When production fell below 85 per cent, the Corporation would then withdraw the 2½-cent increase.

This offer was rejected by a unanimous vote of the delegates to the two-day conference. The nine-point program was unanimously approved.

Big New York Home Builder Signs With CIO

NEW YORK, Mar. 15.—One of the biggest home developers in the New York City area has signed a wage agreement with the CIO United Construction Workers and is employing a large number of its members on a project to build more than 1,000 homes, Regional Director Leon Zwicker reports.

The firm, Clipper Homes, Inc., is building in Westchester County at present and plans other developments about New York City. About 150 UCWOC members are working on the job now.

Signing of this firm represents a major achievement for the UCWOC in the New York area and demonstrates its progress in the residential construction field.

For a few days after the project got started with UCWOC members the AFL tried its usual stunt of intimidating the workers, the builder and the public with pickets and other devices but this soon petered out. Scuffles between AFL and UCWOC men marked this period but work progressed without interruption.

The only pickets were the AFL business agents and their hand-picked cronies. There was no conflict between the rank and file workers of AFL and the UCWOC.

J. B. McNAMARA DEAD

Los Angeles, Mar. 15.—J. B. McNamara, oldest labor prisoner in the nation, died this week.

McNamara was sentenced to life imprisonment following a bombing at the Los Angeles Times in 1910.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The contrast between inflated profits shown by major corporations in this country and an apparently concerted refusal to resist the workers' just demands for wage increases is becoming more sharply apparent every day. International Harvester, which shows $23,000,000 in profits during the last fiscal year—while flatly refusing to consider strikers' demands for a decent living wage—is a flagrant case in point.

This corporation enjoying huge arms contracts, refuses even to listen not only to its workers but to the U. S. Government and the defense authorities as well. This week's conference in Washington—in which the writer sat through 27 straight hours of fruitless meeting—is another proof of the CIO's contention that greedy employers and not the unions are the people responsible for "breakdowns" in the defense program.

WHOSE RESPONSIBILITY?

Who is responsible for this situation? Not the union, whose demands everyone admits are only just and reasonable. The corporations are enjoying a period of inflated prosperity. Aren't the workers entitled to some small share of this—at least enough to feed themselves and their families on a decent American standard?

The outcry about CIO strikes "against defense" fills the Congressional air and the newspapers. This outcry should be directed at the real source of the trouble—the flat refusal of profit-swollen management to even discuss the need for wage increases.

This policy on the part of management can only create economic crisis in the future. It is the real route to inflation. And the people of the U. S. will pay for this policy—in lowered living standards, in economic depression, in the social misery that results from a topheavy economic structure.

THE CIO WAY

The CIO way out of this problem is basic—to organize, to raise wages, lower hours, increase employment and improve working conditions through collective bargaining. This program is being applied constantly, week in and week out.

For example, in Wilmington, Del., 350 of the city's barbers are carrying CIO cards in their windows this week. In Philadelphia, the UAWA-CIO is set to win better conditions for workers in the General Motors Parts Warehouse, following a 32 to 1 victory in a Labor Board election. The Broad Motors Co., incidentally a Ford distributing agency, voted UAW-CIO 21 to six.

UTAH

Out in Utah, James Morgan, regional director, reports an agreement won by the Ice and Refrigeration Workers and another one chalked up by the Transport Workers in Salt Lake City. Closer east, Regional Director Pugh of Chicago reports a contract won by the Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers with a school supply company.

NEW JERSEY

The CIO is booming in New Jersey, especially in the areas where Mayor Hague used to breathe fire and smoke at the CIO. Close to 600 workers have been signed up by District 50, UMWA, at the Button Corp. and a contract agreed on, Acting Director Pete Mosele reports. The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers have blanked out the AFL at the Marine Engineering Co.,—the score, 117 to three. The CIO has taken over an AFL furniture local with 170 members at the National Chair Co. The State, County and Municipal Workers have signed 54 city employes in Irvington, currently are negotiating a contract.

NEW ENGLAND

From New England, Regional Director Lyons reports four new LIU charters set up in miscellaneous industries, with 2,000 new members added to CIO. District 50 is making progress throughout the area. SWOC has set up three new locals, is taking steps to organize a fourth.

Mine Safety Bill Passed by Congress After Long Fight

Washington, Mar. 15 — The House of Representatives today approved the Federal Mine Safety Bill by a near-unanimous voice vote and sent the CIO-sponsored measure to the Senate, where its passage is anticipated in the near future.

Only one Congressman's voice was raised against the Bill, which would enable the Federal Government to inspect safety conditions in the nation's death-laden coal mines. Rep. Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, reactionary foe of labor legislation, was identified by other Congressmen as the sole objector to the Bill. The intense need for federal legislation to cope with the problem of violent deaths in the mine industry was pointed out by Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers in his address to the Appalachian Joint Wage Conference. He cited the 1,420 mine accident deaths during 1940 and demanded immediate steps be taken to remedy the situation.

The Mine Safety Bill is one of the high-ranking demands on the CIO's 1941 legislation program. A similar bill introduced at the last session of Congress was passed by the Senate but pigeon-holed in the House Mining Committee and never came to the floor for a vote.

New Bedford, Mass., Mar. 15.—Hourly wage increases of 4 cents for 400 employes of the New Bedford Rayon Co. are provided in a new contract won by the CIO Textile Workers Union.

ECNOMIC OUTLOOK:

See Job Loss, Price Rise In Spread Of Priorities

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—Application of priorities in steel and other industries would result in increased unemployment, rapidly rising prices, and favoritism to particular users, according to the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook.

This has happened already in aluminum, the Outlook says, where "many of the workers employed in the production of non-defense aluminum products are being thrown out of work."

"Of course, the way to prevent priorities is to provide sufficient capacity to meet all demands, defense and other," the Outlook points out. "No priorities should be instituted and no need for priorities should be anticipated, without taking steps immediately to wipe out the need for the restrictions by making additional capacity available."

Shortages that cause priorities are caused by three main factors, the Outlook says: bad planning, refusal of industry to expand, and unexpected demands for production.

STEEL WAGES DOWN

Wages in the steel industry have fallen during the past two years, though profits per ton of steel shipped have risen sharply, the Outlook points out. Steel profits, at the rate of production of he fourth quarter of 1940, will reach a 12 per cent average this year. A 10 per cent increase in wages would leave profits at nine per cent, which would still be higher than the 1940 average.

"This situation in steel, duplicated in the other major industries, makes perfectly clear that very substantial wage increases can be made without the necessity for price increases," the Outlook says.

"Many major industries are now refusing to make wage increases without first receiving government approval for price rises. The facts show that this attitude is unjustified."

The Outlook also contains a list of profits in major industries, showing large increases over 1939 and showing that "substantial wage increases are necessary to hold profits within reason during the coming year."

SEE FEW NEW JOBS

Unemployment in December, 1940, declined slightly to 9,003,000, the Outlook says, while production fell two points from 135 in the same month to 133 in January, 1941.

"The Outlook's contentions in discussing the effect of the arms program in the summer issues are now being borne out by the facts," it adds. "It is becoming more and more clear that unemployment in the year 1941 will be barely two million less than in 1940."

This situation emphasizes the mistake of the Administration and Congress in providing a deficiency WPA appropriation of only $375,000,000, the Outlook says, pointing out that this will reduce WPA rolls from 1,900,000 to 1,300,000 by June.

Win 25% Pay Boost In Texas

Laredo, Tex., March 15—A 25 per cent wage boost and the closed shop were won today for workers at the Texas Mining & Smelting Co. refinery here.

The contract, won by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union, folowed a week after the company's decision to comply with a National Labor Relations Board order and climaxed a long organizational campaign.

The plant, the largest primary antimony smelter in the country, employs about 250 workers, most of them Spanish-Americans.

A noteworthy clause in the contract provides that the company will pay for three months the difference between regular wages and army salary for any members drafted into the military service.

Union Hails Utah's New Illness Bill

Salt Lake City, Utah, March 15—Sponsored by 80 union locals in the state, a model occupational disease bill was passed today by the Utah State Legislature.

Leaders of the CIO International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers hailed the action as a progressive measure, and noted the fact that it specifically includes silicosis among the listed diseases.

Under the bill, totally disabled workers wil receive $12 a week and an additional five per cent for each dependent child up to five years, the total amount not to exceed $3,000.

The compensation measure was introduced in the House by three legislators, including Rep. Ray H. Leavitt, who is president of the Tintic District Miners Union.

Fingerprint Effort Flops

Dayton, O., March 15.—The local FBI director, R. C. Suran, exploded the pretense of Frigidaire plant management here that a compulsory fingerprinting plan is "required by the government."

In response to an inquiry by Local 801 of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Director Suran said: "It is purely a matter between the management and the union." An overflow meeting of the local voted to oppose the fingerprinting and set up a 3-point program "to protect the liberties of Frigidaire employes."

Michigan CIO Meets May 22

Detroit, Mar. 15. — August Scholle, president of the Michigan CIO Industrial Union Council announced this week that the Council's annual convention will be held in Jackson, Mich., May 22-24.

Two Unions Warn Against Priorities

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—Application of government defense priority rulings to aluminum and zinc threaten widespread unemployment in the aluminum and die casting industries, leaders of two CIO unions warned today.

An editorial in the official organ of the Aluminum Workers of America pointed out that while "aluminum labor has no desire to be critical of measures to aid the defense program," it nevertheless maintains that the 'so-called solutions to the problem thus far offered by Priorities Director E. R. Stettinius have been injurious to th public, the aluminum workers and the industry."

LESS CONSUMER GOODS

The union paper explained that large amounts of aluminum consumer goods will no longer be manufactured and "workers now employed in putting out these products are to be thrown out of work."

The AWA pointed out that for months New Deal economists have been urging expansion of the aluminum industry's productive capacity, while Stettinius maintained capacity was sufficient.

Now, with the priority order in effect, workers are being laid off in many aluminum factories throughout the country.

DIE CASTERS

A similar situation faces 15,000 die casters unless prompt action is taken, Sec.-Treas. Edward Cheyfitz of the CIO National Association of Die Casting Workers declared in an open letter to the union membership this week.

Cheyfitz quoted a trade paper article which predicted:

"There may be a loss of employment of as many as 15,000 people in the die casting industry because of the curtailment."

The union official said the defense commission has ordered consumers to take a 50 per cent cut in the number of zinc castings they are now using, and predicted even more serious dislocations of the full priority order is made.

"I charge that there is no proven need for the application of priorities and its dislocation of our industry," Cheyfitz wrote.

'MAJOR CONTROVERSY'

"But there is more to this metal situation than just the fate of your job. A fundamental change is taking place in our economy, our way of life.

"The major controversy behind the Washington curtains is between those who want maximum production of all the things the American people need, and those who prefer to concentrate on profitable defense contracts."

Cheyfitz charged that industrialists who refuse to expand their plant capacity, despite defense and civilian consumer are in effect applying the Hitler "guns, not butter" formula to this country.

'They are apparently not interested," he declared, "in the vast potential market right here in America among the great mass of the ill-housed, ill-clothed, ill-fed population who would keep all the factory wheels humming night and day if they only had the money to buy."

DETROIT PICKETLINE: Workers at the Federal Motor Truck Co. in Detroit back up their wage demands on the picket line. The company had stalled in negotiations with the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Two Aluminum Plants Closed By Strikes

EDGEWATER, N. J., Mar. 15. — A conference between officials of the CIO Aluminum Workers of America and the Mellon trust held in the Pittsburgh offices of the Aluminum Co. of America this week failed to bring a settlement in the strike of some 3,000 workers at Alcoa's big plant here.

Members of Local 16, AWA, voted to strike, 1,641 to 65, in a poll held by the union last week-end in protest against violations of provisions for overtime pay which the union says are included in the agreement the company signed with Local 16. The workers are also asking for a pay increase.

AWA President N. A. Zonarich, Secretary George E. Hobaugh and Walter Pasnick, member of the executive board, represented the national AWA at the conference in Pittsburgh. Vincent McKenna, Local 16 president, headed the Edgewater local representatives.

The overtime pay issue that brought on the strike came to a head when the management added two more shifts per week to the 18 the plant was already working.

Fairmont, W. Va., Mar. 15.—Attempts to settle a strike at the plant of the Fairmont Aluminum Co. here fell through this week when company officials refused to meet with representatives of Local 1, Aluminum Workers of America.

U. S. Frank J. Sheehan, who had been trying to get the strike settled here, was reported to have gone to New York City to confer with the chairman of the company's board of directors.

Local 1 declared that the management, in direct violation of the contract, had refused to discuss a number of grievances which the union has been trying to get adjusted since last October.

Normally the plant employs some 300 workers, but half of these have been laid off, the union declared, due to the recent U. S. priority ruling which limits the amount of aluminum ingots the company may obtain.

Labor Asks Greater Voice In Canada

Ottawa, Ont., Mar. 15—Candian organized labor should have greater representation on government boards and commissions which are concerned with phases of the war effort, executive officers of the Canadian Congress of Labor told a Dominion government cabinet committee recently when they presented their annual legislative proposals. Canadian unions affiliated to international CIO unions joined with national unions in forming the Canadian Congress last year.

The delegation pointed out that although labor was represented on the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the National Labor Supply Committee there were many other boards on which it should be represented. Organized labor is not even represented on selective service or draft boards as in the U. S.

RAP TORY OFFICIALS

Charging that individuals of avowed opposition to organized labor who had also displayed undemocratic attitudes towards workers, had been appointed to key war positions such as 'controllers" of various industries, the delegation urged that only "socially-minded individuals whose records indicate that they adhere to democratic principles" should be appointed.

Although expressing general agreement with Order-In-Council No. 7440 which sets out limitations on wage increases for the guidance of conciliation boards, ,the deputation contended that the assumption that wage levels in 1926-29 were fair and reasonable was open to argument in many cases. The basis for determination of wage rates should be the primary necessities for a decent standard of living for the worker and his family, spokesmen said.

DEFEAT SABOTAGE BILL

Helena, Mont.—Pressure from organized labor in Montana forced the State Senate to kill an anti-sabotage bill which would have endangered unions.

Call Picket Rights 'Not Clear'

Ottawa, Mar. 15.—Although an amendment was made to the Defence of Canada Regulations purporting to allow workers to peacefully picket in a "lawful" strike in a defence industry, representatives of both the Ontario and Dominion governments admitted this week that the new regulation was not clear. The Regulations were changed following protests when 46 members of the United Automobile Workers' Union were fined $1,650 for picketing at the Windsor Chrysler plant.

Ontario Attorney-General Conant told Ottawa that "it would be difficult if not impossible for the crown to prove that a person loitering or trespassing is not a striker." The clause failed to determine definitely whether the onus was on the crown or the accused to prove he was only taking part in a strike, he contended.

Deputy-Minister of Justice Edwards declared that "it would appear to me" that the onus would be on the accused to prove that he comes within the exception, adding "the question, however, is not free from doubt."

Metal Union Fights 'Ceiling On Wages'

DENVER, Colo., Mar. 15.—Statements in a recent issue of the U. S. News to the effect that the government should put a ceiling on wage rates in order to avoid inflation were sharply contradicted by Reid Robinson, vice-president of the CIO and president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in a letter sent to the paper's editor in Washington.

Robinson challenged the U. S. News on the ground that wage increases did not automatically result in price increases, pointing out that a recent wage rise in the copper industry won by the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers had not caused a price rise. The U. S. News used the copper industry as an example of the supposed need for a government brake on wage increases.

He referred to a recent strike at the Quincy Mining Co. in Michigan, where the CIO union was accused by the employer of trying to force copper prices up through insisting on a raise.

GOOD ALL AROUND

"Our union, together with our brother organizations in the CIO, has again and again rejected the artificial linking of wages and prices," Robinson wrote. "The last two conventions of the CIO passed very clearcut resolutions on this problem.

"We deny that wage increases cause higher prices; and that better wages for the workers of our country work to the detriment of the farmers and the salaried groups. We assert, on the contrary, that higher wages are made possible out of the increased profits of the corporations."

Employers can use this artificial tieup between wages and prices to throw the blame for their profit-hunger on labor, Robinson pointed out, citing their use of the abnormal demands of the defense program as a cover for attacks on organized labor's just demands for increased pay.

Higher wages do decrease profits Robinson wrote, but "present and prospective profits are moving upward with great rapidity, and these corporations are fully able to give wage raises and to maintain profitable operations without price increases."

Steel Union Gets Increase

Indianapolis, Ind., Mar. 15 — Wage increases of five cents an hour were gained by Local 1542 of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in a renewed contract with the E. C. Atkins Co. here.

The SWOC is the sole bargaining agency for the company's 675 employes. The pact also provides a minimum wage of 50c an hour and additional bonuses of 5 per cent and 10 per cent for men on the first and second night shifts.

Carnation Milk Signs With CIO

Cambridge, Pa., Mar. 15. — You can get your condensed milk from contented workers now, since the CIO's Cannery and Agricultural Workers has signed a contract with the Carnation Milk Co. here.

The contract, first signed by Carnation, provides a seven and a half percent wage increase, a weeks' paid vacation, overtime pay, grievance adjustment machinery, abolition of split shifts, free laundry and a union shop.

The local started organizing in mid-January.

Sanitation Men Turn Rally Over to CIO

FLASH!

As we go to press, the National Office of the State, County and Municipal Workers of America announces that arrangements have been completed to put the New York Sanitation drive on the air. Three 15-minute broadcasts will be aired on three successive Wednesdays at 5:30, beginning March 19. The first program will feature a Sanitation man, Abram Flaxer, chairman of the Sanitation Workers Organizing Committee, and a leading CIO personality whose identity will be revealed later.

New York, Mar. 15 — A smashing blow to corrupt company unionism in the New York Department of Sanitation was dealt Wednesday night by 250 CIO Sanitation men who took over a meeting of the Civil Service Forum's Joint Council of Sweepers & Drivers, and turned it into a CIO rally.

Hammering away with a relentless barrage of questions and criticism, the rank and file Sanitation employes left Abe Kasoff and Elias Shapiro, heads of the Joint Council, and a handful of reactionary city councilmen gasping for breath and looking as if they had been struck by lightning.

After an hour of discussion from the floor (which Kasoff and Shapiro tried to stop, only to be drowned out with roars of "Let him speak!"), the Sanitation men offered a resolution denouncing the Joint Council and declaring themselves in favor of the CIO.

WALKOUT

When the "big shots" on the platform refused to permit the resolution to come to a vote, the CIO floor leaders called upon the Sanitation men to leave the meeting and adjourn to another meeting hall "so that the men can hold a meeting of their own." Of the 300 men present at the meeting, fully 250 left the hall at this signal, leaving Kasoff, Shapiro, the councilmen and a handful of stooges wondering what had hit them.

The fighting spirit of the rank and file Sanitation men had been raised to fever pitch by the assaulting of Alex Rossi, CIO Sanitation organizer, by two Joint Council thugs before the meeting began. Rossi had been standing on the sidewalk handing out leaflets which exposed the sell-out of the Sanitation men by the Joint Council. Two six-footers approached and picked a quarrel with Rossi, and then both attacked him. He suffered cuts about the face but was otherwise unhurt. As Sanitation men standing nearby came to his assistance, the thugs fled.

CIO Wins Largest California Election At North American

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 15. — More than 7,600 production workers at the giant Inglewood plant of the North American Aviation today had a CIO union as their sole bargaining agent.

In a Labor Board election held among production men yesterday, the CIO's aircraft local 683, United Auto Workers, received 3,043 votes out of 6,097. Opposed to the CIO was an AFL machinists union. (Complete results: CIO, 3,043 AFL 2,973) CIO won by 70 votes.

This election was the largest ever held in Southern California, and was a runoff held after a previous balloting had failed to produce a winner. Neither union in the election Feb. 20 was able to muster a majority.

Lew Michener, regional director for the Union, announced that plans are going ahead for the UAW on the West Coast "to crack the big boys, Douglas and Consolidated."

Douglas' two plants here employ more than 24,000 workers, while Consolidateds' San Diego factory has a personnel of more than 16,000.

FAMILY PICKETS: Strikers together with their wives and babies, made a family affair out of the picket line of the CIO Aluminum Workers of America at the Edgewater, N. CIO Unions Press Drive for Wage Increases

WASHINGTON, Mar. 22. — Important CIO unions today were conducting negotiations to win wage increases and improved working conditions for thousands of workers.

In New York, the United Mine Workers continued to press for $1 a day wage increases, vacations with pay and 200 guaranteed days of work each year. The present contract expires on April 1.

At Pittsburgh, Chairman Philip Murray of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee headed a committee of union representatives which opened formal contract discussions with the powerful U. S. Steel Co. The SWOC is seeking 10% wage increases and an improved agreement.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers reached a new agreement with the U. S. Clothing Manufacturers Assn. which provides $18,000,000 increases for some 135,000 workers in the men's and boys' suit industries.

Aided by CIO Pres. Murray, UMW Pres. John L. Lewis and CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, striking New York bus drivers won an agreement from two big Manhattan firms for arbitration of their pay raise demands with a guarantee that there will be no weakening of the present contract.

At Los Angeles, Calif., leaders of the CIO United Automobile Workers prepared demands for submission to the North American Aviation Corp., where the union last week won an NLRB election. The UAW will ask for a 75c minimum wage scale.

Textile Workers Win Pact

Hartford, Conn., Mar. 19. — A contract which provides that savings derived from increased efficiency of operation shall be divided equally between the workers and the company, has been signed between the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, and the Hartford Rayon Company of Rocky Hill, Conn., employing 800.

The announcement was made by Herbert W. Payne, national director of the synthetic yarn division of the Textile Workers Union of America, who led the negotiations for the Union.

The contract also provides for the closed shop and the immediate distribution of a bonus to all employes. Wages shall be reviewed by the union and the company every two months, and half of the savings in labor costs derived from increased efficiency of operation shall be distributed to the workers in a lump sum for the previous two months and as increased rates for the next two-month period.

Other important clauses are: No strikes or lockouts and the arbitration of disputes; one week's vacation with pay; seniority rights; no discharges without just cause; time and a half for overtime; four holidays at time and a half, and a clause which guarantees that enlisted or drafted men will be rehired.

Aluminum Strikers Move Navy Orders

Edgewater, N. J., Mar. 22 — Strikers at the big plant of the Aluminum Co. of America here, this week exploded the charges that they were interfering with the defense program, by assigning 11 of their men to load 76 tons of finished aluminum needed by the U. S. Navy ship and aircraft building.

Wages received for the work were donated to the Navy Relief Society, the union announced. The 11 strikers were cautioned to watch carefully to see that the company did not remove anything but the Navy order.

The plant, which employs around 3,000 workers was closed down last week when Local 16, Aluminum Workers of America, called a strike after charging the company with violating provisions for overtime pay.

"We do not merely wave flags —we act," Local 16 Representative Victor Fulgo declared in commenting on the union's action in agreeing to allow strikers to remove the aluminum for the Navy order.

"Even though the strikers may need the money for this work for their families, they do not want any part of the wages paid for national defense cooperation. We are on strike against the Aluminum Co. of America, not against the government, and we will be outdone by no one in cooperation with national defense."

Negotiations for a settlement of the strike were transferred to Pittsburgh this week, where a conference between company officials and union representatives, headed by AWA President Nick Zonarich was scheduled to take place.

Wives Aid CIO Mill Strikers

Decatur, Ind., Mar. 22.—Strikers' wives and other CIO women are turning out in full force to help the workers on the picket lines at the McMillen Feed Mills here. The strike, now in its third week, was called by the CIO Cannery and Agricultural Workers when the company bluntly refused to consider raising wages above starvation level despite inflated profits.

Committees of strikers' wives have been set up to help in picketing, in running soup kitchens, in collecting donations, arranging publicity, and in general helping to build the morale of the strike.

Wage rates at the McMillen Mills are as low as 32 cents an hour less than rates paid in other similar plants, the strikers have announced.

Workers Urged To Register

Washington, Mar. 22.—Workers with skills useful in the defense program are urged to register at once with their nearest U. S. Employment Service office in a letter signed by Director Knudsen and Associate Director Sidney Hillman of the Office of Production Management here.

The USES is conducting a special survey of all workers, the OPM heads wrote, and is particularly anxious to secure names of workers with skills in aircraft, shipbuilding and machine shop and machinery manufacturing.

Indiana CIO Blocks 'Model' SabotageLaw

Indianapolis, Mar. 22. — Defeat of the proposed state "model anti-sabotage" law marked legislative efforts of the CIO Council during the state legislature's session just finished here, John Bartee, secretary, announced.

The "model" bill, patterned after a blueprint drawn up at a conference on state legislation called in Washington some time ago, would have been a serious invasion of workers' rights if it had passed. Bartee pointed out.

It would have effectively prohibited picketing anywhere in the vicinity of a struck plant, put plant areas under martial law, and seriously hampered union activity not only during strikes but also during organizing campaigns. Severe penalties were provided for violations.

Fought Labor 15 Months—AnExpertNow

Washington, Mar. 22.—Merrill Meigs, chief of the air division of the Office of Production Management, has pretty definite ideas on what to do about strikes in industries working on arms orders. He thinks there ought to be a law—several laws, if needed—to take away labor's right to strike.

Mr. Meigs should know. He was publisher for the Hearst papers in Chicago during the 15 months' strike conducted there by the American Newspaper Guild. During that strike, CIO newspaper workers were beaten with crank-handles, assaulted on the picket-lines, their sound cars dumped in the river, and their families terrorized by thugs and cops ad lib.

Clothing Union Ups Wages By $18,000,000

NEW YORK, Mar. 22.—Wage increases ranging between 10 and 13% and estimated to raise payrolls by $18,000,000 a year, were won for 135,000 workers today by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America..

The pact, effective May 19, when Fall production starts, was reached by ACWA negotiators and representatives of the Clothing Manufacturers of the U.S.A.

The 13% wage increase will go into effect in Grade I, the cheapest line of men's and boys' clothing, while the 10% raise will be applied to all other grades. Cutters will receive a 10 per cent increase, while shipping clerks, ticket sewers and non-factory help will receive a 10 per cent boost not exceeding $2.50 a week.

Ten hours of negotiations were climaxed by agreement on the wage scale, which far exceeded the manufacturers' original counter-offer to the ACWA demands for 10 per cent and 15 per cent increases. Two previous negotiating sessions were held in Atlantic City, N. J.

An Amalgamated proposal for a workers' health and life insurance plan, to be financed through a levy on employers of 3 per cent of their payrolls, was referred to a joint committee for further study. ACW leaders were quoted as hoping the plan could be put in operation by next November.

Sidney Hillman, associate director general of the OPM and president on leave of the ACW, was not present at the negotiations. The union's demands were put forth by Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum, a vice-president of the CIO, and Sec.-Treas. Jacob Potofsky.

'PRESSING NEEDS'

Rosenblum pointed out that the union was influenced in its decision to seek pay raises "by the pressing needs and demands of its membership in the clothing industry, who, with their families, have lived through the past four years without general increase in their wages, though entitled to higher standards of living than they are now enjoying."

Rosenblum said a study of the industry's condition had convinced the ACW that "our request is eminently fair and reasonable, and in line with the upward trend in the country generally."

Forty thousand clothing workers in the New York area are affected by the negotiations, as well as additional thousands in Philadelphia, Rochester, N. Y., Baltimore, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Boston.

EXPLAINS HEALTH PLAN

Explaining the union's health plan, Vice-President Rosenblum declared: "More and more the maxim is gaining acceptance that an industry has an obligation to its employes beyond the payment of the piece-rate or the weekly pay envelope.

"Because of the seasonal nature of the clothing industry few clothing workers are able to build up any financial reserve to take them over periods of ill health or to provide for their families in the event of death."

Win Maine Election By 2-1

Saco, Maine, Mar. 22 — New CIO progress in the state of Maine was reported today by the Textile Workers Union of America.

Employes of the York Manufacturing Co. chose the TWUA as their sole bargaining agency by an 859-463 majority in an NLRB election. The election came almost on the first anniversary of the TWUA's election victory at the big Pepperell Mills, in Biddeford, across the river from Saco. The Pepperell poll paved the way for further textile union organizing throughout the Pine Tree State.

Textile Union Reports Pacts, Poll Victories

New York, Mar. 22.—A string of Labor Board election victories and numerous successful strikes were reported today for the Textile Workers Union of America by its president, Emil Rieve.

At Pascoag, R. I., the TWUA defeated an independent union by an 85-78 margin, while in Brooklyn the union defeated an AFL affiliate by 77-10. The CIO union bested the AFL by 116-72 at an election at the Colonial Woolen Mills, Cleveland, Ohio, and by 163-52 at the Everlastic Mill in Chelsea, Mass.

Manager Jack Rubenstein of the TWUA Joint Board in New York announced renewal of the Alpha Textile Co. contract with wage increases of from three to five cents an hour, and strike victories at the Premier Gym Mat Co., the IBS Braid Co. and the IB Silk Co., all of which led to wage increases and improved working conditions.

Glass Union Improves Four Pacts

Columbus, Ohio, Mar. 22.—Four major contracts have been renewed by the CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers during the past two months, with substantial improvements for the members, Federation leaders announced today.

Negotiations with the Fourcault Window Glass Manufacturers brought the check-off of union dues and three-cent and two-cent hourly wage increases. Three-cent raises gained in a new pact with the Franklin Glass Co., while employes of the Cambridge Tile Co. gained a similar raise and the check-off.

The Mississippi Wire Glass Co. at Floreffe, Pa., renewed its preferential shop contract and agreed to a 3-cent increase.

Unionism Leads to Better Life, Priest Tells Forum

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Mar. 22.—Unionization is the workers' only road to a decent living standard, a Catholic priest and teacher, said here March 6th at sessions of the School for Social Action sponsored by two large Pennsylvania Catholic colleges, the University of Scranton, for men, and College Misericordia, for women.

Speaking on "Labor Relations and the State," Rev. Dr. John P. Walsh of Misericordia's college, stated:

"Collective bargaining brings about wages high enough to meet the cost of a decent living for all workers, without depriving the skilled worker of his right to a wage above the average, when his labor or skill justly entitles him to such a wage. Individual competitive bargaining results in starvation wages for all workers, regardless of their skill or individual strength.

"Collective bargaining results in trade agreements, insuring not only fair living wages, but hours of work and physical conditions of employment, which promote the good health and safety of the employe. Whereas individual or competitive bargaining means, in addition to starvation wages, long fatiguing hours under physical conditions dangerous to health and safety."

Nova Scotia CIO Unions Ask Reforms

Halifax, N. S., Mar. 22.—Reforms in Nova Scotia's labor, social and health legislation designed to bring added benefits to the workers were urged by a combined Steel Workers Organizing Committee and United Mine Workers District 26 delegation which met the Provincial Government at a conference in Halifax.

Compensation Act changes asked would increase rates paid injured workmen with a minimum of $15 weekly, permit them to remain on full compensation until they return to work and increase allowances for widows and dependents.

Listed among the 34 recommendations was a request for a three-way pension plan financed by the company, government and union for employes who have attained the age of 60 years and have served the company 20 years.

Another urged that labor be represented on all War Boards and Commissions dealing with labor problems.

Enactment of unemployment insurance legislation was sought and the delegation urged that in the appointment of a new Deputy Minister of Labor, about to be made, that a member of organized labor be given the post.

Legislation to compel improvements in housing and sanitation in company-owned homes occupied by workers was also urged.

Strike Victory

Long Island City, N. Y., Mar. 22 —(FP)—A 7½ cent hourly wage increase, elimination of pay differentials between men and women employes, and vacations, are provided in a pact between the Fada Radio & Electric Co. and the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The agreement, covering 150 workers, ended a 4-day strike.

Guild Strike Wins Murray Endorsement

New York, Mar. 22—CIO Pres. Philip Murray today reiterated a previous statement endorsing the strike of the New York Newspaper Guild against the Jewish Day. which fired a number of employes and slashed the salaries of others.

"The CIO, through its national officers, has officially approved the strike and has asked the membership of its several affiliates to lend every practical support towards its successful culmination.

"A statement accredited to an officer of the CIO denouncing the strike and stating that it is communistically inspired is without foundation in fact and has been made without consultation with either the officers of the Newspaper Guild or the officers of the CIO.

"The strike is a legitimate one and the workers involved therein are entitled to the wholehearted support of the CIO and its affiliates."

Win Big Lumber Elections

Portland, Ore., Mar. 22.—Workers at the two largest lumber plants on the Pacific Coast voted overwhelmingly for the CIO International Woodworkers of America at elections held in Longview, Wash., by the National Labor Relations Board.

Results of the polls, as announced here by CIO Regional Director William Dalrymple were:

Weyerhaeuser Mill: CIO — 687; AFL—484; no union—133.

In a third election among workers at the Weyerhauser Woods, the vote was: CIO—332; AFL—147; no union 77.

Doctors Urge U. S. Health Defense Plan

Washington, Mar. 22.—Organized doctors, pointing to the needs of the civilian population and of the Army, are supporting a bill offered by Senator James E. Murray of Montana to amend the conscription act by requiring Army authorities to issue medical commissions to doctors and to defer doctors in training.

According to the Committee on National Health Defense, made up of the Interne Council of America and the Assn. of Medical Students, national health suffers greatly in times of emergency, as in the last war. Both civilian and army people need a greatly increased amount of medical attention in such periods.

The Army's present practice of putting doctors into the ranks where they cannot use their training was described as a danger to the national health in testimony given before the Senate Military Affairs Committee on the Murray bill.

ON RADIO

Baltimore, Md.—Striking members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers are telling the city of their grievances against the BVD Corp. through semi-weekly radio broadcasts, Organizer Elizabeth Hawes announced. The program will be continued until the strike of 400 workers is won.

STRIKE BETHLEHEM STEEL: Bethlehem Steel Corp. found it couldn't get away with anti-union activities in its Los Angeles, Calif., plant. Corporation fired four union men. The Steel Workers Organizing Committee went out on strike, surrounded the factory with pickets, some of whom are shown above.

Murray, Kennedy On Mediation Board

WASHINGTON, Mar. 22.—Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO and Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the United Mine Workers today had been named to the 11-man Natl. Defense Mediation Board appointed by Pres. Roosevelt.

Appointment of the two CIO leaders followed shortly after Murray, who had been conferring with the CIO's six vice-presidents and its secretary in New York, sent this telegram to Pres. Roosevelt:

"In behalf of the CIO, I am submitting the names of Thomas Kennedy and Philip Murray for membership on the mediation board".

The committee, as announced by the White House, was set up as follows:

PUBLIC

Chairman: Clarence A. Dykstra, director of the selective service.

Dr. Frank P. Graham, president, University of North Carolina.

EMPLOYES

Philip Murray, president of the CIO.

Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer, United Mine Workers.

George Meany, secretary-treasurer, AFL.

George M. Harrison, president, Brotherhood of Railway & Steamship Clerks, AFL.

EMPLOYERS

Walter C. Teagle, chairman, Standard Oil of New Jersey.

Roger D. Lapham, San Francisco, president, Hawaiian-American Steamship Co.

Eugene Meyer, publisher, Washington, D. C., Post.

JURISDICTION

According to the Executive Order under which the Board was created, its jurisdiction will begin when "the Secretary of Labor certifies to it that a controversy (excluding any dispute under the Railway Labor Act) cannot be adjusted by the Dept. of Labor's conciliators."

When such a situation arises, the chairman of the Mediation Board will name a panel of three Board members — one from the Public representatives, one from the Employes and one from Employers—to adjust the dispute.

The panel will be authorized to seek peaceful adjustment of disputes through a variety of methods: affording opportunity for voluntary arbitration; naming arbitrators upon request of the disputing parties; conducting hearings, taking testimony and making findings of facts about specific cases and recommending formulas for the settlement of disputes; and asking the Natl. COAL MINE PARLEYS: Leaders of the United Mine Workers pressed their demands for a $1 a day wage increase for half-million workers in the bituminous mines. Coal Mine Parleys Continue

New York, Mar. 22. — Subcommittees representing the United Mine Workers and Appalachian bituminous coal operators today were continuing negotiations on a new two-year agreement to succeed the present contract which expires at midnight on March 31.

Although UMW Pres. John L. Lewis had proposed that the existing agreement be extended until a new one is reached, with the understanding that pay increases will be retroactive to April 1, the operators represented at the Appalachian Joint Wage Conference turned down the UMW suggestion.

OUTLYING DISTRICTS

The union's International Policy Committee meanwhile instructed UMW districts not covered by the Appalachian contract to seek extension of their agreements past the April 1 deadline with guarantees that wage boosts will be retroactive.

The outlying districts, comprising miners in Indiana, Illinois, Washington, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Alabama, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Wyoming, Montana and Western Kentucky, produce about 30 per cent of the nation's bituminous coal. Contracts for these districts are based on the Appalachian agreement, which set the standards for the industry.

Principal demand of the UMW is a $1 a day increase for the coal miners, a demand which the operators rejected two days after Pres. Lewis submitted it to the conference.

HITS OWNERS' FIGURES

The UMW leader charged that the operators' computations of the costs involved in a $1 increase were "fantastic and absurd" and remarked that Charles O'Neill, spokesman for the mine owners, has apparently "become slightly inebriated by the exuberance of his mathematical verbosity."

"The time has come when the miners need an increase, for the

Bethlehem Steel Forces Stoppages

By VIN SWEENEY

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Mar. 22.—A successful 24-hour demonstration of union steel workers in the Bethlehem Steel Mills here again focused the nation's attention on the anti-union policy and law-violations by that corporation.

In an effort to offset the growing strength of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in its mills, officials of Bethlehem Steel on March 17, sought to give life to its illegal company union by holding "elections" under the Employe Representation Plan.

Thousands of union steel workers on the 7 a. m. to 3 p. m. shift immediately walked out of the mill in protest. In other departments, the resentment against such tactics was so strong that the company quickly removed the ballot boxes. It was conservatively estimated that between 5,000 and 6,000 men actually left the plant; that another 2,500 remained in the plant when the ballot boxes were removed, and several thousand more refused to go into the plant on the 3 p. m. shift when they learned what had happened.

With the so-called "election" a complete dud, union men went back to work on the 7 a. m. shift the next day.

THREATEN HOLIDAY

Possibility of further trouble at the plant was indicated when James Gent, SWOC sub-regional director here, notified the National Labor Relations Board and the Defense Commission that the union men were threatening a three-day holiday if the company attempted to hold the "general elections" on March 26, 27 and 28.

Action of the men was entirely justified, it was pointed out, because of the fact that the Labor Board ruled the Employe Representation Plan a "completely dominated" company union; and ordered it dissolved. This was in 1939. The case is now before

Steel Union Pacts Now Number 717

PITTSBURGH, Mar. 22. — The CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee today reported an all-time high of 717 contracts with manufacturing, fabricating and processing companies in the United States and Canada.

The figure represents an increase of 26 over the 691 reported at the end of last year. In the first three months of this year, the SWOC has brought some 4,000 additional workers under new agreements with firms which never before had signed with the union.

"Virtually every major company in the industry is now operating under union agreement with the SWOC except the 'Little Steel' group, and organizing drives are now under way at those properties," the SWOC reported.

Senate Group OKs Mine Safety Bill

WASHINGTON, Mar. 22.— The Federal Mine Safety Bill today received approval of the Senate Mining Committee and headed for almost certain passage in the Upper House.

The bill was passed by the House of Representatives a week ago. It was introduced in the House by Rep. Flannery of Pennsylvania and in the Senate by Sen. Guffey of the same state.

U. S. Steel Conference Under Way

Pittsburgh, Mar. 21. — Formal negotiations are under way with United States Steel Corporation for changes in existing contracts, including wage increases and a better vacation plan.

Meeting with representatives of Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., biggest subsidiary of U. S. Steel, Philip Murray, SWOC Chairman, and a union committee yesterday laid down a nine-point program, calling for a 10-cent-an-hour increase, a week's vacation for workmen with five or more years' service, and other major changes.

The formal meeting with John L. Perry, President of Carnegie-Illinois, followed a "warm-up" session with SWOC field representatives, staff members and 24 presidents of SWOC locals in mills of that corporation.

Out of this meeting came the selection of five of these presidents to join Murray, David J. McDonald, SWOC secretary-treas-

Packinghouse Workers Draft Armour Demands

CHICAGO, Mar. 22.—Leaders of Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee locals in all organized Armour plants will meet here Mar. 23 to seek a national contract with the company through which they may get higher wages and better working conditions.

PWOC Chairman Van A. Bittner said the meeting, which will last one day, would prove to be "an important step forward toward higher wages and improved conditions of employment in the meat packing industry."

The parley will compare and correlate the various wage demands which have been made by the various PWOC Armour locals throughout the country. Efforts to present these demands to the Armour local managers have met with refusals to grant desired increases in pay or improved conditions.

Accordingly the PWOC has taken steps to present the demands directly to national officers of the big meat packing house.

Meanwhile, Chicago officials of the union said that a March membership drive in the Armour plants here is meeting unexpected success and that many stewards are reporting their divisions are now 100 per cent union.

A Fair Proposal

We commend to the careful attention of those editorial writers, columnists and speech-makers who write and talk about labor as if it were some kind of a menace, the recent offer of the United Mine Workers of America to continue working under present conditions after March 31, if a new agreement is not reached by then, with terms of the contract finally agreed upon to be made retroactive to April 1.

This offer is dictated by the desire of the United Mine Workers to prevent any interruption of production, following the expiration of its present contract and until the new contract is signed.

It is the most reasonable proposal that could be made, and is proof positive that if any stoppage should occur it will not be the fault of the union.

The rejection of a similar offer two years ago caused the lockout at that time. It is therefore devoutly to be hoped that the operators will reconsider their recent vote of rejection, and thus demonstrate as much concern as the miners for keeping the mines working, in the interests of the industry and the public.

A Stop Signal

The victory of the Transport Workers Union in its recent bus strike in New York City is of more than local importance.

Dealing with wealthy and profitable companies, at a time when every economic factor points to the necessity for wage increases, the CIO union refused to arbitrate company demands for wage decreases and lowering of standards.

The strikers held their ranks solid, with exemplary loyalty and discipline, in face of all the provocations of nearly the whole metropolitan press, which daily hurled abuse at them and their leaders and refused to place the responsibility for the stoppage where it belonged, on the obstinacy of the companies.

With the shpport of the national CIO and the personal participation of Pres. Philip Murray and Allan Haywood in the negotiations, the strikers won their main contention that wage cuts and lowering of standards must be ruled out of consideration and that only the union's demands for wage increases and other improvements could be subjects of arbitration.

Pres. Michael Quill of the TWU hailed the union victory as a "stop signal" to employers who think they can cut wages at a time like the present, when both living costs and profits are soaring.

President Murray expressed the general CIO viewpoint, when he declared: "It is incomprehensible that any labor organization should be expected under existing conditions to accept any kind of arbitrational arrangement which comprehends a lowering of the standards of living.

"The definite trend throughout the nation indicates higher wages to meet the already higher living costs."

Three Classes

There is an old story about a stage coach company which sold first, second and third class tickets to prospective passengers, though they all rode in the same coach.

When mystified passengers demanded to know why such class distinctions, they were told: "When the coach gets stuck in a muddy road or comes to a steep hill, first class passengers remain seated; second class passengers get out and walk; and third class passengers get out and push."

Despite all the present talk about everyone being in the same coach, equality of sacrifice, etc., there seem to be a lot of people who think they have first class privileges entitling them to do nothing but roll along in the luxury of huge war profits.

There are also a lot of second class columnists and other press and political kibitzers, who do nothing but toady to the first class passengers and criticize and admonish the people who are doing the work.

Labor, as usual, is in back doing all the pushing —up to its knees in the mire of low living standards, struggling up the hills of higher living costs, and keeping the coach of state on the road to wherever in the devil it is going.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

CHARLIE CHAPLIN demonstrated rather conclusively in one of his movies that there are limits to the increasing subjection of mankind to machines.

His plight at mealtime when the automatic conveyor feeding machinery went too fast will not soon be forgotten.

But nevertheless attempts to apply mass-production methods to the molding of the human mind never cease. And it must be admitted that in times like these, they achieve considerable success—as witness the rapid conditioning of millions of minds to the idea of war.

The CIO is living testimony to the fact that conveyor-system machinery for feeding the public mind can break down and defeat its own purpose, if it is too crudely speeded up.

During the biggest anti-CIO propaganda campaigns, you could almost see the thinking public grimacing and struggling like Charlie Chaplin, as the heaping spoonfuls of anti-union pap and the huge hunks of baloney were forced upon it in too rapid succession.

Certainly these campaigns failed to change the minds of the workers, as CIO success in plant elections has shown.

Similarly, in the New York City bus strike, the daily anti-union hysteria of nearly the whole metropolitan press failed to change the sympathy of the working public for the reasonable demands of the Transport Workers.

Where propaganda is too crude and mechanical, in other words, it can break down or even have a reverse effect upon people who have some means of getting first-hand impressions or other sources of information.

Launching A "Crime Wave"

But there are countless subtler methods known to every editor. These make it hard for the average reader to detect whether he is getting straight news or being propagandized. And many of them can even be defended as legitimate news coverage by current standards.

For instance, "crime waves" are sometimes made, not born. A newspaper publisher may decide that the time has come to bullyrag the police department a bit, or may just want to crusade against crime for the most high-minded reasons.

He does not order his editorial staff to commit crimes if they can't find enough to report. He does not tell them to lie about the crime news, nor even to exaggerate or distort it. He just passes down the word to "play it up" for the period of the campaign.

The Round-Up

One standard method of news handling is the so-called round-up story. This is a combination in one story of a lot of separate news items, all relating to the same general subject.

Its effect is to play up the subject in question, and to make it possible to carry one quite imposing front-page story instead of a number of small separate items, no one of which is of any great news interest by itself.

Ordinarily Harry Hooligan can get drunk and bop a neighbor on the head without much publicity. He will have to search through every nook and cranny of the paper for mention of his exploit. And if he finds it at all, it will probably be in some hidden crevice near the classified ads — there only by virtue of the fact that his paragraph has one line more or less than a standing item about the strange habits of the llama or the ibex.

But when our "crime wave" has been launched, Harry may find himself headed for a front-page round-up, without any more effort or a drop more liquor.

There, along with half a dozen miscellaneous pick-pockets, hold-up men and the like, he will become part of a "growing menace to society" and respectable citizens will shudder instead of yawn when they read about him.

The "Strike Wave"

The so-called "strike wave" of recent months has been created by methods similar to those used for "crime waves", so far as the news columns are concerned.

Publishers and politicians and their big business backers are looking for all the evidence they can get for editorials and speeches, to make the public strike-conscious; and to create the appearance of public demand for anti-strike measures and the like, to keep wages down.

So every little strike is treated as big news. And though all competent authorities, from the President on down, have pointed out the relative scarcity of strikes as compared with similar periods in the past, the newspapers give the impression that there has been one big continuous strike wave.

In ordinary times, a few hundred workers can go on strike here or there, and unless there are some unusual circumstances, it probably won't even be reported in papers outside the city or state concerned.

But nowadays such a stoppage becomes part of the daily round-up stories on strikes in every part of the country which the wire services are putting out and most of the papers are carrying regularly.

Even a big local strike is ordinarly treated as national news only when it starts and finishes, unless there are some unusual happenings in between. But nowadays the round-up stories, day after day, include reference to nearly every strike, big or little, even when there are no new developments to report.

Set Up Mediation Board

Board to hasten decisions in cases involving union representation.

NEED FOR SPEED

Pres. Roosevelt's Executive Order establishing the new Board asserted that "it is essential in the present emergency that employers and employes engaged in production or transportation of materials necessary to national defense shall exert every possible effort to assure that all work necessary for national defense shall proceed without interruption and with all possible speed . . ."

"It is hereby declared to be the duty of employers and employes," the Order declared, "to try to avoid any such interruptions."

"In the interest of national defense the parties should give to the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor and to the Office of Production Management (A) notice in writing of any desired changes in existing agreements, wages or working conditions; (B) full information as to all developments in labor disputes; and (C) such sufficient advance notice of any threatened interruptions to continuous production as will permit explorations of all avenues of possible settlement of such controversies so as to avoid strikes, stoppages, or lockouts."

Summary of Order Creating Defense Mediation Board

THE BOARD: Eleven members—three representing the public, four representing employes, four representing employers. The chairman shall be one of the public representatives .

JURISDICTION: The Board will have jurisdiction over any employer-employe dispute (excepting those now covered by the Railway Labor Act) which are certified to the Board by the Secretary of Labor as threatening "to burden or obstruct the production or transportation of equipment or materials essential to national defense . . ." The Dept. of Labor will certify those disputes which its own Division of Conciliation is unable to settle.

AUTHORITY:

A. To assist disputing parties to reach an agreement.
B. To afford means for voluntary arbitration and to furnish arbitrators when so requested by the disputing parties.
C. To help establish methods for resolving future disputes, when so desired by the two parties.
D. To investigate the issues at dispute between employers and employes, seek facts, hold hearings, formulate recommendations, and make the findings public when it so desires.
E. To ask the NLRB, in disputes involving appropriate bargaining units or representatives, to expedite its decisions.

PANELS: The Board chairman may order sub-committee panels to handle any particular dispute. No panel may have less than three members, and each panel must contain representatives of the public, the employers and the employes serving on the Board.

PROCEDURE: If a controversy has not been certified by the Dept. of Labor to the Mediation Board, the Board may not handle it but must refer the case to the Labor Dept. To exert every possible method of avoiding interruptions in production, employers and employes should give to the Labor Dept.'s Conciliation Service and to the OPM:

A. Notice in writing of desired changes existing agreements, wages or working conditions.
B. Full information about all developments in labor disputes.
C. Sufficient advance notice about threatened interruption in production to permit exploration of all avenues of possible settlement so as to avoid strikes, stoppages or lockouts.

Murray Urges All CIO Aid Bridges; Raps Hearings

WASHINGTON, Mar. 24.—Full support "must be given to Harry Bridges and definite steps taken to defend him in the present proceedings," Pres. Philip Murray wrote in urging all CIO affiliates to aid in the defense of Bridges against new deportation hearings scheduled to begin March 31.

Pointing out that Bridges has been already acquitted once of charges brought against him after an 11-week hearing held by the U. S. Labor Department, Murray described the order for a new hearing as "an attempted appeasement of the attacks which have come from anti-labor sources which are primarily intent upon destroying the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and thereby undermining organized labor as a whole."

UNDERMINE DEMOCRACY

"Unfortunately there are individuals and groups in our nation who have been and are continuing to be primarily intent upon destroying labor organizations," Murray wrote. "These individuals and groups seek to undermine American democracy by opposing the right of workers to organize and will do so in times of stress under the guise of patriotism. One of the most frequent attacks practiced by these enemies of labor is the one directed against the leaders of labor organizations.

"The issues involved in the continued attack run beyond questions affecting Harry Bridges," he added. "If proceedings of this description are to be continued, then it is easy to understand how attacks of this kind can follow through and can be openly directed against organized labor. It is my considered judgment that our affiliated unions and members should lend every practical support in defending Bridges in this case."

CIO COMMITTEE

Murray designated an official CIO committee to publicize the Bridges case and to aid in his defense, consisting of Sherman H. Dalrymple, a vice-president of the CIO and president of the United Rubber Workers of America, and David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Action of the U. S. Dept. of Justice in refusing to grant Bridges a delay in the hearings, which begin only a week before the Longshoremen's convention opens, was described by the West Coast Bridges Defense Committee as evidence of an intent "to attack labor through the person of Bridges."

The Committee also criticized the refusal of the Department to allow defense attorneys to see the FBI report on which the new hearings were based. "This makes it clear that the government does not wish to give the defense more time or information to prepare its case," the Committee said.

CIO Lists Demands At Coast Plane Plant

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 22.—Fresh from their Labor Board election victory at the big North American Aviation Corp., members of the CIO United Automobile Workers today prepared demands for coming negotiation sessions with the management.

The CIO defeated an AFL affiliate by 70 votes in the NLRB poll, but leaders of the winning union said that since the election hundreds of AFL workers and non-voting employes "have cast their lot with the CIO."

Shop stewards said that at least 65 per cent of the company's 7,600 production workers are now enrolled in the UAW-CIO, and basing predictions on recent membership growth, predicted that within three weeks "95 per cent of the men would be in the union."

Richard Frankensteen, director of the CIO's national aviation organizing campaign, will come to Los Angeles to assist in the bargaining sessions at North American, it was announced by the UAW. The union's main demands include a 75c hourly minimum and comparable raises for higher paid workers, two weeks' vacation with pay, seniority and grievance machinery and holidays with pay.

CONSOLIDATED & DOUGLAS

Continuing the air craft drive at top speed, Lew Michener, UAW west coast director, said organizing activity would start at Consolidated Aircraft Corp. in San Diego and at Douglas Aircraft in nearby Santa Monica.

"These two plants, hiring a total personnel of more than 40,000 men, will be the next objective of the CIO campaign to bring union standards to the aviation industry," Michener said.

"When we have completed the organization of these two, the rest of the industry, we are sure, will follow the CIO path to higher wages and decent conditions in the aviation industry."

In addition to these SWOC officials, the ten-man union negotiating committee is now made up of John Mayerik and John Normand, of Gary, Ind.; Anthony J. Hendzel, of Sharpsburg, Pa.; Joseph B. Kuba of Youngstown, and William Coombs, of Homestead, Pa.

Notices to Carnegie-Illinois and the other subsidiaries of U. S. Steel of the union's desire to reopen the contract, went out over Murray's signature on March 12. Under terms of the contracts, the negotiators now have until March 31 to write a new agreement. If this is not done the existing contracts expire.

cost of living is increasing, and the mine worker is the first to bear the brunt," Lewis said.

"A wage increase is indicated and the mine workers do not intend to wait until they have suffered a loss that may not be remedied by the ascending price structure."

Replying to the operators' rejection of a UMW proposal for a guaranteed work year of at least 200 days, Lewis said the mine workers would therefore be forced to press all the harder for the wage increase. About 60 per cent of the miners earn only $600 a year, and many have work enough to provide them only about $300, he said.

Bus Drivers Win Crucial Walkout

NEW YORK, Mar. 22.—CIO bus drivers on Manhattan's two major lines today had won their 11-day walkout for improved wages and working conditions.

The strikers, members of the Transport Workers Union, went back to work with the assurance that their demands for pay raises would be arbitrated and that under no circumstances would any of the gains won through years of collective bargaining, be taken away.

The strike settlement, won with the aid of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, broke an effort to rob the 3,500 drivers of their hard-won rights. The arbitration plan was signed by Pres. Michael S. Quill of the TWU and other union leaders in the office of Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York City.

VICTORY FOR LABOR

Quill declared that "all labor in America, as well as members and officers of the TWU, hail this latest victory of our organization as a stop signal to employers who are about to lead the fight for the cutting of wages throughout the nation.

"The strike was won by the unity and determination of our great industrial union. We want to thank the president of the CIO, Philip Murray, and Brother Allan Haywood, national director of organization of the CIO, and the president of the United Mine Workers, John L. Lewis, for the excellent cooperation and help they gave us."

Under the terms of the arbitration plan, union demands for a $750,000 increase at the New York Omnibus Corp. and a $250,000 increase at the Fifth Ave. Coach Co. will be considered.

The arbitration agreement specifically stipulates that the arbitration "shall have power only to determine what improvements shall be made in wages, hours and working conditions of the employes," over and above the levels in the contract which expired on March 1.

During the strike, the union maintained that the companies were seeking to cut their wages, slice their sick leave benefits and cut the time on vacations. While the TWU held fast to its demands, the city's newspapers and many public officials sought to picture the unions as conjuring up devils which did not exist. But as the strike progressed, the TWU picture of the companies' aims became more and more clear.

Pres. Murray and Haywood took an active part in the negotiations which led up to the union victory.

MURRAY-HAYWOOD STATEMENT

Haywood, in a statement authorized by Pres. Murray, said the agreement "sustains the principles declared for by the CIO in resisting arbitration downwards in these times. It is a great victory and is a realization of the views expressed by Pres. Murray of the CIO, who asked me to make this statement in his behalf.

"The issue involved in this strike was of national importance. I was asked by President Murray to congratulate the leadership and the membership of this union and to thank those who assisted, those who brought about this accord, which we hope will result in a harmonious relationship between the companies and the union in serving the people of New York."

The strike kept all the buses of the two companies off the streets. A furious campaign to brand the strike as a plot, to picture it as unwanted by the workers and doomed to be defeated, all ended in failure.

Picket lines were maintained at all the companies' garages, but the strike—the most effective in 15 years in New York—was not marred by a single instance of violence.

Bethlehem Steel Forces Stoppages

the Circuit Court in Washington, D. C.

To have allowed the so-called "election" to be conducted without a protest would have been to condone an obvious violation of the National Labor Relations Act.

STRIKE ON COAST

Meanwhile, the anti-union policy of the company had precipitated a strike at its properties on the West Coast, and nearly brought another strike at the Lackawanna, N. Y. plant.

In Lackawanna, the SWOC conducted a successful two-day strike late in February, won reinstatement for a thousand men who had been "suspended," an agreement from the company to bargain with the union, and then filed a petition with the Labor Board for an election at that plant.

But Bethlehem Steel officials at Lackawanna declined to meet SWOC representatives because on the union grievance committee were some of the "suspended" workmen. The company, however, backed down on March 19 and agreed to meet the union committee as constituted, thus averting another strike.

Big Business Putting Squeeze On Uncle Sam, TNEC Reports

WASHINGTON, Mar. 22.—Sensational charges that big business is in effect "blackmailing" the federal government were made today in a new study issued by the U. S. Temporary National Economic Committee.

The study, entitled "Economic Power and Political Pressures," looks into lobbying activities in Washington and pays particular interest to the business lobby.

"Speaking bluntly," the TNEC survey declares, "the government and the public are 'over a barrel' when it comes to dealing with business in time of war or other crisis.

"Business refused to work, except on terms which it dictates. It controls the natural resources, the liquid assets, the strategic position in the country's economic structure, and its technical equipment and knowledge of processes.

"The experience of the world war, now apparently being repeated, indicates that business will use this control only if it is 'paid properly.'

During the 1940 defense crisis, the TNEC report said, business displayed an attitude similar to that of 1917—

"Profits, taxes, loans and so forth appeared more important to business men than getting guns, tanks and airplane motors into production."

Urge Program Now For Future Crisis

WASHINGTON, Mar. 22.—A six-year public works program, designed to cushion the economic let-down when present defense spending is completed, was recommended to Congress today by the Natl. Resources Planning Board.

The report was transmitted to Congress with a message from Pres. Roosevelt, who praised it as a means of establishing a "strong and healthy economy" after the present emergency is over.

Recommended by the three-man board was the establishment of a revolving fund to finance the immediate inauguration of surveys, investigations and preparation of engineering plans for selected public works projects.

Pointing out that modern war involves all the people of a nation, the Planning Board pointed out:

"In giving high priorities to defense undertakings, therefore, we must not lose sight of those governmental activities that are vital to our long-term safety, such as the protection of our soil, the safeguarding of national health, the protection of morale and the preparation for post emergency adjustments. In a broader sense, these, too, are measures of national deefnse."

Murray Banquet

Harrisburg, Pa., Mar. 22. — A testimonial banquet for CIO President Philip Murray will be one of the features of the fourth annual convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Industrial Union Council which opens here April 29 at the Chester Street Auditorium.

The banquet will be held at the Penn-Harris Hotel, Wednesday, April 30, Pres. John A. Phillips and Secretary Lester Thomas of the Council announced this week.

Declaring that "Pennsylvania is renowned throughout the labor movement of the U. S. for the long list of outstanding leaders, state and national, which it has contributed to labor's cause," the announcement of the banquet states that "Pennsylvania has again been signally honored by the election of Philip Murray as president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

Carey to Speak On NBC April 2

WASHINGTON, Mar. 22.—All CIO members are urged to tune in on CIO Sec. James B. Carey, who will broadcast on the NBC Blue Network on Wednesday, April 2, from 9:15 to 9:30 P. M.

Carey will speak on "Labor — Defender of Democracy" and will answer reactionary critics of the CIO in the course of his speech.

LADIES AGREE: Cheers and demonstrations from the ladies greeted announcement at a meeting of the CIO Transport Workers Union in New York that their strike against two bus companies would continue until union demands are won. Strike of 3,500 bus drivers for higher pay took all the firms' buses off Manhattan streets and ended in victory.

Die Casters Strike In California

Los Angeles, Mar. 22.—Workers at the Harvill Aircraft Die Casting Corp. here walked out on strike after their union, Local 101, National Association of Die Casting Workers, had held conferences with the management for six weeks and been unable to get a settlement of their demands.

The union started negotiations after winning a National Labor Relations Board election held among the company's 400 employes by a large majority.

DEMANDS CUT

The union committee scaled down the original demand for a 75 cent hourly minimum pay to 55 cents for beginners, 62½ cents after three months and 70 cents after six months' employment, but the company refused to accept the compromise. The present minimum rate at Harvill's is 50 cents.

CIO groups in California are rallying to the support of the strikers, Local 101 stated, and many resolutions have been passed offering assistance to the die casters.

Blame for prolonging the strike was placed by the union on Henry L. Harvill, company president, when he failed to appear at a conference scheduled by a Federal conciliator.

Declaring that he would not meet with CIO "lawbreakers" later Harvill, aided by two score officers from the Los Angeles police department tried unsuccessfully to provoke a riot at the CIO picket line.

Edward T. Cheyfitz, NADCW executive secretary, charged that Harvill "is fully responsible for the strike because of the indecent wages he pays his employes."

2,400 Call Strike At GM Coast Plants

Oakland, Calif., Mar. 22—Twenty-five hundred employes of General Motors Chevrolet and Fisher Body plants went out on strike here today following charges that the company was violating its contract with the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Firing of 26 union welders precipitated the walkout at the two plants.

In New York City, where he was attending a meeting of CIO executive officers, UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas said the strike had the full sanction of the International Union.

Thomas said he was becoming sick and tired of repeated violations of the contract by GM, and said the corporation had failed to use the machinery set up by the agreement for the settlement of disputes.

The firm refused to rehire the 26 welders at its Fisher Body plant after a one-day general lockout on March 1.

"The company's attitude and inhuman speedup have brought about a condition which the men can no longer endure," commented Pres. Frank Slaby of Local 76, CIO United Automobile Workers.

"These 26 welders were required to make a complete auto body in approximately one minute — at the dizzy, strength-sapping speed of 55 bodies an hour. Until two weeks ago the rate was 50 bodies an hour."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The victory of the striking bus drivers in New York proves again the correctness of the CIO's policy of accepting arbitration when it offers a basis for a fair settlement of the workers' just and reasonable demands.

Only a few days ago our critics were accusing us of "obstinacy", bullheadedness and the like, because the Transport Workers Union would not consent to arbitrate the question on the basis of wage reductions and general worsening of conditions. They were attempting to paint the CIO as unreasonable, high-handed, etc., because the union would not go into arbitration on terms that would have led to lowered working and living standards for its members.

Now our policy is vindicated. The dispute between the transport workers and the bus companies will be settled on a fair and decent basis. The company has consented to withdraw its demands for wage cuts and will discuss the union's demands for raises, sick leave, vacations, and other points will be discussed in a similar spirit.

This is a very real victory for the union and for the entire CIO. It is a tribute to the unity and solidarity not only of the Transport Workers Union but of the whole CIO, whose support was pledged by Pres. Murray to the strikers.

Pres. Murray's untiring efforts to bring about a settlement, were in a large measure responsible for this achievement. It is a new demonstration of the basic strength of the CIO—the strength that comes from industrial unionism, from unity, and from an alert, progressive leadership.

All congratulations on this splendid victory should go to Transport Workers Union President Quill; Austin Hogan, leader of the New York local; Secretary John Santo, and the rank and file of the union.

THE COAL DIGGERS

The coal diggers are doing all right in their negotiations in New York. The eyes of all the workers in the country are on John L. Lewis and the committee as they deal with the most powerful financial barons in the world for the welfare of 600,000 coal miners. The coal diggers will come through. Whether they have a hard struggle as they did two years ago or not, the workers of the U. S. can be sure the miners and their leader won't fail them.

VICTORY IN OREGON

Two to one election victories for the CIO continue to pile up. Latest is the vote for the Intl. Woodworkers of America polled at the Longview Co. in Longview, Ore., as reported by Regional Director Adolph Germer—2,050 for the CIO, 1022 for the AFL.

A similar, though smaller CIO majority was won by the Paper, Toy and Novelty Workers at the Hogue-Strague plant in Lynn, Mass., where the CIO got 204 votes, the other side 83. In New Orleans, according to Regional Director Pieper, workers at the American Sugar Refining Co. voted CIO 566, against 250. District 50 of the United Mine Workers shows an even bigger proportion in a 366 to 57 vote for CIO at the Antrim Iron plant in Mancelona, Mich.

IN CANADA TOO

Canadian workers, though they're facing all the difficulties that organized labor has in a country at war, know that the CIO can help them. They've just voted 256 for the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and 73 against at the Bralorne Mining Co. in Bridge River, B. C.

Regional Director Don Harris reports a strike victory at the Malleable Iron Co. in Wilmington, Del.—heart of the duPont Empire. Details are not at hand at the time of writing.

PRODUCTION GOING UP

Washington. — Industrial activity continued to rise during February and the first half of March, reaching a level of 141 per cent of the average level of 1935-39, the Federal Reserve System's Board of Governors have revealed.

NEGOTIATIONS

Baltimore, Md. — Negotiations looking toward a settlement of the five week strike at the American Sugar Co. "made progress," CIO union leaders said, but demands for a 13 cent hourly increase have not yet been met by the company.

SEEK INCREASE: Social workers employed by the New York Assn. for Jewish Children, picketed in quantity when the organization countered their demand for a 78c weekly wage increase with a proposal of 55 cents. Head of the Assn. is an attorney for the New York Times. Union is Local 19 of the United Office & Professional Workers.

WORKERS' SHARE: This chart from the CIO Economic Outlook spotlights the fact that the workers' share of the entire national income is decreasing in relation to the rising national income. Percent of the national income paid out in wages and salaries now stands at 62%, seems headed downwards.

Brophy Urges CIO Councils Back Up Murray Plan

By JOHN BROPHY
Director of Industrial Union Councils

President Philip Murray has offered the country a highly praise-worthy plan for strengthening our national defense program and for bringing order out of chaos in industry in connection with the production of peacetime, as well as wartime, goods. This plan and the proposals advanced subsequently by the United Automobile Workers, CIO, and Steel Workers Organizing Committee, which are applications of the plan, are fundamental to the long range policies of the CIO and should have the support of every CIO organization and every CIO member.

The recent establishment of a National Mediation Board which will naturally have much to say about labor relations in our basic industries, matters which would also be subject to the jurisdiction of the Industry Councils proposed by Mr. Murray, does not modify the situation in this connection or change the policies of the CIO in relation to these proposals. There need be no necessary conflict between the work of the Mediation Board and the work which would be done by the Councils, though the development of the Councils would in all probability reduce the number of issues which the Board would be called upon to look into.

The Murray plan, as presented to President Roosevelt, outlines the creation in each major national defense industry of an Industry Council equally composed of labor and business representatives, with a government official as chairman. These Councils will concern themselves with the problems of increased production, over-all planning, maintenance of labor standards, and all other crucial issues of importance to the industry and the public.

NATL. DEFENSE BOARD

Their efforts will be coordinated by the work of a National Defense Board, similarly set up with equal labor and management representation, and with the President of the United States as chairman.

The Board and Councils will be charged with the development of systems of procedures whereby our industries can maintain capacity production not only of war-time goods, but of peacetime goods as well.

From one point of view, the Murray Industry Council plan is a proposal for increased participation by the people of this country in making the decisions which affect their economic lives. To a great extent this increased participation would be achieved by the labor unions, which now represent a large segment of the American people.

From another angle, the plan is simply a proposal that labor and the people generally be permitted to assume a certain responsibility, and contribute their abilities and knowledge, to the planning of the production and distribution of goods. The Murray plan is a proposal for the application of the intelligence of the American people to the solution of their deep-seated economic ills.

IDEA TRIED OUT

The Industry Council idea has already been tried, to a certain extent, by two of our greatest industrial unions. The Reuther Plan for the adaptation of the unused capacity of the automobile industry to the production of airplanes for national defense is worth noting. Even though industrial spokesmen have expressed skepticism about the Reuther Plan, they have been compelled to accept many of its recommendations. The necessity for production has forced the pooling of resources in the industry, for example, even though some industrialists appear to have opposed the Reuther Plan because it interfered, however slightly, with the undisputed sway which they have exercised over their own businesses.

The proposals advanced by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, likewise an application of the Murray Plan, must also be mentioned. Again recommending the creation of an Industry Council as the method of enforcement and application, the steel union has analyzed certain other peculiar production problems. It has found that large amounts of unused production capacity are lying idle in the country through a mere administrative failure to make use of them. Integrated and orderly planning of production in the steel industry, so the steel union contends, will eliminate such losses and solve many other serious and pressing problems of production.

STAND FOR DEMOCRACY

We stand firmly committed to the defense of the country and its interests as a democracy. It is in this spirit that labor offers its specific recommendations for the improvement of production methods in the defense industries, and expresses its willingness to assume administrative responsibility for the formulation and execution of intelligent and orderly production plans.

While many of our CIO Council units have taken action urging the President of the United States to adopt the Murray Plan for strengthening national defense, it is important that other of our affiliates who have not yet acted on this matter, as outlined in my letter of February 17th, do so as soon as possible.

Utility Men Win Pact At Edison Co.

Youngstown, O., Mar. 22. — Strike votes at the Ohio Edison Co. here by Local 118 of the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, have brought an agreement securing union recognition, wage increases, sole collective bargaining and other benefits to the workers after a four year struggle, Harold Straub, UWOC director, announced.

The company also agreed to work out a further contract, in which the CIO union will ask for a closed shop and checkoff, additional wage increases and other improvements in wages and conditions.

St. Louis CIO Supports Defense Plan

St. Louis, Mar. 22—Full support for CIO Pres. Philip Murray's Industry Council Defense Plan was voted by the St. Louis Industrial Union Council.

The Council sent notice of its action to Pres. Roosevelt and high government officials in Washington, pointing out that the CIO defense plan would guarantee full use of the country's productive capacity for defense and peacetime needs while preserving and strengthening democratic rights.

The Reuther plane plan and other plans set forth by CIO affiliated organizations also won the Council's endorsement. A second resolution called for CIO officials to communicate with British labor leaders suggesting a joint labor conference for aid to Britain and joint economic and political defense.

Re-organize Council In WesternMass.

Springfield, Mass., Mar. 22. — The Western Massachusetts Council of CIO unions, inactive for nearly two years, was reorganized this week and immediately began to map plans for an organizational drive among the workers in this area's unorganized industrial plants.

Herman Greenberg, president of Local 290, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, was named president of the council, which now represents 17 CIO locals with a total membership of nearly 15,000.

Thomas Ferriter, president of Local 213, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, was named president of a newly-formed organizing committee, which includes one representative from each of the affiliated locals.

Objectives in the council's drive are many unorganized plants now working at top speed on defense orders.

ON CAPITOL HILL:

Mine Bill Moves; Gag Laws Pushed

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

Having broken through the obstruction in the House of Representatives after 21 months of delay, the Mine Safety Bill this week continued its progress towards final enactment. The Senate Mines Committee unanimously ordered the bill reported out for debate on the Senate floor. No opposition is expected and it now appears that this long overdue legislation may actually become law within a very few weeks.

The Geyer Anti-Poll Tax Bill has been put on the House Speaker's desk with a petition that must be signed by 218 Representatives before the measure can be debated and voted on. The CIO went on record at its last convention in support of this legislation to establish democratic suffrage in the United States. It will be a tough job to fill the discharge petition with signatures. Full support of all CIO unions is essential if this bill is to be successfully pushed.

The attack on labor's rights is centered in the House Judiciary Committee which has before it numerous bills to prohibit strikes, and picketing, outlaw the closed shop and the check-off, impair the protection against anti-union employers provided by the NLRA, and interfere with self government on the part of organized labor. These are the bills introduced by labor's most notorious enemies, Cox, Howard Smith, Hoffman, Leland Ford, and Hobbs.

An example of the unfriendly treatment labor is getting before this committee was the testimony of Merrill Meigs, Chairman of the Aircraft Section of OPM. Meigs was the Hearst Publisher who fought the Chicago Newspaper Guild during their long strike, and is a former auto manufacturer. Speaking as an "impartial" government servant, Meigs quoted the notorious anti-labor aircraft producer, Donald Douglas, as his main authority as to the bad effects of strikes on defense production. Needless to say, Meigs and Douglas "made the front pages."

The Judiciary Committee will probably continue its general hearings on the various labor bills for quite a while. Many additional witnesses are scheduled to appear. Secret sessions are being held for the appearance of various high Government officials on the Hobbs wire-tapping bill. It seems probable that a substitute bill modifying the loose Hobbs provisions will come out of the Committee. Such a substitute would still involve all the basic dangers and abuses of the original bill and must be vigorously opposed by all friends of civil liberties and of labor.

The Vinson Bill which provides compulsory mediation for Navy workers is not being acted upon by the House Naval Affairs Committee at this time. The committee is deferring on this bill to the more general investigation of strikes by the Judiciary Committee. The Labor Committee of the House apparently has nothing to do with all the labor questions arising under the defense program. It looks as though committee names don't mean much this year on Capitol Hill.

The Dirksen Bill to eliminate union hiring halls and to otherwise disrupt the collective bargaining relations in the maritime industry is still in the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. The committee has been meeting in executive session (which means in secret) so the union is kept in the dark as to what the various Government agency witnesses have to say. As indicated in the strong statement by President Murray on this matter, the CIO opposes the Dirksen Bill and any substitute bill which attacks the rights of maritime unions to free existence, to organize, to bargain collectively, to strike and to picket.

Win 10% Increase At Wool Plant

Woonsocket, R. I., Mar. 22.—A two-year agreement providing a general 10 per cent pay increase for 630 employes of the Branch River Wool Combing Co. of North Smithfield has been announced by Albert G. Clifton, Rhode Island director for the Textile Workers Union of America.

The TWUA was certified as collective bargaining agency March 8, after the union's membership cards were checked with the company's payroll by Anna Weinstock, conciliator from the U. S. Dept. of Labor. Miss Weinstock found that 94 per cent of the workers had already joined the union.

NEW ERA: Leaders of New Jersey unions look on as Gov. Charles Edison signs a labor-sponsored bill limiting the indiscriminate issuance of injunctions by state chancery courts. Signing of the bill marked the climax of a 27-year fight against the anti-labor abuses of the chancery courts.

LABOR AND THE LAW:

NLRB Protects Right To Strike

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

The right to strike has been given added protection by the National Labor Relations Board in a case which may prove to be extremely important to organized labor.

In this case, the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee organized a series of short stoppages at the plant of the Cudahy Packing Co. in protest against an increase in production schedule by the reduction of the number of employes and the maintenance of the same production rate. During the stoppages the employes walked about the room and there was no violence or injury to persons or property or any attempt to exclude officials of the company from the department. In addition, it appeared that the company deducted from the pay of the employes who engaged in the stoppages for the time lost; and for this reason the Board found that the company sustained no financial loss from the stoppages.

The day after the stoppages occurred, three union officers who had participated in the program were summarily discharged. They subsequently applied for reinstatement and their applications were rejected.

The company attempted to support these discharges on the grounds:

1. That the discharged employes had engaged in a strike and for this reason the employer was entitled to discharge them, and

2. That the stoppages were equivalent to sit-down strikes or an outlaw enterprise and the employes responsible for them could be discharged.

The Labor Board rejected the suggested defenses of the company and ordered the three employes reinstated with back pay. The analysis of the Labor Board in support of their conclusion was that:

1. The employes who engaged in the stoppages did so pursuant to a program planned and executed by the Union in support of its osition in a dispute with the company respecting conditions of work. The stoppages were instances of collective union activity. To discharge employes for leading participation in such activity necessarily discourages membership in a labor organization and constitutes an unfair labor practice. Employes so discharged are entitled to reinstatement with back pay.

2. It was conceded by the Labor Board that the stoppages were a type of strike. The Labor Act specifically safeguards the right to strike. Employes, therefore, who go on strike may not be discharged by their employer. If they are, they are entitled to be reinstated with back pay.

NOT SITDOWN STRIKES

Furthermore, the Labor Board held that the stoppages which were involved in this case were not sit-down strikes or an outlaw enterprise, since they did not involve seizure or destruction of or damage to the company's property, as in the Fansteel case.

Furthermore, the facts in the case did not show any financial loss to the company. For these reasons the Board held that the concerted activities of the employes in furtherence of their mutual aid and for the protection of the union must be protected under the Labor Act and the company had no defense for the attempted discharges.

The Cudahy case should be carefully distinguished from another case decided by the Labor Board also involving a series of sit-down strikes. In this case, the union became engaged in a dispute with the Ore Steamship Corporation, over the question of wages and other working conditions. The company operated several ships. The union advised its members on board these ships that when each ship arrived in port the men were to engage in a sit-down strike.

The sit-down strikes did not last any length of time and the men usually left the ship after a short sit-down. However, the employer, in replacing the personnel, directed its subordinate officials to engage employes not from the union hiring hall, but elsewhere, and to employ seamen who would not engage in sit-down strikes.

In this situation the Labor Board held that the case did not involve an unfair labor practice strike. For this reason, while the strikers were still employes, the employer was entitled to obtain replacements. Furthermore, because of the union's attitude of threatening continuing sit-down strikes through its members, the Board held that the employer was entitled to secure seamen who would not engage in such sit-down strikes. This decision was based upon the argument that the employer was justified in adopting this attitude for business reasons.

In these two cases the Board has demonstrated that the Labor Act protects employes in their right to strike or to engage in other concerted activities for their mutual aid or protection. When employes adopt a program which involves a strike or other stoppage of production they may not be discharged but will continue as employes.

Mere stoppages of work on company property will not be considered by the Board as outlaw enterprises or such serious sit-downs as not to warrant protection under the Labor Act. If the strike is called because of the unfair practice of the employer, then the employes engaging in strikes will be entitled to reinstatement as against any other employes with less seniority.

Where the strike has not been caused by the unfair labor practice of the employer, then, of course, though the strikers still remain employes, the employer is entitled to obtain replacements in accordance with his own business judgment. The employer may not discriminate against union men in securing replacements except in the face of conditions which existed in the Ore Steamship case.

NMU Asks More Pay On Tankers

New York, Mar. 22 — Cities Service Co., one of the country's biggest utilities and a stronghold of anti-unionism, is finally negotiating with a trade union—the National Maritime Union. Jack Lawrenson, NMU organizer, announced this week that negotiations had been opened for a contract covering nearly 600 men on 16 tankers operated by Cities Service Oil Co., subsidiary of Cities Service Co.

The union is asking the company to sign the regular tanker agreement with a $15 pay increase. Last week the union demanded a $15 increase from six tanker companies now signatory to the agreement.

Michigan CIO Outlines State Laws Program

Detroit, Mar. 22.—State laws to extend the benefits of social protection to workers are on the agenda of the Michigan CIO Council's Legislative Program for 1941.

Included are demands for passage of a State Labor Relations Act, a wage-hour act, improvements in social security measures, laws to protect the right to organize and bargain collectively and other civil liberties, regulation of private loan agencies and detective firms, and the like.

CIO Wins Bethlehem Strike; Firm Forces New Walkout

Summary of Employer Trouble Throughout U. S.

Obstinate refusal of big business employers to bargain collectively or to observe the Federal law today had precipitated a number of serious situations throughout the United States:

ALLIS-CHALMERS: Refusal of the Allis Chalmers Mfg. Co. to accept an OPM agreement accepted on March 1 by the United Auto Workers extended a lockout of 7,600 employes.

BETHLEHEM STEEL: Insistence of Bethlehem Steel Co. to maintain a company union which the NLRB ruled illegal more than a year ago forced a strike at the Bethlehem, Pa., plant, caused another one at Johnstown, Pa. Meanwhile, company efforts to stall a Labor Board election at the Lackawanna, N. Y., plant may cause another crisis there.

INTL. HARVESTER: Refusal to recognize the CIO Farm Equipment Workers and support for an out-lawed company union kept plants of the Intl. Harvester still closed. Company efforts to import scabs and strikebreakers caused outbreaks of violence and police attacks on workers.

AMERICAN POTASH: Refusal by the British-owned American Potash & Chemical to negotiate a contract with the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers forced a strike at Trona, Cal., desert bound "English colony."

GENERAL ELECTRIC: Refusal of the General Electric Co., whose profits have soared in recent months, to grant a 10 cent wage increase, led CIO Electrical Workers Union to plan one-week demonstration at the big Schenectady plant.

COAL MINES: Appalachian coal operators still resisted United Mine Workers pay raise demands and March 31 deadline drew near with possibility that a blackout might result, through refusal of operators to accepts union's offer to continue working under present conditions, with retroactive clause until new agreement is reached.

THE ISSUE: Placards tell the issues involved in the strike of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at the anti-union Bethlehem Steel Corp. Milan Rankovich, SWOC picket, displays them.

Workers Fight Law Violation

Bethlehem, Pa., Mar. 28.—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee today had won its four-day strike against the Bethlehem Steel Corp., but within a few hours the company had forced a walkout at its giant Cambria plant in Johnstown.

"This is our greatest victory," declared John Riffe, SWOC field director at Bethlehem, Pa., as he announced the four-point settlement to which the company, a consistent labor law violator and holder of $1,500,000,000 in U. S. contracts, had agreed.

The company agreed to rehire all the workers without discrimination or loss of seniority, to meet with the union as representative of the workers, and to withhold action on sole bargaining agency until a U. S. Circuit Court has ruled on the Labor Board's decision. The NLRB held the company guilty of Wagner Act violations and ordered the Employes Representative Plan dissolved.

It was the corporation's insistence upon holding elections under the ERP which forced the strike at the Bethlehem, Pa., plant and at the Cambria plant in Johnstown.

History of Bethlehem's Fight Against Union

WASHINGTON, Mar. 29 — Newspapers are criticizing the Steel Workers Organizing Committee for hasty action in the Bethlehem Steel Co. strike and wondering why the union did not wait for further developments.

But the SWOC has already been waiting for 3½ years, as this chronology of the Labor Board case against Bethlehem reveals:

Augs. 19, 1937—SWOC filed charges against Bethlehem

Sept. 8, 1937—NLRB hearings opened.

April 22, 1938—NLRB hearings closed

Nov. 9, 1938—Trial examiner handed down intermediate report recommending Bethlehem be found guilty of law violations.

Aug. 14, 1939—NLRB order upholds trial examiner, tells Bethlehem to dissolve company union Employe Representation Plan.

Aug. 16, 1939—Bethlehem asked U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals to review the NLRB petition.

Feb. 17, 1941—Circuit Court of Appeals heard arguments of lawyers representing company, NLRB and CIO.

March 29, 1941—No decision yet handed down by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Harvester Strikers Resist Cops

CHICAGO, Mar. 29.—With two policemen for every scab a few hundred strikebreakers have managed so far to get into International Harvester's McCormick Works daily since the management opened the plant last Monday, according to estimates of officials of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee.

They reported that newspaper men who toured the plant where 6,100 workers are employed ordinarily, said that no machines were running and that the men were standing around idle, although the plant superintendent had declared that more than 3,000 were on the job.

An army of more than a thousand cops, the greatest mobilization of police in the city's history, beat a path through for the strikebreakers, while 10,000 members of the FEWOC and other CIO unions marched around the plant.

AFL's FINK HALL

The company says the scabs are members of an AFL local chartered after the company union was declared illegal by the National Labor Relations Board. The FEWOC declared that the AFL headquarters had been turned into a fink hall where bums on the loose and any stray male they could gather from the streets were enticed in to sign up for jobs.

Maintaining that it was holding open its offer to mediate the strike, the union issued a statement this week declaring that "any time Harvester wants to turn from the way of force and violence to peaceful negotiations or mediation of this situation, the union is ready. But to date the Harvester Co. has rejected all overtures for further mediation that have been made by the state and federal governments."

The McCormick workers voted Feb. 20 to call a strike at the plant. IHC's big Tractor Works in Chicago was closed by a strike several weeks earlier. Workers at two other smaller IHC plants in Rock Falls, Ill. and Richmond, Ind. are also on strike.

Police Raid Union Hall

RICHMOND, Ind., Mar. 29.—The picketline at International Harvester's plant here was attacked by police armed with night sticks when the company sought to open the strike bound plant on Thursday.

Headquarters of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee were also raided several hours after the clash on the picketline, and a number of CIO members, including Clifford Kerr, president of the Richmond FEWOC local, were reported arrested.

The plant has been closed since the workers walked out on strike Feb. 17.

GM Held Responsible For Strike

Oakland, Calif., Mar. 29. — Two thousand workers were forced out on strike at two General Motors plants here by the giant corporation's desire to weaken the position of the CIO United Automobile Workers in current negotiations for a new national contract, the Oakland UAW local charged today.

The strike started after the company shut the plant for one day and then discharged 26 welders who protested the laying off of one worker whom the company accused of failing to keep up with the man-killing assembly line pace.

Expect Ford Poll Soon; Firm's Stooge Wilts at Hearing

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Mar. 29. — With the threat of a subpena for Henry and Edsel Ford hanging over his head, a suddenly amenable I. A. Capizzi, attorney for the Ford Motor Co., quickly agreed to stipulations which brought to an end last Wednesday the hearings to determine whether an election shall to be held at the Rouge and Lincoln plants of the company.

An order to hold the election is expected from the board in Washington within a very few days, and it is presumed that the board's Detroit regional director will set the date as early as mechanical arrangements can be made.

Caprizzi entered the hearings, which began Monday, with the obvious intention of stalling as much as possible. He made the flat statement at the beginning that the board and the trial examiner could expect no co-operation from him.

WITNESSES ABSENT

Further stalling was anticipated when two witnesses subpenaed by the board, Charles Sorenson, production manager, and B. J. Craig, secretary of the company, failed to appear and were described by Board Attorney Harold Cranefield as being in "defiant and contumacious disobedience" of the board.

Capizzi first tried to grab the headlines by entering a motion to dismiss the UAW-CIO's petition on a charge that certain leaders and advisers of the union and certain representatives of the board in the Detroit regional office were communist party members or sympathizers and were engaged in a conspiracy to seize control of the Ford Motor company and sabotage national defense.

On Capizzi's refusal to stipulate, UAW-CIO Maurice Sugar demanded and was granted subpenas for Henry and Edsel Ford and Harry Bennett, personnel director of the company. These witnesses were necessary, Sugar said, to prove the points which Capizzi would not stipulate.

OVERNIGHT CHANGE

It was a much-chastened Capizzi who entered the hearings Tuesday morning and declared that he was ready to confer with other counsel on the possibility of stipulations if that would mean it was unnecessary to call the Fords to the witness stand.

Henry Ford has not appeared on a witness stand since his ill-fated appearance in the Chicago Tribune trial in 1919. It is understood that one of the main duties of a Ford attorney is to prevent a repetition of that fiasco.

HITS FORD TACTICS

Ringer referred the motion to the national board, but not until after Sugar had strongly condemned the company for this play for publicity.

"This motion is not made in good faith," he declared. "It is made in an attempt to get publicity that will prejudice the people of the United States against a legitimate labor organization. One wonders to what depths the Ford Motor Co. is willing to descend.

"The Ford Motor Co. is not afraid of Communism. It is afraid of the United States government.

"I could refer to the great honor bestowed upon the founder of the Ford Motor Co. by the receipt of a medal from Adolph Hitler."

Murray Hits Dies Attack

PITTSBURGH, Mar. 29.—CIO Pres. Murray today lashed out at a series of attacks on the CIO and its affiliated unions made by Rep. Martin Dies, Texas poll tax Congressman.

TEXT OF WIRE

Murray's wire to Dies declares:

"Since I have shown your charges against the SWOC to be distorted and without foundation, you are attempting to distort the facts as regards the CIO in similar fashion.

"Your activities are truly subversive, since you are trying to create confusion and hatred in the nation through your labor-baiting. It seems strangely significant your groundless charges against the CIO always come at a time when they can do the most harm.

"Obviously you are aware of the negotiations now being conducted with the U. S. Steel Corp. and with the coal operators. I also recall your moving into Chicago last year at exactly the same time a CIO union was engaged in a Labor Board election at the Armour & Co. plant.

"Inasmuch as the newspapers say you did not extend me the courtesy of reading my previous telegram to the House, but merely inserted it in the record, I am led to two conclusions—that further communication with you is useless, and that your activities at the present time are just a further effort to grab the headlines and thereby advertise your availability for another series of lectures throughout the nation, which I understand have been very lucrative.

"I presume it is useless for me to request that you read this telegram to the House."

EARLIER TELEGRAM

Murray's earlier wire, denying red-baiting charges against the SWOC and pointing out that Dies could easily have checked the facts for himself before making the attack public, read as follows:

"You are quoted in today's newspapers as having made a speech in Congress about alleged Communist operations in the steel industry and of their supposedly being on payrolls of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

"You are quoted as naming 27 individuals in this respect. I have no knowledge of these individuals being Communists or ever having been Communists. But I have definite knowledge of the fact that of the 27 individuals named by you only one, namely, Clarence Irwin, is on SWOC payrolls. He is wiring you direct. Eleven individuals named by you were never on SWOC payrolls; the other 15 have been disassociated from SWOC for a considerable period of time ranging from three years to five years ago.

"This information would have been available to you had you been interested in making a fair investigation. If this is the nature of evidence you are quoted as saying presents an alarming picture, I believe the facts herein show your speech to be a false alarm.

"I can give you my personal assurance that your concern on this score is entirely groundless. I shall appreciate your reading this telegram on the floor of Congress."

Clarence Irwin wired Dies that he was not and never had been a Communist.

DIVIDENDS FOR BETHLEHEM'S ANTI-UNIONISM: Twenty-five years of union-busting, together with long fights against the Wagner Act, brought Bethlehem Steel Corp. its reward this week: a strike that shut down the big plant at Bethlehem, Pa. State troopers and deputies, armed with riot and tear gas guns in pre-Wagner Act fashion, attacked the workers but failed to smash their strike. Steel Workers Organizing Committee called the walkout when the company insisted on carrying out an election of its outlawed Employes Representative Plan. Pictures show strikers halting scabs' car at the plant gate.

Coal Contract Negotiations Near Deadline

NEW YORK, Mar. 28.—Negotiations for a new Appalachian bituminous coal wage contract moved toward a March 31 deadline today with no agreement yet reached on the United Mine Workers' demand for $1 a day increases, vacations with pay and improved working conditions.

UMW Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy who heads the miners' negotiating sub-committee, told a press conference that the situation on the wage demand was "no runs, no hits, no errors."

Earlier, Pres. John L. Lewis of the UMW had pointed out that if the current contract expires at midnight on March 31 without a new agreement having been reached, the Appalachian coal miners would not be caught "trespassing" on the coal operators' property.

Possibility of a shutdown in the Appalachian coal fields developed early in the negotiations when the operators turned down a suggestion by Pres. Lewis that the mines be kept open, with any negotiated improvements being made retroactive to April 1.

The mine owners, however, turned down that suggestion. The UMW later made arrangements for temporary agreements in the so-called outlying areas, whose contracts are based on the Appalachian agreement, to continue work until a new contract is reached.

Meanwhile Lewis accused the Natl. Coal Association of "gross misrepresentation" in a statement which estimated that the miners' demands would increase the nation's coal bill by a half-million dollars daily.

OFFSET BY SAVINGS

The United Mine Workers president said the union demands would increase the labor cost in each ton of coal by only 17 cents, or $212,000 a day. That would be

Harvill CIO Workers Win 10-Day Strike

Los Angeles, Mar. 29.—In the face of a concerted attack from labor haters and red baiters throughout the country, workers of the Harvill Aircraft Die Cast Corp. here stood their ground on the picket line for ten days and came out victorious this week with an agreement giving them wage gains averaging 12½ cents an hour.

The workers, members of the CIO National Association of Die Casting Workers, are now back on the job with improved conditions, after Henry L. Marvill, company president, finally capitulated and agreed to negotiate. For nine days he refused flatly to meet with his employes, but when once negotiations were under way, it took less than 12 hours to conclude the agreement.

WAGES LIFTED

Tentative settlement of all major points was reached late last Sunday, and Monday morning the workers ratified the agreement.

Terms include a basic minimum of 62½ cents an hour after four months' employment for all workers; a minimum for die casters of 70 cents an hour after six months' and 80 cents after 12 months; and a blanket increase of five cents for all workers not otherwise covered.

Steel Union Wins Bethlehem Strike

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Mar. 28.—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee today had won a four-day strike at the local plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. while almost simultaneously a new walkout developed at the Cambria plant of the anti-labor company in Johnstown, Pa.

The Johnstown walkout was precipitated by the same company action that forced the strike at Bethlehem — the obstinate refusal of the company to call off an election under its company-dominated Employes Representation Plan, which the Natl. Labor Relations Board branded 18 months ago as illegal and in violation of the Wagner Act.

The settlement at Bethlehem, Pa., agreed to by the company at 5.30 A. M. and enthusiastically ratified by the thousands of strikers a few hours later, was described by John Riffe, SWOC field director, in this fashion:

"This is our greatest victory and it has been one of our hardest fights. In important significance, it overshadows the signing of the United States Steel Corp."

ANNOUNCES TERMS

Riffe announced that the company had agreed to a four-point settlement proposal:

"First. All strikers return to work without loss of seniority or without discrimination.

"Second. The company will con-

Extend U. S. Steel Pact Until April 8

PITTSBURGH, Mar. 28.—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the U. S. Steel Corporation today agreed to extend the existing contract to April 8, unless agreement is reached before that date. The contracts were due to expire at midnight, Monday, March 31.

The extension agreement provides that any conclusions reached as to wages, hours of work or other conditions of employment shall be retroactive from April 1. A conference of 115 SWOC officers, representatives and local union presidents at U. S. Steel mills adopted the proposal by unanimous vote.

In advancing the proposal for extension of the current agreement for an extra week, the resolution declared its purpose was to avoid "public apprehension about a possible suspension of steel production in any of the mills or plants of the U. S. Steel Corp., because of the termination of the collective bargaining contracts now in effect."

The SWOC staff representatives and local union presidents from 66 U. S. Steel Corp. subsidiaries were called to Pittsburgh to hear a report from SWOC Chairman Philip Murray on negotiations with "big steel" as they have progressed to date.

Murray, Secretary-Treasurer David J. McDonald, Regional Directors Clinton S. Golden and Van A. Bittner, and General Counsel Lee Pressman, and a committee of five local union presidents who make up the Carnegie-Illinois negotiating committee, were given a unanimous vote of confidence and support by the entire delegation.

Knox-Knudsen Demands Assailed By Murray; Action Termed Arbitrary

WASHINGTON, Mar. 28.—CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers today sprang to the defense of 7,600 locked out workers at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. who were ordered back to work by OPM Director General Knudsen and Sec. of the Navy Knox.

In Milwaukee, Pres. Harold Christoffel of Local 248, UAW, said the workers would not return to work at least until after a union meeting scheduled for Saturday, Mar. 29. In that decision he was backed up by Pres. Thomas.

The Knox-Knudsen back-to-work order brought severe condemnation from labor officials, who said that it was arbitrary, unprecedented and more severe than any government action during the last war. The order came as a shocking surprise, since the union had accepted an OPM formula to settle the strike, but the company had refused.

MURRAY'S WIRE

From Pittsburgh, Pres. Murray sent this wire to both Knudsen and Knox:

"Newspapers carry story this morning that Sec. Knox and yourself delivered an ultimatum to the Allis-Chalmers workers by telegram yesterday. It is my understanding that you met with officials of the Allis-Chalmers Co. yesterday, and that you did not consult either the officials of the United Automobile Workers or the officers of the local union at Allis-Chalmers.

"Under date of March 1, Mr. Hillman and you submitted to the Allis-Chalmers workers a

Answer For Dies

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 29.—Last week, when members of the CIO were on strike at the Harvill Die Casting Co. for a contract and decent wages, Rep. Martin Dies branded their walkout a "red plot" to seize the airplane industry.

Despite Dies' blast, the union won its fight — and this week Local 101, CIO Natl. Assn. of Die Casting Workers, sent this message to the poll tax Congressman:

"Your unwarranted attack on our union solidified our ranks and helped us win victory, better wages and working conditions. Therefore, we, the Harvill strikers, voted unanimously today to pay you our compliments and to tell you to go jump in the Potomac."

NO STRONGER THAN ITS WEAKEST LINK

Not Guilty

The charging of exorbitant initiation fees is a racket which the Congress of Industrial Organizations has been the first to denounce.

In fact, such disgraceful practices in the American Federation of Labor were among the reasons leading to the formation of the CIO.

Yet attempts have recently been made to discredit the whole labor movement by writing about this AFL craft racket as if it were a general labor practice.

Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO, in his recent letter to Sen. George W. Norris, made the CIO position and record abundantly clear.

"The plain fact is that the CIO does not tolerate such conduct," he said, comparing the AFL craft initiation fees of $50 to $250 or higher with the average $3 of CIO unions.

The high fee graft is particularly prevalent in the AFL building craft unions. By means of this shakedown for "work permits" on defense projects, these AFL crafts have been building up big war chests with which they hope to invade the jurisdiction of every CIO industrial union.

Chairman A. D. Lewis of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee points out that this CIO industrial union offers "a decent, democratic and clean alternative to the racketeering of the craft unions."

All CIO unions will be protecting themselves as well as the reputation of the whole labor movement by lending enthusiastic support to the UCWOC.

The best way to counteract the evil effects of the AFL racket is by promoting even more vigorously and widely the clean and modern industrial unionism of the CIO.

A Heck Of A Note

The deliberateness with which Congressman Martin Dies has sought to discredit the CIO with unfounded charges, is revealed in the timing of his attacks on each union to coincide with strikes or negotiations of vital concern to the workers involved.

The inaccuracy of his charges may be gauged by his blast against the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, during its negotiations with the U. S. Steel Corp.

Pres. Philip Murray replied at once that of the 27 alleged Communists alleged by Dies to be on SWOC payrolls, 11 never were employed, 15 had not been associated with SWOC for the past three to five years—and in any case he had no knowledge of any of the individuals being what Dies charged.

Illustrative of the way a smear campaign works, is the fact that all of Dies' charges are featured prominently and at length in the press, while denials are briefly and inconspicuously printed, if at all.

A diligent and persistent search through the New York Times, for instance, revealed that Murray's reply was hidden away on the amusement page, under a column of music notes!

CIO On The Job

No one can call the CIO remiss in its duty of bringing the benefits of union organization to all the unorganized workers it can possibly reach.

With big organizing campaigns under way in the Ford and Bethlehem companies and in the aircraft and many other industries, Pres. Philip Murray this week announced the launching of another important drive.

The CIO is throwing its support to the United Shoe Workers of America in an intensive campaign, which will concentrate first on the big International Shoe Corp.

All of these special concentration campaigns are in addition to the regular organizing work of all CIO affiliates—which is in high gear everywhere, with the most encouraging results in increased membership, new contracts and better conditions.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

DO you suffer from P. O.? Even your best friends won't tell you. (They don't know what the devil it is any more than you do).

But if you do, it's too bad. The chamber of commerce crowd will avoid you. When you get up to speak, you may be tear-gassed. Your family may go hungry and cold, but people will abuse you while they fawn on those that oppress you.

When you go for a walk, you may be rapped on the head, knocked down, or perhaps just shoved about by the rump of a mounted cop's horse. Then you will probably be arrested for disorderly conduct.

NOT to beat about the bush any more, this P. O. business stinks.

It comes from reading the papers too much and believing what you read.

It can be produced to order by full-page ads, newspaper chain editorials, or even, on a smaller scale, by a country-club luncheon to which the right people are invited.

It is a Frankenstein that never turns on its creators. A slave of the rich and unscrupulous, it is used to browbeat the poor and honest.

When greedy lawless corporations drive exploited workers to their last resort, the strike, it is supposed to turn with ferocity on the victims of these profiteers and to blame them for the stoppage.

In its mildest form, it is usually declared to be "aroused", "indignant", "impatient" with labor and to be demanding laws to curb the unions.

THE P. O. here referred to is short for "Public Opinion" of the phoniest kind.

The real American public consists of some tens of millions of organized workers and their families; of millions more unorganized workers who share their preference for decent wages and fair conditions; of millions of working farmers, who have nothing in common with grasping financiers and anti-union industrialists; of professional and small business people whose income rises and falls with that of the workers.

Along with the majority of law-abiding employers, who bargain collectively with their employes, the American public also includes unfortunately a minority of greedy profiteers, who refuse to obey the labor laws and who lock out their employes or provoke strikes in their efforts to smash unions and keep wages down.

Yet this infinitesimal minority, through the power of their wealth, exert undue influence over the press and other opinion-forming agencies. They thus confuse the minds of much of the rest of the public with lies and high-pressure propaganda and create this fictitious "Public Opinion" as an anti-labor force.

NOWHERE is this more glaringly seen than in the issue of strikes at the present time.

The Bethlehem Steel Corp. is an outlaw company that is making staggering war profits from a virtual corner in government contracts. Its record of anti-union violence and law violation in 1937, proved in the greatest detail by subsequent government investigations, was sufficient to alienate any genuine public opinion for years to come.

Bethlehem held up the United States in the last war by refusing to take contracts except on the most profiteering terms. It is similarly holding up its workers and the country today.

Bethlehem has violated the Walsh-Healy Act and the Natl. Labor Relations Act. It steadfastly refuses to bargain collectively. Its refusal to obey a Labor Board order to disestablish its company union, and its insistence on conducting company union elections, provoked the strike at Bethlehem, Pa.

Yet scores of editorials have been printed alleging that "Public Opinion" is aroused, not against the company that caused this strike, but against the workers who are asking no more than the protection to which the law entitles them.

THE International Harvester strike was caused by a company which increased its profits by 191% to a total of more than $23,000,000 according to its last annual report, but which has refused to negotiate any wage increase with its workers' union.

The Allis-Chalmers lockout in Milwaukee has been prolonged by a company which refuses to agree to terms of settlement proposed by the OPM and accepted by the workers.

Similarly with the several other stoppages in effect—every one of them has been caused by profiteering greed, disobedience of labor laws or arrogant refusal to bargain on the part of the companies.

Any informed public opinion would turn the full measure of its wrath against these companies, demanding that they permit their employes to return to work under decent, self-respecting and lawful conditions.

Yet the manufacturers of this phony "Public Opinion" of which we read so much, seek to blame labor for every stoppage, instead of the public enemies who are really responsible.

tinue to meet and deal with representatives of its employes in collective bargaining.

"Third. All dealing shall be without discrimination. The company will continue to deal with the SWOC as the collective barganing agency for its members and will accord it equal privileges and opportunities including a mutually aceptable manner of handling grievances.

"Fourth. Future action with reference to the selection of an exclusive bargaining agency awaits final disposition of the case now pending in the courts."

NOW IN COURTS

The NLRB decision involving the Employes Representative Plan was appealed to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals by the company. The case was argued in February, but as yet no decision has been handed down.

SWOC leaders said the company was completely responsible for the strike, and charged that Bethlehem was returning to the same practices which made it the object of censure by the federal government during the last war. To back up that charge, they cited these developments:

1. It precipitated a strike at its Bethlehem, Pa., properties, by promoting an election under the employe representation plan which was declared illegal and ordered dissolved in August, 1939, by the Labor Board.

2. While promoting such an illegal election, it is endeavoring to prevent an election to be held by the Labor Board at the Lackawanna, N. Y., plant, through an injunction asked in the Federal courts at Buffalo.

3. The violence during the Bethlehem, Pa., strike was due solely to the fact that the corporation succeded in having Bethlehem city police and then Pennsylvania State Police break the picket line.

4. Despite the Labor Board ruling aganst the company union in existence since the world war when it was imposed on the workmen, the corporation is openly violating the Wagner Act today.

The strike at the Bethlehem, Pa., plant was the first since 1919, and the solidity of the ranks was evidence of the workers' staunch determination that the company's longtime anti-union policies and its resistance to the collective bargaining ordained by the Wagner Act, must come to an end.

State troopers, together with city police and deputy sheriffs attempted to smash the picket lines and the only violence during the walkout was a direct result of their efforts. But despite the provocation and the efforts of the company to start a back-to-work movement, the number of scabs who entered the struck plant was negligible.

In Pittsburgh, Van A. Bittner, head of the SWOC campaign at Bethlehem, charged the company with stalling tactics. He pointed out that while it sought to hold the illegal elections at the Bethlehem and Cambria plants, it was using every possible device to avoid an election at its plant in Lackawanna, N. Y. mill.

From the management's conduct at Bethlehem, Bittner said, "it is now obvious that Bethlehem Steel did not accept the OPM terms to settle the Lackawanna strike in good faith, because it is now endeavoring to block the very thing it agreed to do."

'Bethlehem to Blame For Strike'—Bittner

PITTSBURGH, Mar. 29.—The "brazen determination" of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. to "violate the federal law" is solely responsible for the strike at Bethlehem, Pa., said Van A. Bittner, director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee Bethlehem drive.

Text of Bittner's statement:

"The situation at the Bethlehem Steel plant in Bethlehem, Pa., must be laid to the door of that corporation, because of its brazen determination to violate the Federal law. Bethlehem Steel has refused to obey the National Labor Relations Act. In August, 1939, the National Labor Relations Board ordered Bethlehem to dissolve a company union, the Employe Representation Plan, because company unions are forbidden by law.

"This order has been openly ignored and the violations of the National Labor Relations Act, which caused the Labor Board to issue its order, have been continued wholesale throughout its plants. We have positive and documentary evidence of this fact.

"In protest against this persistent and illegal conduct by Bethlehem Steel, members of the SWOC walked out of the Bethlehem plant and placed pickets at the mill gates, as they have a legal right to do. Picketing was conducted peacefully. Then Mayor Pfeiffle, of Bethlehem, sent city police to break up the picket line. This action was entirely uncalled for and violated the civil rights of our union members.

"There was not the slightest disturbance until city police tried to crush the picket line by actually running over our men with their police cars, and by using tear gas. In protecting themselves against injury a police car was upset.

POLICE PROVOKED VIOLENCE

"This act of violence was entirely provoked by Bethlehem city police.

"State Policemen sent in by Governor James further provoked violence when they clubbed many of our members and even beat women and children. These State Police have denied our organization the right to picket. They are arresting everybody, even though the individuals are just walking along the streets.

"Further evidence that Bethlehem Steel wanted to provoke violence came through the arrest of an individual, whose name we have, who smashed a window of an automobile. At the police station this individual roundly denounced our union and declared he was not a member. We have checked our records and found that to be true. Why then was he on the picket line? Why did he engage in violence when as he said, he hates the union? The answer is obvious.

"This morning our representatives in Bethlehem had a definite engagement to meet Mr. Trumbauer, Bethlehem Steel official. At the last minute he cancelled the engagement and gave no reason for doing so.

"It is apparent that Bethlehem Steel hopes to crush the SWOC through the use of city police and State Police. I assure them they shall fail to do so."

Murray Hits OPM Action In Allis-Chalmers Case proposal with the understanding that if accepted by them, you would also insist upon its acceptance by the company.

"The Allis-Chalmers workers accepted your program. The company refused.

"Since then the workers have come to regard the Allis-Chalmers situation as a lockout.

"Why do you insist upon compliance with your original proposal? By what power are you and Sec. Knox authorized to issue ultimatums when provisions are already made and an executive order issued by the President of the United States for the orderly adjudication of such disputes, first through the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor; failing there to be certified by the Sec. of the Department of Labor to the National Mediation Board."

UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas said it was the "considered view" of the international union that the Knox-Knudsen order called for reopening of the plant "on a basis which disregards the justice of the strikers' cause" and added that the order "is without power in law."

"The international union" Thomas declared, "takes the position that reopening of the plant should be conditioned to the company's acceptance of the OPM formula."

UAW Sec.-Treas. Addes sent this wire to Knudsen and Knox:

"Are you cracking down on the men because you want to truckle to a management that is sabotaging national defense?"

SETS PRECEDENT

The Knudsen-Knox telegrams, sent to Christoffel and to Max Babb, head of the company which has refused for the past two months to reach an agreement with the union, constituted the first time since the defense program was started that a government agency has ordered workers to go back to work.

In Milwaukee, Christoffel pointed out that the union accepted almost a month ago an OPM formula for settling the dispute, but that the company has refused to take similar action.

"Therefore," he said, "under the OPM's procedure, the plant can be reopened only by the government demanding that the company accept the OPM proposal."

Officials of the company, on the other hand, welcomed the back-to-work action with a statement that "this move is very pleasing...."

The strike was called when negotiations failed to bring about a new contract between the UAW local and the company, which has a long record of anti-labor activities.

In Washington, Allan S. Haywood, Director of Organization recalled the background of the case and said the blame rested with the company.

Profits on arms orders are climbing to dizzy highs while corporations resist the workers' demands for needed wage increases, Pres. Murray points out in the new CIO pamphlet, "Wages and War Profits" Order from Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. 100 for $1.75, 500 for $5.75.

POLICE AID SCABS: State and city police in Betlehem, Pa., came to the rescue of the rich, law-violating Bethlehem Steel Corp., tried to break picket lines of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. Here are two mounted police wasting their time and the taxpayers' money escorting one nervous-looking scab out of the Bethlehem plant.

Ask Three Little Steel Firms Negotiate Pacts

PITTSBURGH, Mar. 29. — Pushing forward in its drive towards complete unionization of the nation's Number One basic industry, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee today called upon three Little Steel companies to negotiate written contracts embodying 10-cent hourly increases and other improved working conditions.

Communications embodying the SWOC demands were sent to officials of the Republic Steel Corp., the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Corp. and the Inland Steel Corp. by SWOC Chairman Philip Murray following a meeting of presidents of 44 SWOC locals in plants of the three corporations.

The companies were all involved in the Little Steel strikes of 1937. One of the issues in those strikes was the refusal of the companies to sign contracts with the union—a factor no longer present since the U. S. Supreme Court ruled in the H. J. Heinz case that contracts are to be reduced to writing and signed if both parties reach an agreement as to their terms.

The nine-point program proposed by the SWOC is substantially the same as that offered earlier to the U. S. Steel Corp., with whom negotiations for renewal of an improved contract are now being conducted.

Murray wrote to the three companies that "if you desire proof of the majority status of the SWOC . . . we will be glad to make available for your inspection the membership records upon which we base our claim."

MURRAY TO SEN. MORRIS:

Probe AFL for Picket On Initiation Fees

PITTSBURGH, Mar. 29.—Sen. George W. Norris of Nebraska, veteran liberal, was told today by CIO Pres. Philip Murray that any scandal involving exorbitant union initiation fees can be found only in the AFL.

Murray's letter was in answer to a communication from Sen. Norris addressed to Murray and to Pres. William Green, of the AFL, in which he called attention to public disfavor for high fees and suggested that by continuing the practice, certain unions are alienating public opinion.

"Were unions affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations guilty of this despicable practice — as incorrectly indicated by you in your letter — my attitude would be no less severe," Murray wrote to the Nebraska Senator.

"The plain fact is that the CIO does not tolerate such conduct."

CITES FIGURES

The CIO leader said he was not "splitting hairs" in categorically absolving the CIO and its affiliates from blame in this practice and in directing the Senator to observe the AFL union's activities instead.

"Compare the AFL initiation fees of $50 to $250 or higher, to the average $3 of CIO unions," Murray wrote; and he advised "that in most cases, this CIO initiation fee is waived in the interest of bringing the benefits of unionism to mine, mill and factory."

The full text of Pres. Murray's letter:

"I welcome the opportunity presented by you to make my position clear on the matter of exorbitant initiation fees charged by the American Federation of Labor.

"Were unions affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations guilty of this despicable practice — as incorrectly indicated by you in your letter—my attitude would be no less severe. The plain fact is that the CIO does not tolerate such conduct.

"Not only do I condemn the 'present practice' in this respect, but my condemnation runs to anything that smacks of such extortion at all times.

"When I say that the CIO nor any of its unions has not been guilty of this practice of exorbitant initiation fees, I am not splitting hairs. Compare the American Federation of Labor initiation fees of $50 to $250 or higher, to the average $3 of CIO unions; and be advised that in most cases, this CIO initation fee is waived in the interest of bringing the benefits of unionism to mine, mill and factory.

COMPARES DUES

"And, in passing, it might be well to compare the monthly dues of around $1 charged by CIO unions with that of certain American Federation of Labor affiliates. And the fact that CIO unions, generally, waive monthly dues if the member has not worked at least five days in the month.

"I welcome the opportunity your letter gives me for another reason.

"Perhaps this exchange of correspondence will clear up in the public's mind—and in the newspapers—the fact that the exorbitant initiation fee racket must be laid at the doors of the American Federation of Labor.

"I do not make this statement in an idle boast. I challenge you or anybody else to show me one instance where a CIO union has been involved in any such vicious practice.

"I can understand your confusion in grouping the CIO with the AFL in this situation. Whether through design or carelessness, the newspapers of the nation have rarely sought to identify a particular union found guilty of this practice with its parent affiliate. Had this been done, I am sure you and millions of others would now be directing their disapproval of such practices to where it belongs—at the American Federation of Labor.

"Let us hope that our letters will cause the newspapers to make this point clear in the future."

Lewis Thanks Negroes for Support

Washington, Mar. 29.—"Official and personal thanks" of John L. Lewis were received here by John P. Davis, secretary of the National Negro Congress, in acknowledging a pledge of support from the Congress to the United Mine Workers in their current negotiations with the coal operators.

"Accept my official and personal thanks for the splendid telegram of felicitations and encouragement which you addressed to the United Mine Workers of America on behalf of the National Negro Congress," Lewis wrote.

Brotherhood Paper Hits Order

Washington, Mar. 29. — The arbitrary Knox-Knudsen order came as a distinct shock to all labor. The paper "Labor," organ of the railroad unions, reported that "labor chiefs were shocked."

They called the order the most drastic ever handed down by the government within the memory of the oldest union leaders, noting that it was promulgated while Sidney Hillman was out of town.

"What is most deplorable," Labor reported one union official as saying, "is that the severe decree comes at a time when the nation is not at war. Even during the World War, President Wilson did not go that far, the official declared."

Carey to Broadcast On NBC April 2

WASHINGTON, Mar. 29.—Sec. James Carey of the CIO will discuss "Labor-Defender of Democracy" on an NBC blue network at 9:15 P. M., eastern standard time, Wednesday, April 2.

Carey's speech, particularly timely in these days when foes of labor are taking advantage of the national defense program to try to snatch away the workers' recent gains, will be heard over a nationwide hookup.

A list of the stations available for the speech is printed here. Union officials should contact their local station managers to make sure that Sec. Carey's speech is broadcast.

Coal Contract Parleys Near

offset, he continued, by the fact that steadily-increasing mechanization of the mines has enabled operators to cut the costs in a ton of coal by 10 to 20 cents since 1937.

The progress of mechanization has been so rapid that the bulk of bituminous tonnage within the Appalachian territory can afford to pay 10 cents per ton out of present margins resulting from direct labor savings and improved operating time, Lewis stated.

"Wages and War Profits"—the text of Pres. Philip Murray's speech to the American Assn. of School Administrators, is now available in pamphlet form.

The speech examines the super-profits of American industry, now swollen with government defense orders, and shows why labor must have an increased proportion of the national income.

Copies of the pamphlet may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. Prices: 100 copies for $1.75, 500 for $5.75.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

CIO's organizing drives, made famous by the big campaigns in steel, autos, rubber and other basic industries, have a habit of succeeding. They succeed because CIO puts all the men and resources needed behind such campaigns, and then pushes through until the workers are organized and collective bargaining established.

CIO's newest drive, designed to organize 40,000 workers in the Intl. Shoe Corp., will succeed in the same way, and for the same reasons. Plans have been worked out for full cooperation with the United Shoe Workers, already strongly established in the industry. The drive will be directed by Walter H. Harris, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., who will have under him a staff of organizers from both the CIO and the Shoe Workers.

VIOLENCE AGAIN

The newspapers are making a great fuss about "violence" in the Bethlehem and Harvester strikes. As usual, the papers blame everything on the strikers. It never seems to occur to a newspaper publisher to look into the real cause of disturbances on the picketline, which is invariably the refusal of employers to bargain and their attempts to break legitimate strikes by the use of police, tear gas, etc. Yet it is always the workers who get hurt when police and strikebreakers try to smash through into struck plant.

If the newspaper publishers want to look for another very real cause of strike disturbances, they can find it in the strikebreaking tactics of AFL leaders, currently busy trying to scab at the Harvester plant in Chicago.

Fortunately, most people in the country don't pay much attention to this sort of propaganda. The workers pay no attention at all, because they know from first hand, that their cause is just. This is shown in the solidarity and courage of the workers on the picketlines. It is shown also in the way Ford workers are continuing to organize in the UAW. It will be shown again when the Labor Board elections, now under consideration by the Board, are set.

PROGRESS REPORT

The list of local CIO successes that make the strength and growth of the CIO continues. Regional Director Ray Thomason reports that two locals of paper workers in Richmond, Va., have come over from the AFL to CIO Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers. Representative McDonald in Indiana, reports a two-to-one CIO election victory in a milling company at Mt. Vernon, Ind.

In W. Va., Representative Edwards adds another two-to-one CIO election among workers at the Interstate Milling Co. A brick plant at Barboursville has just signed a closed shop, checkoff contract with a sizable wage raise. Director Cowherd of Alabama has another closed shop agreement between a lumber yard and the Int'l Woodworkers, CIO.

Philadelphia reports, through Director George Craig, that CIO has won two elections, one by a 12 to one majority in the Schultz Baking Co., the other by two-to-one among auxiliary workers in a printing plant. Organizing at the huge Budd plant, where 10,000 workers are employed, is progressing. In Kansas City, Mo., Neil Beam reports that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers have beaten an "independent" union by 103 to 47 at the Bemis Bag Co.

Aluminum Strikers Vote to Arbitrate

Edgewater, N. J., Mar. 29 — In the interest of national defense, a majority of the 2,800 workers at the plant of the Aluminum Co. of America here voted last week to end their 12-day strike and submit their demands to further negotiation.

The vote was taken at the recommendation of the international executive board of the Aluminum Workers of America, and of the executive board of Local 16. Some 2,000 workers packed the hall, where the recommendations of the union officials were discussed for two hours.

WANT NATIONAL PACT

AWA President N. A. Zonarich in advising the workers to return pending negotiations, expressed the hope that future conferences would result in a company-wide agreement. The union now has contracts with Alcoa covering about 40,000 workers in seven plants.

Union leaders reported to the Edgewater meeting on a conference with officials of the Office of Production Management in Washington at which they said they were assured that negotiations would be resumed immediately and that full consideration would be given to the demands of the union.

Local 16 demands include an increase in pay of 10 cents an hour and time and a half for overtime work on Sundays as well as for all time over 40 hours a week.

Victor Fulgo, a member of the Local 16 strike committee and publicity director, said at the meeting where the strikers voted to go back to work, that he hoped "the management would assume some of the responsibilities under national defense when negotiations were resumed.

"The same spirit that motivated the union to consent to the removal of 76 tons of aluminum during the strike, induced our members to accept the recommendation of the OPM. We are Americans first, last and always."

Council Sponsors Kids' Program

Fort Wayne, Ind., Mar. 29. — A Children's Hour program sponsored by the CIO Industrial Union Council here is being conducted by the Workers' Service in Room 227, Farmers Trust Building. The room will be open from one to four-thirty Saturday afternoons for mothers who wish to shop and leave their children in good care. A registered nurse will be in attendance.

Announce CIO Drive In Shoe Industry

WASHINGTON, Mar. 29.—A big organizing campaign in the shoe industry, with special emphasis on the 40,000 employes of the Intl. Shoe Corp., was announced today by the CIO and its affiliated United Shoe Workers of America.

Announcement of the drive followed conferences held by Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO, Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood and Pres. Frank McGrath of the USWA.

The International Shoe Corp. has 44 units in St. Louis, Mo., and the Middle West, and a substantial basis of organization already exists in a number of locals chartered by the United Shoe Workers of America.

President Murray announced the appointment of Walter H. Harris of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., as director of the Shoe Workers Organizing Drive, and headquarters are to be opened immediately in St. Louis. Mr. Harris has been engaged in CIO organizing work for a number of years in the automobile, textile, glass and other industries. He is a former representative of the United Mine Workers of America.

In announcing the new CIO organizing drive, President Murray made the following statement:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations is prepared to lend every possible support to its affiliate, the United Shoe Workers of America, in this important drive to bring union organization and union conditions to the unorganized shoe workers.

"In so doing, it feels that it will be making a valuable contribution not only by raising the standards of the underpaid shoe workers, but also by promoting the stabilization of an industry which has suffered from cutthroat competition and other chaotic conditions which have harmed all concerned."

Allan S. Haywood, national Director of Organization of the CIO. made the following statement:

"The CIO considers this drive to organize the unorganized shoe workers to be as important as any of the other big organizing campaigns in which we are engaged.

"It will be my duty to mobilize the organizing forces of the CIO behind this campaign, to see that the Shoe Workers Organizing Drive has an adequate force of organizers, and to enlist the support of all CIO affiliates and representatives.

"We are going to see that this drive is pushed with all the energy and enthusiasm for which the CIO is famous, until it is brought to a successful conclusion."

PREDICTS SUCCESS

President Frank McGrath of the United Shoe Workers declared:

"We gratefully welcome the assistance of the CIO in the campaign to organize the workers of the International Shoe Corp., which will be part of a general forward drive in the whole shoe industry.

"The opportunity to bring greater stabilization to the industry and better conditions for the workers, through union organization, is excellent today, when the companies are making huge profits and the workers are clearly entitled to higher wages.

Hit Firing Of City Worker

New York, Mar. 29.—Firing of a New York City Sanitation Dept. employe for union activity today brought vigorous protests from the Greater New York Industrial Union Council and CIO affiliates throughout the city.

James Griesi, an assistant foreman in the department, was summarily suspended when he refused to divulge to Commissioner W. F. Carey the names of employes who had submitted their grievances to the CIO Sanitation Workers Organizing Committee.

Griesi had appeared on a radio program arranged by the committee, a subsidiary of the State, County & Municipal Workers, and told listeners of "arbitrary and unfair" fines and penalties meted out to Sanitation Dept. employes.

Westinghouse To Negotiate National Pact

New York, Mar. 29—Julius Emspak, general secretary-treasurer of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, said today on behalf of the National Conference of UE Westinghouse Local Unions:

"I wish to announce that by mutual agreement between this union and the company, negotiations will begin during the first week in April looking toward a national agreement and a general wage increase of ten cents per hour.

"The national agreement will cover the employes in the 22 plants of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company in which this union is certified as the exclusive collective bargaining agent, about 40 thousand employes in all.

"The press recently carried a statement to the effect that the 'OPM' had communicated to the new War Labor Board information that a strike was coming up in this situation. We trust that our announcement of this mutual agreement to negotiate, which is what the union has been asking for four years, will put that statement in its proper light before the public."

Clothing Union Maps Wage Boost Program

Baltimore, Md., Mar. 29 — A three-point program calling for an immediate 15 per cent general pay increase, a 40-cent hourly minimum and a campaign to organize the non-union segment of the cotton garment industry was adopted this week at a conference here attended by 300 delegates of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers from the East, South and Mid-West.

Fresh from a victory in the men's and boys clothing industry, where the union won 10 and 13 per cent wage increases, Amalgamated officers announced at the conference the settlement of the strike against the BVD Corporation in Baltimore and Cambridge, Md.

Rising living costs and increased profits justify the union's demand for the 15 per cent general increase, speakers said at the conference.

Commenting on the union's request of the 32½c minimum fixed under the federal wage-hour law, Jacob S. Potofsky, general secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated, said that Cluett Peabody, largest shirt makers in the country, had already granted the 40-cent minimum.

GM STRIKE SOLID: Plenty of pickets gathered at the General Motors Fisher Body plant in Oakland, Calif., after Local 76, United Auutomobile Workers called a strike to prevent further firings of union members. UAW leaders charged the company with contract violations.

AFL Racket Menaces All Labor

CIO Unions Warned of Danger

WASHINGTON, Mar. 29—"Racketeering by AFL craft unions of the building trades on defense projects has now become such a public scandal that it constitutes an immediate danger to labor everywhere."

That was the warning sent today to all CIO affiliates by Chairman A. D. Lewis of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, who charged that through "exorbitant fees for 'work permits' on cantonment jobs, (they) are building themselves a war chest with which to fight the entire CIO."

Exploited workers on these defense jobs are "crying loudly for relief," Lewis said, and enemies of labor are seeking to take advantage of the situation. "When so good a friend of labor as Sen. Norris has allowed himself to be deceived it behooves the CIO to take full cognizance of this situation," Lewis declared.

What can CIO unions do about it? he asked.

SIMPLE ANSWER

"Fortunately, the answer is simple. We have a decent, democratic and clean alternative to the racketeering of the craft union. It is the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, an affiliate of the CIO.

"Let your cooperation with the UCWOC be genuine and effective in the spirit and the letter of the recent resolution adopted by the CIO Executive Board. . . .

"The growth of the UCWOC, organizing the construction industry on an industrial union basis, is the only sound answer to the problem of the racketeer who preys on the workers of this great industry. When you support the UCWOC, you are helping the construction worker to free himself from exploitation by unscrupulous and hidebound craft union leaders who have always fought all the unions of the CIO."

CITES EXAMPLES

As an example of typical AFL practices in the defense construction program, Lewis cited activities of two federation unions at Fort Meade in Maryland.

The carpenters' and the common laborers' union collected at least $400,000 on the one project for working fees—not union memberships. In addition, the workers were subjected to a number of shakedown practices; they were frequently told they could keep their jobs by contributing to buying presents or buying liquor for the AFL business agents.

"The situation at Fort Meade and other cantonments exposes completely the claim of the craft unions that they have organized the construction industry. When called on to supply men from their membership, they were unable to do so. But having closed shop agreements with a few contractors, they were in a position to take advantage of the defense program," Lewis told the CIO affiliates.

WORST ASPECT

"The worst aspect of this whole situation is the exploitation of the workers, many thousands of whom have been writing to newspapers and their Congressmen with consequent ill will for labor organizations in general.

ON CAPITOL HILL:

Status of Bills In Congress

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

Anti-Strike and Anti-Union Bills—H.R. 2695, H.R. 1403, H.R. 2694, H.R. 1814, and others. The House Judiciary Committee is continuing to hold hearings from time to time on these anti-union and anti-strike bills.

Anti-Seamen's Bill—H.R. 2662—This bill would outlaw lnion hiring halls and reintroduce anti-union blacklist practices. The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee has concluded hearings on the bill, but has not yet taken action on it. CIO President Philip Murray and other union representatives testified against it.

Wire Tapping Bill—H.R. 2266—A subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee has concluded hearings on the bill. Final action on it by the committee is expected soon, CIO President Murray, the League, AFL and railroad unions opposed this type of legislation. This bill would outlaw union hiring U. S. Attorney General Jackson spoke in favor of it. U. S. Federal Communications Commission chief opposed it vigorously.

DEFENSE HOUSING

H.R. 3575—This bill would provide Federal mortgage insurance which would make possible purchase of new homes on a monthly payment basis, without additional down payments. Passed by the House and the Senate. It is awaiting the President's signature.

H.R. 3486—Provides $150,000,000 for housing in defense areas. The bill passed the House on March 13. It is in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, which completed hearings on it, but has not yet reported it out to the Senate for action.

H.R. 3570—This bill provides $150,000,000 for community facilities in defense areas. It is still in the House Committee on Public Building and Grounds, which completed hearings, but has not reported it out yet.

The league is supporting all three of these housing bills.

Concentration Camp Bill—H.R. 3—This Hobbs Concentration Camp Bill was reported out favorably by the House Judiciary Committee on March 19. It has been written with the advice of the U. S. Department of Justice, but contains all the basic provisions of the original bill. It provides for the imprisonment without bail of aliens against whom deportation warrants have been issued if they are not deported within 90 days. The Rules Committee has been asked by the Judiciary Committee for a special rule in order to bring this bill before the House for final action at an early date.

Anti-Poll Tax Bill—H.R. 1024—This is the Geyer Bill which would abolish poll taxes in the election of Federal Representatives. A petition to bring the bill out from the Judiciary Committee was placed on the Speaker's desk on March 12. It requires 218 signatures.

Profits on arms orders are climbing to dizzy highs while corporations resist the workers' demands for needed wage increases, Pres. Murray points out in the new CIO pamphlet, "Wages and War Profits" Order from Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. 100 for $1.75, 500 for $5.75.

Senate OKs Mine Safety Measure

Washington, Mar. 29. — The Mine Safety Bill, fought for by the United Mine Workers of America and the entire CIO, has passed the Senate and has only to go back to the lower House for consideration of an amendment to become law.

The amendment removes the provision requiring inspectors under the bill to be mining engineers. The bill is designed to cut the toll of death and injury in mining disasters, in which thousands of miners have been killed and injured in recent years.

Passage by the Senate brings a long campaign of the Mine Workers, their leader, John L. Lewis, and the entire CIO near a final climax. The bill was delayed for a long period by pressure from coal operators that kept it bottled up in committee.

Desert Strikers Fight for Pact

TRONA, Calif., Mar. 29.—Smooth organization and stout-hearted courage were in evidence here today in "the only British colony within the borders of the United States" as the strike of Alkaline Salt Workers Union 414 against the American Potash & Chemical Corp. neared the end of its second week.

Trona earns its designation as a British colony from the fact that this town, termed in company propaganda "the miracle town that salt built," and located in the Mojave desert on the edge of famous Death Valley, is a company town, owned by the AP&CC, a subsidiary of Goldfield, Ltd., whose main office is London, England.

Several efforts to negotiate a settelment have failed to break the deadlock resulting from the AP&CC's stalling tactics in contract negotiations after six years of fighting tooth and nail against establishment of a bona fide union in Trona.

Outstanding difficulty is the stubborn refusal of the company, which had fostered the closed shop and check-off for a company union until a crack-down by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, to grant the same check-off and closed shop to Local 414.

Disagreement on housing and company store proposals by the union, very vital in such a company town, and lack of accord on anti-discrimination proposals by the union also are important angles of the dispute. In essence, the company says it is willing to stop discriminating against present employes but will not relinquish the right to discriminate against future employes for reason of nationality.

The fact that 2,000 people face eviction from their houses in the company town and will have to be housed and fed in the middle of the desert is stressed by Local 414 in an appeal this week to all locals of the International for financial assistance and expressions of solidarity.

The nearest small town is 30 miles distant. The only means of transportation to Trona is the company-owned railway, so that all supplies and equipment for the striking Trona unionists must be transported by truck from Los Angeles, 200 miles away. Tents, field kitchens and other unusual strike equipment are necessary.

INSPECT HOUSING PROJECTS: Representatives of a national public housing conference get a first-hand view of a slum clearance project in Philadelphia. Labor leaders and housing officials from six states participated in the conference.

Amalgamated Wins BVD Walkout

Baltimore, Md., Mar. 29.—Striking members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers today won their month old strike at the BVD Corp., the city's largest garment factory, with a $50,000 annual wage increase.

Elizabeth Hawes, local director of the ACW's cotton garment division, said that the contract, reached after five days of negotiations, provides for wage increases running from seven to 15 per cent, the union shop, time and a half for overtime and enforcement of strictly sanitary working conditions.

Strike Shuts Ford Plant; Coal Miners Locked Out

Mine Parleys Continue

New York, Apr. 5. — Four hundred thousand coal miners, locked out by refusal of the Appalachian operators either to grant their demands or to continue operating under the old contract while revisions were negotiated, stayed out of the mines this week while UMWA negotiators headed by John L. Lewis met in conference in this city.

Lewis placed the blame for the lockout squarely on the shoulders of the operators, who "casually, lightly" brushed aside the union's proposal to continue working the mines with contract changes to be made retroactive to April 1.

Lewis' warnings were given in a speech to 400 delegates at the Tri-District Anthracite convention here, where demands for the anthracite contract expiring April 30 were formulated.

80,000 Out At Rouge

Dearborn, Mich., Apr. 4.— Henry Ford's three decades of union-baiting paid off their anticipated dividends this week, as some 80,000 CIO members went out on strike at the giant River Rouge plant, heart of the Ford Motor Co.'s industrial empire.

So effective was the strike, the first in River Rouge history, that the entire plant was shut down tight. Solid ranks of pickets, all members of the CIO United Automobile Workers, guarded approaches to the factory.

The strike won immediate support from CIO unions throughout Michigan and the nation. UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas, Sec.-Treas. George Addes and Ford Organizing Director Michael S. Widman, Jr., all blamed the company for the walkout. They said the company's insistence on discriminating against union members, and its refusal to obey United States laws, forced the workers to strike.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WASHINGTON, Apr. 5.—Issues in the strike of 15,000 workers at four plants of the International Harvester Co. were submitted to the National Defense Mediation Board here this week. CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the Board panel handling this dispute. William H. Davis, the Board's vice-president, heads the panel.

After voting to accept the mediation offer of the Board, the strikers returned to their jobs last Monday, confident of winning out in a showdown on the diehard refusal of the company to yield to any of the workers' demands.

A spokesman for the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee that called the strike declared that the Harvester workers started the labor offensive against the false notion "that national defense should be built on unrestricted corporation profits while wages remain stationary and living costs mounted.

"National defense can best be promoted," he said, "by giving the people who are called upon to defend the nation, economic security and thus a greater stake in our democracy."

The main demand of the union was for a wage increase.

In his telegram to Mr. Davis of the Mediation Board accepting the offer of mediation, Grant Oakes, FEWOC chairman, asked for assurance that the following points would be observed:

1. That there will be no discrimination against strikers in any of the struck plants.
2. That the company will abide by the existing contracts.
3. That the issue of the strikes will be the basis of whatever discussions take place at the Mediation Board.
4. That both sides will abide by the final recommendations of the Board.

DAVIS' REPLY

In his reply Davis assured Oakes that the company and the Board had agreed to the first three points. On the question of immediate arbitration, however, Davis said that the Board would first try to reach a settlement through mediation, in conformity with the executive order of March 19, and ask for voluntary arbitration if mediation fails.

"And if that fails," Davis wired, "the Board will proceed to investigate the issues with respect to the dispute, conducting hearings and taking testimony if necessary, and will make findings of fact and formulate recommendations."

COPS USED VIOLENCE

Harvester workers voted to end the strike and accept the mediation offer following a week in which a fourth of Chicago's police force had tried in vain to drive them back to work by a reign of terror that seemed for a time about to repeat the Republic Steel massacre in 1937 when ten workers were killed by Chicago police.

At the Harvester plant in Richmond, Ind., the strikers also faced organized violence. The CIO office was wrecked and all the members and union officers on the premises were arrested and thrown into jail.

FEWOC Chairman Grant Oakes declared that "the courageous struggle of the Harvester workers against the huge Harvester Co. won the respect and admiration of all of organized labor. Our strike, along with that of the Allis Chalmers workers, started labor on an offensive against the principle that national defense is to be built on larger profits for capital and less wages for labor.

"Final victory remains to be won, but the company's agreement to allow the Board to take up all disputed points is a major step toward winning the strikers' demands. In our struggle, the solidarity and support accorded us by the CIO in Chicago and nationally was decisive and played a great part in the successful outcome."

CIO Protests Attack On Union Hall

Indianapolis, Ind., Apr. 5.—A protest against the vicious attacks made by the police on the union headquarters of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee in Richmond, Ind., during the International Harvester strike was sent to Governor Schricker by James Robb, CIO regional director here and president of the State Industrial Council.

"I have personally examined the damage done by the invasion of our union headquarters, and the destruction done to our equipment," Robb declared, "and I can hardly believe that property rights mean anything to the Indiana state police."

15% Raise Asked For Shirt Makers

New York, Apr. 5.—Notice that a general 15 per cent wage increase will be asked for 18,000 shirt workers in New York and other eastern states was served by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers on the Shirt Institute, Inc., and the National Assn. of Men's Shirts and Boy's Blouse Contractors.

The request upon the two associations is preliminary to similar demands to be made on behalf of 100,000 workers in the cotton garment industry, the ACW stated. A general 15 per cent pay increase will also be pressed for 40,000 men's apparel workers.

20% Increase Sought For Silk Workers

New York, April 5 — Negotiations between the CIO Textile Workers Union and the plain silk manufacturers of Paterson, N. J., for a general 20 per cent wage increase have been opened, Emil Rieve, TWU president, announced this week.

Union representatives are also meeting with the warping and winding manufacturers, the novelty manufacturers and the automatic shops to ask for a similar increase. Some 1,500 workers are involved in all the negotiations.

Pres. Rieve also announced that the TWU is laying plans for an intensive organizing drive among unorganized shops in Pennsylvania.

N. Y. CIO Aids Drug Strike

New York, April 5 — The Greater New York Industrial Union Council has swung all its support behind striking workers at the Whelan Drug Stores chain.

The walkout, called by the United Retail & Wholesale Employes, nine weeks ago, has won national CIO backing.

The Council's executive board described the strike "as the No. 1 problem of all labor in New York." Pres. Joseph Curran addressed a letter to all affiliates urging them to make arrangements "for full picketing and other necessary aid."

Churchmen Back Bridges

New Haven, Apr. 5.—The Executive Committee of the National Religion and Labor Foundation passed a resolution at a meeting in New York last week to "associate itself with the official CIO Committee for the Defense of Harry Bridges."

Willard Uphaus, executive secretary of the Foundation, said that the executive committee voted to "perform such services as will be helpful."

Defense Spending Set At $39 Billion

WASHINGTON, April 5 — Authorized and proposed government expenditures for defense total more than 39 billion dollars, the Office of Production Management reported this week. This includes the seven billion dollars to be spent under H.R. 1776 for aid to Great Britain and other democracies.

Adding to this the British orders of some three and a half billion placed in this country for war equipment and supplies, direct defense expenditures for the U. S. and British account, authorized and proposed, amount to more than forty-two and a half billion dollars.

Of the forty billion dollars in the U. S. government defense program, nearly twenty-nine billion has been covered by appropriations and contract authorizations already made, and nine billion proposed in the 1942 budget and bills now before Congress.

Rubber Drive Nets Pay Boosts

AKRON, Apr. 5.—Wage increases have been won in five Goodyear Tire & Rubber plants since the United Rubber Workers-CIO Organizing Drive got under way, and in one plant the company has signed its first written agreement with union workers, according to Robert J. Davidson, National Director of the drive.

Davidson listed the following wage increases:

Jackson, Mich.—5c an hour.

Los Angeles—3 to 5c an hour.

Cumberland, Md.—3c to 8c an hour.

St. Mary's, Ohio—2c for women, 3c for men an hour.

Bomanville, Ont.—5c an hour.

In the last-named plant the company was forced to sign its first contract with union workers, embodying concessions on wages, seniority and grievance settlement procedure. To save its face the company signed the agreement with the workers "as represented by the Employes' General Committee." This committee is a union committee.

GOODYEAR STUBBORN

Goodyear has refused to sign union contracts in the United States so far, although it has received government orders running over $10,000,000.

"The union is building its strength rapidly in all Goodyear plants," Davidson declared. "Our latest achievement is the chartering of a local in St. Mary's Ohio, where a year or so ago union representatives were run out of town. Both workers and townspeople have realized in the meantime that the company's low-wage policy (pay runs from 30c to 56c an hour) is a danger to the entire community. The Union now is welcome and is rapidly gaining members."

Davidson said that union membership rolls were mounting in the other Goodyear plants, especially in the parent Akron plant, where the union suffered through mass layoffs during 1937 and 1938.

PUSH NLRB CASE

In Gadsden, the union is aggressively pushing its NLRB case against the company and is following through its attempts to find the thugs who slugged CIO Field Rep. John D. House into unconsciousness several weeks ago.

Another outbreak of anti-union violence took place recently when 60 company goons attacked distributors of leaflets.

Order 40c Minimum For Rubber

Washington, Apr. 5.—A 40-cent minimum wage for the rubber industry was recommended unanimously in a report filed with the Wage-Hour Administration by the Rubber Products Manufacturing Industry Committee. If approved by General Philip B. Fleming, administrator, after a public hearing, the hourly wage rates of 9,900 workers will be raised. About 132,000 workers are employed in the industry.

Representatives of the CIO United Rubber Workers on the Industry Committee are President Sherman H. Dalrymple and Margaret C. Hamrick.

Negro Group Backs Big CIO Strikes

Washington, April 5.—Emergency meetings of local groups of the Natl. Negro Congress to support current strikes and lockouts in coal, autos and other industries were urged today by John P. Davis, Congress secretary.

Thousands of Negro workers are picketing side by side with white workers, Davis said, in urging all Congress affiliates to give all possible support to the demands raised by the CIO unions involved.

"Only through the success of these strikes will it be possible for us to win our fight to end Jim Crowism in plants having government contracts," he wrote. "We call on your local council to immediately mobilize its full strength in support of the efforts of the Negro strikers and their white brothers."

UNION HALL RAIDED: Headquarters of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers in Richmond, Ind., were raided by state police and a vigilante mob of deputies. Everything in the room was smashed, and 82 strikers at the Intl. Harvester Co. were arrested.

How's Your B-1 Today?

Washington, Apr. 5.—So you think that present-day strikes are caused by corporate super-profits or refusal of management to obey the law—

Well, you just don't have the scientific approach.

For Time Magazine this week quotes Dr. Russel M. Wilder of the Mayo Clinic, who adds his scientific two bits' worth to the current discussion. Says the doctor:

"I suspect that many industrial workers are led to make unreasonable demands because of the inadequacy of vitamin B-1 (thiamine) in their diet."

Time said that the doctor, whose ideas have not yet been transmitted to the Defense Mediation Board, believes that many "paunchy industrialists" are dieting, consequently are not getting enough B-1, and as a result are grouchy and irritable!

Ford Strike Holds Firm; Plant Shut

DETROIT, Apr. 4.—Eighty thousand CIO automobile workers today had smashed into smithereens the Ford Motor Co.'s 33-year-old open shop, and all the efforts of King Henry's stooges, lawyers, thugs and goon men haven't been able to put it back together again.

The strike shut down completely the tremendous River Rouge plant in Dearborn, largest industrial unit in the entire world.

Attempts by Ford thugs, armed with steel rods and hunks of metal, brought sporadic flare-ups of violence, but failed to break the picket lines set up by the United Automobile Workers at all roads leading to the plant.

So tightly closed was the factory that even Henry and Edsel Ford made no attempt to enter it.

With their policy of anti-union violence a failure, the company turned to the courts, and in a secret surprise move won one of the most sweeping anti-labor injunctions in Michigan history.

SUBPENAS FOR FORD

Union attorneys obtained subpenas to bring Henry and Edsel Ford and Harry Bennett into court for questioning. They said "we intend to show the affiliation between the Ford Company and the fascist governments."

Observers, recalling the spectacle when Ford last appeared on the witness stand in 1919, looked forward to his testimony.

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW and CIO Ford Organizing Director Michael S. Widman charged that the company's injunction petition was a "deliberate violation of its pledge to Gov. Van Wagoner to make no effort to open the Rouge plant during a period of conciliation."

The two CIO officials said that "one-sided court proceedings, perjured testimony and injunctions will not break this strike."

The strike, which started as a spontaneous stoppage when the company fired eight union leaders, quickly spread to all divisions of the plant. The strike won immediate UAW support, and unions throughout the country were sending messages of encouragement.

The UAW reiterated a 5-point program of demands, which were filed with Federal Conciliator James Dewey early in March. The union wants a signed contract, a 10 cent an hour wage increase, grievance and seniority machinery, time-and-a-half for overtime and double time for Sundays, and an end to discriminatory practices.

BENNETT OFF GUARD

Bennett first screamed that the company was faced with a "Communist" uprising; then appealed to the government — whose laws the corporation has consistently violated — for troops. Failing to get them, he turned the company's goon squads loose on the pickets and drafted Homer Martin, discredited former automobile union leader who has been in the employ of the company for the past year, to round up an AFL-sponsored back-to-work movement. But Martin was getting nowhere as the CIO strike lines held solid.

PROTEST TO COUNCIL

Martin has been named a special representative for a paper AFL federal local, despite his known and admitted connections with the Ford payroll. The AFL's action disturbed leaders of the city AFL organization.

Frank X. Martel, AFL head in Detroit, announced that he and his associates "are going to contact every member of the AFL executive council and protest Martin's presence and ask that he

Coal Operators Lock Out 400,000 CIO Miners

NEW YORK, Apr. 5.—Four hundred thousand coal miners were locked out this week, following refusal of the coal operators either to grant United Mine Workers demand for changes in the contract or to consider running the mines on the old agreement until a new one could be negotiated.

"Four hundred thousand bituminous miners have been com-pelled to remain away from their work today because their contract has expired by limitation on the first day of April, and they have no job," UMWA President John L. Lewis said.

Lewis referred to the offer of the miners to remain at work under the old contract while revisions were negotiated. "The United Mine Workers, forseeing this situation, in an open, public conference with the operators of the Appalachian field, offered to keep the mines in operation while the men worked on the same wage scale, with the understanding that any increase later effected would be effective to these men on the first day of April, 1941," he said.

"That was brushed aside, casually, lightly, by the operators, and the public reaction to that proposal was likewise very casual and mild . . . We assert before the country that we are not responsible for this situation, and we have made that position and we now make it clear to the public press of this nation."

STRANGE THINGS

Lewis hit out sharply at current proposals in Congress to destroy labor's right to strike and to hamstring unions to industry. Certain politicians, he declared, are trying to put across the view that workers must keep on the job "at any wages and under any conditions, with or without a union, as the employer may elect—as long as he may grow fat and have his girth increased with the fullness of these government contracts under his belt."

"We don't think so," Lewis added.

INDENTURED SERVANTS

These Congressmen, particularly those who come from the polltax South, have an idea they can make "indentured servants out of 45,000,000 American workers," he declared. "Let me say that any political party that would enact such legislation and undertake to make it effective will be swept from power by the outraged vote of a dishonored electorate."

Lewis grew sarcastic in describing House Judiciary Committee Chairman Hatton Sumners' proposal to electrocute strikers. Too many miners — the 400,000 in soft coal, plus another 115,000 in anthracite — would have to be executed, he pointed out.

"And if I understand and know anything about the mine workers, I can say, oh boy, what a job!" he added.

MEDIATION

Lewis stated bluntly that the lockout of the miners would not be mediated, but settled at the

Miners Support Miners

Denver, Apr. 5.—Full support to the United Mine Workers and to their leader, John L. Lewis, was voted by the Executive Board of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers meeting here. Support was expressed in a wire to Lewis:

"The Executive Board of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, realizing the importance of the United Mine Workers negotiations at this crucial time in our history, take this means of expressing our wholehearted support in whatever measures may be necessary to bring a higher standard of living to coal miners.

"Your victory will establish a basis for better wages and conditions for all workers throughout the nation. Your victory is our victory."

Name J. C. Lewis

Washington, Apr. 5.—J. C. Lewis, CIO representative from Des Moines, Iowa, has been appointed by Sidney Hillman, associate director general, Office of Production Management, as a labor consultant on the staff of OPM's Labor Division.

Another County Heard From

PHILADELPHIA, April 5.—Pres. William Green of the AFL, who has been trying desperately to replace the discredited Homer Martin as Henry Ford's leading stooge, has a thought on the strike of the CIO Ford workers for a contract.

Interviewed before addressing a Philadelphia Rotary Club meeting, Green handed out this idea:

It is "a non-effective strike because only a minority of the employes are involved."

The strike is so ineffective that the River Rouge plant, employing 86,000 workers, is shut tight.

COAL LOCKOUT STARTS: Their faces besmudged after a day's work, members of the United Mine Workers leave the No. 10 mine of the Pittsburgh Coal Co.'s Montour Mine on March 31. All bituminous mines in the Appalachian district are closed because of the failure of the operators to accept a new contract or to agree to UMW proposals that work be continued with pay raises retroactive to April 1.

New NLRB Case For 'King Henry'

NEW YORK, Apr. 5. — Cases involving Henry Ford's violations of the law continue to pile up. Latest is the complaint issued by the regional office of the National Labor Relations Board here against Ford's plant in Edgewater, N. J., charging the company engaging in other unfair la- with firing 26 employes and bor practices.

The complaint, the first to be filed against Ford in this region, was based on an investigation made by the Board last February on charges filed by the CIO United Automobile Workers. Hearings on the charges are scheduled for April 24 at the Board's office here.

Placing The Blame

Who is to blame for the present and recent industrial stoppages? And how can they be ended? The facts are so plain, so simple and so clear-cut that all the hysterical ravings of the anti-labor press and union-baiting politicians cannot conceal nor long confuse them.

Coal

The bituminous coal stoppage is a lockout, for which the United Mine Workers of America is in no way responsible and which it did everything humanly possible to avert.

The union agreement expired on March 31, but the UMWA offered to continue working under previously existing conditions until a new agreement should be reached.

The union's concern about the speediest possible negotiation of a new contract was further shown by the usual and wholly reasonable proviso that any wage increases in the new agreement should be retroactive to April 1. If this proviso were not made, obviously the operators would consider each day's delay that much more money saved.

Coal production could be resumed immediately, and never should have stopped, if public pressure compelled the operators to end their lockout and to keep the mines working during negotiations.

Allis-Chalmers

The continued stoppage at the Allis-Chalmers is another lockout, prolonged and embittered by a disgraceful double-cross and flagrant governmental intervention on behalf of a company which rejected OPM proposals for a settlement.

The Allis-Chalmers workers voted to return to work under terms proposed by the OPM, on behalf of the United States Government. These terms were also at first agreed to by the company, and when it later rejected them, the union was assured that all governmental pressure would now be exerted to make the company comply.

Instead, William Knudsen and Secretary Knox of the OPM suddenly issued an order to the strikers to return to work on the company's terms.

The Allis-Chalmers lockout could have been ended long ago, and can be ended now, by a simple act of governmental good faith in compelling the company to open up on the terms which the government representatives promised to insist upon.

Ford

The shutdown of the huge Ford plant at River Rouge is an event of historical importance in the age-long struggle for labor's rights. It reveals the degree of CIO organization in a citadel of anti-unionism employing 80,000 workers that never was penetrated by labor before.

But this stoppage need never have occurred and was provoked entirely by the Ford Motor Co.

This company has for years arrogantly defied not only union labor but the United States Government itself. Its records of labor law violations and anti-union intimidation would fill books. Yet it has been coddled in its lawbreaking and encouraged in its arrogance by the fattest of government contracts.

All the Ford workers and their union, the UAW-CIO have ever asked is that this company be required to observe the National Labor Relations Act, cease its unfair labor practices, agree to a Labor Board election, and negotiate with the union thus legally chosen by the workers to represent them.

The Ford stoppage would not have happened, and could be ended at once, by the simple requirement that the Ford Company comply with the law of the land.

Bethlehem

The history of Bethlehem Steel is similar to that of Ford, with the additional fact that its law-defiance provoked the 1937 strike. Here too, all that the Steel Workers Organizing Committee asks is its collective bargaining rights under the Labor Act.

Typical of this company's attitude is the fact that while its insistence on conducting illegal company union elections created stoppages at two of its plants, it was at the same time seeking an injunction to prevent the holding of a legal Labor Board election at its Lackawanna plant.

In the face of all the above facts, is it not the rankest injustice and dishonesty for any writer or speaker to blame labor, or to demand any other action than a cracking down on the employers who are wholly responsible for current stoppages?

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

HE started talking to me quite casually, as I was walking away from the news-stand with my eyes on the front-page headlines of the paper I had bought.

"How goes the war on the home front?" he asked, glancing at the headlines about the Ford, coal and Allis-Chalmers stoppages—with much about "riots" and a picture of a great armored car belching tear gas at some strikers.

"Hmph", I replied, turning the paper so he could see for himself.

He walked along beside me chatting easily: "You know, I have no labor ax to grind, but I say labor is in the right in all this."

I looked curiously at the stranger. He was neither richly nor poorly dressed, neither tall nor short, neither fat nor thin, neither old nor young, and his manner of speech did not indicate his origin.

In fact, he lacked any of the special characteristics by which one usually identifies individuals. I had a vague feeling he was the "average" person one always hears about but never meets.

"The reason for this trouble is that companies like Ford and Bethlehem have refused to obey the labor relations law," he continued. "This has been going on for years. They have disobeyed Labor Board orders, fired workers for union activity and refused to agree to Board elections or deal with the unions.

"Instead of making these companies obey the law, the government has favored them with the juiciest defense contracts. They have grown so fat and arrogant that they think they can do anything they like to their workers—and that if the workers resist, the government, the public and the police will all gang up on labor."

"It almost looks as if that were happening," I said.

"Well," he replied, "that Knox-Knudsen order certainly looked like the government taking sides against labor. And that infernal war machine used against the Allis-Chalmers strikers makes the police look like an enemy army.

"But as for myself, I've told you already that I think labor is in the right. There surely could not be a more reasonable attitude than that of the United Mine Workers, for instance.

"Those hundreds of thousands of coal miners were locked out after they had offered to continue working under present conditions until a new agreement is signed. The only condition they made was that wage increases granted in the new contract should be retroactive to the time when the old contract ended. This was to prevent the operators from stalling off a new agreement indefinitely to save money."

The familiar stranger kept on talking, as I paused at the street-corner before taking my leave

"That Allis-Chalmers situation interests me," he said. "It could all have been avoided some years ago if democracy and the union shop had prevailed.

"Nearly all the workers in the plant wanted and voted for one CIO industrial union. But the majority will was disregarded when the Labor Board allowed a number of small craft splinter groups to be certified.

"The company took advantage of this to deny a union shop to the big majority union, and to play off the AFL crafts against it. The union's rights and very existence were also constantly threatened by disreputable company stooges and provocateurs. Union security is therefore one of the workers' main demands.

"They voted almost unanimously to strike at a union meeting, in accordance with all the regulations of their international union. The later strike ballot, at which irregularities were alleged by company henchmen, was merely a formality required by a new anti-labor law in Wisconsin.

"Finally, the Allis-Chalmers workers agreed to return to work under a formula offered by the OPM. When the company reneged on this agreement, they were told that the government would insist on company compliance. But instead of cracking down on the company, Knox and Knudsen of the OPM actually took sides with it and issued an order cracking down on the workers.

"So that's who you are," I blurted out. "Why I always thought you were a dumb bunny who only read the sports and comics and who blamed the CIO for everything from the Great Drought to boogie-woogie."

"Don't let them kid you, brother," the Man in the Street replied. "As an average American, I'm mostly worker and working farmer myself. I've got two eyes, two ears and a head on my shoulders. Let me have the facts and I'll be with labor every time.

"I can be confused sometimes, it's true. But I know who owns the press and how much money the Wall Streeters spend to turn my mind against my own people and my own interests—and incidentally, to kid you into thinking I'm dumb and anti-labor."

The curious part about the above incident is that it, and most of the conversation, actually happened. Granted that the final stuff about the Man in the Street is my own invention, and that I have filled in some of the detailed facts, I still don't know who the stranger was, whence he came nor where he went—but only that he knew the main facts and was the most typical man in the street I ever hope to meet.

U. S. A., 1941: This isn't Hitler's Germany. It's Richmond, Indiana. The man is a CIO member who went on strike at the Intl. Harvester Co. plant for union recognition and a small share of the company's heavy profits. Police attacked the picket line, raided union hall, arrested 82 workers. Notice this cop rubbing blood off his hands.

Allis Workers Hold Ranks; Strike Busting Efforts Flop

WEST ALLIS, Wis., Apr. 4.—A series of violent back-to-work attacks, which followed an unprecedented "ultimatum" from Washington last week, today had injured scores of workers at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. but failed to dent the effectiveness of their 70-day walkout.

Government officials were still apparently ignoring the prime fact in the strike situation— that the union, Local 248 of the CIO United Automobile Workers, more than a month ago accepted an OPM peace formula, only to see the company stubbornly reject it.

When the attacks on the 7,600 workers failed to smash the strike, Gov. Julius Heil of Wisconsin ordered the plant closed and then unsuccessfully petitioned the federal government for troops.

BOARD GETS CASE

In Washington, meanwhile, the Department of Labor certified the strike to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board for action. Whether the Board will try once again to make the company accept the OPM formula was unknown here.

Use of a murderous-looking armored truck, round after round of tear and nausea gas, police using clubs and bats, and the pouring water on assembled crowds outside the plant all failed to do the trick.

The police violence came after the company, gloating over the "ultimatum" to the strikers which it obtained from OPM Director-General William Knudsen and Sec. of the Navy Frank Knox, announced it would reopen the plant for all who cared to return to work.

The response was disappointing, and a full-blown propaganda campaign failed to hide the fact. The management then announced closing of the plant until Local 248 could meet to discuss and act upon the Knox-Knudsen orders.

VOTE TO CONTINUE

A closed meeting of the union, held at the Fair Grounds, rejected the back-to-work demand and voted almost unanimously to continue the struggle for a decent settlement.

The violence raged for two days as the company, infuriated by the union's decision, got down to brass tacks.

A huge armored truck, with tear gas guns protruding from its windows, lumbered out of the Allis-Chalmers property and smashed into the picket lines, shooting gas bombs in all directions and quickly scattering the pickets. But as soon as the truck returned to the yard, the lines reformed.

GAS BACKFIRES

The truck was out of commission for several hours when one of the guns backfired, filling the truck with the fumes and making life difficult for the deputies inside.

Harold Christoffel, local president, told a union mass meeting later that "it took April Fool's Day to show the company that the workers weren't fooling.

"The company and the police and deputy sheriffs provoked the violence. The tear gas had the effect on us of a red flag on a bull.

"The workers will fight to death to defend their rights."

Leaders Tell Issues at Ford

Detroit, April 5 — A statement about the CIO strike at Ford was issued by UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas, Sec.-Treas. George Addes and Ford Organizing Director Michael Widman. It listed the union's demands as:

"1. Immediate reinstatement of all workers discharged because of union affiliation.

"2. A wage increase of 10 cents an hour to bring wage rates of Ford workers up to the standards employed by the General Motors Corporation and the Chrysler Corporation.

"3. Establishment of a seniority system to govern layoff and rehiring.

"4. Establishment of a shop steward system to speedily and justly handle grievances as they arise.

"5. Abolishment of the Ford spy system and the company's infamous service department, and other elements of a contractual agreement which will make possible the operation of the Rouge plant on a basis of equity for the workers.

"The declaration of a strike at this time was forced on the union by the Ford Motor Company, which has for months up to Tuesday been engaged in deliberate and continuous efforts to prevent adjustment of Ford workers' grievances by means of conference and conciliation.

"The company has placed every obstacle in the way of an immediate Labor Board election, although it is obvious the UAW-CIO speaks for the overwhelming majority of its employes.

"On Tuesday the Ford Motor Company deliberately discharged the chosen spokesmen of the Rouge workers. It falsely ascribed to Rouge workers the intent to carry on a sit-down strike. It flaunted the request of federal, state and county governments, as well as the union, that leaders of the UAW-CIO be permitted to enter the Rouge plant to request the workers to leave.

QUOTE HARRY BENNETT

"Harry H. Bennett, the spokesman for the Ford Motor Company, stated publicly in Time Magazine only two weeks ago, that the UAW-CIO would win a Labor Board election at the Rouge plant. He added that the company would then meet the union, would 'bargain till hell freezes over and would give the union nothing.'

"In view of this brazen, openly avowed intention of the Ford Motor Company to defy the law and ignore the workers' demand for sincere collective bargaining, and in view also of the company's irresponsible action of Tuesday, we are compelled to meet the wishes of the Ford workers that a strike be called at once."

The stoppage which led to the strike spread like wildfire early on the morning of April 2. It was the climax of a series of such shutdowns which have occurred during the past month as the workers fought off Ford's efforts to smash their union.

UAW leaders have charged that the company went back on earlier promises to Conciliator Dewey to rehire over 400 discharged union men, and to end its discrimination practices.

As the workers left their jobs they joined the UAW picket lines set up outside the plant. Bennett locked several thousand of the men in, and then tried to picture the situation as an "illegal" sit-down strike. UAW officials investigated, smashed his plan and forced the release of the workers.

The company's attitude toward bargaining was expressed by Henry Ford, whom Bennett quoted as saying that the "eight men" who started this trouble "will never again work for the Ford Motor Co."

Union officials also pointed to Bennett's statements in a news magazine. The Ford official conceded the union would win a Labor Board election, but predicted the company would stall in its bargaining parleys "until hell freezes over."

Small U.S. Contract At River Rouge

Though Ford's national defense contracts, which were vigorously opposed by the CIO, total close to $130,000,000, most of the work is being done at other plants.

A small number of midget cars, whose value totals only about 1% of the entire Ford contract, are being constructed at River Rouge. The union has offered to supply men to work on these cars for the U. S.—but the company has refused!

Open Parleys With Big Electric Firm

New York, April 5 — Long-sought national wage agreement discussions with the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. have been started by the CIO United Electrical & Radio Workers.

UE Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak announced that a subcommittee of the union's negotiating group, consisting of Organization Director James Matles, John Metcalfe of East Pittsburgh and Ed Matthews of Long Island City, N. Y., had met with W. G. Marshall, company vice-president.

"The purpose of today's meeting was to agree upon the necessary procedure for negotiation and to define the conditions of employment that are of company-wide nature, which should be the subjects of these national negotiations," Emspak said.

"All issues were explored. Negotiations for a contract will be resumed April 8 on the issues involved."

The union is negotiating for 22 of the company's units in which the UE is sole bargaining agent, and it represents about 40,000 employes.

Victorious Steel Union Set For Bethlehem Poll

PITTSBURGH, Apr. 5.—Victorious in strike demonstrations in three plants of Bethlehem Steel Corp. the Steel Workers Organizing Committee is now preparing for a Labor Board election at the huge Lackawanna, N. Y., plant of the Corporation.

The growing strength of the SWOC was demonstrated in these developments:

1. Settlement of the week's strike at Bethlehem, Pa., with an agreement that definitely brings recognition to the SWOC and virtually kills the remnants of a company union.

2. Complete paralyzing of the Johnstown, Pa., plant in a demonstration on the same issue—illegal elections under an illegal Employe Representation Plan — without the use of a single picket.

3. Settlement of a strike at the Los Angeles plant with an agreement that Bethlehem will sign a union contract, as soon as SWOC proves its majority.

4. An expected order by the Labor Board for an election in Lackawanna.

Smaller plants of Bethlehem were also keeping abreast of the drive in the larger plants with virtually hundred per cent unions in Leetsdale, Rankin and Pottstown, Pa.; and easily the majority at Steelton and Coatesville, Pa.

JOHNSTOWN PEACEFUL

In contrast to the strike-breaking activities of Bethlehem, Pa., city police and State police sent in by Gov. Arthur James to that city, was the demonstration in Johnstown, Pa. On March 28 the SWOC men left the plant when the company put ballot boxes in the mill in an attempt to hold a company-union election.

So complete was the shutdown that the SWOC did not put a single picket at any of the gates. Nor did Johnstown city police make the slightset attempt to break the strike — a complete change from the 1937 steel strike there.

When Bethlehem Steel agreed to settle the strike at Johnstown on the same terms as at Bethlehem, Pa., the strike ended on Sunday, March 30, with a parade nearly 10 miles long. The men returned to work the next day.

Formal argument before the Labor Board in Washington will take place on April 8, in connection with the SWOC's demand for an election at the Lackawanna plant. It was expected the Labor Board would set an early date for the election.

400,000 Miners Locked Out

conference table. "We are not going to follow this new formula that seems to have been discovered by the Mediation Board in Washington, whereby they wire the strikers to go back to work and bust their strike and then come to Washington to mediate on the remnants of it," he declared.

"The United Mine Workers of America do not operate that way, and this present stoppage will not be settled that way. It will be settled over the conference table."

Principal demands of the soft coal miners, presented at the Appalachian conference three weeks ago, included a $1.00 a day pay raise, paid vacations, 200 days guaranteed work a year, seniority provisions, improved safety conditions, and elimination of north-south wage differentials. These were flatly rejected by the operators.

The soft coal lockout which began April 2, was marked in its first week by the killing of four UMWA pickets in "Bloody Harlan" county, Kentucky.

April 1, the first day after the expiration of the contract, was marked in all coal areas throughout the U. S. as "Miner's Day," first started to celebrate the winning of the eight-hour day, and now the seven-hour day won under the leadership of John L. Lewis. Every miner in the nation stayed above ground to take part in parades, mass demonstration, and other celebrations.

Miners Celebrate Holiday

By WALTER PETERS

New Kensington, Pa., Apr. 5— Braving even the threat of rain, more than 8,000 coal miners invaded this city from surrounding mining towns to pay honor to their leader—John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America.

An hour-long parade was followed by a mass rally at which time the Rev. R. V. Hartman, New Kensington city councilman, offered the miners the "key to the city."

Merchants throughout the entire district hung out "Welcome Miners" signs. The miners appeared to be unworried over the mine shutdown.

There could be little doubt in anyone's mind that these miners are standing firm behind their international officers in their demand for a dollar-a-day wage increase and vacations with pay from the bituminous coal operators.

Youngstown Sheet Bows To NLRB; Kills Fake Union

PITTSBURGH, Apr. 5.—The four-year-old Labor Board case against Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Youngstown Metal Products Co. has been settled with a complete victory for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. The agreement covered these points:

1. — The company turns over $170,000 to the Labor Board in full settlement of back pay claims.

2. — Reinstated to their old jobs or comparable jobs will be 266 individuals who had been discriminated against for union activities.

3. — All company unions are dissolved.

4. — The company will post notices in its plants that it will refrain from interfering with the rights of workers to self-organization, that it will not discriminate against any person because of membership in the SWOC and that it does not intend to support any labor organization.

The agreement was signed by J. C. Argetsinger for the company; Lee Pressman, general counsel; John L. Mayo and Joseph Germano, SWOC sub-regional directors for the union; and Oscar S. Smith, regional director, and Attorneys Norman F. Edmonds and Robert E. Greene for the Labor Board.

FORCED BIGGER AWARD

The significance of the union victory can be measured from the fact that the SWOC a few months ago turned down a company offer of $47,000 for 72 men!

The settlement "out of court" avoids long and involved litigation, and now makes the SWOC the only union in plants of Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Youngstown Metal Products.

Settlement came on March 28 —a week after the SWOC had addressed letters to that steel corporation requesting the opening of collective bargaining conferences which will lead to a signed contract.

Of the 266 persons reinstated, 144 are already working at the jobs they held May 26, 1937, when the "Little Steel" strikes began. The others will be put back to work within 30 days after the formal order has been approved by the National Labor Relations Board in Washington.

Nine company unions are dissolved in the agreement.

The SWOC first filed charges against the company in 1937 while the strike was still in progress and has amended the charges from time to time.

Transport Union Lists N.Y. Subway Grievances

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Apr. 5.—Full recognition of rights won by the CIO Transport Workers Union, plus correction of grievances that have led to an "intolerable situation" is the only basis on which the New York City subways can be operated in the interests of the public, the union's executive board declared here at the close of a two-day session devoted to problems of the subway workers.

Present contracts with the city owned system expire June 30. These agreements have been consistently and flagrantly violated by the N. Y. Board of Transportation, which has carried out wage cuts and other attacks on working conditions while boosting its own $15,000 salaries by $5,000 a year, the board said.

Transport Workers Union support of the New York local was made concrete in the form of a $100,000 fund voted in preparation for forthcoming negotiations. Assurances of CIO support were given by National Director Allan S. Haywood, who spoke at the board meeting.

CONTRACTS VIOLATED

"The wages of many have been cut, while the salaries of the members of the Board of Transportation and of other highly paid executives have been increased by 33.3 per cent," the board said.

"Their seniority rights have been violated with impunity. Their self-organization and representation by the union of their own rights to well-deserved promotions have been denied. Their rights to choosing has been flagrantly violated. And their labor agreements have been ruthlessly trampled upon by the Board of Transportation."

Win Pact In Cleveland

Cleveland, Apr. 5.—William F. Donovan, district director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, has announced the signing of a contract with the Arcrods Corporation, Cleveland subsidiary of the Air Reduction Corporation.

The group in this plant was organized and charter granted only recently, but the negotiating committee was successful in getting an increase of five cents per hour covering the 75 employes.

LaFOLLETTE COMMITTEE REPORTS:

Little Steel Responsible For '37 Strike

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Apr. 5.—"Little Steel" was solely responsible for the strike of several thousand workers in 1937, the Senate Civil Liberties Committee declared today in a report that warned of serious interruptions to defense production if the companies do not alter their policy of flouting the federal labor law.

The report, based on months of hearings, is the fourth published by the La-Follette Committee on the role of employers' associations in labor disputes. It pulled no punches in its condemnation of the policies of Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., whose plants were struck by the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee during the summer of 1937.

While the press and propaganda forces of the nation were then doing the same sort of "smear job" on labor that is prevalent today, the Senate Committee placed the blame for the strike, and for its accompanying violence, directly on the companies.

"The bloodshed, bitterness and economic disorganization of communities resulting from the 'Little Steel' strike might easily have been avoided had the companies conformed to the laws of the United States," the report asserted, "instead of ranging their combined economic strength and the prestige and influence of their employer associations in opposition to collective bargaining.

"Their determination to flout the law, and their efforts, through a careful campaign of propaganda, to enlist local communities to assist them, must be condemned as dangerous to lawful government."

POLICIES MENACE U. S.

After determining that resistance by the companies to collective bargaining was the primary cause of the 1937 walkout, the Senate Committee warned:

"Any company which today stands up and flatly refuses to enter into a signed bargaining, the report continued, "is an stances, and any employer association which supports and assists it in such a position, are endangering the national security."

Rejection by a company of collective bargaining, the report continued, 'is an affront to the democratic concept that a man's rights are not to be measured by his economic status.

"It goes without saying that a nation cannot arm itself in the name of democracy and make the united effort required for total defense if it permits this democratic ideal to be defaced by the refusal of certain employers to accord their workmen the dignity and equality of treatment which they give to their colleagues and competitors."

In reviewing the 1937 strike situation, the committee found the companies had insisted that they need not and would not sign written contracts, though maintaining they were willing to bargain collectively. But the Supreme Court, in the Heinz decision this winter, knocked this argument out from under the companies.

ANTIQUATED IDEAS

Pointing out that collective bargaining was required by law, and that in the case of the U. S. Steel Co., it was working out well, the Senate Committee said:

"Little can be said for the conduct of the independent steel producers in rejecting them (the principles of collective bargaining), except that they were mistakenly committed to an antiquated concept of industrial absolutism."

In carrying out their law of the jungle labor policies, the three Little Steel companies engaged labor spies, bought bulging arsenals of industrial munitions to use on their employes and worked together on anti-union propaganda campaigns. The Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers lent a helping hand, especially in developing "citizens' committees", which were nothing more than phony front organizations to sugar coat the corporations' drastic policies.

In examining the four most serious riots of the 1937 strike, the Committee found that the pressure from the fake citizens' committees and from company-paid deputies was a major factor in provoking violence.

"The companies had themselves to blame in large part for the feeling of distrust and bitterness which existed among the strikers," the report declared. "Continued interference with the right of organization through espionage, company unions and coercion inevitably generated an atmophere of bitterness."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Henry Ford has been asking for it for years, and now he's got it—a strike that makes labor history. For years King Henry has oppressed his workers, white and Negro, until today they have done what free men always do against autocracy—they have rebelled.

For a generation Ford's name has been a living symbol of tyranny, exploitation and organized brutality. Ford workers were never fooled by the elaborate publicity build-up Ford was able to buy and maintain in the bosses' press. Now, through the brilliant work of the UAW organizing drive under Mike Widman, the whole nation knows the story of Ford's empire—and every fairminded man and woman in the U. S. applauds the workers as they picket River Rouge.

WHAT CAUSES STRIKES?

Watching Ford is an education in organized labor. It opens people's eyes to the real cause of strikes—the greed of huge corporations and their frequent utter disregard for the law. Look at the strikes in the U. S. today. Where are they taking place?

Today's strikes are taking place precisely where management refuses to obey the law of the U. S., refuses to obey the Wagner Act, refuses to bargain collectively, refuses to even consider workers' demands for a small part of the huge profits rolling in from arms orders.

And those strikes are continuing precisely where management sticks stubbornly to its policy of violating the law and flatly refusing to talk with the workers' chosen representatives.

They're also continuing where government officials have bungled the job of mediating. Allis-Chalmers could have been settled weeks ago, if the OPM had been willing to live up to its pledged word in the original proposal accepted by the workers. No union could take the proposal with the joker that was later attached. Certainly no CIO union could be expected to take it.

BRIEFS

While the CIO fights for workers' rights on these bigger fronts—coal, steel, autos—the daily work of organizing goes on. Rubber workers in Cumberland, Md., have won raises from four to 10 cents an hour. Four elections have been won by CIO in Philadelphia, and 150 District 50 workers have won a 5.5 cent increase after a brief strike. Joseph Mayor of Connecticut reports a major victory—1,031 voters for CIO at the Ingraham Clock Co., 925 for the company union. The town of Bristol, Conn., is 100 per cent organized.

Director Bender reports settlement of the American Sugar Co. strike, with union shop, 2.5 cent increase, wage payments in cash, seniority and other important gains. From Buffalo Hugh Thompson reports 26 workers reinstated with back pay at the Marlin-Rockwell plant in Jamestown, a five cent increase for CIO Construction workers at Tonawanda, a closed shop and a $2.00 weekly raise at a furniture company.

And in Detroit the CIO Cannery and Agricultural Workers have won a 10 to one election at the Webster Cigar Co.—the score 340 to 42, plus an election at the Acme White Lead and Color Works where a company union was defeated 203 to 92.

Councils Urged To Endorse CIO Plane Plan

By JOHN BROPHY

Director of Industrial Union Councils

One of our most important tasks today is that of winning support from the public for the CIO. Due to outrageously unfair newspaper publicity, the general public feels that CIO is actually blocking genuine national defense.

The CIO endorses and cooperates 100 per cent with genuine national defense. The CIO has taken the lead in promoting genuine national defense through development of the Murray, Reuther, and Steel Industry Plans.

Hence, our job now is to make known to the general public the actual CIO position on defense. At the same time the Government must be made to understand that we are insisting firmly on our proposals and want to see them put into effect.

In my letter of February 17, 1941, asking support by all CIO Councils for the main CIO Defense Plan, I mentioned the fact that the Reuther Plan, advanced by the United Automobile Workers, CIO, for the adaptation of the automobile industry to assembly-line production of airplanes was an example of the way the proposed Industry Councils, contemplated by the CIO Defense Plan, would operate.

The United Automobile Workers have recently published a pamphlet which explains the Reuther proposal and brings the entire matter up to date. This is an official proposal of the CIO, and I ask that all Councils undertake to give it the same sort of support as has been given to the Murray Defense Plan itself.

Accordingly, I ask that each Council go on record by resolution in favor of the Reuther Plan. The tone of any resolution adopted should be one of confidence that the government will benefit by approving the recommendations contained in the Plan.

I ask further that the appropriate officers of each Council send communications immediately to the President of the United States and the Office of Production Management, Washington, D. C., urging in the same spirit that the Reuther Plan be put into effect. Copies of the Auto Workers' pamphlet on the Reuther Plan should be put into the hands of all delegates to the Council, with the request that they in turn distribute copies among the members of their locals and ask both the locals and their members to wire or write to the President and the OPM.

I have made arrangements with the International Office of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, whereby all CIO Industrial Union Councils may obtain supplies of this pamphlet at reasonable cost. Orders should be addressed to the Education Department, United Automobile Workers of America, 281 West Grand Boulevard, Detroit, Michigan.

I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of this work and the significance which the CIO attaches to this program.

TEAR GAS FORTRESS: This murderous looking armored car was used by West Allis, Wis., police to break picket lines of United Auto Workers Local 248 at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. Cops inside shot teargas bombs into crowds of workers, injuring many — but they failed to break the strike. Local 248's refusal to bow to the Knox-Knudsen strikebreaking efforts has support of the CIO and the UAW.

'Companies To Blame For Strikes' — Carey

WASHINGTON, Apr. 5.—Blame for present strikes lies "on the great corporations whose unbridled greed for profits and whose flagrant violations of U. S. laws" force labor into strike action to protect its living standards and its rights to organize, James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO, declared in a nationwide radio broadcast here.

Carey's speech, broadcast over the NBC Blue Network, was an answer to enemies and critics of the CIO who have been trying to smear CIO unions as engaged in a plot to stop arms production, to overthrow democracy, etc., and who have proposed fascist curbs on the right to organize and to strike.

He hit out at "profit-swollen corporations flatly refusing to even listen to their workers' demands for wage increases" and "their friends and agents in Congress and in high government circles falling over themselves in their haste to fasten new shackles on labor."

PROFITS UP, WAGES DOWN

Citing government figures, Carey showed that the ideal workers' budget of $2,200 a year would provide "no more than a modest living, few comforts, almost nothing even for the simplest pleasures, zero for luxuries."

This budget, he said would provide one overcoat for the man of the family every six years, one suit every two; for the woman, one coat and one dress every two years; for medical care, $1.50 a week, housing, $34 a month, for education for the kids, $5.00 a year, another $5.00 for all cultural activities, nothing for savings.

Yet this budget is only enjoyed by eight per cent of all the workers in the U. S., he pointed out, while 33 per cent get less than $400 a year to live on. In contrast, he cited corporations making profits of close to $1,000 a year per worker, with one realizing a profit of $2,200 for each worker employed—exactly the amount of the subsistence budget.

CITES BETHLEHEM

Carey used Bethlehem Steel as an example. This corporation, enjoying two billions of dollars in defense contracts, has flatly refused to obey the Wagner Act ever since it was passed, he said, and finally forced its workers on strike against low wages and other severe abuses.

Despite this, leading figures in Congress propose every reactionary kind of anti-labor law — including a serious threat by one, Chairman Sumners of the powerful House Judiciary Committee, to give strikers the electric chair.

"For the lawbreaking corporations, profits and more profits, poured out in an endless stream," Carey said. "For the workers who try to better their living standards, screaming oratory in Congress, crackdowns and threats of crackdowns by high officials, and an endless barrage of criticism and vituperation in the press."

PROFIT HOLDUP

Carey reminded his listeners of the gigantic holdups that corporations pulled on the government before they would even bid on defense orders, citing their refusal to bid until legal limits on profits were removed, until the excess profits tax was watered down, and their threats to withhold bids until such laws as the Wagner Act were repealed.

The CIO has the only sound, constructive plan to offer on problems of production, Carey said, in describing the industrial councils plan put forward in the name of the CIO by President Murray.

"Our critics and enemies have no such program," he said. "They have only their hysterical mouthings against labor to put before the American people. We are not afraid of the verdict the American people will render on these issues. We are not afraid because we are of the American people—the men and women who get their living by working for it, the men and women who cherish democracy."

Many Steel Pacts Signed In Cincinnati

Cincinnati, O., April 5 — A flock of new contracts, all of them containing substantial wage increases and improved working conditions, were announced today by T. Louis Majors, Steel Workers Organizing Committee subregional director.

"The outlook for extended organization is favorable and I am looking forward to a number of new local unions for the SWOC," Majors declared.

Most important of the new agreements was signed by the Lunkenheimer Valve Co., which employs 1,450 workers and which in the past has recognized the steel union only through a company statement of policy. The pact lifts wages 7c an hour, includes protection for drafted workers and improves grievance and seniority features.

Dies Committee 'Star' Opens New Bridges Hearing

SAN FRANCISCO, Apr. 5.—Testimony by a Dies committee star witness designed to "prove" that CIO is modelled on revoluntionary lines, that its policies were dictated by foreign agents, etc., marked the opening days of the new hearings on Harry Bridges, California CIO leader up on trial for a second time on his right to remain in this country.

Motions of the defense attorneys, headed by Carol King, to dismiss the charges on the ground that Bridges has been tried once and found innocent of all charges, that the new law on which the second hearings are based is retroactive and therefore unconstitutional, were dismissed.

At the same time, reports from the west coast and other sections of the country show that Pres. Murray's appeal for support of all CIO affiliates for Bridges is bringing results.

CIO COMMITTEE

Murray described the new hearings "as an attempted appeasement of the attacks which have come from anti-labor forces primarily intent on destroying the Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and thereby undermining organization as a whole." He appointed Sherman Dalrymple, president of the United Rubber Workers and a vice-president of the CIO, and David J. MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, as an official CIO Bridges defense committee.

Bridges defense headquarters on the west coast report that hundreds of locals are sending in pledges of support and funds to aid Bridges.

House Passes New Guffey Coal Bill

Washington, April 5. — The Guffey Coal Bill (H.J.R. 101 and S.J. 32), providing for the extension of the present Bituminous Coal Act for two more years, has passed the House. It had previously been unanimously reported out by the House Ways and Means Committee. The Bill was passed without amendment and now goes to the Senate for their consideration.

This bill provides for stabilization of prices in the bituminous coal industry. It guarantees the coverage of costs of production for the operators and sets a basis for the establishment of decent wages throughout the industry.

It does away with cut throat competition, which in the past has taken effect in low wages for coal miners.

Vote Probe Of Strikes

Washington, April 5.—Preceded by several hours of hysterical anti-labor oratory, with the heaviest outbursts coming from the southern polltax bloc, the lower House of Congress has voted a sweeping probe into the progress of the defense program, to be carried out by the House Naval Committee and the Military Affairs Committee.

The resolution, though it mentioned inquiries into profits and other management angles, was directed straight at organized labor's efforts to meet rising living costs with needed wage increases.

Any doubts on this point were cleared up by speeches from anti-labor Representatives such as Vinson and Cox of Georgia, Smith of Virginia, Sumners of Texas (all from polltax states) and Michener of Michigan.

Merrill Denies Dies Charges

New York, Apr. 5—Lewis Merrill, president of the United Office and Professional Workers of America, charged Martin Dies with ignoring the truth to smear his organization and the CIO, in a wire replying to the latest of Mr. Dies' periodic "red" attacks.

The Texas Congressman, in a wire sent to Philip Murray and released to the newspapers, had listed Merrill among a group of alleged communists in the CIO. Merrill, in his letter to Dies, pointed out that his consistent denials of that unsubstantiated though oft-repeated cry had been ignored. His wire accuses Dies of being concerned not with the truth of his allegations but with attacking the UOPWA and the CIO.

PICKET GM: Strike at the Chevrolet and Fisher Body GM plants in Oakland, Calif., was settled this week after hundreds of members of United Automobile Workers helped to picket. Union charges company introduced speed-up, violated its contract by discharging 26 welders.

ON CAPITOL HILL:

Tempo of Tories' Attack on Labor Mounting Daily

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

The fury of the reactionary attack upon labor in Congress is increasing daily.

Chairman Sumners of the House Judiciary Committee, which is holding hearings on anti-strike legislation, threatened workers in defense strikes with the electric chair.

Congressman Leland Ford, arch reactionary of California introduced a bill (H.R. 4223) which would impose the death penalty upon workers if anyone gets killed in a strike, no matter through whose fault, and would make workers "guilty of treason" if they participated in, or assisted a strike in a defense industry. Such participation would be punished by a 25 year prison sentence, without parole.

Congressman Hoffman introduced a bill (H.R. 4040) which would give J. Edgar Hoover the right to go into any defense industry strikes and call out Federal troops for the protection of scabs.

SMITH WANTS PROBE

Congressman Howard Smith, who, by his attacks on the Labor Act, has encouraged employers to violate this law, has introduced a bill, H. Res. 160, which provides for the re-establishment of the Smith investigation of the Labor Board.

Poll-tax Congressmen and their reactionary allies from Northern states make daily attacks upon workers, and in their speeches echo and re-echo the contempt of slave owners for the rights of free labor. Not a word is said in defense of labor. Not a hint is dropped about the fact that employers are causing all these strikes by flagrant violation of the National Labor Relations Act and by refusal, through peaceful negotiations to use some of their huge profits for paying workers a living wage.

FRIENDS ARE QUIET

Most of the so-called friends of labor sit mutely in Congress without saying a word to refute the attacks of the reactionaries on labor.

New attacks upon labor unions, through Congressional committees may be started as a result of a resolution passed by the House with one dissenting vote on April 2. This Resolution (H. Res. 162) authorizes the House Naval and Military Affairs Committees to conduct investigations on all matters relating to defense orders. Chairman Vinson of the Naval Affairs Committee, who is author of an anti-strike bill, has already announced that his investigation will include strikes and union activities.

Texas CIO Parley Opens April 19

Houston, Tex., Apr. 6—The fifth annual convention of the Texas CIO Industrial Union Council will be held at the Blackstone Hotel, Fort Worth, April 19-20, Maurice Dineen, CIO regional director announced today. P. F. Kennedy is executive secretary of the Texas Council.

Miners Win Wage Hour Case

Denver, April 5. — Importance of the victory of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in winning an eight-hour "collar-to-collar" ruling from the Wage-Hour Division "cannot be overemphasized," Reid Robinson, MMSW president and a vice-president of the CIO, declared here today.

The ruling, won as the result of years of fighting by the union and of three years of campaigning since the Wage-Hour law was passed, requires mining companies to pay their workers for all time spent in the mines. Previously, pay started only after the worker reached his workplace underground—a trip that frequently took as much as two hours from the time he entered.

The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers victory drew congratulations from CIO President Philip Murray and from National Organizing Director Allan S. Haywood.

"Your union and the CIO have been responsible for the fight to gain this victory," Murray wired. "The results will be substantially improved conditions for the metal miners."

The ruling constitutes "one of labor's finest achievements," Haywood wrote, adding: "This 50 year fight of the miners should go far to improve the lot of the men in this industry."

FULL PAY FOR WORK

The new ruling, which means in basic terms that the miners will work eight hours for eight hours pay, rather than the nine and a half of ten hours worked before, will affect about 100,000 metal miners in the jurisdiction of the union, and will result in jobs for unemployed miners.

The ruling was the result of intensive work by the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, not only in organizing to impress their demands on the authorities but also in presenting their case before the Wage-Hour Division hearings. Briefs covering the entire metal mining industry were prepared by Pres. Robinson and Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, and by Ben Riskin, the union's research director.

Vote 2-1 For CIO

New York, April 5 — Workers at the American Weavers, Inc., Farnumsville, Mass, voted two to one to join the CIO Textile Workers Union following a brief work stoppage which won them a wage increase. Later the same day the workers held a meeting to which they invited representatives of the TWU, the AFL and the Independent Textile Union of Woonsocket, R. I.

After listening to speeches from representatives of the three organizations, the workers voted to transfer from the American Weavers Protective Assn., an independent group, and join the TWU.

Cite Danger Of Price Rises

NEW YORK, Apr. 5. — Warnings of business-sponsored price inflation and artificial scarcity of consumer goods are contained in a current issue of "Bread & Butter," a new weekly letter on price changes being issued by Consumers Union, 17 Union Square, New York.

"The threat of price inflation has rapidly grown more serious these past three weeks," the letter declares. "Spot prices of 28 basic commodities (prices paid by manufacturers for immediate delivery) have gone up 31.1 per cent since the outbreak of the war in August, 1939."

BACKS MURRAY CLAIMS

The facts contained in the Consumers Union newsletter support CIO contentions that only the Murray Industry Council plan, which would force full production of defense and civilian goods, can offset the present upward price trend.

"Few consumers yet realize how high and how fast raw material prices have risen and what these rises are going to mean to consumers," Bread & Butter asserts, "but the business and trade press now writes freely about the coming retail price inflation.

"Meantime, big business lobbies in Washington are putting pressure on the government for a program that must inevitably result in a scarcity of goods—for the most part an unnecessary and avoidable scarcity."

Sugar Strikers Win Contract, Increases

Baltimore, Md., Apr. 5. — An eight weeks' strike at the American Sugar Refinery here ended last week with a big victory for the CIO United Sugar Workers Local Industrial Union. The company signed a contract providing 2½ cents an hour wage increases for the 650 production workers employed in the plant and other improvements.

A war clause provides that in case the country goes to war, the wage question may be opened after 90 days. Other terms call for wage payments in cash instead of by check; increase in the number of shop stewards, and an improved recognition clause.

CIO Wins Ford Strike; Coal Lockout Continues

7th WONDER: Thousands on thousands of Detroiters turned out on the first Sunday of the CIO strike at Ford to see what many had predicted could never happen—a walkout of workers closing the giant River Rouge plant. The Sunday sightseers caused traffic jams on Miller Road (picture below). What they saw were groups like that above — union-conscious men, peacefully watching over the Ford gates, pleased that they had made the nation's outstanding open-shopper talk to their representatives.

Auto Union, Ford Accept Proposals Of Governor

WASHINGTON, Apr. 11.—Negotiations on wage increases for close to a million CIO workers were being conducted today in New York, Detroit and Pittsburgh.

In Detroit, 85,000 workers won their strike at the Ford River Rouge plant, largest industrial unit in the world, after keeping it closed for 10 days. CIO auto union leaders announced acceptance of a settlement suggested by Gov. Van Wagoner of Michigan. Meanwhile, the Natl. Labor Relations Board ordered an election at the Ford River Rouge and Lincoln plants within the next 45 days.

At New York, the United Mine Workers, headed by Pres. John L. Lewis, pressed their demands for $7 a day and vacations with pay. Mine operators producing the majority of bituminous coal in the Appalachian area were said to have accepted the UMW proposal, but some southern associations were reported resisting the union's effort to wipe out the present regional wage differential.

At Pittsburgh CIO Pres. Philip Murray led negotiators of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee through further sessions with the U. S. Steel Corp., whose twice-extended contract expires on April 15. The union is seeking 10-cent an hour increases and improved conditions.

Asks U. S. Discipline Bethlehem

Baltimore, April 12 — Prompt federal action to force the Bethlehem Steel Corp. to observe U. S. labor laws is needed to prevent a possible industrial dispute at the company's big Sparrows Point plant, Pres. Roosevelt was informed today by Nicholas Fontecchio, Steel Workers Organizing Committee district director.

"For the last few weeks, the company has employed a large number of industrial spies provoking disorder in and around the plant with the intent and purpose of creating a strike and blaming our union for it," Fontecchio declared.

When the union offered the company an agreement to bring peace in the plant, Fontecchio said Bethlehem refused on the basis that "decisions of the United State Supreme Court on matters of collective bargaining are not in harmony with the labor policy" of the company.

Win $60,000 Pay Boost

Reading, Pa., April 12 — Wage increases totaling $60,000 a year today had ended a five-week strike of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at the Stanley G. Flagg Co. here.

An Economic Outlook Chart.

THE LION'S SHARE This CIO Economic Outlook chart shows how two big financial groups—duPont and Bethlehem—have received 23 per cent of U. S. defense orders. A small number of big firms have gotten most of the government contracts.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK:

Bethlehem, duPont Groups Snagged 23% of U. S. Orders

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12.—Two big financial groups, controlling between them eight corporations, have received 23% of the government's defense contracts, according to the CIO Economic Outlook's current issue.

Naming the two financial cliques as duPont and Bethlehem Steel, which have been granted well over a billion dollars' worth of defense orders, the Outlook points the spotlight on "fantas-tically high concentration" of orders — a fact frequently referred to by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in urging government adoption of the CIO industry-council defense plan.

With Bethlehem and duPont holding 23% of the orders, six groups, controlling 19 companies, have 44% of the total, and 16 groups controlling 29 companies, hold 62½%.

In all, 80 concerns have received 85% of the total contracts so far issued, the CIO publication asserts.

"It might be noted," the Outlook says, "that most of the major interest groups which have the large cuts in the National Defense quotas are represented by major officials on the National Defense Commission."

SLOWS UP PROGRAM

This concentration results in slowing up the arms program, the Outlook points out, since:

1. It gives a few companies excessive backlogs which take considerable time to work off.
2. Only a small portion of total U. S. Industrial plant is used.
3. Well-spread expansion of industry is prevented.
4. Industry is concentrated in a few areas.

In addition, the trend promotes monopoly, price fixing by large concerns, pyramiding of profits and does not help re-employment.

The Outlook further charges that the government met the refusal of plant owners to expand "by complete capitulation to the demands of the industrial interests in whose hands the major orders are now concentrated."

This is supported, the Outlook says, by statements of the Temporary National Economic Committee that "'the government and the public are 'over a barrel' when it comes to dealing with business in time of war or other crisis'."

Discussing this further, the Outlook points out that the government has already awarded expansion contracts at a cost of over $1.5 billions, and has presented industry with another $393 million through tax amortization.

"No subsidies have been provided yet for extra burdens upon workers which arise out of the defense program," the Outlook says.

Sharp price rises are to be expected as the result of the establishment of priorities, the Outlook says, unless "strong measures" are taken. "It now seems questionable that such measures will be taken," it adds.

These price rises will soon send the cost of living still higher and already sharp increases in rents have taken place in numerous cities where industry is working on arms production.

Appoint Hetzel

Washington, April 12 — Ralph Hetzel, Jr., CIO research director, has been appointed a member of the Advisory Committee on Policy by Nelson A. Rockefeller, coordinator of Commercial and Cultural Relations between the American Republics, in the Council of National Defense.

PLEDGE SUPPORT

New York — Support for CIO mine, auto and steel unions in their fight for better living standards was voted by Local 1250, CIO Department Store Employes Union.

Unemployment Rose 12.5%

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12.—Unemployment rose 12.5% in January over December, the CIO Economic Outlook said today.

Despite the defense "boom," the CIO estimated joblessness in January at 10,116,000. The December unemployment figure was 9,003,000.

Firms Hiding Super-Profits With Fancy Bookkeeping

New York, April 12 — A new bookkeeping device, through which profits may be made to appear less than they really are, is attacked this week in an article published in The UE NEWS, official organ of the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America.

The device is what is called the "last-in first-out" principle in inventory accounting. Under this system, all raw materials consumed in the manufacture of goods are charged as costs, just as in other bookkeeping, but they are charged at the price of the last purchase, which is usually—in a period of rising wholesale prices — higher than either the average cost or the actual cost of the raw materials. In this way, the cost of the manufactured product is represented to be higher than it is in fact, and thereby the profit is reduced.

"An increasing number of corporations are turning to the use of the last-in first-out principle of inventory accounting. Borden Company has just adopted it extensively, after experimenting with it on a few commodities. Last year's net income was $400,000 lower than it would have been, had the last-in first-out treatment not been used."

The UE NEWS comments that "we will all readily admit that a bookkeeping treatment which can slice $400,000 off the book amount of one year's income is quite a little treatment."

'Defense Set-Up Inefficient' — — Sec. Carey

CHICAGO, Apr. 12.—Methods used in building up U. S. arms "are hopelessly and chaotically confused," James B. Carey, CIO national secretary, charged in a speech before the Executives Club here.

Reason for this confusion is the lack of planning for production, Carey said, in pointing out that the arms program now is simply an affair of the government offering "to buy at any price, without any real planning of its requirements on the one hand, or of capacity to meet requirements on the other."

This confusion is reflected in shortages of consumer goods as the result of priorities, which in turn is "a confession of inefficient management", he declared. In addition, chaotic systems of buying, disregard of the conditions of the industries used in the arms program, and other evidences of lack of planning are evident in the program.

BACKS MURRAY PLAN

Carey referred to the CIO Industry Councils plan as presented by Pres. Murray, the Steel Plan, and other CIO endorsed plans as an answer to the problem of full production of both arms and civilian goods.

"Labor offers to join management and the government to make industry's contribution to the defense of a permanent democratic society, dedicated to the promotion of the life, liberty and happiness of the people," he said.

MORE PRODUCTION

"I assert that if American industry operates at capacity with adequate wage-hour standards to employ the able-bodied population at decent wages, the output of consumer goods will be taken off the market at prices on a volume production basis that will assure a fair return to management and owners," Carey declared.

"I am only proposing that we apply business-like methods to the business of national defense. I am only proposing that we exercise in common the executive function to plan the production problems of our democratic society to meet foreseeable contingencies of tomorrow, next year and the year after that."

Carey declared that the Production Planning Board of OPM, of which he is a member, is supposed "to make recommendations with respect to planning of present and future requirements, both for defense and civilian requirements."

FIVE STEPS

"I have urged," he said, "that we prepare to take five basic steps toward planning:

"1. An inventory of our full military and civilian requirements in terms of the demands they make upon the production of the basic industries, including management, men, machine and materials.

"2. An inventory of existing productive capacity in the basic industries, upon the basis of treating each industry as a coordinated unit.

"3. An estimate of requirements of a fully expanded national income in normal times. Meeting these requirements is the permanent objective of a democratic society. Present estimates are the foundation for post-war plans.

"4. Creation of procedures and agencies to fit requirements in order of need to capacity, through allocation of production quotas under overall schedules. The functional way to handle production problems is through industry councils under a top coordinating board.

"5. Measures to meet scarcities by providing substitutes in advance, enforcing equitable priorities until rapid expansion is completed."

Alter Priority Order After Union Plea

Washington, Apr. 12—A priority order on aluminum was modified to allow the use of scrap aluminum on non-defense orders, as a result of conferences between Edward T. Cheyfitz, CIO Natl. Assn. of Die Casting Workers executive secretary and officials of the office of Production Management.

Hailing the change in the priority order as a great victory, Cheyfitz said it would halt the layoff of tens of thousands of workers.

FILED PROTESTS

Cheyfitz came to Washington to confer with Sidney Hilman, associate general director and other OPM officials and to ask for a 30-day extension before application of the priority order on scrap aluminum metal, to prevent the lay-offs on April 11. Formal protests were filed with E. R. Stettinius, OPM Director of Priorities, by manufacturers as well as the CIO unions concerned.

"In addition to the 10,000 die casting workers, a million employed in other industries, including 20,000 aluminum workers, are threatened with loss of their jobs if the order goes into effect," Cheyfitz said at that time.

"Hundreds of small businesses will fold up over night because they won't have capital to re-tool their plants for the use of substitutes, or because there are no substitutes for die castings."

Strike Shuts New Jersey Smelter

Elizabeth, N. J., Apr. 12.—FP—The main plant of the Phelps Dodge Corp. was shut down April 7 by a strike of 1,600 workers.

In Washington, Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins certified the dispute to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board for action.

The strike followed the collapse of negotiations between the firm and the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Union demands, flatly rejected by the company, include a union shop, time-and-a-half for overtime on Saturdays, double time on Sundays and holidays, and a starting rate of 55 cents for women and 65 cents for men.

An earlier walkout occurred in February when the company refused to consent to a Labor Board election on the ground of an existing contract with a company union. The firm subsequently abandoned this position, and the UE carried the election by a substantial majority.

Big Steel Parleys Continue

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Apr. 11. — Leaders of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee continued wage contract negotiations today with the U. S. Steel Corp., employer of a quarter-million men throughout the nation.

Threat of a lockout on April 8, when the contract was due to terminate, was removed 24 hours earlier when a joint statement by the SWOC, headed by Chairman Philip Murray, and the company, proclaimed a second one-week extension of the agreement. The contract under which the company is now operating expires at midnight, April 15.

Wage increases, when finally determined, will be retroactive to the original expiration date of the agreement, April 1.

ASK 10-CENT RAISE

The SWOC is demanding 10-cents-an-hour wage increases, vacations with pay, better seniority and grievance systems and improved status for the union.

The company's first reaction to the SWOC wage demands was to offer an increase of 2½ cents an hour, which Murray described as unsatisfactory.

Big Steel's offer to extend the contract for a week came rapidly on the heels of an announcement by the non-union National Steel Co. that it was increasing wages for its several thousand employes by a dime an hour.

CIO Wins 77th GM Poll

Dayton, Ohio, April 12 — The CIO auto union today had rolled up its 77th election victory in a plant of the General Motors Co.

Paul Miley, regional director for the United Automobile Workers, announced that the UAW had polled 357 votes at the Delco Brake factory here, with 279 votes opposed.

NLRB Orders Elections At Ford, Bethlehem

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12.—The Natl. Labor Relations Board today was rushing plans for elections at three big corporations—Ford, Intl. Harvester and Bethlehem Steel's Lackawanna, N. Y., plant.

Largest poll will be at Ford's River Rouge plant in Dearborn and the Lincoln plant in Detroit, where close to 90,000 workers will be eligible to mark ballots for the CIO United Automobile Workers, an AFL federal local or neither.

14,000 AT BETHLEHEM

The Bethlehem Lackawanna vote will give some 14,000 employes a chance to vote whether or not they wish to be represented by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The election grows out of SWOC demands during a two-day strike in March, which was settled with a government promise to explore the possibilities of an NLRB poll. In subsequent Labor Board hearings, the company fought desperately to stall off the election.

The Board has ordered hearings to determine whether elections should be held at five plants of the Intl. Harvester Co. plants in East Moline, Rock Falls and Rock Island, Ill., and at the West Pullman and McCormick Works in Chicago.

FORD ELECTION ORDER

The order for the Ford-Lincoln elections followed less than 48 hours after stormy oral hearings at Washington, where Maurice Sugar, attorney for the CIO auto union, crossed legal swords with I. A. Capizzi, company lawyer.

The NLRB set up three units at the River Rouge and Lincoln plants.

1. All production, maintenance and clerical employes at Lincoln, numbering about 5,000, will choose between the UAW-CIO and AFL Local 22,550 or neither.

2. Production, maintenance and clerical employes at River Rouge, numbering around 90,000, will vote for the UAW-CIO, AFL Local 25,551 or neither.

3. About 200 wood and metal pattern makers and their apprentices at River Rouge will vote for either the UAW-CIO or the AFL Pattern Makers League or neither. If the workers select the CIO, the bargaining unit will be merged with that of the production workers; but if they vote for the AFL, they will have a separate "splinter" unit.

FAKE OUTFIT BARRED

Barred from the ballot as a non-existent organization was the Ford Brotherhood of America, Inc., which had a brief fling in 1937 as a company union.

The NLRB found it had signed no new membership cards since late in 1937, has collected no dues or assessments since that time, that it has held no elections or membership meetings of any consequence.

HIGHEST PROFITS

New Kensington, Pa.—The Aluminum Co. of America made a profit of $1,700 on each employe during 1940. Profits were reported at a record-breaking total of $44,146,297—some 7½ million more than in 1939.

Win 7½c Increase

Indianapolis, Ind., Apr. 12.—Signing of an agreement containing 7½-cent hourly wage increases with the Van Camp Stokely Co., was announced today by James Robb, regional director for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The pact provides a 5 cents hourly raise for men at the present time, and additional 2½ cents on October 15. Women employes will receive a total of five cents, in two installments.

The agreement provides that all union members shall stay in good standing during the life of the pact, and arranges that the union dues will be checked out of the workers' pay checks.

CIO Wins At Ford!

DETROIT, Apr. 12.—The CIO has won a great victory in the 10-day strike at the Ford Motor Co.'s huge River Rouge plant!

That was the announcement broadcast to the 85,000 strikers by Michael S. Widman, Jr., CIO director of the Ford Organizing Committee, as he revealed that the union and the company had finally worked out a settlement of the dispute, first in the history of the plant.

The victory for the United Automobile Workers followed a settlement proposal offered by Gov. Murray Van Wagoner of Michigan, which was accepted by the union, and later by Henry Ford with a number of qualifications.

With the strike victory under its belt, the union will now prepare for a National Labor Relations Board election at the plant, which observers say will be easily won by the CIO. The strike found the company meeting with a union of its workers for the first time in its 38-year history.

For several hours CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who flew here from Pittsburgh, conferred with Harry Bennett, Ford's personnel boss, and state and federal mediators.

MAJOR VICTORY

That in itself was a major victory for the UAW, which only a short time ago Ford and Bennett were telling the public they would completely ignore.

But the settlement accepted by the union went much farther. It provided for the return of the 85,000 striking workers to their jobs without discrimination. It forced the company to recognize formally the grievance procedure established at River Rouge before the strike. And it exacted from the company a pledge to cooperate with the Natl. Labor Relations Board in its scheduled election at the plant.

Union officials predicted a high majority when the workers mark their ballots in the government-sponsored poll.

Union acceptance of the governor's proposal was contained in a telegram signed by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW, Allan S. Haywood, CIO organization director who has been helping to direct the strike, and Michael F. Widman, Jr., Ford Organizing Committee director.

They said:

UNION STATEMENT

"We have received your proposals for terminating the strike of the Ford employes at the Rouge plant. Your program has been given consideration by spokesmen for the CIO, officers and members of the Intl. Executive Board of the UAW-CIO, and union committeemen at the Rouge plant.

"We have come to the conclusion that your proposals constitute a constructive basis for termination of the strike and would create machinery for the maintenance of stable and equitable labor relations in the plant pending the holding of NLRB elections. Our decision has been influenced also by the desire of the CIO, the UAW-CIO, and the Ford workers to expedite our national defense program.

"We accordingly accept your proposals and will recommend its adoption to a meeting of the Rouge workers tonight."

Ford's acceptance of the Governor's proposal was based on one major condition: that a Labor Board hearing on Wagner Act violations by the company be postponed until after a forthcoming NLRB vote at River Rouge.

Sixteen thousand Ford workers, gathered at a mass meeting on April 10, ratified the UAW leaders' acceptance of the governor's original proposal but left the matter of further discussion of Ford's one condition up to the union negotiating committee.

As the meeting ended, Widman told the strikers: "Get back to your picket lines. The strike isn't over yet."

GOVERNOR'S PROPOSAL

The governor's proposal, which he described as "fair and just," provided for rehiring of all strikers without discrimination, including five of the eight men whose dismissal led directly to the walkout. The cases of the remaining three would be arbitrated by Federal Conciliator James F. Dewey, who has been active in seeking a settlement of the walkout.

He also proposed that a committee representing the state and federal governments, the union and the company, "continue to meet and settle any other matters of dispute which might arise before the NLRB election." Gov. Van Wagoner will represent the state, Dewey the U. S., Thomas and Haywood the CIO, and Harry Bennett and one other, the Ford Motor Co.

Coal Contract Expected Soon

NEW YORK, Apr. 12.—With substantial agreement reached between the United Mine Workers and northern operators employing two-thirds of the nation's soft coal miners, negotiations continued here this week, in the hope of bringing the southern operators into line and permitting a general resumption of production.

The miners, under the leadership of Pres. John L. Lewis, have won agreement from the majority of the operators on the $1.00 a day wage raise and other basic demands. Refusal of southern operators to accede to the UMWA demand for abolition of the differential was said to be holding up 100 per cent resumption of work.

This differential, amounting to 40 cents a day, would be abolished under the UMWA proposals, and wages throughout the soft coal industry fixed at $7.00 a day. Other demands of the miners include vacations with pay, improvements in seniority, in safety conditions, medical care, and the like.

John R. Steelman, head of the U. S. Conciliation Service, has been actively working with both parties in an attempt to bring about quick settlement of the stoppage.

ANTHRACITE

Negotiations covering the anthracite miners continued during the week on the demands presented by the UMW for a 20 per cent increase for contract miners, $1 a day increase for outside and inside company men, and other improvements.

In order to keep the mines open, the union has offered to continue working under present conditions after the expiration of the contract on Apr. 30, provided changes which may be made are made retroactive to May 1.

COME ON IN—THE WATER'S FINE!

Time To Speak Up

The Congressional Record makes shocking reading these days. Speech after speech is made slandering and denouncing American working people and their unions.

Poll-tax Congressmen and the political henchmen of big business reaction vie with each other in their unmeasured abuse and in their efforts to work up an anti-labor hysteria.

There have always been loud-mouthed baloney-slingers who seek to attract political attention by such antics. But the extent of the present attacks on labor in Congress indicate that this is much more than a hot-air salesmen's jamboree.

Behind all these cynical lies and these hysterical tirades is a deliberate plot, in which a large section of Congress participates, to push through legislation to hamstring the unions and to take away the right to strike.

John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, warns in a recent circular letter that the unions, and with them the wages and working conditions of millions of workers, are in immediate danger from this anti-labor drive.

One of the favorite excuses of the anti-union Congressmen is that "the people back home" are demanding anti-strike legislation. They claim to receive many letters blaming the unions for everything and opposing their efforts to obtain decent conditions—and this at a time when profiteers are running hog-wild and causing such stoppages as occur through their refusal to bargain collectively and their defiance of the National Labor Relations Act.

Write at once to your Congressmen and Senators. Take action through your unions and other bodies to which you belong. Let the people who are supposed to represent you in Congress know the real facts about the labor situation. Tell them that the people back home don't want the unions hogtied and crushed, and wages kept down, at the behest of profiteering corporations and their stooges.

And if your representative claims to be a friend of labor, ask him why he does not raise his voice against the vile anti-labor slanders that are daily voiced in Congress. If he wants labor to stand by him at the polls, he had better stand up for labor now.

Vindication

The CIO today is being abused and slandered with much the same ferocity and injustice as was the case in 1937, during the "Little Steel" strike.

There is therefore some present consolation in the knowledge that the smears and slanders of 1937 have all been disproved by subsequent governmental investigations, which have found the independent steel companies to be the parties responsible for nearly everything for which the CIO was so bitterly attacked.

The recently published report of the LaFollette civil liberties committee, like the Labor Board reports on the same subject, clearly shows that the CIO and the workers were the victims not the instigators of the industrial troubles and violence of 1937.

"The bloodshed, bitterness and economic disorganization of communities resulting from the 'Little Steel' strike might easily have been avoided had the companies conformed to the laws of the United States, instead of ranging their combined economic strength and the prestige and influence of their employer associations in opposition to collective bargaining," says the Senate committee's report.

The same can be said for such industrial stoppages as have recently occurred. Labor has sought to keep the wheels of industry turning, and stoppages have only occurred through lockouts by the employers or due to their refusal to conform to the orderly collective bargaining procedures which the law required.

Eventually the CIO will also be vindicated of all the present propaganda charges. Why not now?

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

WHEN Moses organized the Children of Israel to lead them out of Egypt, the press was definitely peeved. The Pyramid Times published a powerful editorial declaring that un-Egyptian influences were at work among the hewers of wood and drawers of water; that public opinion was turning violently against them; and that stringent measures should be taken against any walkout.

When the American colonists organized the union which later became the United States of America, British and American tories yelled more loudly than a dozen Congressfuls of Coxes, Hoffmans and Dies. Subversive and un-British influences from revolutionary France were responsible, they said; and the public would not long tolerate their violent tactics and irresponsible leadership.

When labor unions were first organized, press, politicians and public opinion denounced them as a communistic conspiracy, punishable by jail and deportation.

When the CIO, in 1937, was at the crest of its first great organizing wave, sweeping millions of workers into the union ranks, the caterwauling in Congress, the cartoons and condemnations in the press, and the swooshing sound of hundreds of liberals wringing their hands — all proclaimed that poor old "public opinion" was again supposed to be on the rampage.

And now today, so help us, in this year of 1941, we have the whole blessed caboodle in full cry once more. The cat-calls and catch-cries of 1937, the speeches and editorials that have been used against every emancipation movement in history—all are repeated again and again. The Dies committee revives its 1937 lists and its anti-CIO lies. And you can hardly turn around without stepping into a puddle of crocodile tears from erstwhile liberals who impartially pan labor for capital's crimes.

WHAT'S all the bull-shooting about? If you look below the surface, you will find that what draws the bitterest cries of anguish from the tories of each generation is the big forward moves of the progressive forces to whom the future belongs.

Even the Pyramid Times displayed tolerance and condescension to the Children of Israel, so long as they did not become so un-Egyptian as to kick about their working conditions.

Similarly the musty old AFL achieved all the respectability of decrepitude. Its every failure to organize brought new invitations to Bill Green to address Rotary clubs and chambers of commerce, which boasted of their open minds as well as their open shops.

Even the CIO was treated with restraint and curiosity until its success became too sweeping. That was "going too far", and in 1937 the anti-union terrorism of the Little Steel companies, their highly financed propaganda campaigns, and the labor-baiting hysteria of their stooges in Congress, were proclaimed to be a "revolt of public opinion against CIO excesses."

TODAY the CIO is making one of the most sweeping general advances in world labor history. Its wage negotiations in the coal, steel, automobile and other basic industries are winning increased pay and improved conditions for millions of workers. Millions more will benefit as these basic agreements set the pattern for all industry.

Great anti-union citadels, like the Ford Motor Co., and Bethlehem Steel, which never before have yielded to collective bargaining, are being won or will soon be won by the advancing army of the CIO.

These advances into unorganized territory are already reflected in huge membership increases. And when they are registered in the anticipated victories in scheduled Labor Board elections and in union agreements, the day of complete union organization in the major industries will be close at hand.

ALL this, of course, to the tories is "going too far." It disturbs the status quo. It infringes on vested interests. It threatens to reduce inflated war profits.

So every hoary hoax is pulled out of the tories' bag of tricks. The big-money boys get busy and their politician puppets pop up and down in Congress denouncing American working people for being locked out by profiteering, lawbreaking corporations.

The Dies committee digs into its stock of lies and libels to smear patriotic Americans every time they are engaged in negotiations to advance the American standard of living and industrial democracy.

Newspaper publishers take up the hue and cry, glossing over the profit-grabbing iniquities that provoke industrial unrest, and seeking to whip up the anti-labor hysteria which many claim to deplore.

All of this organized agitation is proclaimed to represent an "aroused public opinion" which has turned against labor. And behind this smokescreen, the hard-faced tories of big business reaction chuckle over the chance it gives them to cover up their profiteering and to promote anti-labor legislation.

But the growing millions of the CIO have no cause for discouragement. Their consciences are clear. They know that American labor is the backbone and bulwark of democracy; that employer trouble not labor trouble causes such stoppages as may occur; and that the propaganda attacks on labor are due to the very fact that labor is strong and advancing.

CIO Wins 75-Day Allis Strike; Union Hails Pact

WEST ALLIS, Wis., Apr. 12.—Their 75-day strike objectives gained, 7,600 CIO workers today were back on the job at the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co.

The settlement, worked out in conjunction with the Natl. Defense Mediation Board in Washington, went farther in support of the union's demand for security and wage increases than had the OPM formula which the company turned down early in March.

Reached after a long session in Washington, the peace formula provides that the company will recognize the status of Local 248, United Automobile Workers, as sole bargaining agency, and will permit no employe to conduct activities which might undermine the union.

That concession, together with a promise to begin immediate negotiations for a blanket wage increase, meets the local's original demand for union security.

KEY SENTENCE

While the agreement contains no reference to the union shop, UAW local officials pointed to a key sentence stating: "It is expected that by union members remaining in good standing, such interference with shop discipline will be reduced."

Thus the agreement signed by the company in effect recommends membership in the CIO local as the best method for reaching full industrial peace in the Allis plant. While workers may not be disciplined for not joining Local 248, efforts to disrupt the union will immediately be reviewed by a permanent impartial referee who will be selected by the union and the company, or by the Natl. Defense Mediation Board if they cannot agree. The referee will have the power to dismiss or discipline any persons whose cases are brought before him.

Since a major complaint of the workers has been that a small group of company-subsidized or company-supported disruptors have been actively seeking to smash the powerful local, the establishment of the referee system will serve to end this type of anti-union activity.

The contract signed by UAW representatives and the company will run indefinitely, with either side being able to ask for changes after a year has passed.

RATIFIED BY LOCAL

The agreement, worked out at a 16-hour conference in Washington, was ratified immediately after Local 248 leaders read and explained the settlement to a union mass meeting at the Coliseum here.

The victory came after strikebreaking efforts by OPM Director General Knudsen and Sec. of Navy Knox had failed to put through a strikebreaking back-to-work order, and after local police and deputies had admitted defeat in their attempts to smash the local's picket lines.

The violence caused by the strikebreaking efforts attracted national attention on the strike, which hitherto had been completely peaceful. Lost in the maze of anti-union propaganda which sprouted in the nation's press was the fact that Local 248 accepted the original OPM settlement on March 1, but the company refused.

LEADER'S STATEMENT

"We have defeated the combined efforts of the police, the courts, the employers and Washington to break the strike, and we won a real victory," Harold Christoffel, local president, declared.

"Even if we had gained nothing else, the fact that we were able to hold out against Knudsen and Knox's back-to-work order, that we went to Washington to mediate without going back to work, is a tremendous victory."

Signing the agreement for the union were Christoffel; George Nordstrom, UAW regional director; Ed Hall, UAW international representative; and Fred McStroul, Carl Hafferkamp and Frank Bolka, local officers. Max Babb, company president, signed for Allis-Chalmers.

On the mediation board panel were William H. Davis, Eugene Meyer, Cyrus Ching, Robert Watt of the AFL and Vice-Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO, who has been appointed an alternate member of the Board by Pres. Roosevelt.

The strike was called on January 22.

SHAVES: Those 76-day-old whiskers have been shaved off by Walter Kondrowsky, one of the 7,600 striking CIO workers at the Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. He vowed he wouldn't shave until the union won. It did, and the whiskers have gone with the wind.

Dies Smear Efforts Under Fire

Birmingham, Ala., Apr. 12.—Efforts of Rep. Martin Dies of Texas to smear William Mitch, CIO leader here, as a "Communist" today had stirred up a hornet's nest of criticism in the daily press.

When the storm had blown over, the Texas labor-baiter found this reaction: a statement of denial by Mitch, speeches by Alabama's two U. S. Senators praising the CIO leader, and editorials condemning Dies' action in three Birmingham papers.

Mitch's name was contained in a list inserted by Dies in the Congressional Record. On the list were scores of high-ranking CIO officials, whose indignant denials are flooding the mail in Dies' office.

Mitch, who is district president of the United Mine Workers, regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and president of the Alabama CIO Council, declared:

"The charge is part of the labor-baiting propaganda that Dies, representing the big oil interests of Texas, has been carrying on. . .I recognize that business has its definite rights, but among those rights is not the privilege of paying labor baiters in Congress to attempt to discredit representatives of America's working people."

In Congress Senators Bankhead and Hill praised Mitch's services to labor and the community. Birmingham papers described Dies' charges as "absurd, hysterical and ignorant."

Golden, Rieve On Board

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12.—Pres. Roosevelt has named two CIO union leaders as alternate members of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

Appointed by the President were CIO Vice-Pres. Emil Rieve, who is president of the Textile Workers Union; and Clinton Golden, northeastern regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

To Appeal Discharge Of Unionist

New York, Apr. 12.—Discharge from the New York City Sanitation Dept. of a leading CIO worker will be immediately contested by the Sanitation Workers Organizing Committee, it was announced today by Pres. Abram Flaxer of the State, County and Municipal Workers.

The discharged employe was James Griesi, an assistant foreman and a veteran of 13 years in the department. Charges were brought against him by Sanitation Commission after he had appeared on a union-sponsored radio program and described bad working conditions and heavy discipline for minor infraction of departmental rules.

Originally charged with "conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline" and with "incivility or discourteous conduct," Griesi was given a hearing and then dismissed under a completely different departmental rule—"direct refusal to obey orders."

The drive in the Dept. of Sanitation has made fast progress, CIO leaders said.

CIO Hosiery Strike Strong In 3rd Week

Martinsburg, W. Va., Apr. 12.—An anti-union injunction, secured without a hearing or publicity, today had failed to break the strike of several hundred CIO workers at the Interwoven Stocking Co. here.

The strike, against the country's largest branded half hosiery manufacturer, was called three weeks ago by Branch 92 of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

The court order, obtained in the names of a group of workers who allegedly wished to return to work, forbade lawful picketing and any interference by "act, word or deed" with strikebreakers' entrance or exit at the mill.

Despite the injunction, however, fewer workers entered the plant the next day than had gone in a week before. The union meanwhile called for a government investigation of the court's action.

A campaign to call to the attention of all union members throughout the country of the company's attitude has been launched by the AFHW. The company's chief competitor is the Phoenix Hosiery Co., which operates under a CIO closed shop.

WARNING TO LABOR:

Stem Tory Tide In Congress

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12.—Emergency calls to all CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League units throughout the country to push their campaigns against anti-strike legislation were sent out this week by John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and LNPL director.

The letters warned that Congressmen are bowing to the demands of labor-baiters, and said one major reason was that "your opinion—the biggest part of public opinion—has not been heard."

"Your unions," Jones wrote, "are in immediate danger." Pointing out that a "large section of Congress" is following the reactionary leadership of "the reactionary press, the big employers and their anti-labor allies," the CIO official declared:

"These are hard cold facts, not rumor or guessing."

WRITE TO CONGRESS

Urging an immediate flood of letters be sent to Congressmen by union members and their families, Jones said:

"This drive against you, against labor everywhere, is succeeding. Congressmen are receiving a flood of letters from the 'folks back home' demanding anti-strike legislation. Congressmen have heard nothing from labor back home.

"Why? Because labor has not written these letters. Because labor has not informed Congressmen and Senators of the facts. Because labor has not told the members of Congress that employers are refusing to bargain collectively with their workers, are provoking strikes, are taking a big grab in profits while they refuse any advance in wages to meet rising living costs."

CIO Wins At Ford!

second week, there came an end to the violence which had accompanied Ford efforts to break the picket line and the strikers' morale. The company agreed to keep its plant shut — a move described by the UAW as its first victory in the strike.

So effective was the strike in totally crippling production at River Rouge that the company announced its assembly plants throughout the country had shut down for lack of materials.

Clothing Union Hits Strike Curbs

New York, Apr. 12.—The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, speaking on behalf of 260,000 members, today called upon all its affiliated joint boards and local unions to oppose bills recently introduced into Congress designed to prohibit or drastically curtail the right to strike.

In a communication addressed to Amalgamated affiliates, Jacob S. Potofsky, general secretary-treasurer, and Frank Rosenblum, vice-president, declared that "organized labor has and will continue to give its full and wholehearted cooperation to the national defense effort."

The clothing workers' union declared that the great majority of strikes, which have occurred, were precipitated by the refusal of the employers to obey the law of the land as embodied in the Wagner Act.

"Ford and Bethlehem, to cite but two examples," the union statement declared, "have flagrantly violated the Wagner Act and decisions of the Labor Board made under it."

No Strikebreaker, The Duchess

Philadelphia, April 12.— Grand Duchess Charlotte, refugee ruler of Luxembourg, was spared the need for walking through a picket line here at reception tendered by the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania for the benefit of the British-American Ambulance Corps.

The affair had originally been scheduled for the Penn Athletic Club, where a strike of CIO Hotel & Restaurant Workers has been in progress for several months.

Efforts to convince fashionable sponsors to move the affair to another hotel were unsuccessful.

So Martin Coffey, business agent of the local, got busy with wires to Lord Halifax, British Ambassador in Washington, and to the Duchess, pointing out the embarassment to the Duchess and her cause if she were forced to walk through the picket line.

Somebody in Washington got busy, and accomplished what the local big-wigs refused. They moved the affair to the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, which is 100 per cent organized.

NLRB Asks Court Cite Bethlehem For 'Contempt'

BOSTON, Mass., Apr. 12.—Bethlehem Steel Co. should be held in contempt of court—

That was the request made today by the National Labor Relations Board of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals here, as it charged the company with violating an order to end all domination of its employes' organizations at the Boston and Fore River shipyards.

Named in the Board's petition were Pres. Eugene Grace and other high officials of the company.

The NLRB petition recalled that its order against Bethlehem Shipyards was handed down on Feb. 10, 1939, and was backed up by the Circuit Court on Oct. 8, 1940.

The NLRB order demanded withdrawal of recognition from the Employes Representation Plan — whose sister organizations were the provocation which recently led to CIO strikes at three Bethlehem Steel plants.

PRETENDED TO COMPLY

"The company pretended compliance with the court's decree," the Board charged, "but . . . the disestablished plan at the Fore River Yard was almost immediately succeeded by an organization known as the Independent Union of Fore River Workers, officered largely by leaders of the former Plan and, as the Plan, given support and recognition by the company."

Efforts of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, which has organized Fore River's several thousand employes, were unsuccessful.

FAVORED FAKE OUTFIT

When both the CIO union and the "independent" sought recognition, the company favored the latter outfit with advance information about a wage increase, in order to give its officers a chance to claim the credit, the NLRB said.

On Feb. 9 of this year, the company formally recognized the company union in its new dress, although "Bethlehem at all times has well known or had reason to believe that the Independent, by virtue of being the same as or successor to the Plan . . . was not entitled to recognition."

Washington.—The NLRB has ordered an election to determine whether or not employes of the Sivyer Steel Casting Co., Chicago, wish to be represented by the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Stock Sales Ghost Haunts Wire Firm

New York, Apr. 12.—The ghost of an old scheme of high-pressuring employes into buying company stock came back to haunt the Western Union Telegraph Co. this week.

For the dull routine of the corporation's annual shareholders' meeting was upset by a delegation of stock-owning employes who demanded that the company grant wage increases to its thousands of workers.

Charles Bardunias, veteran telegraph operator and a member of the CIO American Communications Assn., told the small group of stockholders assembled in the company's lavish offices, that the workers "have not received a raise in 12 years."

PRESENTS PETITION

Later in the meeting, Sidney Cohen, ACA counsel, presented a petition signed by thousands of employes which backed up the union's wage demand.

The resolution charged that Western Union's 1940 profit of $3,621,000—a 163 per cent jump over 1939—was made possible by "the increased production and speed-up of Western Union employes to the point of exhaustion."

Correction

The CIO NEWS regrets the implication made in a news item appearing in the March 24 issue that negotiations begun with the National Maritime Union were the first union negotiations entered into by the Cities Service Company. We are informed that a number of agreements are in effect between the company and the Oil Workers International Union, in so far as its field production and refining are concerned.

DOG NIPS MAN DEPT.:

A duPont Blasts Anti-Labor Policy of Bethlehem

WILMINGTON, Del., Apr. 12.—A gentle-voiced 72-year-old lady this week proved to be the little star of Bethlehem Steel Corp.'s annual stockholders' meeting.

She was Miss Zara duPont, first cousin of the heads of the duPont industrial empire, and a veteran fighter for human rights.

As a minority shareholder in Bethlehem, she appeared at the annual meeting of the company, read off a 1,300-word statement which made mincemeat of the firm's long anti-labor policy and had Pres. Eugene Grace hanging on the ropes.

But her proposals for immediate reform of the company's labor relations attitude were voted down in an avalanche of proxies held by the 50 persons attending the meeting.

ASKS LAW OBSERVANCE

Only four votes were cast for Miss duPont's resolution that "all labor laws especially the Natl. Labor Relations Act, shall be obeyed" and that Bethlehem "grant an immediate adjustment of wages commensurate with the increased earnings of the company."

Miss duPont also urged in vain that the company set a $50,000 ceiling on salaries and bonuses until the annual wage of the lowest-paid worker is $2,000, and that pensions for executives be limited to $15,000 until the workers' minimum is $1,000.

Grace, whose 1938 income was close to $400,000 (six officials received almost a million dollars), handled the speaker with kid gloves. He said there has been a "great deal of misunderstanding about Bethlehem's labor policy," and asserted that the employes can have any form of bargaining they want.

While the meeting was in progress, the Natl. Labor Relations Board had asked a federal court in Boston to hold Bethlehem's subsidiary shipyard company in contempt for recognition of a company union after the court had ordered the fake outfit's complete dissolution.

EDITOR IS CRITICAL

Grace was embarrassed once again by proposals put forth by Alexander Crosby, news editor of the Federated Press, labor news service. Crosby held proxies for stock owned by Carl Haessler, of the United Automobile Worker, official UAW paper.

Crosby asked the company to sever all tie-ups with company-dominated unions, post notices to this effect and "proceed with diligence and speed" to negotiate bona fide union contracts. He also received four votes, among them Miss duPont's.

CHARGES SABOTAGE

Miss duPont charged that Bethlehem, through its low-wage and anti-union policies, is "subverting democracy" and "sabotaging national defense."

After the meeting, Miss duPont entrained immediately for her Boston home without visiting her wealthy relatives, whose estates dot the countryside around Wilmington.

"We are still on speaking terms," she explained with a twinkle in her eyes, "but we disagree about a great many things."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Prompt acceptance by the United Auto Workers of Governor Van Wagoner's proposal to end the Ford strike should go a long way to demonstrate again that the CIO is always anxious to settle its disputes with employers in the quickest and most sensible fashion possible.

It should prove to our critics that the CIO does not engage in strikes just for the sake of raising trouble, that it does not try to prolong them when they do happen, and that our CIO unions are as anxious as any other group or individual in the country to settle them quickly and fairly.

It should prove these things. CIO members and all honest people generally know them. Some of our critics—particularly the owners of newspapers and certain Congressmen—have deliberately chosen to suppress or distort these truths in an attempt to mislead the public. This attempt won't succeed, for the answer to such distortions lies in such actions as our acceptance of the Governor's proposal.

DIFFICULT TASK

The task of working out a fair settlement for the Ford strike has been a difficult one. Day and night attendance at conferences, much patience and unlimited hard work have been required. I have been in on these meetings, and I know the amount of work involved.

Great credit should go to Ford Organizing Committee Director Michael F. Widman, Jr., not only for his work in these meetings but for his leadership in the job of organizing Ford workers to the point where they could present their demands in an organized, united way. Similar credit should go to CIO President Philip Murray, to UAWA President R. J. Thomas, and to all the officers in the Ford drive and to the Ford workers themselves.

A TURN COMING

Reaction has been having its innings for some months past now, chiefly expressed in anti-labor plans in Congress and in the press to destroy labor's right to organize and to take strike action when necessary. Every polltax statesman on Capitol Hill has been sounding off on the subject—one of them recently recommended the electric chair for strikers. And of course they've been getting full space in the newspapers. All they have to do to rate page one is to attack labor.

But CIO has been going ahead despite all the attacks and threats, and CIO has been winning. The settlement in coal, almost completed at the time of writing, the great success of the strike at Ford, the progress in steel negotiations, all bear witness to the strength of the CIO.

And when these current disputes are finally settled, on fair and decent terms, we can expect a turn in the tide. Maybe the polltax bravos from the sweatshop belt will still continue their hysterical outbursts. Maybe the newspapers will continue to fill their editorials with slanders and distortions about the CIO.

But these major victories, already accomplished or in the making, will prove to the American people that the CIO is strong, united, and able to win improvements in working and living standards for its members and for all workers.

FOUR MINERS DEAD: Coal miners crowd the Harlan Hospital at Harlan County, Ky., as four dead and four wounded members of the CIO United Mine Workers are brought in after a machine gun attack on union members at the Crummies Coal Mine.

Longshoremen Back Bridges

LOS ANGELES, Apr. 12.—Industrial overlords and their political henchmen are behind the current attacks on labor, including the deportation proceedings against himself, Pres. Harry Bridges told the delegates to the annual convention of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's convention now in session here.

Bridges accused the FBI of now doing for nothing the type of labor spying for which leading anti-union employers formerly spent hundreds of thousands of dollars, as revealed by the investigations of the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee.

SPIES TESTIFY

The new deportation move against Bridges which opened in San Francisco March 31, is based on the testimony of spies and stoolpigeons unearthed by the FBI.

"I suppose some of them are with us here," Bridges said. "I hope they are—they'll see democracy at work."

The convention adopted a new constitution providing for needed organizational changes and greater unity within the international and passed a number of resolutions backing the stand taken by the national CIO on national issues affecting labor.

WIRE PROTEST

Delegates also voted to send telegrams to Pres. Roosevelt and Secretary of War Stimson protesting a plan said to be under way to send a Negro labor battalion to Hawaii to unload Army transports, and pointing out that "expert longshoremen, members of our union, sufficient to handle all work to be performed in the islands are available."

Scores of resolutions from local unions condemning the attempts to deport Pres. Bridges were turned over to the resolutions committee which drew up a strong resolution of support passed by the convention with a roar of approval.

Delegates voted to adjourn today to permit Bridges to return to the deportation hearings in San Francisco, which were recessed for one week to permit him to attend the convention.

Big Response For Defense Of Bridges

San Francisco, Apr. 12.—Response to Pres. Murray's urging of aid to the Harry Bridges defense is coming in in very concrete form, both in money contributed to aid the case and in the setting up of local defense groups throughout the nation.

At the same time, the defense group here was fighting a refusal by all except one of the west coast radio stations to sell time for Bridges defense broadcasts.

"We are bringing this deplorable situation to your attention," the committee wired to President Roosevelt, "because we believe we should have the opportunity of supplying 200,000 CIO members with the service they demand. Knowing your views on a free press into which category radio certainly falls, we have no hesitancy in bringing this matter to your attention and trust a remedy will be found."

In the meantime, one of the government's witnesses against Bridges was said by defense leaders to have been a "confessed informer," adding that his "application for a job as a labor spy with the Glenn Bodell Detective Agency, his many conferences and reports to Police Captain Wm. Hynes of the notorious 'Red Squad' and his other admitted anti-union activities," label him a spy.

UTICA, N. Y., Apr. 12.—Striking workers at the Utica & Mohawk Cotton Mills here had voted overwhelmingly in a Labor Board election for the CIO Textile Workers Union.

The CIO affiliate received 1,456 votes, while only 219 voted against.

The election definitely established the union's right as sole bargaining agency, denial of which had caused a spontaneous walkout on March 24. The company later agreed to negotiate and sign a contract if the union were to win the vote.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said he would seek negotiations immediately.

SILK CONTRACT

Meanwhile Rieve, TWUA Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi and Regional Director James Kelly announced that the union had signed a closed shop contract with the Duplan Silk Corp., covering 2,500 employes in its plants at Berwick, Hazleton and Kingston, Pa.

The renewed agreement provides for the checkoff and wage increases totaling more than $200,000. The pact runs for three years.

The union also announced signature of the first known written agreement between a Maine textile company and a union. The firm is the Androscoggin Mill at Lewiston.

$1,500,000 Pay Increase

New York, Apr. 12.—Wage increases running up to $1,500,000 a year were announced today by the Textile Workers Union for 18,000 employes of the American Viscose Corp.

The pay raises, amounting to 5 cents an hour for men and three cents hourly for women, were negotiated by TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve and Herbert Payne, head of the union's synthetic yarn division. The company, largest synthetic yarn manufacturer in the world, operates seven plants throughout Virginia, West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The pact provides vacations with pay, arbitration of disputes, check-off of union dues and dismissal wages. The agreement protects employes laid off because of technological changes by providing dismissal wages of one week's pay for each year of service.

UPROOTED FAMILY: With all its meager possessions, this family, like thousands of others, is roaming the countryside in the hope of landing a defense "boom" job. Congressional committee this week issued its first report on workers' migrations, prepared for a further two-year study.

Textile Union Sweeps Maine Poll

New York, April 5 — Workers of the Continental Mill, Lewiston, Maine, voted 605 to 274 for the CIO Textile Workers Union in a Labor Board election held this week, TWU president Emile Rieve announced today.

This is the second mill in Lewiston to join the TWU within the past six months, Rieve said. An agreement with the Androscoggin Mills, where an election was won last fall, was ratified recently by the workers.

Both mills granted 10 per cent wage increases incident to negotiations carried on nationally by the TWU.

George Jabar, TWU director in Maine, in charge of the drive in that state, announced that the campaign will now be extended to the remaining unorganized textile mills in the Lewiston area.

Shoe Union To Seek 20% Pay Increases

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12.—Wage increases of 20% will be a basic demand for newly organized workers in the shoe industry if the proposal of United Shoe Workers Pres. Frank McGrath is adopted by the General Executive Board when it meets in Baltimore this week.

President McGrath, Secretary James J. Mitchell, and the members of the Board will also confer with CIO Shoe Organizing Director, Walter Harris, who has been in St. Louis, Missouri, laying plans for the organizing drive in that area.

GETTING PAY BOOSTS

Substantial wage gains are being secured or will be sought in the near future for all workers now operating under union agreement as provided in a clause permitting wage increases to offset rising cost of living and increased prices in the shoe industry.

McGrath's proposal of a 20 per cent increase for those working under so-called independent and company unions will tend to bring their wage rates to a level comparable with those working now under USWA, CIO contract.

President McGrath cited government figures recently released by the Federal Trade Commission to show that wage increases requested could be paid out of the present high profits in the industry. He cited profits of one of the 16 largest shoe corporations running as high as 22.3 per cent, with an average for the 16 firms representing half the industry of 9.6 per cent for the year 1939.

Union Wins Coast GM Walkout

Oakland, Calif., Apr. 12.—(FP)—The CIO United Automobile Workers has won its strike against General Motors' four plants here.

Twenty-four of the 26 welders whose discharge caused the first walkout are to be reinstated immediately, and the cases of the other two will be settled by the impartial umpire provided by a general agreement betwen UAW and GM.

The strike started March 18 when the company disregarded grievance committee provisions of the contract and fired 26 welders for objecting to speed-up. In all, 2,250 men in four plants were on

Plane Firms' Hiring Policy Would Bar Jobs to OPM Heads

LOS ANGELES, Calif., April 12—Discriminatory practices now being conducted by southwestern aircraft corporations would bar both William Knudsen and Sidney Hillman, OPM heads, from jobs with the companies, Los Angeles CIO unions charged today.

A spokesman for the United Automobile Workers' aircraft division asserted that for the past few months local aircraft companies have instituted a hiring policy which denies jobs to applicants whose parents were not born in this country.

Even though the job-seekers themselves were born in the United States, the UAW leaders pointed out, the fact that their parents had been immigrants was cause for refusal of employment — this at a time when the manufacturers are claiming a shortage of skilled workers.

The discrimination was vigorously condemned recently by the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, which pointed out there "is no such thing as a class B American."

Warning that the discriminatory practices would be used to try splitting the CIO aircraft union, the council pointed out that even before the ban on sons of immigrants, Negroes, Orientals and Mexicans were being deprived of the right to work in the aircraft plants.

"In the interest of our national welfare," the resolution said, "all the skill and ability at the nation's command should be enlisted, but manufacturers are depriving capable workmen of jobs."

Shun Anti-Strike Laws, House Group Told

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12. — Drastic laws forbidding the right to strike are neither necessary nor wise, a string of high government officials told the House Military Affairs Committee in the first week of its probe into the defense situation here.

The witnesses included Sidney Hillman, associate director of OPM; Wm. S. Knudsen, director; Labor Secretary Frances Perkins, Wm. H. Davis of the new Natl. Mediation Board, and John D. Biggers, head of production at OPM.

Davis was emphatic in opposing anti-strike legislation. "There is no use in America producing defense materials if it is a nation of slaves," he said. "History has shown that any military establishment that has to depend on slaves to produce its defense materials is inevitably destroyed."

Such laws prohibiting strikes would be telling the worker "you must work against your will," he added. Laws restricting jurisdictional strikes, union organizing strikes and imposing compulsory arbitration would amount to involuntary servitude, he indicated. Compulsory "cooling-off" periods before strikes could be called would have the same effect.

THE SOUND WAY

The only sound way to avoid strikes was for management to accept collective bargaining as outlined in the National Labor Relations Act, he continued, adding that labor "ought to fight it out before the National Labor Relations Board, using their legal means, and not use force."

Miss Perkins was also opposed to compulsory "cooling-off," declaring that any such procedure should be voluntary on the part of unions, and should be incorporated in contracts with management.

CAUSE OF DISPUTES

Disputes are caused by failure to bargain in good faith, she added, citing "lack of mutual confidence as between the particular employers and particular labor group" as the cause of stoppages.

Both Miss Perkins and Sidney Hillman pointed to the increasing cooperation between management and labor as further evidence that restrictive laws were not needed nor advisable. "Never in my experience has there been so much cooperation between labor and management as there is right now," he said.

He urged that labor problems be looked at "coolly and calmly."

FALSE ISSUE

Both agreed that the question of "Communism"" raised in the press and in Congress in regard to recent strikes was a false issue, Hillman retorting to one question about the Ford strike that he had ordered an investigation that satisfied him the Ford strike was not led by Communists.

There were some qualifications in the testimony, notably from Knudsen and Biggers. OPM director Knudsen, formerly president of General Motors and now top man in allocating billions of dollars worth of arms orders, thought that the "cooling-off" period idea was a good one, though he was opposed to a general ban on strikes.

Biggers was less definite in his suggestions, replying on a vague generalization about "selfishness" which he seemed to impute largely to labor leaders. This selfishness, which he opposed strongly, could lead to difficulties in production, he indicated.

Ask Veto For Transit Bill In N. Y.

New York, April 12. — CIO Transport Workers here are asking Governor Lehman for open hearings on the Wicks bill, jammed through the N. Y. State Legislature and designed to make strike action by transit workers subject to severe criminal penalties.

The request was made by TWU President Michael Quill, who wired the Governor: "The Hitler-like secrecy and speed with which it was blitzkrieged through both houses of the legislature makes it imperative that the opposition to this bill, which would impose voluntary servitude upon transit workers, in violation of our state and federal constitutions be given a full public hearing."

Murray Raps LaGuardia For Anti-Union Stand

WASHINGTON, Apr. 12. — Statements by New York's Mayor LaGuardia that the city will not bargain with the Transport Workers Union on wages and working conditions for subway workers drew a sharp reply from CIO President Philip Murray today.

Pointing out that the Board of Transportation which operates the subways has a duty under law to negotiate in good faith with the union, Murray wrote:

"To deny the employes of this Board the right to collective bargaining in respect to their wages, hours and working conditions is to place them at the mercy of three men with unlimited power.

"There is as much legal and moral justification for such a course as there would have been in placing these workers at the mercy of the Board of Directors of the companies which formerly operated these lines."

Following up his declaration, the Mayor started a court attack on the TWU by starting suit to upset contracts already held. Notice was served on the union that the city would start suit in the local Supreme Court claiming that the city did not have authority to carry out provisions of the agreements assumed by it when the transit lines were taken over from private management.

LaGuardia's statements, made public earlier, were in the form of a letter to the Board of Transportation that amounted to a go-ahead signal for a flat refusal both to bargain collectively and to honor union contracts assumed by the city when it took over the lines.

Among other points, the Mayor made his opinion clear that subway workers have none of the rights enjoyed by other workers throughout the country, basing his statements on the claim that civil service laws must control all conditions.

"The city does not and cannot recognize the right of any group to strike," he said, nor can wages and working conditions be fixed "by separate and private agreements"—i.e., union contracts.

"It seems to me that in denying employes on the New York city owned transit lines the right to collective bargaining, you have lost sight of factors which should have led you to a different conclusion.

"The operation of transit lines is not like the maintenace of the police or fire departments. The latter constitutes the performance of a governmental function. The operation of a transit line is a business enterprise. It is commercial venture in which money may be made or lost," he wrote.

"I know of no law, and I am certain you can point to none, which prohibits the all-powerful Board of Transportation from dealing with labor, as it does with steel, coal and other corporations, namely, through the negotiation of contracts which will define the terms and conditions under which the employes shall work."

PRAISES TWU

Murray praised the Transport Workers Union for its "sober statement of principles" in which the union asked for a conference with the Mayor, and urged LaGuardia to call such a meeting at which Murray would attend. Such a conference, he wrote, should help in "arriving at a reasonable solution of the labor relations problem on New York City transit lines."

CIO Wins Pay Boosts For 530,000 in Steel

Ten Cent Increase Won by SWOC; Coal Pact Near

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19.—The CIO today had scored a major triumph in its campaign to lift the income of the nation's industrial workers.

Within a week after the signing of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee contract with the U. S. Steel Corp., 10-cent wage raises had been extended to cover 535,000 out of 600,000 steel workers.

In New York, meanwhile, northern bituminous coal operators had agreed to a new contract with the United Mine Workers that will lift wages $1 a day. Last remaining stumbling block before 400,000 miners can return to their jobs was the attitude of the southern operators, who have been attempting to resist the union's demand for elimination of regional wage differentials.

Representatives of the UMW's 100,000 anthracite miners continued negotiations, also in New York, for a new agreement to replace the present contract which expires April 30.

Negotiations for 10 cent wage increases for 100,000 employes of the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., with the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers were in progress. The UE announced that it had won a 10 cent increase for 4,700 workers employed by the Westinghouse Airbrake Co. in Pittsburgh.

Signing of the U. S. Steel pact, which will run indefinitely, was hailed by SWOC Chairman Philip Murray as showing "that where labor and industry work together in good faith there need be no apprehension in the public mind concerning the production of goods and materials essential for the national welfare."

U. S. 'Freezes' Steel Price at Current Level

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19.—The government today had taken quick action to forestall possible rises in the price of iron or steel.

In the first major action taken by the newly-created Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply, defense price administrator Leon Henderson issued a blanket order freezing iron and steel prices at the present level.

In making public his action, Henderson declared that a rise in steel prices might quickly spread to other basic products and "start the country off on the road to inflation."

Steel price rises, he said, "would inevitably be followed by rises in the prices of every other basic commodity. Presently the ultimate consumer would find he must pay more for what he buys and so the foundation would have been laid for a dangerous upward spiral of prices in general—which would mean, briefly, boosting the cost of living."

Benefits Of Unionism

LOS ANGELES, Apr. 19—New proof that CIO organization improves rather than hinders production was reported today by the Ryan Aeronautical Co.

Ryan signed with the CIO Automobile Workers last January. This week he reported that deliveries of exhaust manifolds, used in airplanes, were ahead of schedule.

Big Raises Won In Baltimore

Baltimore, Apr. 19.—Wage increases totaling over $42,500 were won today for employes of the Glidden Paint Co. by District 50, United Mine Workers.

The pact provides for time and a half for overtime, and states that union men shall be given preference in the hiring of new employes. It also brought the rehiring with uninterrupted seniority for S. R. Weaver, local president, who was dismissed for union activities several months ago.

Meanwhile, the Textile Workers Union announced a contract with the Mt. Vernon-Woodberry Mills here had upped the payroll by $27,000 a year.

Alcoa To Get Pay Demands

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa., Apr. 19.—With the monopolistic Aluminum Co. of America reporting record-high profits, the CIO Aluminum Workers announced today it would open wage negotiations with the company on May 1.

Pres. Nicholas Zonarich of the AWA said representatives of the union from five company plants in New Kensington and Edgewater, N. J., Alcoa, Tenn., Detroit and Badin, N. C., would meet for preliminary discussions on April 29.

The company, he pointed out, made $44,146,297 in net profits last year.

But, he added, "the Aluminum Co. of America, enjoying the greatest profits in its history, has not been sharing its prosperity with the thousands of workers in its various plants.

"The unhealthful gap between profits and wages is growing wider and wider, while the aluminum worker is discovering that his dollar is buying less and less."

Shoe Union Asks Higher Minimum

Baltimore, Md., Apr. 19.—Plans to seek a raise in the government-established minimum wage for the shoe industry were announced today by the General Executive Board of the CIO United Shoe Workers.

The union sent a letter to Wage-Hour Administrator Philip Fleming asking that the present minimum of 35 cents an hour be raised to 40 cents. Conditions have so changed since the original minimum was established, the USWA declared, that the 40 cent minimum—the highest possible under the Wage-Hour law—would be more than justified.

Pres. Frank McGrath of the USWA said the Board had worked out plans for financing its big new organizing drive in the midwest, and announced the union would seek 20 per cent wage increases for workers whom it brings into the ranks of the organized.

Big Gotham Store Signs First Pact

New York, Apr. 19.—S. Klein, women's wear specialty shop on Union Square, mecca of bargain hunters who swarm around the entrance on sale days like angry bees, has signed a closed shop contract with Local 1125, United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes, covering 800 employes.

Terms provide a $1 weekly wage increase for some 500 workers, reduction of two hours per week in working time; establishment of a 44-hour week for all "new employes" after Jan. 1, 1942; paid vacations of three days for workers with six months' service, one week for service up to three years, and two weeks for employes with more than three years' service.

Union officials say that a large part of some 500 of the workers who have been employed during the last three years are German refugees.

"They proved to be a militant and unified majority," a union statement declared, "who despite severe pressure from the company, maintained a courageous front during a period of negotiations fraught with many alarms which threatened momentarily to deadlock the parleys."

CIO Sweeps Biggest 'White Collar' Poll

DETROIT, Apr. 19.—The CIO today had swept to victory in the largest poll of white collar workers yet conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

By a 3-2 majority, office employes of the R. L. Polk Co. here chose as sole collective bargaining agency the United Office & Professional Workers. The vote was 786 for the UOPWA to 607 for no union.

The company publishes directories and maintains a large mail advertising service.

Jerome Shore, UOPWA midwest representative, hailed the election as a "tremendous victory for the white colar workers of Detroit as well as the underpaid Polk employes."

"Today's results are remarkable," he said, "when we consider the psychology of company domination that has until now pervaded the white collar field, but which is gradually disappearing as the UOPWA progresses.

In New York, UOPWA Pres. Lewis Merrill described the victory as "an emphatic demonstration of the rapidly growing movement among white colar workers to meet their pressing economic problems through bona fide organization in the UOPWA.

"Office and professional workers everywhere will take inspiration from this success to unite even greater numbers of workers in the UOPWA to achieve their aspiration for greater security and a more abundant life."

Ask Higher Base Pay For 150,000

Washington, April 19 — Immediate establishment of a 40-cent hourly minimum for the 150,000 workers employed in cotton garment industry, was asked by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in a 45-page brief submitted this week to the Wage-Hour Administration here.

Present minimum wages in the industry under the Federal Wage-Hour law range from 32½ to 37½ cents an hour. The 40-cent minimum would not be reached under the ordinary functioning of the law, before 1945.

Jacob S. Potofsky, general secretary-treasurer of the ACW, Gladys Dickason, research director, and John Abt, special counsel, appeared for the Amalgamated in support of the union's position before the Wage-Hour Adinistration.

LOW-WAGE INDUSTRY

In justifying the union's demand for the 40-cent minimum, the brief points out that the cotton garment industry is still a low-wage industry and that 40 cents an hour would help realize the policy of the Fair Labor Standards Act "to eliminate labor conditions detrimental to the maintenance of the minimum standards of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being of workers."

Transit Union Heads Protest 'Sabotage' Bill

ALBANY, N. Y., Apr. 19.—Strenuous protests by CIO and transport union leaders today failed to win a governor's veto of a state transit "sabotage" bill but gained assurances that the law would not be used against lawful strikes.

The measure in question was the Wicks Bill, which provides sentences of from five to 20 years for workers who leave subway trains, street car or buses "unattended". Secretly slipped through the legislature in five days, the bill had the strong support of Mayor LaGuardia of New York and the opposition of the unions.

At a hearing ordered by Gov. Herbert Lehman, the CIO representatives took the position that the bill would be used against the Transport Workers Union if that organization were forced to strike in order to win new contracts from the New York subway systems, which have passed into the hands of the city since the last agreements were signed.

RIGHT TO STRIKE

LaGuardia has taken the position that the thousands of subway workers, who came under civil service when the city took over the lines, have no right to strike "against the government".

The fact that the governor's statement, made as he signed the bill, underwrote labor's right to strike, and that the mayor emphasized that the bill was directed at protecting property rather than against labor, has in large measure defeated the purposes of the anti-union groups that supported the bill, it was believed here.

Appearing to testify at the hearings were John Brophy, CIO official who represented Pres. Philip Murray; Pres. Michael Quill of the TWU and Harry Sacher, the union's attorney; President Gustav Strebel of the New York State Industrial Union Council; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Greater New York City IUC; and a number of other union officials.

BROPHY TESTIFIES

Brophy, branding the bill as an anti-union measure, said:

"If the State of New York takes this long step backward, by passing the Wicks Bill, it will be a signal to enemies of labor and democracy in other sections of the nation to conduct their own brand of blitzkrieg against the millions of working people. We maintain that our national defense and our American democracy cannot afford this sort of legislation."

Brophy charged that the bill was secretly moved through the legislature because "its sponsors recognize its indefensibility and its danger to the labor movement."

QUILL HITS BILL

Quill described the bill as a "wolf in sheep's clothing" and insisted it is time "that our public officials stopped playing Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde with the problem."

Following the governor's signing of the bill, Mayor LaGuardia reiterated his insistence that the union has no right to strike against the city.

Quill countered by quoting a letter from CIO Pres. Philip Murray which suggested that the mayor call "at his earliest convenience" a conference with Murray and the TWU to reach "a reasonable solution of the labor relations problems on the New York City transit lines."

Murray's letter, reprinted in pamphlet form, is being distributed to thousands of New York subway riders by a special volunteer force of transport union members.

Clothing Union Gets Pay Boosts

Washington, Apr. 19. — Pay boosts, a weekly salary guarantee, plus overtime for hours over 48 and the closed shop and checkoff are features of two new contracts won by Local 188-B of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers here. The contracts are with two of the capital's laundry and dry cleaning places.

GM Policy May Force Walkout

Detroit, Apr. 19.—Refusal of the General Motors Corp. to grant or consider demands of its CIO union employes today threatened to force a strike by the United Automobile Workers in 61 of the company's plants.

Notice of the intention to strike was filed with the Michigan State Labor Mediation Board by Pres. R. J. Thomas, in accordance with state law.

Thomas and Walter Reuther, head of the union's GM division, announced that the UAW would refrain from striking in several plants now devoted to producing defense materials for the government.

'NO PROGRESS'

Orders to take a strike vote before April 25 were sent out by the UAW national office to 45 locals covering the 61 plants. In taking that action, Thomas and Reuther said "no substantial progress" has been made during six weeks of negotiating with GM.

"The corporation," they asserted, "has refused to grant union shop recognition, 10 cent an hour wage increases, additional vacation allowances, a steward system, improved umpire set-up and seniority provisions, family hospital plan and other reasonable demands.

"The international union and your national GM negotiating committee, after exhausting every means to arrive at a fair settlement, is compelled to ask the local unions to take a strike vote in support of their demands.'"

Big CIO Electrical Pact Near

New York, N. Y., Apr. 19. — Conferences between the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America and the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, covering 40,000 employes in 23 plants of the Company, are progressing, James J. Matles, UE organization director, said today.

"All contract provisions are now ready to be submitted to the membership for their action, when the negotiations on wages are completed," he said. "Negotiations on wages are now going on. The wage increase, when agreed upon, is to be retroactive to April 8."

Meantime, the Union was preparing to continue negotiations on a general wage increase with the General Electric Company, affecting 60 thousand employes.

FIRST NATIONAL PACT

The agreement now being negotiated with Westinghouse will be the union's first agreement with the company that is national in scope, covering those items of wages, hours, working conditions and other provisions which are company-wide in nature.

AS STEEL GOES: CIO steel workers forced 10-cent an hour wage increases this week from the nation's largest steel producers. In Pittsburgh, Philip Murray, (right) head of CIO and chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, looks on as J. L. Perry of Carnegie-Illinois, big U. S. Steel subsidiary, signs a new contract granting the pay raise and basic improvements in working conditions.

Southern Mine Owners Stall, Delay Coal Pact

NEW YORK, Apr. 19.—Ratification of the new agreement in the bituminous coal industry was delayed here following refusal of Southern coal operators to give up the wage differential of 40 cents a day in their favor. The agreement, giving members of the United Mine Workers a $1.00 a day wage increase and other substantial gains, was accepted by the northern operators participating in the Appalachian Joint Wage Conference.

John L. Lewis, UMWA president, characterized the agreement as "tentative," due to the bolt by the Southern operators. He reiterated that the northern miners would not "abandon their fellows employed in the Southern mines" by returning to work on the basis of the tentative contract.

"There are 400,000 mine workers out of work," Lewis said. "Naturally there will be no disposition on the part of the mine workers in the north to abandon their fellows in the southern mines.

"Especially is this true when one realizes that in certain sections of the South credit and supplies have been stopped and thousands of families are unable to secure any supplies in the usual way from stores owned by the coal companies.

"If it be true that the coal operators in the South are determined to starve the mine workers of that area to a point where they will accept the unsatisfactory terms of the Southern operators, then it is equally true that the mine workers of the North will not be disposed to return to work."

'FANTASTIC'

Southern coal operator claims that loss of the differential would cost them $200,000,000 a year were described as "fantastic" in a statement issued by the UMWA negotiators.

John R. Steelman, director of the Conciliation Service of the U. S. Labor Dept., who has been sitting in on the negotiations, praised the tentative agreement as an example of "the democratic process."

"The parties have exemplified the democratic process," he said. "Their differences have been ironed out around the conference table, the method by which all labor disputes should be adjusted."

Reports were current that the Southern operators went to Washington attempting to see President Roosevelt, Secretary of Labor Perkins, and other government officials. They were reported to be acting through a group of Southern Congressmen.

10-Cent Pay Boost Won At Airbrake

Pittsburgh, April 19 — Westinghouse Airbrake Co. has signed a new CIO union agreement granting 10 cent an hour wage increases, it was announced here by leaders of Local 610, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

A meeting of the union was scheduled this week to ratify the contract, which followed weeks of negotiations and a near-strike situation.

News of the increase was revealed by Albert Smith, local business agent for the local, whose membership is close to 5,000.

New Contract Brings Many Improvements

PITTSBURGH, Apr. 19.—The CIO today had blown the lid off the steel industry's effort to keep wages down to existing levels.

Ten-cent an hour wage increases, demanded by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, were won in a new contract signed by the U. S. Steel Corp. for its quarter-million workers. The increase is retroactive to April 1.

In a few hours, two Little Steel companies where the SWOC's strength has been shown in recent months, similarly upped their wages. Wheeling Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Otis Steel soon followed suit. Ernest T. Weir's National Steel Co. announced its 10-cent increase two days before the U. S. Steel contract was signed.

Meanwhile SWOC Chairman Philip Murray led negotiators into conference with Jones and Laughlin, and the 10 cent increase was quickly accepted as part of a new agreement.

A general increase throughout the nation's booming basic industry was expected as a result of SWOC's success with U.S. Steel, and it was believed that effects of the company's action would be felt in other defense industries. Negotiations with General Electric and Westinghouse Electric, where the CIO electrical workers have been seeking a 10 cent raise, have been in progress for some time.

Murray and his fellow negotiators from the SWOC signed the Big Steel pact April 14, a day before a one-week extension of the old agreement was due to expire. The last U. S. Steel pact, signed in the spring of 1938, ran out on April 1, following the union's action in seeking revision of the agreement. It was extended first until April 8 and again until the fifteenth of the month.

Women production and maintenance workers in the U. S. Steel plants were the heaviest gainers from the contract. Their minimum pay rates, formerly as low as 56 cents an hour, were jumped almost 25 per cent to the new 72½ cents base pay.

HAILED BY MURRAY

Chairman Murray said the SWOC'S success in peacefully negotiating a new contract set a pattern for harmonious negotiations by labor and capital.

"The nation will feel happy at the outcome of our collective bargaining conference with the U. S. Steel Corp.," he declared, adding that the settlement would "undoubtedly eliminate the national hysteria

Renew Pact At J&L, Win 10c Raise

Pittsburgh, Apr. 19.—Two hours of negotiating were sufficient to bring agreement between the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. on details of a new contract.

The company agreed to a 10 cent an hour increase for its 24,000 workers. The raise will cost the company about five million dollars a year.

The SWOC delegation which worked out the renewed agreement was headed by Chairman Philip Murray.

Ecores of steel firms were falling in line with the 10 cent increase won by the SWOC at U. S. Steel, and it was estimated that about 600,000 workers in the industry have already gained directly from the union's success.

Textile Union Meets This Week

NEW YORK, Apr. 19.—The second biennial convention of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America will open here at 10:30 Monday morning with President Emil Rieve in the chair.

EMIL RIEVE
President, Textile Workers Union of America

Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York is scheduled to address the delegates the opening day.

A spokesman for the union said that this year's convention "comes during one of the most active periods in the history of the union.

"The entire personnel of the organization from the national office to the active-workers in each local union, is engaged as never before in winning elections, organizing new union, signing new contracts, renewing existing contracts with many improvements."

State and national government officials who have accepted invitations to address the convention include Secretary of Labor Francis Perkins; Governor Herbert Lehman, Eleanor Herrick, NLRB regional director, and Frieda Miller, state labor commissioner.

CURSES! FOILED AGAIN!

As Steel Goes...

"The nation will feel happy at the outcome of our collective bargaining conference with the United States Steel Corp.," said Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and CIO president.

The agreement won, in fact, was splendid news not only for the 165,000 workers directly covered; not only for hundreds of thousands of other steel workers whose wages were also raised as a result; not only for the business and professional people of every steel community, but for the whole nation.

Just as the U. S. Steel agreement is basic to the steel industry (as shown by the spread of the 10c-an-hour increase won by the CIO), so steel wages tend to set a basic pattern for dozens of other industries as well.

Thanks to the organization of the steel workers in the CIO, the steel industry has set a good instead of a bad example to the rest of industry, by giving a lead for substantially higher wages.

The whole nation is the gainer, in higher wages and greater purchasing power, in industrial peace and progress, from this most constructive example of the benefits of collective bargaining.

The Vinson Bill

CIO President Murray has issued an urgent warning against the Vinson Anti-Strike Bill (H. R. 4139) and a call for immediate action to avert its enactment. Blitzkrieg tactics have been used to rush this bill through the House Naval Affairs Committee in the hope of getting it passed by the House before the nation is aware of the full menace it involves for labor and our democracy.

The Vinson Bill would freeze existing wages and conditions, including the open shop policy where it prevails. It would make strikes illegal during the compulsory "cooling-off" period, subjecting strikers to heavy penalties. Many union rights provided in the Nat'l Labor Relations Act would be abrogated. And under a so-called "subversive" clause, the door would be opened to discrimination against active unionists whom the employer might consider subversive.

Originally intended only for naval construction the Vinson Bill has now been expanded to cover all defense industries. Against allegations that strikes were holding up defense, Pres. John Green of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers was able to point out that most naval construction is ahead of schedule in CIO-organized yards; and that 93½ per cent of the days behind schedule have been lost in shipyards where no strikes or lockouts have occurred.

The Vinson Bill is a blitz attack on labor rights and American democratic institutions. Act at once to let your congressmen know how strongly labor opposes passage of this un-American bill.

This Is News

When a newspaper publisher slanders labor leaders and blames the unions for every bit of industrial trouble, it isn't news. Unfortunately there is hardly a daily paper in the country that has not editorialized against labor in this fashion when stoppages occur.

But when a paper admits its error in such editorializing and begs pardon, that's not only news, it's a sensation!

The Cumberland (Md.) Evening Times published one of those editorials blaming the miners for being locked out and attacking their president, John L. Lewis, for "hampering the defense program," etc., etc.

The local miners did not take it lying down. They sent a delegation to tell the editor exactly what was wrong with his editorial.

As a result the paper printed another editorial, headed "We Beg Pardon, Mr. Lewis." It expressed regrets that the writer "through a slip of memory . . . placed Mr. Lewis in a false light and blamed him for not keeping the mines open during negotiations when, as a matter of fact, that blame should have been placed at the door of the operators."

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE words "cooling-off" had an appealing sound during the untimely heat wave which hit Washington in the middle of April. They made one feel like turning a hose of nice cold water on the red-faced sweating Congressmen who thumped and bellowed for "cooling-off" periods.

Though each one was himself a miniature heat wave, these orators were not thinking of their own condition, however. What they demanded was laws like the Vinson bill to cool off the other fellow, in this case American labor.

But labor, it so happens, is feeling pretty cool and collected these days. The CIO, without a day's stoppage, has won wage increases for hundreds of thousands of steel workers, on the basis of the U. S. Steel agreement.

The end of the coal lockout, which the United Mine Workers did everything possible to avoid, is clearly in sight, with the $1-a-day wage boost agreed to by most of the operators.

Ford and Bethlehem, two of the worst troublemakers in American industry, have been brought to cease from troubling to the extent that forthcoming Labor Board elections promise the early establishment of collective bargaining harmony.

All in all, the remnants of employer trouble that caused such industrial disturbances as have occurred, are being mopped up nicely.

YET this is the time chosen by some overheated Congressmen and anti-union employers to demand compulsory "cooling-off" periods for labor.

The name is sugar-coating for anti-strike legislation. It is alleged to be the mildest thing that can be done to labor—a sort of Ex-Lax substitute for Fascist castor oil.

All "cooling-off" bills are supposed to do is to deny labor the right to strike until it is too late for a strike to be effective. Perhaps their sponsors reason that this will make American workers appreciate what loss of freedom means, and thus put them in a better mood to work and fight for the freedom of the rest of the world.

During the prescribed period of involuntary servitude, the workers are supposed to cool off, while their employers take full advantage of the union's loss of bargaining power to keep wages down and insure some cool millions of profits for themselves.

But if we know anything about American workers, they are more likely to burn up than to cool off under such conditions.

Furthermore, the cooling-off proposition does not stand alone in any current bills. In the Vinson bill, for instance, it is tied in with heavy penalties against strikers, freezing of existing wage and open shop conditions, and abrogation of many rights provided in the Natl. Labor Relations Act.

THE cooling-off idea might be all right if applied to the right people, instead of being directed against labor like the bully's admonition to his victim, "Keep cool, don't get sore, see if you can count to a hundred before I hit you!"

For instance, when anti-labor Congressmen are in heat, as is the case with so many at present, they might be taken in hand by cooler colleagues and by their constituents until they cool off.

For a period of thirty days, let us say, they might be required to visit our industrial centers and learn Americanism from the working people in their homes, on the job and in their union halls. For the more slow-witted, extended cooling-off period would be advisable in which they might try raising a family on wages of about $25 a week.

While cooling off, these Congressmen should study at first-hand the forebearance, self-sacrifice and union discipline which keeps workers on the job, in face of often unbearable provocations by profiteering employers.

They should also see how unions function to dispose of grievances and prevent stoppages, and how essential for the preservation of liberty and union conditions is the right to strike.

Even while such overheated Congressmen are in Washington, their cooling-off can be promoted by hearing from the people back home, through union delegations and through a flood of letters and resolutions.

Suggested as required reading in the cooling-off period before each speech are the facts and figures in "Who Causes Strikes?", the new pamphlet of Labor's Non-Partisan League; and the latest CIO pamphlet, "The Right To Strike."

As for the anti-union bosses responsible for all the current employer trouble, here are some cooling-off suggestions for them:

Before they fire or discriminate against workers for union activity, before they promote company unions, before they refuse to bargain or to obey Labor Board orders, they might be required to read through the text of the Natl. Labor Relations Act and the Supreme Court decisions upholding it.

And before they refuse to negotiate wage increases, they might be required to cool off by counting not just from one to one hundred, but all the way from one to the millions or tens of millions of profits they are making today.

Congress Blitz Speeds Labor Gag To House Vote

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19.—The all-out war against labor set a new speed record in Congress here when Rep. Carl Vinson, Georgia polltaxer, rushed his anti-strike, open-shop bill (HR 4139) through the Naval Affairs Committee and onto the floor of the House in two days from time of introduction to favorable committee report.

The bill imposes a compulsory "cooling-off" period of 25 days before action could be taken on a strike vote, freezes existing wages and open-shop conditions throughout industry, would make organizing in unorganized industries practically impossible, and would lay union members open to blanket charges of being "subversive" on any of a dozen counts. It applies to all defense orders — which means all industry.

Only two witnesses were heard by the committee before Vinson blandly announced that hearings were over. One of them, U. S. Navy Secretary Frank Knox, took one and a half of these two days to give the bill his official blessing, the other, Pres. John Green of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, was allowed one hour to testify against it.

GREEN ON STAND

Pres. Green of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers condemned the bill in the brief time he was allotted for testimony.

"We object to the features of this bill which would outlaw the institution of the closed shop in plants now operating under this condition," he said.

"The closed shop has worked well in thousands of industrial plants, and there seems to be no reason why it could not work well in all plants."

He pointed out that naval building under CIO contract is as much as three months ahead of schedule, submitting detailed figures to prove this. On the other hand, he pointed out, where delays have taken place they have been almost entirely in shops where there have been no strikes whatever.

UNION SHOPS FASTEST

"Thus it is plain from the foregoing that in the majority of shipyards and especially those which have agreements with this union, the work is progressing better than was anticipated, and that where production is behind schedule the lag is due to industrial accidents or other causes, but not to strikes or labor disputes."

ANTI-LABOR BLITZ

President Murray of the CIO denounced the bill as the blitz tactics of the committee in a letter sent to Rep. Vinson and made public here. In addition, he wrote to all CIO affiliates warning them that the bill "will seriously endanger the future existence" of the CIO and urging them to flood Congress with protests.

"The contents of this bill and the procedure which has been adopted by your committee in connection therewith merit the most forthright condemnation and opposition of organized labor," Murray wrote to Vinson.

"The measure will seriously affect the interests of million of people and will have a very drastic effect on the prosecution of the national defense program. Such a serious matter would normally receive extended and serious consideration."

Despite this, Murray added, the committee heard only the two witnesses, and at that Shipbuilding Workers President John Green was given only two day's notice before his appearance. In addition, he pointed out, the CIO "has not been given any reasonable opportunity to present its witnesses or its testimony," and representatives from the Labor Dept. and the OPM were not invited to appear.

BIAS VS. REASON

Murray charged the committee had "deliberately usurped the ordinary jurisdiction of the House Labor Committee which is far better versed in labor matters" in reporting out the bill, adding that "anti-labor bias" rather than reason governed Vinson's actions.

The bill "strikes at the very existence of labor unions," Murray wrote, in subjecting unions to "an extended period of governmental interference through mediation and arbitration boards" before they can exercise their constitutional rights to strike.

It will also create greater unrest and discontent, he said, since it will work against labor in trying to better its living and working standards. This will be particularly obvious, he said, in view of "mounting corporate profits and rising cost of living."

Murray ended his letter by demanding further "a more serious and comprehensive investigation" on the subject than the committee saw fit to give, warning that organized labor would interpret Vinson's actions as proof that the committee "was determined to impose upon the country certain preconceived anti-labor and repressive legislation."

Warning!

Washington, April 19 — The Vinson Bill (HR 4139) "will seriously endanger the future existence of our affiliated unions," Pres. Murray told the CIO in urging opposition to the anti-strike, anti-union measure.

All CIO affiliates, members and friends of labor should write or wire to their Congressmen at once protesting this new attack on workers rights. Since early passage in the House is threatened.

"Don't delay," Pres. Murray urges. "Write or wire your Congressmen now, protesting this bill and demanding its defeat. Wire also to speaker Samuel Rayburn of the House of representatives, to Majority Leader John W. MacCormack and to Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin. Address them at the House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

"The Vinson Bill must not pass."

Employers Cause Strikes, Says League

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19.—What Causes Strikes?

That question was answered today in a new pamphlet of that name issued by Labor's Non-Partisan League, which found that "employers are responsible for more than 95 per cent of the strikes and other delays in production."

Walkouts have been caused, the LNPL publication declares, by the refusal of employers to obey the labor laws, or to pay living wages while they reap heavy profits, or to accept reasonable and fair proposals made by the union.

In this category, the League cites the recent work stoppages at Bethlehem Steel, Allis-Chalmers and Intl. Harvester, where the unions negotiated patiently for weeks and months, only to have their proposals turned down.

WOULD HURT MORALE

"Anti-strike legislation cannot abolish strikes or benefit the defense program," LNPL asserts. "It can only undermine the fundamental rights of workers and of democracy itself."

"What Causes Strikes" is filled with interesting facts and figures that will help you to answer arguments put forth by foes of labor, and to help you understand who and what's behind the drive to curtail labor's right to strike and bargain collectively.

"What Causes Strikes?" can be obtained from Labor's Non-Partisan League, 1037 Earle Bldg., Washington, D. C. Single copies, 10 cents; 100 copies $4.00.

Priest Defends Right to Strike

New York, Apr. 19—(FP)—The right to strike in defense industries must be upheld, the Rev. John P. Boland, chairman of the New York State Labor Relations Board, declared in an address before a church group in Queens.

"Any prohibition, even temporary, against the right to strike would have the tendency of rendering us slaves," Father Boland said.

"We would be falling into the ways of foreign dictators. The right to strike should remain untouched, even in defense industries. Strikes, however, should be used as a last resort. Labor issues should first be subjected to mediation or arbitration.

Why Write To Congress?

Washington, April 19 — If you don't think you ought to write your Congressman complaining about the flock of anti-labor bills now up for consideration, keep this one fact clear in mind—

The foes of organized workers are bombarding Congress with a mail campaign demanding passage of restrictions on labor's rights.

One prime example of this propaganda is a letter sent by officials of the Standard Wholesale Phosphate & Acid Works, Baltimore, Md., to OPM Director General Knudsen and to all members of Congress.

ANTI-SEMITISM

The letter implies that all strikers are fifth columnists, or tools of fifth columnists; uses anti-Semitic propaganda against strikers at Bethlehem Steel Co.; urges the FBI to check up on the workers, and asks the OPM to "prevent the continuous spread of these Communistic moves throughout the country."

The letter claims that "capital has practically been conscripted by the heavy taxes and all the profits being taken out of business, the young men of the country are being drafted into the army, while labor is left to riot throughout the country. . ."

CIO Wins 10c Raise In U. S. Steel Pact

concerning anti-strike legislation."

"The agreement shows," Murray noted, "that where labor and industry work together in good faith there need be no apprehension in the public mind concerning the production of goods and material essential for national welfare."

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

As a result of the new agreement, the minimum pay rate in the steel industry now rises to 72½ cents an hour, or $5.80 a day, while wages for higher-skilled workers rise 10 cents an hour. The increase will net U. S. Steel employes about $54,000,000 a year, it is estimated.

A number of basic improvements in working conditions were included in the new agreement, which will run until either side files notice that it wishes changes to be made.

The revised vacation plan provides one week for employes of five years' service, and two weeks for those with 15 years' service. It is estimated that about 57,600 employes will get the two-week vacation and that the plan will bring the workers an extra 3½ million dollars a year.

HOLIDAYS

Designation of three holidays—July 4, Labor Day and Christmas—is included in the pact, with a provision that employes engaged on "continuous operation" projects which require their work on these days will be paid at the rate of time-and-a-half.

The agreement outlines substantial improvement in the handling of grievances, with a maximum time limit placed on the settlement of any dispute and arrangements for arbitration of those grievances where the company and the union cannot reach an agreement.

Full union participation in the establishment or adjustment of wage rates is also provided. There will be "full and complete" discussion by the company and the union grievance committee of rates for new jobs or when the company attempts to change wages on a job which has been affected by improved technology.

THE VICTORY AT FORD:

Efficient Strike Machinery Smoothed Road to Success

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Apr. 19. — The strike which kept the mammoth Ford River Rouge plant completely closed down for nine days owes its effectiveness to a strike machinery that overcame all obstacles to achieve an efficiency that was as close to 100 per cent as strike organizations ever get.

You don't even have to consider all the difficulties involved in a strike directly affecting 87,000 workers in one plant to agree that the effectiveness of the Ford strike machinery was near to miraculous.

Since the strike was deliberately provoked by the company and at that particular time not wanted by the union, all preparations had to be made within a few short hours.

The strike call was issued at 12:15 A. M. Wednesday, April 2. By 5 A. M. picket lines were set up on all roads leading into the plant, and production was completely stopped on the day shift.

Contrary to company and AFL claims, there were very few workers from other plants on the picket lines that first morning. Less than 200 members of other locals were among the thousands of pickets.

The Ford workers manned their own picket lines and stopped production by refusing to work after their union called a strike which they had authorized it to call when and if necessary.

UNION MOVED FAST

By noon on Wednesday, twelve hours after the strike call, the strong picket lines had been reinforced by these additional strike agencies:

Five strike kitchens had been set up and were preparing food for strikers.

A first-aid station had been established to give first aid and medical treatment to strikers injured by scabs or who had become ill.

The publicity department, in addition to its regular function of keeping the daily press informed, had arranged for 6 daily radio programs ranging from 5 to 15 minutes each, to be broadcast direct from strike headquarters, 40 spot announcements daily over the same station to give direction to pickets, and the publication of a daily mimeographed strike bulletin.

Other UAW-CIO local unions had made available ten sound trucks to be used on the picket lines and for whatever other purposes they were needed.

The CIO United Dairy Workers had arranged that any striker could get milk delivered to his home on credit for the duration of the strike.

SERIES OF MEETINGS

A series of meetings was conducted in two vacant lots adjoining the Ford Local headquarters between midnight and 5 A. M. No available building was large enough to hold all the strikers who came and not even all of them could crowd into the two lots. When one group had got its instructions, it dispersed to make room for another, who heard the same group of speakers over the sound truck parked in the middle of the lots.

The actual organization of picketing was not perfected until Thursday after the picket lines had been moved up to the plant entrances. This was done when the company agreed with Gov. Van Wagoner not to operate the plant while negotiations were going on.

PEACEFUL PICKETING

Establishment of picket lines on roads leading into the plant instead of directly at the plant gates was a sensible, safety measure which undoubtedly kept violence at a minimum. This is true, despite all the lurid newspaper reports of barricades and blockades. The only serious violence in the whole strike occurred Wednesday morning when a group of overenthusiastic pickets took up their posts at Gate Four and were attacked from within the plant by Ford goons and service men who had been kept there all night just for such purposes.

By Thursday strike committee headquarters had been set up in a building across from the local union hall, and picketing directions emanated from that point.

WELL-OILED MACHINERY

Here is how picketing was set up:

The strike committee operated on three shifts with a commander in charge of each shift.

There were 22 picket posts on the sixteen miles of highway surrounding the Rouge plant. Each picket post was in charge of a captain and sub-captain. Pickets checked in and out for picket duty as regularly as they punched time clocks in the plant. It was possible at any time of the day or night to check on exactly the number of pickets on duty.

Flying squadron headquarters were in the same building with the strike committee. The squadrons were divided into two divisions—"squad" cars and "patrol cars."

Squad cars were posted at intervals all around the plant. They moved only on specific instructions, which might have been anything from bolstering a particular picket post to taking an injured striker to the union's first-aid station.

Patrol cars made regular trips from strike committee headquarters around the picket lines, acting as observers to supplement the reports of the runners assigned to each post.

FOOD BY THE TON

To prepare the food for pickets, the volunteer services of more than 500 wives of Ford workers and members of other local union auxiliaries were used.

Part of the food was distributed through dining rooms set up at strike headquarters and at one entire building devoted exclusively to the preparation and serving of food. The rest of it was taken to the picket lines in trucks and served there. In either case, any person receiving food had to produce a card showing he had done his stint on the picket line.

During the first five days of the strike the following amounts of food were served:

14,000 loaves of bread (sandwich size); 150,000 doughnuts; 2,000 gallons of milk; 1 ton of coffee; 2 tons of sugar; 1 ton of beef stew; 2½ tons of spare ribs; 2½ tons of lunch meat; ¾ ton of sauerkraut; plus unestimated quantities of potatoes, soup, vegetables and staples.

SAMPLE MENU

A sample menu was: Breakfast: Doughnuts, sandwiches and coffee. Dinner: (served throughout the day and night): Chicken soup, hamburger, peas, potatoes, coffee, pie.

In order to handle all the necessary information to be disseminated both to the general public and to the strikers, the publicity department set up a "city desk" at strike headquarters as a clearing house for all news and information.

Jones To Air Reply To Tories

Washington, Apr. 19.—A reply to recent anti-labor accusations made by Rep. J. William Ditter, and to other misrepresentations about labor, will be made over the NBC Blue Network this week by John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

Jones will speak on "Labor's Rights and Defense" on Tuesday, April 22, from 10 p. m. to 10:15 p. m., eastern standard time.

Following is a list of NBC Blue Network stations available to carry Jones' speech. Local CIO groups are urged to contact their local station and urge that it air the program, and to publicize it among the unions and the general public in their community.

Auto Union Releases Movie on Ford Strike

Detroit, April 19. — One week after the United Automobile Workers called their strike at the Ford River Rouge plant, the union had available a 20-minute sound movie film of that historic event.

The movie is now available for distribution to unions throughout the country.

Rental for one showing of the film is only $5. CIO locals and internationals may buy the entire film, if they so desire, for $30.

Orders should be sent to the International Education Department, UAW-CIO, 281 W. Grand Boulevard, Detroit, Mich. Checks or money orders must accompany the order, and should be made out to George F. Addes, UAW secretary-treasurer.

OPENING SCENES

The movie opens with the wildly excited men rushing from the huge Ford plant at midnight to the UAW-CIO offices. Then comes a picture of the plant the next day—the plant which Ford said would never be closed by a union.

Scenes follow showing the workers manning their picket lines and reinforcing them with barricades of railroad ties, automobiles and anything else that will offer protection.

The picture shows armed Ford thugs attacking the strikers, and the men first defending themselves and then winning the fight.

Using a telephoto lens, the cameraman made a magnificent shot of the Ford scabs inside the plant. It shows the strikebreakers pacing up and down, looking out at the picket lines. The scene closes as a brutal scab waves a big steel axle at the striking workers.

CIO Longshoremen Renominate Bridges; Murray Backs Fight

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Apr. 19. — Nomination of Harry Bridges for his fourth consecutive term as president of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union brought a rousing ovation for the persecuted head of their union from the delegates during the closing sessions of the ILWU convention.

Bridges had to return to San Francisco immediately after the convention for resumption of the second deportation hearings against him—which had been recessed for a week to allow him to attend.

Henry Schmidt, of Bridges' own local in San Francisco nominated the ILWU President for re-election and called him "a sincere and aggressive trade unionist who is a better American than a hell of a lot of people born in this country."

WIRE FROM MURRAY

Earlier in the week a telegram of fraternal greeting from CIO President Murray promising the full support of the CIO to Bridges, was read to the delegates. "These are days of great national and international turmoil," Murray said in the wire.

"It is especially important now that CIO unions, among the greatest forces for democracy in the world, be intelligent, honorable and progressive.

"The CIO stands behind your organization in defending your president, and we are confident that your union will do all in its power to further the cause of industrial organizations. May you have a most successful convention."

Bridges and other officers nominated at the convention will stand for election in a referendum of the union membership to be held after the convention.

CHANGE CONSTITUTION

Changes in the ILWU constitution, recommended in Pres. Bridges' report, were adopted to place it on a national instead of a district basis, and to provide for increased efficiency and a more practical application of union democracy.

One change calls for the holding of a convention and election of officers every two years instead of annually.

TO ASK PAY RAISE

A recommendation made in Bridges' report and later adopted by the convention, calls for a demand for a ten cents an hour wage increase to be made in August and improvements in "basic working conditions and dispatching rules, expansion of the safety code and vacations with pay."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Following up the settlement of the Ford strike UAW President R. J. Thomas and the writer, pursuant to the terms of the settlement, went into the River Rouge plant Wednesday, April 16 and conferred with Mr. Harry Bennett and Mr. Harry Mack, representatives of the company. The following day we went into the plant again and met with 13 top UAW-CIO committeemen, Representative Taylor and the top management.

The shop steward system of handling grievances was accepted by the company in full and explained to both the committeemen and the company representatives by Organizer Taylor. At this conference the management of the Ford, Lincoln, and Highland Park plants were also present. It was agreed that this grievance procedure would be immediately effectuated at these two plants. The management showed it was willing to cooperate in making the machinery of collective bargaining work. If they continue to do so they will avoid the pitfalls that result where management resists proper bargaining.

Traveling through this huge industrial empire of Ford one sees thousands of workers wearing UAW-CIO buttons. Everyone feels confident of the outcome of the election, which is to be held soon.

The AFL is attempting to play its usual dog-in-the-manger game, consistent with the strike-breaking efforts of Mr. Green, which failed, and which the Ford workers will not forget.

I conferred at Akron with representatives of the United Rubber Workers of America, planning to call a national conference of local unions in the Goodyear plants to demand a national contract from that firm. The Rubber Workers also won an election at one of the Goodrich plants in Tennessee this week.

The United Mine Workers of America and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee broke the ice of resistance against wage increases by the large corporations. Millions of dollars will be added to workers' payrolls through these achievements. It is expected that other corporations will follow in line and distribute some of the vast profits they are making in national defense to the workers.

Bringing the big corporations into line is a pet practice of the CIO. No other force in the country has demonstrated that it has the ability to do this.

The inspiring victories in recent weeks against the largest industrial combines in the world mean much for all our organizations and members. Organizing the unorganized must be done now.

Defense Jobs Urged For Negro Workers

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19. — Defense manufacturers were urged this week to look into their employment policies "to determine whether or not these policies make ample provision for the full utilization of available and competent Negro workers."

The suggestion came in the form of a circular letter from Sidney Hillman, associate director of OPM, to all holders of arms contracts.

Hillman's letter, which recognized that "qualified and available Negroes" are being "restricted to unskilled jobs, or barred from defense employment entirely," pointed out that such restrictions "are extrmely wasteful of our human resources and prevent a total effort for national defense."

The present emergency, he wrote, demands the full use of "every available source of labor capable of producing defense materials."

JIM CROW DEFENSE

Hillman's letter confirmed revelations of widespread Jim Crow practices throughout defense industry, published over a period of recent months by the National Negro Congress and other Negro organizations and civic leaders.

According to these revelations, Negro workers have not only been barred from skilled and semiskilled jobs, despite their qualifications, but in many industries have been excluded entirely. This has been especially true in the aircraft industry, where Negroes have been systematically barred from jobs at Vultee, Glenn Martin and Consolidated, three of the largest manufacturers in the country.

Glenn Martin's huge plant near Baltimore, according to Negro Congress reports, has close to $300,000,000 in U. S. contracts, expects in the near future to employ 40,000 workers, and has flatly refused to employ Negro workers in any capacity. Vultee told a Negro delegation:

"It is not the policy of this company to employ people other than of the Caucasian race." The Skelly Co. of Oklahoma doubted that "even later when we get to manufacturing the planes we will require any colored help, with the exceptions of possibly using a few laborers."

THROUGHOUT INDUSTRY

Similar experiences have been reported by Negro organizations in other defense industries, including sections of the electrical industry, shipbuilding, engine manufacturing, lumber, and plants making arms and ammunition, etc. In addition, skilled Negro carpenters have been refused jobs on army cantonments in the South and other areas.

Following Hillman's letter, John P. Davis of the Natl. Negro Congress called on him to "put teeth" in it by issuing or asking President Roosevelt to issue an executive order denying contracts to Jim Crow corporations.

"While we wait for the light of reason to move these employers, tens of thousands of Negroes are walking the streets jobless," he wrote. "We Negro people who pay with our money and our blood the price it costs to maintain our democracy, can hardly be satisfied by fine statements. What we want is jobs."

SHUT PLANT TIGHT

San Lorenz, Calif.—AFL teamsters have refused to cross CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers picket lines at the Trojan Powder Co., where the union is striking for decent wage standards.

REFEREE: Lloyd K. Garrison, dean of Wisconsin Law School and a noted liberal, who has been named referee of disputes arising between Local 248, United Automobile Workers, and the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., where the union recently won a 76-day strike.

Win Pact, Pay Raise

Mansfield, O., Apr. 19.—A three months' organizing drive by Local 756, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, here has resulted in the signing of a contract with the Humphries Manufacturing Co., bringing pay increases ranging from 5 to 17 cents an hour to 400 members of the local.

The minimum rate was also boosted from 45 to 50 cents and paid vacations won for all employes with one or more years' service. The amount gained through wage increases and vacation pay will total some $70,000 for the year.

CIO Marine Engineers End Strike

Washington, Apr. 19. — Settlement of a dispute between the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. and the Seas Shipping Co., releasing the company's three strike-bound vessels was announced this week by the National Defense Mediation Board. The agreement calls for a 50 per cent war bonus for voyages into South African waters, and the employment of two junior engineers instead of one.

In filling vacancies the company agrees to give preference to qualified members of the MEBA; to pay basic wages ranging from $300 for chief engineer to $135 for second licensed juniors, and to give a temporary 15 per cent war emergency increase, in addition to the basic pay.

Met. Life Co. Tosses Sponge On Labor Cases

NEW YORK, Apr. 19.—Metropolitan Life, biggest of the Big Five life insurance companies of the country, has finally decided to come to terms with the CIO on some long-pending Labor Board cases.

After contesting bitterly for two years the charge of unfair labor practices filed by the CIO United Office & Professional Workers, the Metropolitan Co. on April 10, agreed to a settlement calling for the payment of $86,000 to 43 union insurance agents fired for union activity between 1938 and 1940.

23,500 PAGES

Settlement of the dispute was reached through the mediation of the New York State Labor Relations Board which conducted more than 150 hearings and recorded 23,500 pages of testimony.

An official of the UOPWA Industrial Insurance Agents local said after the settlement that an intensive drive to organize all Metropolitan agents is now in progress. The firm employs more than 20,400 industrial insurance agents.

The UOPWA won a Labor Board election in 1938, but the firm refused to negotiate a contract and continued to refuse even after the Labor Board order calling upon the company to bargain was upheld by the court. The lengthy hearings on charges of unfair labor practices followed the company's stubborn refusal to bargain collectively in good faith.

Sen. Murdock Raps Anti-Strike Hysteria

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19.—The arms program is not being hindered by strikes, despite hysterical statements in Congress and in the press, Senator Abe Murdock, Democrat of Utah, told a nationwide radio audience in a National Radio Forum speech broadcast from here this week.

The strike is a fully democratic, wholly American method secuirng redress of grievances, Murdock said, in criticizing current proposals to outlaw this right.

"In the Bill of Rights several of our democratic rights are listed," he said. "Among others, the right of freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of religion and assembly. If those rights are destroyed, what is left of democracy?

"But the list of democratic rights is not exhausted by the Bill of Rights or the Constitution," he added. "As the citizens of a great democracy, we have other democratic rights which are established by law, recognized by the courts, defended by the government and respected by all who love democracy. . . .

"He who would now seek to curtail these liberties not only seeks to throw civilization into reverse, but he also manifests his lack of faith in democracy."

PROFITS FOR RICH

Murdock dealt at some length on the contrast between workers' incomes and the profits of employers enjoying huge government orders for arms. He cited figures from government studies to show that one third of the workers of the U. S. had less than $500 a year to live on, 29 per cent had less than $1,200, and less than eight per cent had $2,200—the figure selected by a government committee to provide a standard of bare decency.

At the same time, he said, six corporations showed profits of three quarters of a billion dollars, averaging over $800 a year profit on each worker, over and above the wages paid to him.

While corporations can bargain with the government in order to make sure of their profits, workers must wait until the corporations have the orders and begin working on them before they can bargain for better wages and conditions, he pointed out.

"Is the workers' competition for decent wages, for a decent standard of living, for decent working conditions un-American, unpatriotic or destructive of democracy to any greater degree than the competition of the industrialists?" he asked.

"The only fair and reasonable answer is no. But the adverse publicity created from one end of the nation to the other in our great newspapers would lead us to believe that in demanding decent wages, a decent standard of living, decent working conditions, American labor was committing a crime."

BOOKISH PICKETS: These "book pickets" are walking New York streets looking for sympathetic readers in part of a campaign by the CIO Book & Magazine Guild to prepare for an NLRB election among 1400 employes at eight book binderies.

Sign Pact, Avert Strike

New Castle, Pa., Apr. 19.—A threatened strike of employes of the Pennsylvania Power Co., serving Western Pennsylvania in the area from here to Greenville, was averted last week when the company signed an agreement with Local 140, Utility Workers Organizing Committee.

Harold J. Straub, UWOC director, said the union won both its demands — exclusive bargaining rights for the company's employes and reinstatement of two linemen fired the previous week.

ON CAPITOL HILL:

Vinson Bill Holds Threat to Labor

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

The Congressional attack upon labor has been shifted into high gear this week. The House Naval Affairs Committee has reported out an anti-union and anti-strike bill which it plans to get before the House in a few days. This bill, H. R. 4139, was introduced by Congressman Vinson of the poll-tax state of Georgia a few days ago, and was rushed through after two days' hearings.

Vinson is trying to cover the mailed fist with a velvet glove by claiming that his bill provides little more than a "cooling-off period" before strikes. Actually, the bill differs little from the other anti-union and anti-strike bills in Congress. It would, in effect, establish a law under which strikes in private industry could be declared illegal, and participation in such strikes could be made a criminal offense, punishable by heavy fines and prison sentences. In addition, it would outlaw efforts of labor to gain closed shop contracts and dangerously weaken the National Labor Act.

The bill runs contrary to the opinions and testimony of all government defense officials who have testified before the Military Affairs Committee during the last few days. Their testimony repeatedly emphasized that collective bargaining is the only affective means for decreasing strikes and that compulsory legislation would be dangerous and would fail to produce the desired results. Secretary of the Navy, Knox is the only government representative to place a stamp of approval on the Vinson bill.

Like other reactionary Congressmen, Vinson claims he is sponsoring the bill in the interest of national defense. The real purpose may be judged, however, from his labor record. Vinson's voting record shows that he has been a consistent enemy of the National Labor and Wage and Hour Acts—the two measures which if properly enforced could have eliminated most strikes.

Vinson bitterly opposed the Wage and Hour Act in 1937 and 1938. In 1940 he voted with those who tried to wreck it by excluding 2½ million workers from its provisions. On the Labor Act his record is similarly bad. In 1939 he voted for the Smith investigation, and in 1940 for the Smith amendments, which would have destroyed this important law.

The intentions of the chairman of the Naval Affairs committee may also be judged by his recent choice of Edmund Toland as attorney for a committee investigation which will include labor strikes. Toland, a notorious enemy of labor unions, was the attorney and brainbuster of Congressman Smith when he conducted the inquisition of the Labor Board in 1940, and drafted the crippling Labor Act amendments.

'ASSEMBLY LINE' HOUSING: Workmen unload a section of a pre-fabricated home near Pickwick Dam in Tennessee. The house was assembled in four hours. CIO Housing Committee has urged government to expand use of "pre-fab" homes to assure adequate living quarters for defense and other workers.

CIO Housing Group Asks U.S. Extend 'Mutual' Project Plan

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19.—Extension of the so-called "Camden plan" of government housing construction was urged today in a detailed memorandum prepared by the CIO Housing Committee and sent to the White House by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The "Camden Plan" takes its name from a 500-unit housing project for shipyard workers in Camden, N. J. and was sponsored by the housing committee of Local 1, CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

"In general," the CIO housing group explained, "this plan involves the use of the same basic principles as are employed by mutual insurance companies.

"It is proposed that a 'Mutual Homes Corporation', of which the residents of the homes will be the stockholders, will enter into a contract for sale with the government.

"The government will retain management control until amortization payments by the stockholding residents become sufficient to relieve the government from risk of loss.

OWNERS BENEFIT

"Stockholding residents will benefit from savings resulting from better care of the property, less than normal vacancy losses and more efficient administrative practices. They will have most of the advantages of individual home ownership without incurring the risks involved in long-time installment purchasing."

News of the Camden Plan has spread throughout the country, and unions in many sections have addressed inquiries or sent delegations to Washington to urge that it be used in conjunction with their local defense housing needs, the CIO committee pointed out.

LAUDS CARMODY

Murray's letter referred to an earlier CIO suggestion that an independent agency be created to build defense housing projects and praised the action of Federal Works Administrator John M. Carmody for setting up such a staff within his own division.

Discussing management policies in connection with the housing projects, the CIO proposed that workers who are permanent residents of a community be given the first opportunity to share benefits of the government's housing projects.

Many permanent residents now occupy less desirable dwellings than those being constructed on the "emergency" projects, the committee said, and these families may be expected to stay on after the emergency and purchase the government-built homes.

Rentals for houses built under the defense program should be based on a fair value of the properties, rather than on a percentage of the income of the individual workers, the CIO committee advised.

SUPPORT 'PRE-FABS'

The report also backed up previous support for pre-fabricated housing.

"Our whole economic system is based on new improvements and techniques," the CIO group declared, "and we should not be afraid of an innovation merely because some vested interest may stand to lose. We believe that government agencies today, charged with the construction of defense houses, do not appreciate and utilize new techniques to their fullest capacity; consequently, the program as a whole has been slow and disappointing."

Vote to Continue Strike For Pact At Phelps-Dodge

ELIZABETH, N. J., Apr. 19.—Fourteen hundred employes of the Phelps-Dodge Corporation, on strike since April 5, voted unanimously this week to reject a proposed settlement offered by the National Defense Mediation Board in Washington—a proposal that the strikers go back to work and negotiate while working.

A few weeks ago, after a two-day stoppage to compel reinstatement of two members of the union—the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America — the employes struck to compel the corporation to consent to a Labor Board election. The strike was terminated when Wylie Brown, notorious anti-labor employer and president of Phelps-Dodge, agreed to the election. The UE got 95 per cent of the vote in the election.

PARLEYS BROKE DOWN

Before the second strike, now in progress, was voted, two government conciliators sought to persuade Brown to negotiate a contract in good faith. Breakdown in negotiations led to a strike vote which resulted in 1,258 votes for a strike, 129 against, and 25 blank. The UE arranged to have city officials supervise the balloting, so as to forestall any charges of a "fixed" strike vote.

Corporation profits amounted to $12,000,000 last year. Company officials have admitted that the wage demands would add but $114,000 to the Company's yearly payroll. The UE also seeks over time provisions, night shift bonus, paid holidays and a union shop.

John L. Lewis' recent public statement—"I say further that we are not going to follow this new formula that seems to have been discovered by the Mediation Board in Washington, when they wire strikers to go back to work and bust their strike and then come to Washington and mediate the remnants of their strike" — was cited by local officials here in commenting on last night's unanimous rejection of the Board's proposal.

WhelanStrike In 11th Week

New York, Apr. 19.—Some 800 Whelan strikers held their ranks firmly this week, as the walkout against the United Cigar-Whelan Corporation entered its eleventh week. The workers are members of Local 1199, United Retail & Wholesale Employes, CIO.

Continued refusal of the management to submit issues in dispute to arbitration was met with stronger picket lines, hammering business in the fifty-three struck stores to shreds, and cutting a substantial portion of sales in the United Cigar Stores, owned by the same corporation and boycotted by organized labor.

Chicago Steel Union Wins Strike

Chicago, Apr. 19.—After almost three months of striking, employes of the Central Screw Co. here won full recognition for their union—Local 2226 of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee—and 30 per cent wage increases.

The plant was organized last fall, with 138 workers signing SWOC cards in two days. At the end of two weeks, 90 per cent of the 270 workers had joined the union. Late in November the SWOC won an easy victory in an NLRB election at the plant and subsequently asked for collective bargaining.

After considerable stalling, the management representatives finally walked out of the conference room. The strike which resulted lasted until April 6.

The agreement lifted minimum pay for men from 35 cents an hour to 57 cents, and for women from 30 cents to 45 cents. For the first time in its 25 years, the firm recognized seniority rights and a grievance system, as well as providing vacations with pay and virtual closed shop recognition.

Leaders of the local praised SWOC Representative Harry Harper for his tireless work in assisting the strikers.

Name CIO Man To Housing Staff

Washington, Apr. 19.—Gardner H. Wales, Comptroler of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, has been named by CIO President Philip Murray to serve as CIO Housing Consultant on the advisory staff of Defense Housing Coordinator C. F. Palmer.

At the same time Wales was chosen as assistant secretary of the CIO Housing Committee of which R. J. Thomas, president of the UAW-CIO, is chairman, and Thomas Kennedy, Secretary-Treasurer of the UMWA, is secretary.

It will be Wales' function to act as liaison between Palmer's office and the CIO Housing Committee and CIO affiliates which desire such service. Palmer has issued orders that staff members of his office shall contact CIO unions on their trips about the nation to investigate housing conditions.

Vote 6-1 For CIO

RICHMOND, Va., Apr. 19. — Tobacco workers at the Larus Bros. stemmery plant here have shown their preference for the CIO in a four to one Labor Board election victory.

They voted 272 for Local 577 of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers, 45 against. CIO Regional Director Ray Thomason reports that a contract is expected soon.

COAL LOCKOUT BEFORE U. S. MEDIATION BOARD

AT TEXTILE PARLEY: Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, a vice-president of the CIO, addresses the opening session of the union's second biennial convention. Rieve criticized reactionary efforts to curb labor's freedom of action.

Lewis Blames Southern Owners For Long Dispute

(See Story Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Apr. 25.—The three-week-old lockout of the nation's bituminous coal miners came before the Natl. Defense Mediation Board today, following refusal of the southern operators to accept a peace formula suggested by Pres. Roosevelt.

The proposal—that all the miners return to work, with improvements negotiated for the southern workers retroactive to the resumption of production—was accepted by the UMW and the northern coal owners.

The northern operators and the union have already reached agreement on a new agreement containing a $7 minimum daily wage, but the southern owners have held out for retention of a regional differential which would keep thousands of miners working at lower pay.

In a long statement issued shortly before the negotiators headed for the Washington meeting, UMW Pres. John L. Lewis placed the blame for continuance of the nationwide lockout squarely on the southern mine group, who he said have consistently and arrogantly declined every governmental suggestion.

Stalling Forces 350 To Strike

Pittsburgh, Apr. 26 (FP) — A year-long effort by the CIO State, County and Municipal Workers to negotiate a contract for 5,000 workers in 12 Allegheny County hospitals was climaxed April 18 by a strike against the West Penn Hospital.

Union demands include an increase in the monthly minimum from $38 to $45, a 10 per cent raise for workers making more than $45, and union recognition.

GOT INJUNCTION

The West Penn and the 11 other hospitals are all affiliated with the Allegheny Council of Hospitals, which last year obtained injunction to bar an investigation of its anti-labor activities by the State Labor Relations Board.

The writ was upheld by the state supreme court Jan. 6 and the hospitals shortly afterwards granted minor raises in an effort to appease the workers.

Office Union Wins Poll

New York, Apr. 26. — Twenty-three employes of F. Marti & Co., Inc., shipping agents and freight forwarders, selected Local 16 of the United Office & Professional Workers of America, CIO, as their sole collective bargaining agent in an election held this week under the auspices of the National Labor Relations Board.

WANT PASSAGE

COLUMBUS, Ohio.—CIO leaders throughout Ohio met here last week to tell State senators and representatives that they want passage of the Burke bill to liberalize the present state unemployment compensation bill. The bill is sponsored by Rep. Tom Burke of Toledo, who is financial secretary of Local 12, CIO United Automobile Workers.

Win Big Raise In Ohio Plant

Mansfield, Ohio, Apr. 26.—Pay raises of from five to 17 cents per hour are included in the union contract just signed up here between the Humphryes Manufacturing Company and Local 756 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America. The contract ended a brief stoppage of work.

NEW YORK TIMES SIGNS: The first CIO contract signed by the New York Times was won this week by the American Newspaper Guild. The pact covers 722 employes of the Times' commercial department, and lifts wages over $80,000. Shown signing the agreement are: (seated) Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization; John F. Ryan, general organizer for the New York Guild; Louis Loeb, Times attorney; Harold Hall, Times labor counsel; C. C. Lane, Times business manager. Times unit members and Guild officers are standing in the rear. (Story Page Three)

Win 21c Increase

Pittsburgh, Apr. 26.—A union-shop contract has been signed by Walker's Clearview Garage at Mount Lebanon, with the United Auto Workers, under which employes gained an average of 21 cents an hour in wage increases.

In announcing the new agreement, L. C. Earhart, UAW representative, urged that CIO members in Western Pennsylvania patronize the garage where they can get excellent service by all CIO workers.

Furniture Union Takes Two Polls

Chicago, April 26. — Victories in two Natl. Labor Relations Board elections have made the CIO United Furniture Workers the sole collective bargaining agent for 40 employes, UFWA President Morris Muster revealed today.

The elections were conducted at Kroll Bros. and at the Continental Cushion Spring Co. Union negotiating committees are now seeking contracts at the two plants.

CIO Wins 8c Pay Raise At Aluminum Co.

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa., Apr. 26.—Representatives of the CIO Aluminum Workers of America negotiated a wage increase of eight cents an hour covering 17,000 employes in five plants of the Aluminum Company of America at a one-day conference held this week in the company's offices at Pittsburgh.

At national AWA headquarters here it was announced that the five locals concerned would hold special meetings as soon as possible to act upon the results of the negotiations. The five organized Alcoa plants, including the big plant here, are in Edgewater, N. J.; Alcoa, Tenn.; Badin, N. C.; and Detroit, Mich.

GAIN 3 MILLION

AWA officials estimated that the increase, which goes into effect April 26, would add $3,000,000 to the paychecks of the aluminum workers in the five plants.

In July, 1940, a two-cent increase was given to hourly paid production and maintenance workers in these plants who had not received an increase of two cents or more an hour since October 1, 1939, making a total increase of ten cents an hour in the past year.

AWA President N. A. Zonarich, Vice-President Harry D. Williams and Secretary-Treasurer George E. Hobaugh represented the national AWA office on the negotiating committee, with 12 representatives from the five locals involved.

The question of adjusting wage differentials between Northern and Southern plants was postponed to a later date.

Union negotiators at the Pittsburgh conference this week asked for a 15-cent increase from the giant aluminum monopoly which reported a net profit of nearly $44,150,000 for 1940, a 20 per cent increase over the 1939 figure.

'Red' Tag On Bridges Can't Stick

San Francisco, April 26. — Continued attempts by prosecution witnesses to pin a "Communist" smear on Harry Bridges, CIO California leader currently on trial for the second time in deportation hearings, collapsed under cross examination here this week, Bridges Defense Committee officials announced.

The first witness, one Sam Diner, turned out to have been fired from his job as organizer for the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers for accepting a $50 check from an employer. The second witness, a former Communist, finally boiled down his supposedly sensational testimony to a statement that the Daily Worker had praised Bridges as an organizer. The same paper, defense attorneys pointed out, also had praised such figures as Pres. Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, Mayor LaGuardia of N. Y., Governor Olson of California, and others.

CAN'T REMEMBER

Diner had great difficulty remembering the location of a supposed Communist convention at which Bridges was alleged to have appeared in 1934. "Is that the building?" prosecution counsel asked, showing Diner a photograph. "I don't know. It's a lot cleaner than it used to be," Diner replied, which drew a sharp comment from the prosecutor: "The FBI took you to Fresno a few days ago so you could identify the building."

This week's hearings, resumed after a recess to allow Bridges to attend his union's convention, also saw the prosecution denying the defense an opportunity to examine affidavits purporting to show Bridges' radical connections.

These affidavits were made by one Ezra Chase, described by the defense as a Los Angeles labor spy. The defense asked for them after it had shown up several contradictions between Chase's testimony and an earlier appearance before the Dies Committee in Washington.

"We have already shown that Chase's testimony before the Dies Committee differed from the testimony he gave here," chief defense counsel Carol King said. "We have reason to believe there are additional contradictions in the affidavits."

Albert Del Guercio, government prosecutor, replied that Attorney General Jackson had left the matter to his discretion, and that he would not allow defense counsel to look at the affidavits.

The CIO National Committee for the defense of Bridges, consisting of CIO Vice-President Sherman H. Dalrymple and SWOC Secretary-Treasurer David J. MacDonald, have urged CIO members to write to the Attorney-General in Washington asking him to let defense counsel see the Chase affidavits.

CIO Office Workers Win

New York, Apr. 26 — Twenty-three employes of F. Marti & Co., Inc., shipping agents and freight forwarders, selected Local 16 of the United Office & Professional Workers of America, CIO, as their sole collective bargaining agent in an election held by the National Labor Relations Board.

The vote was 13 for the union and 10 opposed. Arrangements have already been made for the union and the employer to negotiate an agreement covering the entire staff.

STRIKE CONTINUES: No "return to work pending negotiations" is the decision of these strikers at the Phelps-Dodge Products Corp., at Elizabeth, N. J. Refusal of the company led to the strike, and the workers—members of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers—declined mediation board suggestions that they go back to the job before a settlement is reached.

Open-Shopper's Finagling Angers Coast Strikers

TRONA, Calif., Apr. 26.—Charges that Paul Shoup, union-busting head of the Los Angeles open shoppers association, was using the influence of a temporary position with the OPM's labor division to hinder settlement of their strike against the American Potash & Chemical Co., were made today by the CIO Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The strike, now in its fifth week, was on the verge of settlement until Shoup—who represented the OPM during the Harvill Die Casting strike at Los Angeles last month—muddied the waters. Shoup is head of the Los Angeles Merchants & Manufacturers Assn., which La Follette Committee hearings last year showed to be a leading foe of unions in southern California.

WIRES TO OPM

Trading on his influence as a temporary government representative, Shoup entered the Trona negotiations, gained a delay and in the meantime arranged for a number of California firms to shower OPM headquarters with complaints that the strike was endangering national defense production.

The CIO union quickly pointed out that when negotiations first started, the British-owned company had solemnly denied that it was engaged in defense production, or that its operations had anything to do with the defense problems.

When OPM officials requested the union to permit shipment of materials out of the desert-bound plant, Reid Robinson, president of the union and a CIO vice-president, recalled the company's statement and branded the request as playing into the hands of Shoup's continued strikebreaking efforts.

In the midst of this situation, Local 414 of the union queried OPM headquarters in Washington for an exact description of Shoup's official status. The reply, sent by E. L. Oliver, an assistant to OPM Associate Director General Sidney Hillman, declared that Shoup "has acted heretofore as industrial consultant for labor division of OPM but in the American Potash & Chemical Co. dispute, he has been specifically asked to represent the management."

SLURS CIO OFFICIAL

The message went on to say, however, that "reports from Trona indicate presence of advice of Goldblatt (Secretary Louis Goldblatt of the California State CIO) are complicating the local situation."

Pres. Robinson replied immediately:

"Goldblatt represents the California state CIO," he said. "Shoup represents the open shop Merchants & Manufacturers Association. We welcome the participation of Goldblatt. We resent the intervention of Shoup in an attempt to break the strike."

BRITISH COLONY

Trona has been described as a "British colony." The English-owned company has built up an entire community in the midst of the desert, and the natural barriers for many years prevented union organization.

Long Labor Board cases, and a circuit court decision, finally forced the company to recognize the union, but the negotiations broke down and the workers were forced to strike.

Hearst Smear Tactics Under Attack

Los Angeles, Apr. 26. — All the smear tactics for which the news and editorial columns of the Hearst newspapers are notorious, are being used against employes of the Los Angeles Examiner who join the American Newspaper Guild, it was charged today by the city's Industrial Union Council.

A resolution adopted by the council asserted that Abe Pierce, a district circulation manager for the paper, has been "persecuted, intimidated, deprived of his job and his character defamed because he exercised his democratic right to join a trade union—the Guild."

Pierce, a Hearst employe for seven years, was given his job back after a recent illness only when the Guild launched a vigorous protest against his dismissal. Then the Hearst smear campaign really got up steam, the council said.

In short order he was "falsely accused of stealing newspapers," and "arrested by city detectives who had responded to an anonymous telephone call" charging Pierce with selling narcotics—although no formal complaint has been issued. According to the CIO resolution, "the Guild is convinced that Pierce is innocent and has evidence that he is the victim of a frame-up," because of his union activities.

Labor's answer to reactionary attacks is contained in the latest CIO pamphlet, "The Right to Strike — Keystone of Liberty." Every union member should read it. Order from the CIO Publicity Dept., 1106 Conecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C. 100 copies for $1.75. 500 for $5.75.

New York Times Signs First Guild Contract

NEW YORK, Apr. 26.—The New York Times, the paper which prints "all the news that's fit to print," today had seen fit to sign its first contract with the CIO American Newspaper Guild.

The contract, covering 722 employes in the commercial departments, brought wage increases totaling $104,000 a year.

Monroe Stern, president of the New York Guild, compared the signing of a contract between the Guild and the Times with the recent victory at the Ford Plants.

"This contract is as important to the American Newspaper Guild as the Ford agreement is to the United Automobile Workers," Stern said.

The collective bargaining began in October after an NLRB election which the Guild won overwhelmingly. Another election to determine the bargaining agent in the Editorial Department will be held within a few weeks. The contract eventually will cover approximately 1,000 employes.

In addition to wage increases, the contract provides serevance pay at the rate of two weeks per year of service without limit, and payable upon resignation for ill health or old age: security against layoffs and wage cuts; the five-day 40-hour week and 8-hour day with time and one-half cash overtime; protection for draftees and compensation amounting to half the difference between Army pay and the wage on the paper up to $100 a month; maternity leave with four weeks' pay; two weeks vacation.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO Director of Organization, signed the contract as witness for the Guild. Signing for the negotiating committee were Monroe Stern, H. Richard Seller, ANG Representative, and John F. Ryan, New York Guild General Organizer.

Westinghouse Signs With CIO, 45,000 Get Raise

NEW YORK, Apr. 26.—An agreement on wages, hours and working conditions affecting 45,000 employes in 24 plants of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. has finally been reached after several months bargaining between representatives of the company and the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

This is the first such agreement between the union and the Westinghouse Company. Its completion will bring under contract the two largest firms in the industry, the other being General Electric.

A joint announcement of the agreement was issued this week in New York and Pittsburgh by James J. Matles, UERMW director of organization, and W. G. Marshall, vice-president, and I. B. Stiefel, industrial relations manager, of Westinghouse Electric.

Terms of the agreement negotiated have been submitted to the local unions in the plants and to the plant managers, and if ratified will be embodied in contracts between the locals and the management of the plants.

On the wage question, it was agreed that all day workers and those employed on an incentive basis, will receive wage increases equivalent to not less than $4 for each 40-hour week, or 10 cents an hour minimum.

The Westinghouse and General Electric Companies together booked one billion dollars in orders in 1940. Of every five dollars' worth of electrical goods sold in the United States, more than four dollars' worth is now produced under UE agreements.

Two Large Steel Firms Give Raises

Pittsburgh, Apr. 26.—A contract has been signed by the Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee under which a 10 cents an hour wage increase retroactive to April 1 was included.

David J. MacDonald, SWOC secretary-treasurer, who headed the union negotiating committee, said several other clauses in the old agreement, including those covering vacations and grievance machinery, hours of work, and seniority, were improved.

The contract also provides the SWOC with sole bargaining rights for J & L's 27,000 employes.

The 10 cent hourly increase retroactive to April 1 was also included in a new agreement negotiated by the SWOC with the Crucible Steel Co. of America.

Bethlehem Poll May 14

BUFFALO, N. Y., Apr. 26.—First National Labor Relations Board election at the Bethlehem Steel Corp. will be conducted at the company's Lackawanna plant on May 14.

The election was ordered shortly after a strike at the plant by the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee two months ago.

Some 14,000 workers will be eligible to vote.

Harvester Disgorges 5c Raise

Chicago, Apr. 26 — Demand of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee for a wage increase for workers in plants of the International Harvester Co. were met at least part way last week when the management announced a general five cent hourly increase. The union had asked for ten cents.

Strikes in four Harvester plants were ended recently when the dispute was submitted to the National Defense Mediation Board for settlement of the issues involved. The Board commissioned Dr. Don Lescohier to investigate the circumstances of the dispute at the plants to make a report.

The CIO Farm Equipment Union presented him with facts and figures to show that the company's profits were large enough to enable it to pay a substantial wage increase.

Coal Lockout Goes To Mediation Board

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

NEW YORK, Apr. 25.—Negotiations for a new two-year contract for the nation's 400,000 bituminous coal miners moved to Washington today as hearings opened before the Natl. Defense Mediation Board. Northern operators have already agreed to a new contract.

Certification of the lockout, which has kept the country's coal mines closed since April 1, followed refusal of the southern operators to accept a formula offered by Pres. Roosevelt under which the coal mines would have been reopened, with any agreement worked out by the United Mine Workers and the southern operators retroactive to the date of the mines' opening.

Both the UMW and the northern operators agreed to the Presidential formula. But the southern coal mine owners, who have been fighting the UMW's demand for equalization of wages in the bituminous industry at $7 a day, refused. The northern operators have already agreed to the $7 minimum; the southerners have been holding out for an 11 per cent increase on the $5.60 day rate under the old contract.

LEWIS' STATEMENT

Pres. John L. Lewis of the UMW explained the union's position in a statement issued a few hours before he and the other coal miners' leaders left this city, the scene of the negotiations during the past five weeks, for the nation's capital.

"The UMW considers the certification of the case to the Mediation Board unfortunate in that it would consume an indefinite period of time while a new set of individuals acquaint themselves with the facts of the industry and the controversy. We are, however, holding ourselves subject to notice from the Board as to when to appear. Statements appearing in the press to the effect that we have refused to recognize the Mediation Board are erroneous, and are based on previous criticisms made concerning only the procedure of the Board in a public address I made on April 2."

ACCEPTABLE TO 70%

Lewis pointed out that the UMW's new contract with the northern operators "is acceptable to about 70 per cent of the total bituminous coal tonnage in the nation. But operators representing 30 per cent of the southern area of the Appalachian field refuse to accept it."

The miners' leaders made it clear that any settlement worked out by the Mediation Board which "fails to embrace the formula presented by the Chief Executive of the nation will be a public repudiation of the President by a public agency."

TERMS OF FORMULA

The exact terms of the President's formula follow.

"1. The miners and operators already in agreement resume coal production under the terms of that agreement.

"2. The operators and miners who have not yet reached an agreement enter into wage negotiations and at the same time reopen the mines, the agreement

Textile Union Maps Organizing Campaign

NEW YORK, Apr. 25.—The CIO Textile Workers Union of America had concluded its second biennial convention today after re-electing Pres. Emil Rieve, Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi and Sec.-Treas. William Pollock.

Sidney Hillman, associate director general of the OPM, who has been chairman of the TWUA board for the past two years, declined to run for re-election. The union will hold the office open.

The convention, attended by hundreds of delegates from all over the country devoted its discussion to the problems of organizing the unorganized textile workers, raising wages, preserving labor's social and political gains, and planning ahead to prevent any post-war crisis that might rob labor of its present status.

Reports of steady and encouraging union progress were cheered by some 600 delegates.

President Emil Rieve, who is also a vice-president of the national CIO declared that the Textile Workers Union "today is bargaining for 260,000 workers employed in more than 1,000 concerns."

Agreements have been greatly improved, he said, so that "by far the greatest number of our agreements today provide for some union shop, for some check-off or for some other provision by which the union is given protection." To cope with technological changes, the union has been successful in obtaining dismissal wages in many cases. It has also secured vacations with pay in the large percentage of its collective bargaining agreements.

WAGES RAISED

Substantial wage increases won as a result of the CIO union's activities were also reported by President Rieve. In the cotton textile industry, for instance, the average hourly wage has been raised from 41.8c per hour in the North and 34.6c in the South, to estimated hourly earnings of 52.2c in the North and 42.5c in the South.

In the synthetic yarn industry, the average wage was 52.8c in July, 1936, and in May, 1941, it is estimated that the wage will be 73.3c per hour.

In the woolen and worsted industry, latest available figures show 58.3c in the North and 45.2c in the South, as compared with 50.5c in the North in July, 1936 and 37.2c in the South. Carpet and rug wages have gone up from an average of 56.1c to an estimated average in May of 69c per hour.

Nova Scotia Miners Win Wage Boost

Halifax, N. S., Apr. 6.—Twelve thousand United Mine Workers in Nova Scotia went to work in the pits of four major coal companies today working under new wage contracts which have just been signed by the executive of District 26 United Mine Workers of America.

Wage increases were granted the men in the contracts based on the report of the McTague Tribunal which investigated wage disputes between the operators and the men.

The other companies included in the settlement are the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company, Acadia Coal Company and Old Sydney Collieries Limited.

LABOR WON'T BE PUSHED

Mastering Our Fate

The history of human progress is the story of man's constant struggle to make himself less and less a helpless victim of forces beyond his control, and more and more a master of his own fate.

The success of the CIO represents a great forward step in this direction, just as surely as any of the triumphs of science over natural forces.

The unorganzied or craft-divided workers in the past were like people in an old-fashioned sailboat—unable to progress when no winds blew; often driven off their course when they blew too hard; and almost completely at the mercy of the economic elements.

The CIO and its great industrial unions in the mass-production industries, on the other hand, are like a great modern steamship. The workers organized in the CIO can determine the ship's direction, and within certain limits its speed. They are still subject to the economic forces of the business cycle, but they have more ability to forge ahead where they want to go than ever was possible before.

Before the CIO, there were wage cuts and wage increases in America's big unorganized industries, as business went up or down. But the workers themselves had little or nothing to say about the degree of these changes. The bankers and industrialists issued their decrees, and the millions of workers had to like them or lump them.

But this year has witnessed the steel workers and other CIO unions determining the extent of wage increases that are due and winning them through negotiation. The 10c-an-hour demand of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, for instance, determined the raising of the wage level, not only throughout the whole steel industry but in many other industries as well.

Whether or not the workers in other industries will get all the wage boosts that are coming to them will depend on the strength of their unions. But the CIO is now sufficiently strongly organized in most industries to have secured a general rise in wages that never would have been granted otherwise.

All this is clear enough to any thinking worker, and the result is the present great wave of organization among the employes of the independent steel companies, the Ford workers, the aircraft workers and countless others.

They are joining the CIO by the thousands, because they have seen concrete evidence of its success; because they want their wages to keep ahead of rising living costs, not trail behind them, as in the last war; and because they know that through the CIO they can have a strong voice in determining their conditions, instead of being at the mercy of autocratic employers and of all the economic winds that blow.

Sign Of the Times

The CIO has won many great and dramatic industrial victories that have been all over the front pages of the daily press.

The winning of the first General Motors strike, the U. S. Steel agreement, the union shop in the coal industry, the successful strike at the Ford Motor Co.—these and scores of other sweeping truimphs involving hundreds of thousands of workers have flamed through the headlines again and again.

But some of the quieter victories of the CIO, involving relatively few workers, have had a particular significance all of their own—as for instance, the organizing of newspapermen and other white-collar groups that were once thought unorganizable.

The New York Times, pillar of press respectability, recorded all the big successes of the CIO; but, a Ford in its own field, continued to resist the CIO organization of its own employes.

Last week, however, the New York Times signed its first agreement with a CIO union—a contract with the American Newspaper Guild covering some 700 business office employes.

When the Times signs, that is certainly a sign of the times.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

QUITE a few people who today thoughtlessly applaud demands for a "curb on labor" are going to find themselves in the same sort of fix as victims of the schoolboy gag about the Siamese national anthem.

"O wha ta na Siam" are the strange words the victim is instructed to sing. And he usually repeats them a number of times, to the great enjoyment of the small boys in the know, before he realizes he is just proclaiming his own asininity.

The demagogue who seeks to put over anti-labor legislation always tries to make you thing it's the other fellow he's after. He will rave about saboteurs, reds, racketeers and declare he means nothing but good for the honest Amrican workingman.

But beware when his hand goes out to pat you on the back. For like as not, while you glow with pride, he will be fixing a "Kick Me" sign to the back of your pants.

GALLUP polls and other surveys purport to show quite a demand, even among working people, for the legal curbing of labor unions.

If some there are who feel this way, it is unquestionably "the other fellow" they think should be curbed. Assuredly they would not vote that way, if they realized that the curb-labor campaign is really gunning for them—to keep down their wages, make them slaves to their jobs, destroy their security of employment, and punish them severely if they protest against unfair conditions.

Just look at the Vinson anti-strike bill if you have any doubts as to what the curb-labor boys are trying to do—or whose pants are going to get kicked.

This bill is the first practical result, in the federal Congress, of the whole nationwide propaganda campaign about defense strikes, union racketeering and radicalism, high initiation fees, sabotage, etc., etc.

But the people who are to be curbed by the Vinson bill are not the racketers or the saboteurs or any of the other real or imaginary bogeymen used in the campaign. No, the chief sufferers are to be the plain, honest American working people whose backs the politicians love to slap.

HERE are some of the things the Vinson bill would do:

(1) Under its anti-strike provisions, it would make it a criminal offense for a worker to quit work or otherwise aid a strike during a definitely prescribed period of involuntary servitude.

Every worker exercising the freedom which distinguishes him from a chattel slave, during this so-called cooling-off period, would be subject to a $5,000 fine and one year in jail.

The idea of "cooling off" is supposed to be to provide a period for negotiation and mediation before a strike takes effect. But such cooling-off periods are regularly provided voluntarily.

To compel workers to stay on the job against their will, even for a limited period, is to provoke not allay industrial unrest. It is also to destroy a basic American freedom.

(2) The open shop has long been the slogan and ideal of anti-union employers. It means that the union men must carry on their backs the non-unionists, who do not pay their share in dues for the benefits won by the union which all alike enjoy.

The Vinson bill would "freeze" open shop conditions where they exist, by decreeing that demands for a union shop are not a legitimate grievance.

In so doing, it would increase industrial friction and strikes. For the unfairness of the open shop provides the union-busting employer with his best opportunity to play off one group against another and thus destroy union conditions.

(3) The Vinson bill would destroy much of the protection of the right to organize which the Natl. Labor Relations Act provides. It would do this through a provision forbidding unions to "use coercive measures of any kind."

This may sound innocent enough until one remembers that the worst enemies of labor in Congress tried for years to destroy the labor act through inclusion of such an "anti-coercion" clause.

The joker is that even the most ordinary union organizing activities have been considered "coercive" from time to time, and might be forbidden under this clause.

The Chamber of Commerce of the U. S., for instance, recently referred to union requests for higher wages as attempts to "coerce wage increases."

(4) The Vinson bill would destroy the protection of the Wagner Act in another respect as well, by permitting employers to fire active unionists almost at will.

It would permit the employer to discharge any worker if he, the employer, "has reasonable cause to believe" that such a worker holds subversive opinions or belongs to a subversive organization.

It would then be up to the worker to prove his innocence, and if he could, the employer would suffer no penalty for his unfair dismissal. The bill provides that the government must pay back wages in such an event.

CIO Slows Anti-Union Bill; Urges National Protest

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Apr. 26.—Labor opposition from all over the country slowed down the tory blitz to push the Vinson anti-strike, anti-union shop bill (HR 4139) through to quick passage in Congress here this week.

Tory strategy called for the bill's appearance on the House floor by early this week, where Southern polltaxers and other reactionary Congressmen were predicting it would pass in two days, but was blocked by determined labor resistance led by CIO President Philip Murray and protests from CIO affiliates and other labor and progressive groups.

The setback took place in the House Rules Committee, which under House procedure has to set a date for a bill's appearance on the floor. Reactionary plans to speed granting of this rule were retarded when President Murray led off a series of demands for further hearings, on the ground that the bill had been rushed through its original committee, the House Naval Affairs, without adequate labor testimony.

TWO WITNESSES

"This bill drastically curtails existing rights of labor and will in my judgment provide a basis for the most widespread discontent among working men and women, thereby causing grave repercussions throughout our national defense program," Murray wired the Rules Committee.

"In spite of the fact that this bill has such widespread ramifications, the House Naval Affairs Committee gave only two days of hearings on the bill and asked only two witnesses, one Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox and the other a representative of one of our unions," he added.

"I wish to urge for your consideration that the Committee on Rules refer HR 4139 back to the Naval Affairs Committee and suggest that more extended hearings be held and an opportunity be given to all major witnesses throughout the country to express their views thereon."

Several Congressmen, from states where the workers vote, added their protest against the anti-labor speedup scheme during hearings before the Rules group, and the Committee concluded the meeting by announcing that it would adjourn until early the next week without issuing a rule. This will operate to keep the bill off the floor until later this week at the earliest, it was explained.

Following up his wire to the Committee, Pres. Murray sent a rush circular letter to all CIO unions urging each union president to write at once to all Congressmen calling for the defeat of the bill. "The danger inherent in this legislation cannot be overemphasized," he wrote. "The bill must be defeated."

Murray's letter to CIO heads included an analysis of the bill prepared by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, which pointed to the four major threats to organized labor in the measure:

1. The section outlawing "coercion" on the part of unions in recruiting members, which would be interpreted by anti-labor judges to include any normal union activity.

2. Freezing of the open shop by forbidding union shop contracts in industries where they do not already exist.

3. The section requiring employers to fire any worker who in their sole opinion may be "subversive"—aimed directly at militant union members.

4. The compulsory "cooling-off" period during which workers may not strike for 25 days after a strike vote, while the dispute is submitted to forced mediation.

Quick action by CIO affiliates indicated that Murray's warning on the dangers of the bill would bring an increasing flood of protest into Congress against it. Among CIO affiliates that took action early this week were the Natl. Maritime Union, the Textile Workers Union, the Greater New York Industrial Union Council, the Washington, D. C., Council, the Boston Council, and others.

Labor's Non-Partisan League added urgent appeals for protests to those sent out by Murray, sending in addition a letter signed by Director John T. Jones to each Congressman asking them to vote against it and enclosing an analysis of the anti-labor measure.

AFL TOO

The AFL joined in the nationwide protest with a letter from William Green, president, who told an audience of AFL Hotel workers that the bill "would prevent further organization and freeze all labor contracts, or conditions where there were no contracts, until the present emergency is over."

Warning to Workers!

The Vinson Bill (HR 4139) will "seriously endanger the future existence of our affiliated unions," CIO Pres. Philip Murray has pointed out.

"The Vinson Bill must not pass!"

For the Vinson Bill, by crippling labor's right to strike and helping to preserve the open shop, affects every American worker.

Write or wire your protests against this bill at once to your Congressman, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., and to your Senators, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C. Write or wire also to Speaker of the House Samuel Rayburn, Majority leader, John W. McCormack, and Minority Leader Joseph Martin, all the House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

ACT NOW TO PRESERVE YOUR BASIC RIGHTS!

10c Raise Averts Strike

Wilmerding, Pa., Apr. 26.—A strike of Local 610 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America (CIO) was averted here when the Westinghouse Airbrake Company on April 15 signed up a union contract with a 10-cents-per-hour wage increase retroactive to April 1. Westinghouse Airbrake is not connected with the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company.

LABOR'S ANSWER: This is the front cover of the latest CIO pamphlet, designed to answer the barrage of propaganda directed against organized labor and the workers' right to strike.

"The Right to Strike—Keystone of Liberty" is CIO Pamphlet 54. It can be obtained from the CIO Publicity Department, 1106 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C. 100 copies for $1.75, 500 copies for $5.75.

"The right to strike is basic to all workers' rights, and to all liberty in the United States," the pamphlet points out. "Without this right, labor has no real protection against low wages and living standards. Labor must keep this right in order to remain free, in order to keep and improve standards won over past years of struggle."

Two main sources of strikes are described as employers' refusal to bargain collectively in good faith, and employers' refusal to agree to needed wage increases and other improvements in working and living standards.

House, Not Labor, Needs Cooling Off, Jones Tells Nation

WASHINGTON, Apr. 26. — Compulsory mediation proposals such as are embodied in the Vinson anti-strike, anti-union shop bill pending in Congress have for their real purpose the destruction of organized labor's basic democratic rights, John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, said in a broadcast over the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting Company on April 23.

Asserting that talk of "cooling-off" periods is simply "the velvet glove which reactionary Congress use to cover the mailed fist," Jones said legislation similar to the Vinson bill would establish a new principle that strikes are a criminal offense. He declared American labor has fought for 100 years against any law or any interpretation of law which would abridge this basic right to strike.

BASIC RIGHT

"The main purpose of the legislation proposed in Congress" Jones said, "is to take away from labor the strongest collective bargaining instrument which workers in all democratic countries have—the right to strike."

Saying that in the name of democracy, reactionaries are proposing legislation which would take away from workers their most basic democratic rights, Jones asked:

"Shall America now, in the name of democratic defense, give up the most basic democratic right of workers? That is the question today. In answering this question we must remember that from the destruction of one right it becomes much easier to proceed to the destruction of many rights. When we place a limit on one liberty, we are likely to set in motion a vicious cycle which will destroy other liberties."

Jones made a sharp distinction between the compulsory terms and criminal penalties of the Vinson bill and voluntary mediation which is already widely practiced between labor and management. Striking at the Vinson bill's "cooling-off" provisions, Jones added:

"American labor insists that the real purpose of these bills is not to provide so-called 'cooling-off' periods. Practically all union agreements today provide voluntary 'cooling-off' periods of 30 to 60 days during which negotiations are carried on in a peaceful and democratic manner around the conference table.

PEACEFUL MEANS

"Moreover, both the CIO and the AFL have voluntarily agreed to notify the U. S. Conciliation Service of every impending dispute and give that service opportunity to help adjust differences. With the present Mediation Board, most disputes which unions and the Conciliation Service cannot adjust peacefully are referred to mediation.

"This method of handling labor disputes has been successful in 90 per cent of the cases in settling or averting strikes. But all these methods are voluntary. They do not violate the basic rights of free labor. These procedures do not make striking a crime punishable by fines or imprisonment."

Notwithstanding testimony against this type of compulsory legislation by defense officials who appeared before the House Military Affairs Committee, Jones said it was being pushed by poll-tax Congressmen who have always fought not alone labor laws but social security, unemployment relief, minimum wage standards, and other social laws. Jones charged these Congressmen do not represent even a majority of their own constituents because the poll-tax denies them the vote.

Murray Asks Increase In WPA Funds

WASHINGTON, Apr. 26.—A warning that the U. S. cannot afford to neglect the continuing problem of its army of nine million unemployed, was voiced today in a letter to the White House from CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

He urged Pres. Roosevelt to ask Congress for "sufficient funds at least to provide WPA work for the needy unem-ployed," and estimated the minimum amount necessary as "not less than two-and-a-half billion dollars."

That amount, Murray said, will give jobs to about three million of the seven million who will be unemployed even when the defense program has reached its zenith.

BAD SITUATION

Pres. Murray called attention to a fact given little publicity in the nation's press: that, "according to available government reports and to reports from our own affiliates, the situation of the unemployed is worse now that it has been at any time since the WPA was started. Within the past year, both local relief provisions and federal government work programs have fallen off much more rapidy than has unemployment."

Pointing out that present preliminary budget figures for WPA would provide "at best" for only a million persons out of the three million now certified for WPA jobs and out of the total of seven million expected to be jobless next year, Murray warned:

"The average of one million employment on WPA would be the lowest percentage of the needy unemployed ever cared for by the WPA.

'DESPERATE' NEED

"The conception of total defense so effectively enunciated by you calls for, it seems to me, the use of these unemployed people in work of public benefit. It will be most destructive to national morale if these working people desperately wanting and needing work are left idle when every effort is being called for.

"I should like to urge you on behalf of the CIO to ask of Congress sufficient funds at least to provide WPA work for the needy unemployed. It is my understanding that this would require not less than two and one-half billion dollars.

"Your recommendation on this matter of course will be regarded as the maximum figure to provide for the unemployed, and will be the governing consideration in Congress."

ultimately reached to be made retroactive to the date of resuming work."

Continuing his statement, Lewis said that since negotiations first started early in March, the UMW has "agreed with every authoritative suggestion of government looking toward a solution of this controversy.

"We point out that the southern operators have consistently and arrogantly declined every governmental suggestion. . .

"It is unfortunate that the Secretary of Labor did not defer certification of this case until the public had a chance to evaluate the refusal of the southern operators to accept the proposal of the President. Further delay in the resumption of operations and coal production is now inescapable, for which we disclaim any responsibility."

BACKED BY OWNERS

The general tenor of Pres. Lewis' remarks were echoed by Charles O'Neill, spokesman for the northern operators.

Pointing out that the Appalachian Joint Wage Conference—which the southern operators attempted to torpedo when they withdrew a week ago—"has been the most stabilizing influence in the industry for 20 years." O'Neill declared that southern estimates of the increased cost resulting from the $7 daily minimum are exaggerated.

The owners' spokesman said that the wage increase would cost the operators only about three and a third cents a ton, and would result in a price increase of anly half that amount.

Pro-Labor Prayer Gripes State Cops' Convention

MONROE, La., Apr. 26 — The Police Jury Assn. of Louisiana, after having passed a strong anti-strike resolution during its annual convention here, was treated to a pro-labor invocation by Father Francis P. Donohoe, assistant pastor of St. Matthews Catholic Church and the most recent member of the Monroe Newspaper Guild.

A guilty silence gripped the assemblage as Father Donohoe stepped down from the rostrum and walked from the hall where the convention was in session. Later there were comments from some of the assembled cops that "we'd have booed him if he hadn't been a preacher."

PRAYER CITES CAPITAL'S SINS

Father Donohoe's prayer said in part:

"Most especially today, O God, we sorely need Thy Guidance and the light of Thy holy wisdom. Under the stress of these tumultous times, many in their shortsightedness and misguided by a partial and prostituted press, have forgotten the ways of brotherhood and have struck out savagely against the honest workers of our land, falsely accusing Labor of sinister motives and a want of patriotism. For the peace and welfare of our Mother Country, enlighten the eyes and illumine the minds of these zealous and misguided souls, that they may see rather the greed and selfishness of Capital that has thwarted our plans to defend our country, by traitorously sitting down until defense bids were given on their own terms.

"Thou knowest that for months Capital refused to expand our defense plants, refused to sublet contracts, train skilled workers or even to accept our governmental orders. They abolished our law of profit limitation to enrich themselves at the price of the worker's blood.

"Thou, O Lord, Who hast sanctified Labor by the work of Thy own divine hands, bless the worker, grant that these men here may have the wisdom and the courage to help right the wrong suffered by Thy fellow-workers and hasten the day when the charity of Christ may dwell in the hearts of men."

Father Donohoe's sentiments ran directly contrary to the position of the Association, whose resolution had condemned all strikes in defense industries and urged strong penalties for striking workers. The Police resolution also brought forth a strong resolution from the Monroe Newspaper Guild, which placed the blame on employers' unwillingness to share profits "as the real cause of current industrial strife."

Hosiery Union Meets This Week

By TRAVIS HEDRICK

PHILADELPHIA, Apr. 26.—Hosiery workers of the United States converge on Philadelphia this week for the opening of the Thirtieth convention of the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers at the Sylvania Hotel.

This year's convention is regarded as particularly important because of the expiration of the three year national contracts and the necessity of setting the union's policy on the type and duration of its agreements.

Alexander McKeown, president of the AFHW, said the convention will decide upon the "type and duration of its new agreements" and "consider steps to be taken to meet new problems in the hosiery industry such as the introduction of nylon yarn and new and faster knitting equipment."

Approximately 250 delegates will attend the convention opening April 28.

Luther Harr, Treasurer of the City of Philadelphia, will welcome the union on Monday, April 28 in behalf of Mayor Thomas Lamberton.

Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers' Union of America and a CIO vice-president, will speak Thursday. Other speakers include Merle Vincent, director of the hearings and exemptions division, U. S. Department of Labor and John Phillips, Pennsylvania State CIO president.

AFL Honors Ford Aide

DETROIT, Apr. 26.—Harry Bennett, personnel director of the Ford Motor Co. has just been given an honorary life membership in an AFL union.

The union is the American Federation of Musicians, which pointed out that Bennett was a member of the organization from 1919 to 1926, and that he has since been "a staunch friend and supporter. . ." Reporting the story, the Detroit Labor News, an AFL paper, noted that "Mr. Bennett is a saxophone and clarinet player."

Textile Union Maps Drive

said that stories of the same strike were repeated at close intervals, giving the erroneous impression that strikes are sweeping the country.

Hillman, in an address to the convention, warned that "everthing is at stake. . .in the present world crisis: the right to speak and think and act as free men; the right to bargain collectively; the right to worship as we choose; the right to have a voice and vote in determining our own destiny. The real issue at stake is whether free labor or slave labor shall prevail."

He told the delegates that "only if we of labor accept" our responsibilities "and carry them through will it be possible for us here to meet again when this tragedy is over and help to build that security which should be and will and must be the outcome of democracy's triumph over totalitarianism."

The convention passed a strong resolution urging aid to democratic nations which are fighting fascism.

Denouncing the Vinson anti-strike bill, Rieve declared: "As a matter of fact and as a matter of record. excluding the coal situation, last week there were less than 8,000 men and women involved in the strike situation in America, less than at any time in our whole national history. Yet, they are trying to pass all kinds of legislation in order that we may not strike at all."

The Vinson bill was the subject of a vigorous resolution denouncing "the motives and the parliamentary trickery which created and fostered it in Congress."

KNOCKS KNUDSEN

Rieve criticized OPM Director General William S. Knudsen for his speech describing defense strikes as criminal. He declared Knudsen did not say "anything about it being criminal for his General Motors Corporation to make more money today than they ever did before.

"I take it that Mr. Knudsen is one of the ablest men in America as far as production is concerned, and I would strongly recommend to Mr. Knudsen that he confine his living in that direction and leave labor relations to someone else who knows something about it."

The convention adopted a constitutional amendment barring members of Communist, Nazi or Fascist organization from holding any office in the Textile Workers Union or its locals.

Other resolutions adopted condemned the model anti-sabotage bills, called for a more intensive organization drive in the South, and demanded appointment of federal wage-hour committees in all branches of the textile industry where the hourly minimum is less than 40c.

TEXTILE UNION MEETS: Delegates from all parts of the nation attended the second biennial convention of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America, held in New York last week. They heard reports of great gains in membership and wage rates, and mapped plans for further extension of the union among the unorganized workers.

Organizing

Director of Organization, CIO

The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America just won an election in Cincinnati at the Formica plant by a vote of 819 to 163.

Local 1138 of the same international union in Minneapolis, Minn., had a case filed before the President's Mediation Board—settled out of the Board hearings with a union shop and increases in wages amounting to more than $200,000, and other concessions.

Director Pieper reports signing of an agreement with the American Sugar Refining Company on Monday, April 21st, and the winning of an election at the Continental Can Company's plant in New Orleans. He is also organizing the workers of the Brookline Cooperate, subsidiary of the American Refinery.

The steel workers are now engaged in an election campaign at the Lackawanna plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Sentiment for the SWOC is running high.

The International Harvester Corporation, where a strike was recently conducted by the Farm Equipment Organizing Committee, has granted an increase of five cents per hour, after taking the position which led to the strike that they could not pay any increases. The increase was granted while the case was in the hands of the Mediation Board. It demonstrates that the corporation was responsible for the strike. This corporation trebled its profits through national defense in 1940 over 1939. The union will press its case before the Mediation Board and is asking now what the Board will do about the latest act of the company.

Since coal and steel broke the ice of wage increase resistance, many corporations are now falling into line.

The signing of an agreement between the New York Times and the CIO Newspaper Guild is just one more achievement of bringing the big ones into line in the respective fields. This splendid victory will result in bringing thousands of more members into the Guild.

New York Regional Director Mosele reports negotiation of 10 cents per hour wage increase at the Washburn Wire Co. (SWOC) plant in New York City. Also secured wage increases at the two Crucible Steel Plants in Harrison and Jersey City, New Jersey, two weeks ago of six cents per hour, retroactive to Sept. 1, and this week an additional 10 cents per hour increase for the same workers.

At the Carpenter Steel Company, Kenilworth, N. J., following a strike of three weeks, consummated an agreement with wage increase from 10 to 32 cents per hour. As a result the large plant of this company in Reading, Pennsylvania, with 3000 employes, granted its employes a 10 cents per hour increase; and an organization campaign at that plant is getting under way.

Dividends Going Up, Stock Exchange Notes

NEW YORK, Apr. 26.—Dividend rates of stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange are going up, it was reported this week. Ninety-nine stocks listed on the exchange are yielding more than 10 per cent, according to a summary in the Exchange's official publication.

Over 150 stocks are paying out more than 9 per cent; 226, more than 8 per cent; and 311 more than 7 per cent.

In 1940, the average return on the 577 stocks was 7.2 per cent.

Using financial language to tell its story, the Exchange publication said:

"The vitality of the industrial background supporting these yields (dividend payments) is well known. Even if the yields should be cut in half, they would still be generous in comparison with the present return afforded by most other forms of investment which are available to the public."

All of which means, if you didn't know it before, that industry is reaping super-profits.

Says Labor Dept. Stalls On Parleys

Washington, Apr. 26—Charges that the U. S. Dept. of Labor is preaching rather than practicing collective bargaining were made today by a local of the CIO United Federal Workers.

UFWA Local 12 asserted in a public letter that Dept. officials have failed to bargain in good faith on grievances that have been pending for several months.

Specific grievances included failure to publicize jobs in the wage-hour division, early closing of the department cafeteria and "personal or political favoritism" in making promotions.

PM, News Guild Settle Dispute

New York, Apr. 26 — A dispute of several months' standing between the New York Newspaper Guild and the newspaper PM was settled this week with the CIO union winning its case.

PM agreed to rehire Leo Huberman, the paper's labor editor, who was fired last December, and to give him back pay. Simultaneously Huberman handed in his resignation, effective May 2.

The agreement was worked out by Conciliator Aaron Horvitz of the U. S. Dept. of Labor. Huberman said he resigned because he regarded the decision as complete vindication of statements by Publisher Ralph Ingersoll that he had been dismissed for incompetence.

Negotiators Turn Sightseers!

Washington, Apr. 26.—What started out to be a mediation trip to Washington for union and management officials of the Minneapolis Moline Power Implement Co. turned out instead as a sightseeing jaunt around the nation's capital.

En route to Washington from Minneapolis for a hearing before the Natl. Defense Mediation Board, local leaders of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers got down to negotiations with the company.

AVERTED STRIKE

The parleys which lasted through a long night session at a Washington hotel, resulted in an agreement that forestalled a threatened strike of 2,100 employes.

Notifying the Mediation Board that its services were unnecessary, the union and management delegations then chartered a bus to see the sights.

Meetings of the union to ratify the proposals were planned for this week. The union is understood to have won wage increases and a form of the preferential shop.

CIO Starts Radio Series In Delaware

Wilmington, Del., Apr. 26.—The first labor-sponsored radio broadcasts in Wilmington, center of the anti-union DuPont empire, will be heard starting May 2, it was announced today by the New Castle County CIO Industrial Union Council here.

In a series of six regularly-scheduled programs over Station WILM the Council will present local CIO leaders and rank-and-file unionists to bring the message of the CIO to the public. The programs will be part of the intensive organizing drive now being conducted by the Council, whose aim is to triple its 5,500 membership by the end of the year.

ANSWER TORIES

The first broadcast will be concerned with a simple explanation of the CIO's aims in Delaware and on a national scale, and will also be devoted to an answer to the vicious anti-Union attacks of the local employer-controlled press.

Don Harris, CIO Regional Director for Delaware, will be the speaker on the first broadcast. The broadcasts will be heard on Friday evening at the same hour each week for the remaining five weeks.

$90,000 Pay Boost Won In Philly

Philadelphia, Apr. 26.—A new agreement covering 13 jobbing shops with some 40 employes, today had brought $90,000 wage increases to members of Local 155, CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The pact provides a 10 per cent wage increase effective April 16, and a further 5 per cent increase on Oct. 16 of this year. In addition, the workers gained a 10 per cent bonus for night work, pay for six legal holidays and seniority for draftees. The agreement also retains the closed shop provisions, with hiring through the union.

QUILLS PICKET: The entire family of Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union turned out for picket duty when the union protested the New York City Transportation Board's refusal to negotiate a contract renewal for workers on the city-owned subway lines. Pres. Quill is shown carrying his son John, while Mrs. Quill walks on ahead.

Transit Union Launches Fight For Subway Pact

NEW YORK, Apr. 26.—One of the greatest local public education campaigns in labor history was under way today by the CIO Transport Workers Union, whose contracts with city-owned subway lines will not be renewed this June if Mayor LaGuardia and the Board of Transportation have their way. On one day, TWU members distributed 1,200,000 leaflets entitled "Our Side of the Transit Story" to home-going subway, elevated, trolley and bus riders.

The pamphlet appealed to the public to urge Mayor LaGuardia that he meet with union officials and settle the transit labor controversy peacefully and honorably "in the American way"—around the conference table.

The TWU publication described improved working conditions made possible through union organization and recited the destruction and denial of these benefits within the past ten months by the Board of Transportation. The Board has operated the subway lines since they were bought by the city from private interests last year.

QUESTIONS ARGUMENT

Meanwhile Pres. Austin Hogan of the TWU's New York local took issue with a speech made here by Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins. Miss Perkins has maintained, according to the union, "that agreements between workers in public service and their employers could not be called collective bargaining in the usual sense."

To prove that it could be, the TWU cited a contract signed last August by the Tennessee Valley Authority of the federal government and 15 AFL organizations.

"If the federal government can bargain collectively with labor unions and sign agreements, certainly the City of New York can negotiate with its employes on the transit lines and thus live up to the spirit and letter of the Wagner Labor Act," Hogan wrote to the Secretary.

Hogan added that "we cannot emphasize too strongly" that the city Board of Transportation, "which operates the transit lines, is a commercial enterprise. It is endeavoring to show as great an operating profit as it can."

Quill on Radio

Speaking over a New York radio station, TWU Pres. Michael Quill attacked the notion that the city's subway employes do not need a union simply because the municipality owns and operates the lines.

"Who in decency and common honesty can propose that 33,000 transit workers should leave their fate in the hands of three men—the commissioners of the Board of Transportation?" Quill asked.

"Who that speaks as a friend of labor would propose that they desert the organization which freed them from the yoke of company unionism, from yellow-dog contracts and from wage cuts?

"Who would dare deny that only through collective bargaining, only through a union of their own choosing, will the transit workers achieve a decent, American standard of living?

"How else will they achieve wages and working conditions commensurate with the important tasks which they perform in transporting over 5,000,000 people daily? These men and women need and want to keep the Transport Workers Union."

Hetzel on Radio

WASHINGTON, Apr. 27.—CIO suggestions on "How Can We Prevent Inflation" were expressed on the American Forum of the Air radio program by Ralph Hetzel, director of the CIO's Unemployment and Economic Division.

Other speakers on the forum, which was broadcast by the Mutual Network, included Leon Henderson, government price control director; Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio; and Noel Sargent, secretary of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

200 Will Supervise Ford Poll

Detroit, Apr. 26. — Progress on plans for the forthcoming Natl. Labor Relations Board election at the Ford Motor Co. was reported today by Frank Bowen, NLRB regional director.

The governmental official said the Labor Board would have 200 people working on the election, which will be far and away the largest plant election in NLRB history. Some 86,000 persons were employed at River Rouge plant in Dearborn, while about 3,500 work at the Lincoln Motor plant, where a separate election will be conducted.

Bowen emphasized that Ford workers will have absolute privacy in choosing their bargaining agency. Supervisory employes of the company will not be permitted near the ballot boxes, and electioneering in the vicinity will be prohibited while the election is being conducted.

Since the giant River Rouge plant operates on a 24-hour basis, the polls will be kept open at least 17 hours. When all the votes have been cast, the ballot boxes will be placed in the custody of United States marshals.

On the ballot will be the CIO United Automobile Workers, which won the first strike in Ford history two weeks ago, and an AFL local which has been vainly trying to disrupt the CIO union at Ford.

Efforts Fail To Smash Paper Strike

Ridgefield Park, N. J., April 26 —All attempts made by the Continental Paper Board Co. to break the two-week old strike called by the CIO United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers, have failed completely union officials declared today.

The plant has been shut down since April 10 when the company flatly refused to bargain with the union. The management is scheming to force an election after the strikers have returned to work, has been turned down by the union, which has filed charges of unfair labor practices with the National Labor Relations Board.

Georgia CIO Starts Union Classes

Atlanta, Ga., Apr. 26—An educational institute for CIO union members sponsored by the Georgia CIO Industrial Union Council and the Southern School for Workers will be held here May 26-31.

Three staff members of the Southern School for Workers will be assisted by a group of union officials and members in conducting classes, discussions and recreation programs aimed to acquaint Atlanta unions with shop problems, labor legislation, labor journalism, public speaking, conduct of union meetings and other subjects of interest to union workers.

A special course in leadership training for active members of each union and WPA teachers will be held for an hour each evening under the leadership of Miss Eleanor G. Coit, director of the Labor Education Service.

Mrs. Louise McLaren, head of the Southern School for Workers, will direct the Atlanta Institute, which is one of a series being held in the South this year. In February one was held in Rockingham county, North Carolina, in cooperation with the Textile Workers Union.

BI-LINGUAL STRIKE: Members of the New York CIO women's auxiliary stage a mass picketing demonstration at the offices of the Jewish Day, Yiddish language paper where the American Newspaper Guild struck. The walkout, called after dismissals and severe pay cuts, has national CIO support.

CIO Fights Anti-Alien Proposal

Washington, April 26. — The seven CIO unions affiliated to the CIO Maritime Committee are firmly opposed to the Hobbs concentration camp bill, HR 3, Elinor Kahn, committee representative, told the House Judiciary Committee here at hearings on the measure.

The bill, passed in the House last year but held up in the Senate, would put any non-deportable alien alleged to be acting "in behalf of any foreign government or foreign political party or group" in a concentration camp for a period of 15 months.

Rep. Hobbs, who comes from the polltax state of Alabama, frankly stated that the purpose of the bill was to get labor leaders like Harry Bridges, now being subjected to a second deportation hearing on the same charges of Communism that were declared false by the U. S. Labor Dept. in 1939.

Hobbs made this admission in earlier hearings, when he boasted that the bill would cover the Bridges case "100 per cent," and that Bridges "is already taken care of in the bill."

MURRAY STATEMENT

Miss Kahn cited CIO Pres. Murray's warning that attempts to exile Bridges are part of the "attacks which have come from anti-labor sources and which are primarily intent on destroying the Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and thereby undermining organized labor as a whole."

She also cited previous CIO opposition to alien-baiting bills such as HR 3, pointing out that the CIO had gone on record in conventions and executive board meetings against this type of bill on the ground that it represented an attack on all labor.

Michigan CIO Hits Tory Bills

DETROIT, Apr. 26.—CIO members all over Michigan were fighting this week to keep their unions from being "legislated out of existence."

Fully conscious that the gains they had won on picket lines after years of struggle now stand in grave danger of being swept away overnight by reactionary legislators who are exploiting America's idealism over defense needs, delegates to the "Emergency Legislative Conference" called by the State CIO Council in Lansing, Saturday, April 19, returned home to take up the union fight on the political front.

That they were hard at work on the big job of letting their representatives know how widespread and sincere is popular opposition to repressive, anti-union measures was indicated in the stream of inquiries that were coming into union offices this week.

Phones were being kept busy at both State CIO headquarters and Labor's Non-Partisan League offices by men and women who wanted to know more about numbers of bills and names of legislators.

Big Turn-Out

The Lansing conference of the CIO, though called on emergency notice of only three days, had a tremendous turn-out.

By noon, when registration stopped, 678 delegates, from 63 cities and 32 counties, all over Michigan had reported, and several more came in during the afternoon session. They represented some 500,000 CIO members in the State.

The word for a quick mobilization to protest a sudden resurgence of legislation aimed directly at the basic rights of trade unions was sent out Tuesday, April 15 by State CIO President August Scholle, and UAW-CIO President R. J. Thomas. Arrangements were carried out by the State Council staff, under direction of Acting Secretary Treasurer Ben Probe.

Speakers at the conference included Lieutenant Governor Frank Murphy; Auditor General Vernon S. Brown; S. P. Martin of Stanton, Michigan, State President of the Michigan Farmers Union; Al Renner, representative of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers, AFL; John W. Gibson, Chairman of the State Department of Labor and Industry, and former Secretary Treasurer of the State CIO Council.

After presentation and discussion of the seven anti-union bills now pending in the Michigan legislature, the delegates passed unanimously resolutions condemning both state and federal measures aimed at basic trade union rights which are vital to democracy.

Texas CIO Hits Gags On Labor

Fort Worth, Tex., Apr. 26 — Speakers at the annual convention of the Texas CIO Industrial Union Council held here last weekend defended labor's right to strike and condemned the array of anti-labor bills, tory interests are now trying to rush through Congress.

The 200 delegates from CIO affiliates throughout the state, who attended the convention elected Simeon Hyde of the Oil Workers International Union president for the coming year and P. F. Kennedy of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, secretary-treasurer.

CIO Representative Powers Hapgood represented the national CIO office. Other speakers were Dr. Elliott, regional representative of the National Labor Relations Board; Jack Knight, of the Oil Workers.

The convention passed a resolution condemning Gov. O'Daniel and the state legislators for their action in passing the state anti-strike bill. In censuring the Governor, the delegates advised him "to retire from politics entirely and travel with his hill-billy band."

$150,000 Boost In Contract

New York, N. Y., April 26.—The Intertype Corporation of America here has signed a union contract with Local 475 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America (CIO), including a raise in pay totalling $150,000 for the 450 employes.

MORE HOUSING: A new federal low-rent housing project, just opened in Jersey City, N. J., won cheers and approval from residents of Hauge-town.

Coal Miners Win Demand; 10c Raise Gained At GE

CIO Really Rolls In Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, May 3—The Los Angeles CIO movement really rolled last week.

Union after union reported successful organizational activity and the winning of new contrasts at the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council meeting, and the council itself reported healthy growth in every phase of its activity. Summary of reports shows:

SWOC—New contract with Boyle Manufacturing Co. providing 72½ cent per hour minimum wage, representing increases of 10 to 22½ cents per hour, and improvements in vacations, grievance procedure, and scales for skilled classifications; labor board elections set for Hercules Foundry, where organizational drive started three weeks ago and 340 out of the 396 workers are now signed up, with Consent Election won after a two-day walkout; election set at Rheems Manufacturing Co., where 60 per cent are signed up with CIO but the AFL is offering strong opposition, requiring demonstration next week by all CIO forces.

AIRCRAFT—Negotiations on behalf of 9000 workers at North American Aviation proceeding with only one slight management concession gained so far, but workers joining CIO in droves; publicity given to terms of proposed contract over the aircraft radio program bringing wide public support; two strike votes finally forced Labor Board to set Alcoa election for 1600 workers next Wednesday.

AUTO—The newly formed truck and trailer local blanked the AFL in an election at Standard Auto Body; new contract at Hobbs Battery raised minimum wages up to 70 cents an hour; organizing proceeding rapidly in 8 house-trailer shops, key to 5000 men employed locally in this industry at wages averaging 35 to 40 cents an hour; negotiations starting for new contract at National Auto Fibre.

WAREHOUSE—Four weeks' organizing drive in wholesale merchandising already netted good contract with R. Stein & Co., upholstery fabrics, and labor board election victory at L. A. branch of New York Merchandise Co., key to "dry goods row"; organizing drive in Sears-Roebuck Mail Order Department; negotiations for new master contract in Waste Material Industry.

NEWSPAPER GUILD—First 35-hour week contract in American newspaper industry signed with Huntington Park Bulletin, with wage raises, higher severance pay, and other gains.

FURNITURE — Six-year fight with L. A. Period Furniture Co., leader of open-shoppers in this industry, during which two AFL strikes were broken, ends in signed contract with Local 576, UFWA, giving go signal to compete CIO organization in furniture.

DIE CASTERS—Closed shop, check-off and pay raises which break the 50-cent an hour minimum the Aircraft Industry is trying desperately to maintain were won in a contract with the Universal Die Casting Co. by Local 101, NADCW.

LEWIS TESTIFIES: In a crowded government office at Washington, Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers (shown at table) exposed the stalling tactics of certain coal operators which had led to the month-long lockout of 400,000 bituminous miners. Twelve hours later the southern mine owners capitulated to the UMW demands.

Southern Operators Capitulate

WASHINGTON, May 3—The CIO this week chalked up major wage increases for close to half a million workers.

Smashing a month-old lockout, the United Mine Workers of America gained dollar-a-day increases for 400,000 workers in the bituminous mine fields and the first vacations with pay in the history of the coal industry.

Meanwhile, the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers announced that a new national contract with the General Electric Co. had brought 10-cent-an-hour pay raises to more than 65,000 employes of that corporation, largest in the electrical field.

The UMW, through Pres. John L. Lewis, revealed that further negotiations with the southern coal operators would commence in mid-May over the question of the 40-cents-a-day wage differential. Predicting elimination of the system through which the southern miners get less pay for the same work, Lewis said wage increases will be retroactive to May 1

10,000 Get Increases

NEW YORK, May 3—Wage increase of 10 and 13 per cent for 10,000 workers in pants shops in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Pennsylvania have been negotiated with the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange, according to Louis Hollander, general manager of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' New York Joint Board.

Workers on men's received 13 per cent and on boys' pants, 10 per cent, Hollander said. The increases are effective May 19 when 10 and 13 per cent increases previously obtained, go into effect for 135,000 men's clothing workers.

Pay Up 35c AT Rubber Company

TRENTON, N. J., May 3.—Pay increases ranging from 10 to 35 cents an hour were obtained in the settlement of a one-day strike at the Kuhn & Jacob Moulding & Tool Co., Joseph Stremlo, representative of the United Rubber Workers, announced this week.

Other terms call for paid vacations; a five day week; seniority rights; double pay for work on Sundays and holidays with time and a half for work in excess of eight hours in any twenty-four, and guarantee of four hours' pay when an employe reports for work and there is none.

'Hobbs Bill Threatens All Americans'—House Told

WASHINGTON, May 3—The Hobbs concentration camp bill, HR 3, is one more proof of the schemes of reactionary Congressmen "to curb civil rights in this country and ultimately to worsen the freedom and the living standards of working men and women," Russ Nixon, speaking for John T. Jones and representing the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League, told the House Judiciary Committee here.

The bill, drawn up by Rep. Hobbs of the poll-tax state of Alabama, would put aliens in concentration camps for indefinite periods, would make it possible to deport an alien belonging to a union with international affiliates, and would make vague charges of "sabotage" grounds for deportation. Hobbs has admitted in earlier hearings that the purpose of the bill is to "get" Harry Bridges and other progressive non-citizen labor leaders and union members.

Nixon reminded the committee that the CIO has repeatedly gone on record in opposition to the concentration camp bill, citing resolutions unanimously passed at the second and third CIO conventions, statements of former CIO President John L. Lewis and President Philip Murray, and similar evidence of CIO opposition to alien-baiting.

THREAT TO ALL

Such bills are a threat to all organized labor, Nixon pointed out, since "discrimination against a minority group in our country can very easily become discrimination against organized labor." The labor movement has been aware "for generations that attacks on the rights of the non-citizen or the foreign-born are a prelude and cover for attacks on the rights of the labor movement."

The anti-labor character of this attack on the rights of aliens is further shown by the current drive to deport Harry Bridges, Nixon pointed out, in quoting CIO Pres. Philip Murray's description of the new Bridges deportation hearings as designed to destroy his union and "undermine organized labor as a whole."

The drive for passage of the Hobbs bill is simply a part of the whole anti-union offensive now going on in Congress, he added, pointing out that Congress has under consideration "a multitude of proposals designed to destroy the rights of all labor, designed to destroy the basic right to organize, bargain collectively, speak freely, act for the redress of grievances."

In addition to CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League testimony against the bill, other organizations including the American Committee for Protection of the Foreign Born, the Descendants of the American Revolution, the Natl. Federation for Constitutional Liberties and others have appeared against it.

Rep. Hobbs, questioning the witness for the Foreign Born Committee, was obviously disappointed to find out that he had been born in New York City—on Avenue B—and not in Moscow.

Watchmen Vote CIO

WASHINGTON, May 3—Watchmen employed by the RCA Manufacturing Co. at its Camden, N. J., plant will be represented by the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, along with the production workers.

The NLRB this week certified the UERMW as sole bargaining agent for the watchmen on the basis of an election won Apr. 9, by a vote of 87 to 4.

END CONVENTION: The second biennial convention of the Textile Workers Union of America ended last week in New York, with Pres. Emil Rieve and other leading officials of the union winning re-election. Convention heard that the CIO affiliate is now bargaining agency in more than 1,000 firms.

Pennsy CIO Convention Hears Report of Big Gains

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 3—Organization of the unorganized and more active participation of labor on the political front was the kepnote of the fourth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council held here last week.

More than 500 delegates, representing 400,000 CIO members in the Keystone State, listened with great interest as leading CIO speakers and friendly political leaders outlined labor's program for the future.

The tone of the convention was set by John Phillips, state president, when he announced that Congress had passed the Federal Mine Inspection Bill. The majority of the delegates were from locals of the United Mine Workers.

John Brophy, director of CIO industrial union councils, outlined the CIO Defense Plan. At the same time, he called for better conditions for the workers, declaring:

'GUNS AND BUTTER'

"Defense is a matter of both guns and butter. Defense means the production of weapons for democracy when they are needed, and in abundant quantities. It also means the continued provision of the necessities and comforts of life to all the people. Plans for defense which fail to meet both of thse objectives are inadequate for their purpose."

To avert another economic depression after the defense program is completed, Brophy said an alysis should be made of goods and services such as has been proposed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in his plan for Industry Councils.

Citicisms of reactionary Congressmen and State Legislators who have been proposing bills to limit labor's right to strike were made by most speakers.

HAYWOOD SPEAKS

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, received much applause as he declared:

"Every time there is a strike, somebody introduces a bill to hang the strikers . . . Congress is not going to pass those bills so readily, because the Senators and Congressmen must come up for re-election . . .

"You hear a lot about the boys who are in the Army working for thirty dollars a month. Who are these boys? They are your sons and your buddies' sons . . . sons of working men. Most of the soldiers are sons of workers."

Haywood ended his speech amidst a burst of applause as he declared: "Go out and organize for this movement. Let every man be an organizer for the CIO which is going to make America serve America."

Haywood's plea for more active prosecution of the organizing was topped off by an announcement of Pres. Murray at a testimonial dinner given in his honor. The CIO leader announced that recent gains have brought CIO membership to approximately five million.

David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, told the convention to beware of so-called "cooling-off" and other anti-strike legislation.

"The CIO will not give up its right to improve the wages and working conditions of the American working people any more than the employers are giving up their vast profits," he said.

Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers, founder of the CIO, paid great tribute to Pres. Murray at the testimonial as well as did other prominent labor leaders and buests.

RESOLUTIONS

Before adjourning the convention voted opposition to the Vinson Bill and also protested a proposed "Little Dies" Committee for Pennsylvania. Resolutions adopted at the meeting also favord the Pennsylvania Apprenticeship Council, improvement of the state unemployment compensation law by reducing the waiting period to one week and increasing benefits of a $10 minimum and $20 maximum to be extended for sixteen weeks.

Other resolutions called for the defense of Harry Bridges, longshoremen's leader, facing deportation charges, for a fair treatment to labor as to capital by the National Defense Mediation Board, and for the bringing of young members into more active participation of union work.

The officers' report was endorsed by the delegates, including a section which called for endorsement of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

Undue publicity of strikes by the daily press was sharply criticised, as also was the State Administration "for failing to obey the spirit of the State Labor Relations Act" in its relations with the CIO State, County and Municipal Workers union.

WINS ELECTION

PLAINSVILLE, Conn., May 3—The United Automobile Workers of America (CIO) was named sole collective bargaining agent for the Marlin Rockwell Co. employes after it swept a Labor Board poll by receiving 840 votes compared to 40 against.

Tax Those Who Can Afford It, Murray Urges

WASHINGTON, May 3—A three-point platform on taxation, aimed at producing revenue from those best able to pay, was presented to the House Ways and Means Committee here by CIO President Philip Murray.

The CIO leader's statement, read to the committee by Ralph Hetzel, director of the CIO Economic Division, charged that various proposals now before the House Committee would "aggravate the unsound condition" of the nation's present tax structure.

Murray pointed to the "shocking record" of the past ten years, during which the "burden of federal taxation upon the working people has grown heavier in size and proportion.

In 1933, he showed, about 32 per cent of federal tax revenues was raised by consumption, sales and excise taxes—paid by the average consumer—while in 1940 that amount had been increased to 55.6 per cent. During the same period income, corporation, inheritance and other progressive taxes dropped from 68 to 44 per cent.

THREE PROPOSALS

The CIO tax proposals, as listed by Pres. Murray, are:

"1. Relief from income taxes for all incomes below the 1939 exemptions of $1,000 and $2,500, and the lifting of all excise and sales taxes from commodities that are not clearly luxury goods.

"2. No additional excise or sales taxes and no extension of income taxes or surtaxes on income below 1939 exemptions of $2,500 and $1,000.

"3. All new tax income should at this time be collected from increased taxes on high individual incomes, estates and growing corporation profits. This includes taxes on excess profits, undivided profits, tax-exempt securities and inheritances."

STRENGTHEN DEMOCRACY

Murray pointed out that "this is a time when everything possible must be done to strengthen the foundations of democracy. Nothing could so seriously weaken our morale than to place heavier burdens upon the common people and the working people in taxation, while the wealthy individuals and corporations continue to pile up great income and profits without being effectively restrained by taxation."

Taxes levied on the earnings of the low income group do not come out of savings or luxuries, Murray said. "They mean less food, clothing and shelter."

Many Gains In Indiana Pact

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 3—A new agreement between the Indiana Steel & Wire Co., Muncie, Ind., and the SWOC was reached last week, James Robb, state CIO regional director, announced.

The pact provides for a ten cents-an-hour increase for all hourly employes, and a five-cent boost for workers employed on tonnage and piece work. The contract also includes "a more liberal" vacation-with-pay plan as well as seniority rights and a 30-day termination clause, Robb reported.

7,000 Steel Men Win 10c Increase

Pittsburgh, May 3—Several improvements in a new contract—including a general 10-cents-an-hour wage increase—have been won by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at two plants of the Allegheny-Ludlum Steel Corp. employing 7,000.

John Stroble, SWOC representative who headed the union's negotiating committee, announced that the recognition clause, and sections covering vacations, settlement of grievances and holidays, all win clear-cut advances for SWOC Locals 1196 and 1138.

The paid-vacation provision establishes a vacation with pay of one week for workers with three years' service; six days for six years' service; seven days for eight years; eight days for 10 years; nine days for 12 years, and a full two weeks' vacation for employes with 14 or more years.

Allegheny-Ludlum agreed to the 10-cents-an-hour increase five days after expiration of the old contract, and agreed to make the raise retroactive to April 1, thereby providing for $25,000 in retroactive wages for the 7,000 employes.

Picketing Continues At Smelter

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 3—(FP)—A second proposed settlement by the National Defense Mediation Board to end the strike at the main plant of the Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corp. was unanimously rejected by the strikers. The walkout is being conducted by the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

The new proposal was practically the same as the first, which was also unanimously turned down, said Peter D. Besch, UERMW representative. It called for return to work pending further negotiations, with final terms retroactive.

Anti-Poll Tax Week Scheduled May 11-17

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 3—Observance of the week of May 11-17 throughout the United States as National Anti-Poll Tax Week has received the hearty endorsement of Representative Lee E. Geyer of California, it was announced here at campaign headquarters.

Congressman Geyer, who is the author of the Geyer-Pepper Anti-Poll Tax Bill, said that observance of the Week "deserves the support of every person in the United States who says that he believes in democracy. For as long as ten million Americans are denied the right to vote, we will not have a truly democratic government in this country.

Among the Negro organizations which have endorsed the Week, are the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Negro Congress and the Improved Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of the World.

The campaign was initiated by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare and the Southern Negro Youth Congress.

The Geyer bill calls for abolishing the poll tax in federal elections as a requisite for voting. Millions of citizens in the South who are unable to pay the tax have been disfranchised through it.

DEFIES COMPANY ATTACK: Last to leave the picket line at the J. A. Roebling Sons plant near Trenton, N. J., was John Hopkins, organizer for the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee. Police used fire hoses to pour water on a previously peaceful picket line. The walkout was settled this week.

Ford Spy Set-Up Bared by NLRB

NEW YORK, May 3—One of the dirtiest of many dirty tricks used to get rid of union men under the labor spy system of the Ford Motor Co. as it functioned at the company's plant in Edgewater, N. J., was told this week by a witness at hearings being held here in the regional office of the National Labor Relations Board.

Elliott L. Murray, former acting superintendent at the Edgewater plant who left the company in 1938, testified that if a man was suspected of belonging to the union, a company spy, known as a service man, would secretly slip a small tool or gauge into his pocket just before he went off the job. Then the employe would be searched at the gate by the guard, accused of stealing company property and fired.

26 WERE FIRED

The hearings here are being held on a complaint of unfair practices filed by the CIO United Automobile Workers charging specifically that 26 men were fired from the Edgewater plant for union membership. This is the first complaint against Ford filed in this area.

After hearing Murray's testimony, Samuel L. Rothbard, counsel for the union, asked to have the union's complaint amended to include the names of three additional workers fired.

FORD'S TRICKS

Another trick used to get rid of a union man, Murray testified, was to instruct a foreman to pile work upon the suspected union worker so fast that he couldn't keep up and would have to follow down the assembly to finish his operation. He would then be fired for inefficiency.

Earlier in the hearing, a former Ford stoolpigeon, Frank J. Sucarato, who worked for Ford from 1912 to 1938 when he was fired without being given a reason, told the Board that he was ordered to be on the lookout for union activity and to instruct sub-foremen and checkers to keep their eyes open.

Sucarato said that the spy system at Edgewater had been in existence since 1933 when the AFL conducted an unsuccessful strike.

In 1937 when the CIO auto union started an organizing drive, the former spy said that Joseph De Matteo, then head of the service department, told him: "Wake up your foremen and pushers (checkers). They're starting union activity again. If you hear anything, let me know."

Miners Smash Lockout, Win $1-A-Day Raise

WASHINGTON, May 3—The powerful United Mine Workers today had won a tremendous victory in the country's bituminous coal mines, gaining a dollar-a-day wage increase and smashing a month-old lockout which had endangered the nation's coal supply.

Led by Pres. John L. Lewis, the UMW secured vacations with pay for the first time in the history of the industry and provision for establishment of safety committees aimed at halting the appalling death rate in the mines.

The new agreement with the northern operators brings the minimum wage to $7 a day.

The southern mines, estimated by Lewis to produce 30 per cent of the coal tonnage, opened under a temporary agreement which lifted the minimum rate by $1 a day and provided for future negotiations over the 40 cents-a-day differential, removal of which had been one of the UMW's cardinal demands.

PREDICTS 40c RAISE

Speaking in Harrisburg, Pa., this week, Lewis predicted that when negotiations reopen with the southern operators in mid-May, the differential will go out the window.

The southern mine minimum will rise under those circumstances from the $6.60 rate under which the mines reopened to the $7 level now being paid in the north, with the difference in pay retroactive to the date when the men returned to work.

The settlement, another in the string of impressive victories which the CIO has accumulated in basic industries during recent months, will bring millions of dollars of purchasing power into the pay envelopes of the 400,000 bituminous miners.

CAPITULATION

Reopening of the coal mines on terms proposed by the government some time ago, and immediately accepted by the UMW and the northern operators, followed capitulation of the southern group of mine owners.

On April 22, Pres. Roosevelt had submitted the compromise formula which finally opened the mines. It called for $1-a-day raises in all the mines, with further negotiations with the southern operators over the differentials, and provided that any increases worked out in those parleys should be retroactive to the date of the return to work.

The southern operators, who had bolted the Appalachian Joint Wage Conference in New York, returned for further conferences with the UMW. When those meetings broke up without agreement being reached, Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins certified the dispute to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

MEDIATE 27 HOURS

For 27 hours during a three-day period, the mediation agency heard the arguments of the disputing parties. Its chairman, William H. Davis, then announced that no better peace formula than that suggested by the President had been worked out.

A day after the Mediation Board washed its hands of the case, the UMW and the two operators' groups were called to testify before a special Senate committee investigating the national defense program.

In a brilliant appearance before that group, Lewis defeated efforts to use the hearing as an anti-labor sounding board and exposed the small group of economic "carpet-

White Collar Workers Win

THEY WON: Fresh from a Labor Board election victory, these girls—members of the CIO United Office & Professional Workers—attended a big mass rally in Detroit to map their demands for a contract with the R. L. Polk Co. They ask a 20 per cent wage increase, vacations with pay and seniority.

General Electric Bows To CIO Wage Demands

NEW YORK, May 3—Wage increases equal to not less than 10 cents per hour are now going into effect for 125,000 employes in the nation's electrical manufacturing industry as a result of the negotiation of national agreements with the two largest firms in the industry—the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co.—by the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America.

The Westinghouse agreement is the first nationally negotiated agreement between the UE and this Company, the result of a four-year battle including direct action, Labor Board action and Court fights. The agreement with General Electric has been in existence for four years, peacefully renewed on each occasion.

THREE DEVELOPMENTS

1. UE Secretary-Treasurer Julius Emspak, and W. R. Burrows, Vice President of General Electric, announced jointly the successful negotiation of the wage raises and other improvements in the national agreement. The results of the negotiations went to the UE's local unions in 22 General Electric plants for ratification.

2. The UE announced that all Westinghouse locals in 25 plants of the company had ratified the Westinghouse agreement, which includes the wage raises and other provisions.

3. James J. Matles, Director of Organization of the UE, and W. G. Marshall, Vice President of Westinghouse, jointly announced that an agreement had further been negotiated for wage raises of $18 per month for salaried employes—technical, clerical and office workers—the $18 representing the $4 per week calculated on a monthly rather than weekly basis to correspond to the company's methods of salary payments.

CONFERRED FOR MONTHS

Both series of negotiations began last fall. General Electric was presented with a demand for the wage increase late in October 1940, and the demand for a wage raise and a nationally negotiated agreement was made upon Westinghouse early in November 1940.

Since then, negotiations have been conducted by the UE National Conference of GE Local Unions, and the UE National Conference of Westinghouse Local Unions, both delegate bodies representing the locals affected, with Emspak and Matles immediately in charge of strategy and conferences.

In a formal statement made here, Matles pointed out that "the fact that we were successful in winning the union's demands in these two instances without the necessity of resorting to strikes and stoppages in no way lessens our insistnece that organized labor must strenuously defend its full right to strike, to organize, to negotiate agreements without so-called 'cooling off' periods."

PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT

"It was because our union membership was solid," he continued, "and because we have the industry organized and under collective bargaining to a high degree that we were able to achieve these gains without strikes. Strong unions in full possession of their basic rights make for labor peace rather than for disputes, contrary to what politicians would like to have the public believe. To weaken labor or to impair any of its rights would be an open incitement of industrial chaos."

The two companies, General Electric and Westinghouse, constitute the "core" of the electrical industry. As to the number of employes, the volume of sales, their financial position and volume of profits, the two firms—with some 50 separate plants in various sections of the nation—dominate this field. The total money value of the wage raises is estimated to be approximately $35,000,000 per year.

Quick Pact!

WASHINGTON, May 3.—It took but a half-hour for the Cleaners and Laundry Workers Union and the Golden Star Valet Service to reach an agreement.

The agreement was reached last Monday and signed Wednesday. The pact includes wage increases from two to four dollars a week, one week vacation with pay, a guarantee of employment for the entire 52 weeks in the year and many other improvements.

Jack Kutner, organizer for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, represented the workers. Several days ago the ACW signed another agreement here with the Rubenstein Cleaning and Dyeing Company.

Gain Pay Boost From duPont

PAULSBORO, N. J., May 3—Employes of the Paulsboro plant of the duPont chemical trust today had gained substantial wage increases through a contract negotiated by District 50, United Mine Workers.

The wage boosts brought the minimum pay in the plant to 77 cents an hour and lifted wages in higher categories by substantial amounts.

Since workers at the sulphuric acid plant first organized in the CIO offiliate 10 months ago, they have accumulated increases totaling 12 cents an hour.

Rep. Dickstein Cites Vinson Bill's Threat

WASHINGTON, May 3—All sections of the Vinson bill are "dangerous invasions of civil rights and of the basic freedoms" Rep. Samuel Dickstein, Democrat of N. Y., told the House of Representatives in a half hour speech defending the right to strike and condemning current hysterical attacks on unions.

The current hysteria about strikes deliberately overlooks the real cause of industrial disputes, he said, which are the need of workers for better wages and working conditions and the refusal of employers to yield to just and reasonable demands.

At the same time, he pointed out, corporations are making huge profits on war orders, while rising living costs drive workers' living standards to new lows.

Passage of the Vinson bill will produce "dissatisfaction and a strong questioning of the motives of Congress in voting a huge defense program on the one hand and in voting to rob our own people of democracy on the other," he said.

"It cannot be defended on any ground of reason or common sense. It is not needed. Its passage will set back our progress toward industrial democracy a score of years or more."

Anthracite Coal Pact Extended Ten Days

NEW YORK, May 3—Shutdown of the Pennsylvania anthracite coal mines upon expiration of the owners' contract with the United Mine Workers on May 1 was averted here by an extension of the agreement for 10 days.

The UMW, which represents the 140,000 anthracite miners in three Pennsylvania districts, has been negotiating a new pact with the operators for the past several weeks. Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the UMW, who hails from the hard coal area, is leading the union negotiators.

Wage increases negotiated by the UMW and the operators will be retroactive to May 1, it was announced by the conferees here.

The union is seeking $1-a-day increases for day workers, and a 20% increase on tonnage scales and other piecework, as well as vacations with pay and improved working conditions.

ASK WAGE BOOST

New York, May 3—Workers of the Steadfast Corp., manufacturers of bridge sets, walked out on strike April 22 under the leadership of Local 76-B, United Furniture Workers, demanding pay increases and a union contract.

EVERYONE'S IN GOOD SHAPE . . . BUT—

CIO Service

The epoch-making agreement won by the United Mine Workers of America is the latest and one of the greatest samples of the service which the Congress of Industrial Organizations renders to American working people and to the cause of social progress.

"The United Mine Workers of America, through the brilliant leadership of John L. Lewis, has just won the most remarkable collective bargaining agreement ever achieved," said CIO President Philip Murray at the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council.

Through their union, hundreds of thousands of soft coal miners have won an increase of $1 a day, one of the highest percentage wage boosts ever secured. The ground has also been laid for negotiations to abolish the southern differential, which will mean a still higher percentage increase of $1.40 in the south, establishing for the first time a national basic wage of $7 a day.

In the new agreement the miners have also won paid vacations for the first time in economic history. They have won the right for union committees to inspect mine safety conditions; and many other noteworthy improvements.

This agreement follows closely after the great achievements of the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee, under Murray's leadership, in winning a general 10c-an-hour increase and boosting its paid-up membership to close to half a million.

The SWOC agreement for the first time establishes the same minimum hourly rate for women as for men. For the first time also, the steel workers have won the right to bargain for new rates on new machines, so that labor may share in the benefits of their increased production.

At the same time, the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers union has won a general 10c-an-hour increase for the tens of thousands of workers employed by the greatest giants of the electrical industry, the General Electric and Westinghouse corporations.

Other CIO unions too numerous to mention are also winning, or have already won, similar benefits for their members in new contracts.

"This is real service," Murray said—the kind of service which the CIO was formed to render—service which brightens the lives and lightens the load of millions.

No wonder the membership of CIO is rising to the five-million mark, as workers in every industry see these outstanding samples of the service which CIO renders more successfully than any organization in history.

The Tax Burden

The same kind of people who advocate wage-cutting as a solution to all economic problems are now full of ideas for making the lowest paid and most productive citizens carry most of the tax load necessary to meet the huge expenditures of war production.

The various tax proposals now before the House way and means committee, in fact, embody that very principle of placing most of the burden on those least able to pay.

The CIO therefore is launching a vigorous campaign to combat these vicious and economically unsound proposals.

Pres. Murray, in testimony before the House committee, pointed out that in the past ten years the burden of federal taxation on working people has grown heavier in size and proportion; while the proportion paid by the well-to-do has decreased.

The CIO emphasizes the importance of reversing this trend. It calls for (1) relief from income taxes on lower incomes and lifting of excise and sales taxes, except on luxuries; (2) no additional excise or sales taxes and no extension of income taxation on lower incomes; and (3) increased taxes on high individual incomes, estates and growing corporation profits.

It is the course of economic wisdom as well as justice to place the tax burden on those most able to pay, and to relieve those least able to pay. But it will take all the strength of labor to prevent the opposite course from being pursued.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE United Mine Workers of America has just advanced more proof to back its claim to being the "world's greatest labor union," in more ways than mere numerical strength.

The dollar-a-day increase already won and the other terms of the agreement under which 400,000 bituminous miners trooped back to work last week set new standards in labor achievement.

The 100% solidity of the union's membership and the brilliant strategy of its leadership, under the guiding hand of John L. Lewis, also establish a model which is hard to match.

And when the southern differential of 40c is abolished, as the union confidently expects it will be in the final negotiations, this will be an historic event of the most far-reaching social significance.

"The United Mine Workers of America is breaking new ground," Lewis said. But that is putting it modestly indeed. For the pioneering leadership of the UMWA in the labor world is unique and almost breath-taking at times.

TWO incidents occurred in the same week the miners went back to work that illustrate in a personal way the leadership which the UMWA has contributed to the labor movement.

One was the testimonial dinner for CIO President Philip Murray during the Pennsylvania CIO convention at Harrisburg; the other the appearance of UMWA President Lewis before the Truman committee in Washington.

The Harrisburg dinner was no ordinary or perfunctory affair. It brought together the miners' big three—Lewis, Murray and Secretary Thomas Kennedy—before an audience representing a million-strong state movement, most of it organized through the initiative and support of the UMWA. And the speeches were worthy of the occasion, coming as they did from men who personify and express most eloquently the miners' contribution to the whole CIO and to America.

PRESIDENT Murray described in moving terms this great CIO movement, "born out of the crucible of suffering, misery and poverty"—a movement that has grown in a few years from practically nothing to a membership today of close to five million.

It is a movement, he said, that "seems to feel the pulse-beats of men and women and children—no ordinary movement, not the kind workers had understood a labor movement to be, but a new super labor movement, an imaginative, creative labor movement to render service to humanity."

Recounting the great gains made by CIO, Murray brought home their intimate meaning in the lives of the workers. "This is real service," he said. "This is meat, this is bread, this is butter, this is carpets on the floor, and music in the home."

LEWIS, on his part, in paying tribute to Murray, made an outstanding speech that rang with indignation at the arrogance of the rich and powerful who "enrich themselves at the expense of the people and make a profit out of the nation's distress."

He struck out lustily at those in government who reject labor's proposals; who mismanage and misdirect the defense program; who create bottlenecks through their favoritism to a few corporations. He denounced those like William Knudsen who "spend their time baiting and maligning labor"; and those who would "chloroform labor so that it will be voiceless and supine," while the favored few make their "financial killing."

Both Lewis and Murray demanded, with all the confidence of the mighty organizations they lead, that labor be granted its place in the sun, its rightful participation in government and in the determination of the nation's policies.

IN Washington, during the same week, a committee room was packed to the doors to hear the United Mine Workers present their case before the Truman senatorial committee.

When Lewis was called to testify, it was long past lunch hour, but not one of those who had sat and stood for hours left the room. Those seated in the audience rose and all stood for an hour or so more, craning their necks and cocking their ears to catch every word.

Lewis gave them and the Senators a liberal education in that space of time. Attempts to bait him or his union were futile, for he stood would-be critics back on their haunches with a few well-directed counter-thrusts, as he vigorously presented the miners' case.

The so-called southern operators, Lewis pointed out, are dominated by a few big northern carpetbagging corporations. He described the "insolent economic power" that oppresses labor in the south; the suborning of public officials; the company stores; the terror of gunmen and hunger, the evictions, and the other means used to keep down underpaid workers who seek the same rights and wages as those in the north.

Lewis presented a complete case against the southern differential. He asserted the determination of the UMW to end it. And that same evening came the break on the part of the southern operators that ended the lockout.

Vinson Bill Scheduled For Debate; Progressives See Blow To Democracy

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, May 3—Sharp criticism of the Vinson bill (HR 4139) that freezes the open shop and curbs the right to strike featured the report of a minority of the House Naval Committee released here this week. The report accompanied the granting of a rule that will allow the bill to come up on the House floor for a two-day debate, tentatively set for next week.

The report, signed by six members, declared that the bill "seriously encroaches upon fundamental democratic rights," that it is an attempt to muzzle labor unions, and that "its practical effect would open serious gaps for hampering our national efforts."

The first section of the report is devoted to criticism of the speed with which it was rushed through the House Naval Committee, pointing out that CIO Pres. Philip Murray was first notified of the hearings in his capacity as member of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board, and that a later telegram was received by him the morning the hearings opened.

Twenty-seven hours later the hearings were over, and 56 hours later the bill was reported out. No other labor witnesses had the opportunity to appear, nor did any representative from the employers or from the government.

CONDEMNS BILL

The report dealt at considerable length with the four basic anti-labor features of the bill—the anti-union shop clause, the "subversive activities" clause, the compulsory "cooling-off" period and the forced mediation, and the outlawing of alleged "coercive" union activities.

"The bill shows a lack of practical understanding of labor and its problems," the report said. "Certainly that lack of understanding was not alleviated by any study or inquiry of the committee into the subject. The bill contains provisions which are far-reaching, and most objectionable because of their practical effect. Although it purports to aid in our defense, its practical effect would be to open serious gaps for hampering our national efforts."

NULLIFIES WAGNER ACT

First criticism of the bill in the report is centered on the clause forbidding unions to use "coercive methods," which would in effect destroy the Wagner Act by allowing anti-union employers to charge coercion, which experience has shown is frequently echoed by anti-labor courts.

The freezing of the open shop in unorganized industries while allowing present union shops to stand is also severely criticized, the authors of the report pointing out that it is "a subterfuge to freeze one and destroy the other."

"The provision is unfair," they wrote. "There is no law today compelling employers to grant a closed shop when requested to do so by the union. Therefore, there is no justification for Congress to legislate in reverse in favor of the employer."

COMPULSORY MEDIATION

The cooling-off and forced mediation "marks the laboring man, if he strikes, justly, for better conditions, a criminal," the report said, adding that this section "would literally cut off the arm to get rid of a sore finger" and would effectively destroy the right to strike.

The section on subversive activities would give employers "almost unrestricted powers to ignore the Natl. Labor Relations Act by discharging active union members," the minority members wrote. "It could reverse our whole conception of democratic justice. Instead of 'innocent until proven guilty' it would be 'guilty until proven innocent'."

The report concluded with the statement that such legislation is neither wise nor necessary, quoting from earlier statements and testimony of President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Knox, defense officials Knudsen and Hillman, and others.

Murray Again Raps Bill, Lists Dangers

WASHINGTON, May 3—Defeat of the Vinson anti-strike bill is absolutely necessary "if we are to preserve our democratic institutions" CIO President Philip Murray wrote to all Congress men this week. Murray's letter, which contained a detailed analysis of the bill, came after the House Rules Committee had voted to send it to the House floor for debate.

Murray's criticism of the bill was aimed at its four major features—the section outlawing the union shop in unorganized industries, the section outlawing so-called "coercive" methods by unions, the section allowing employers to fire workers on suspicion of being "subversive" and the compulsory mediation plus "cooling-off" provisions.

On the anti-union shop clause, Murray pointed out that it would make union shops illegal even where employers were willing and anxious to sign such agreements, thereby constituting "an attempt to legislate in favor of employers." In addition, he wrote, Congress by such a clause "enters the arena of collective bargaining and legislates in favor of one of the private parties."

WAGNER ACT REPEAL

The clause outlawing "coercive" acts by unions in organizing workers is in effect a repeal of the Wagner Act, Murray pointed out, since it would allow use of the term "coercive" against normal union procedures. This clause would reopen labor unions "to all of the past judicial abuse" directed against them, he added.

Similarly the invitation to employers to fire active union members on suspicion of being subversive effectively repeals the Act, which was designed to protect workers from such discrimination. To make it even easier for anti-union corporations, the employer is not required to pay backpay in case the worker proves that he is not subversive.

COOLING-OFF

"The cooling-off" period, during which a dispute would be submitted to compulsory mediation, would destroy the right to strike and would make workers "no longer free men but slaves at the mercy of their employers," Murray wrote.

"Labor has fought for many years to protect its cherished right to strike," he wrote. "Labor fully appreciates that if this right is suppressed or curtailed, regardless for how short a period, the workers of this nation are no free men but slaves at the mercy of their employers.

"Mandatory cooling-off periods aim to accomplish just such an end, namely, to deprive labor of its sole protection—the God-given right to strike."

Murray's letter also sharply criticized the speed with which the bill was rushed through the Naval Committee, pointing out that of two witnesses heard, only one was a representative of labor, the other the Secretary of the Navy.

Miners Win $1 Raise

baggers" who he said were keeping the mines idle.

The gist of Lewis' testimony before the senate hearing—held before an audience that packed the room in the Senate Office Building—was that the opposition of the southern operators to the UMW demands came from financial groups operating out of New York. These same groups, he said, operate mines in the northern area which had already agreed to the $1 increase.

Two of the men he charged with obstructing industrial peace in the south—Alexander and Davis—live and work in New York City.

"TWO WAYS"

"There are two ways to get coal," Lewis said. "One is to convince those three men (leaders of the southern group) by moral suasion. They all accept favors from the government. They sell the government coal. They get defense contracts, and they are not operating for altruistic reasons."

The senators seemed shocked when Lewis pointed out that the union's wage demands would amount to only three and a third cents a ton—a cost which the southern operators, who make large profits, could easily afford.

Lewis described L. T. Putnam, spokesman for the southern group, as the representative of a group of Northern financiers and operators "who call themselves southerners." Putnam, Lewis asserted, "was a northern mine superintendent who took his carpet bag and went down to West Virginia."

TO VOTE IN PENNSY

EASTON, Pa.—Employes of the Transogram Company, Inc., will participate in a secret vote to determine whether they want to be represented by the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers of America (CIO). ORDER ELECTION

NEW YORK—Workers at the Standard Magazine, Inc., and Better Publications, Inc., will vote within 30 days to determine whether they want to be represented in collective bargaining by the Book and Magazine Guild (CIO). The National Labor Relations Board ordered the election after the union petitioned for an investigation and certification.

Describe Vinson Bill As 'Greatest Labor Issue'

By JOHN T. JONES

The anti-labor, anti-strike Vinson Bill is still the greatest labor issue before Congress. On April 30 a rule was granted permitting debate and vote by the House of Representatives on this measure. It now appears that H. R. 4139 will not come up for debate on the floor of the House before May 12. The strong opposition of organized labor to this reactionary bill held up favorable action by the House Rules (notoriously unsympathetic to labor) for almost two weeks.

Nationwide opposition by organized labor to this legislation prevented its enactment on April 23, as planned by Congressman Vinson. Continuation of this opposition is essential to prevent passage of the bill in the future. Labor must now beware of several schemes for undermining union opposition to the bill.

The enemies of labor hope that delay will slow up the CIO campaign against the bill. They further hope that by partial amendment at least the main provisions of the "cooling-off" period will be enacted into law. Some anti-labor elements would hold the threat of the Vinson Bill over labor's head in an effort to prevent the legitimate use of labor's right to strike in the weeks to come. Labor must not be fooled by these devices, but must continue to express its strenuous and thus far successful opposition to any and all legislation of this type.

The true nature of the Vinson Bill is described in a strong minority report submitted by Congressmen Magnuson (Wash.), Flaherty (Mass.), Bradley (Pa.), Imhoff (Ohio), Jacobsen (Iowa), and, with reservations, Sasscer of Maryland. These men, signifying their friendship to labor and their wise concern for the best interests of the American people, oppose the procedure of the Committee and the entire contents of the Vinson Bill.

Bargaining Unit Size Up To NLRB, Says Court

WASHINGTON, May 3.—Full responsibility for naming the collective bargaining agency for workers lies with the National Labor Relations Board, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled last week in a decision involving the CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers of America, at the Crystal City, Mo., plant of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co.

The court ruled that a Labor Board order designating the CIO affiliate as the bargaining agent for all Pittsburgh Plate Glass plants, including Crystal City, was valid. The court ruled that all "employes of a single employer form the most suitable unit for the selection of collective bargaining representatives."

Although the court upheld the Board's decision, the Labor Board reversed itself several days before the Supreme Court ruling in a similar case involving workers at the Parkersburg, W. Va., plant of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. The reversal affected an order by the old Labor Board which designated the CIO union as the sole bargaining agent for all L.-O.-F. plants. The new board, however, declared that the Parkersburg plant is "an appropriate unit for collective bargaining" and an A. F. of L. request for an election was granted.

Meanwhile, Int'l. Pres. Irwin De Shetler of the CIO glass union, hailed the Supreme Court decision affecting the Pittsburgh Plate Glass.

"The recent decision by the Supreme Court in regards to the Pittsburgh Plate Glass case has been joyously received by the entire Federation because it legalizes us as the bargaining agency of all the employes of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company for whom we have been bargaining indirectly all these years, even though the Crystal City plant was not included in the contract," DeShetler said.

CIO Nears Five Million Mark Murray Says; Lewis Raps Knudsen

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 3—With membership increased by nearly a million since last November, the CIO has now close to five million members, CIO President Philip Murray told 400 cheering delegates, at a testimonial dinner given in his honor by the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council.

Murray announced that the CIO would push forward with a "great national organizing crusade," with the ultimate goal of "complete organization of labor in the United States."

John L. Lewis made the chief speech in honor of Murray, pledging his complete support to the CIO president.

Lewis took the occasion to make a blistering attack on OPM Director William S. Knudsen, whom he accused of "baiting and maligning labor" and blaming labor for the bottlenecks caused by the mismanagement of the defense program.

DOING DIS-SERVICE

Knudsen, he said, is "doing a dis-service to his country" by "going about addressing chambers of commerce and businessmen's associations, claiming that labor is responsible for the bottlenecks, when the reverse is true.

"He should be restrained or removed."

Lewis declared that labor has "no adequate representation" in the government or defense administration.

"It is true that there are some individuals from labor in the set-up," he said. "But they do not represent labor in government; they represent the government in labor.

"FIGHT OR RESIGN"

"Their business is to chloroform labor so that it will be voiceless and supine and go along with any policy . . . in the interests of those who would make a financial killing in this emergency.

"Those so-called representatives of labor in government who squirm in their seats when Knudsen talks should either stand up and fight like men or resign."

Lewis declared that the industry council plan offered by President Murray "has received too little attention from our statesmen." Washington, he said, "is over-run by a horde of dollar a year men" and "selfish interests have been permitted to make a profit out of the nation's distress."

UNEQUAL AWARDS

As a result, Lewis stated, nearly 45 per cent of the major defense contracts have been awarded to half a dozen associated financial groups, 30,000 plants have received no contracts, and bottlenecks have been created by such concentration of war orders.

"Philip Murray's plan would have avoided that," he said, "and would have curbed the rapacity of industrial leaders."

Declaring that labor does not want to "take part in any imperialistic war," Lewis also stressed the Americanism of the CIO and its unwillingness to be "tied to the philosophy of any foreign country, whatever it may be."

Murray also stressed the need for labor representation in government. "When labor becomes powerful enough, then government will accord it the right to participate," he said. "Labor possesses the genius and the talent to give leadership to our country, not only in industry but also in government."

He predicted that the Ford election would result in exclusive bargaining rights for the CIO and that before the end of the year Eugene Grace of Bethlehem Steel and Tom Girdler of Republic Steel would "sign on the dotted line" of CIO contracts.

Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, acted as toastmaster at the banquet. Pres. John A. Phillips of the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council, introduced Kennedy, and other speakers included Congressman J. Harold Flannery; John Kmetz, chairman of the arrangements committee; and the Rev. Father Charles Owens Rice.

Text of Speeches

Printed below are important excerpts from the speeches delivered by Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO and Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers at the banquet held by the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council on April 30.

Just Before Southern Mine Owners Gave In

Philip Murray . . . . . Labor Serves

The founders of the Congress of Industrial Organizations had the idea that the ideals and aspirations of the people could best be served by a great, powerful, progressive and intelligent labor movement.

This movement was born out of the crucible of suffering, misery and poverty. It is a movement founded by men who serve; a movement that in five years has made more constructive proposals for the well-being of our population than any other organization. It is a movement that seems to feel the pulse-beats of men and women and children.

This is no ordinary labor movement, not the kind workers had understood a labor movement to be. It is a new super labor movement—an imaginative, creative labor movement to render service to humanity.

From practically nothing in 1935 the CIO has grown to approximately five million members in the spring of 1941. It has organized the economic serfs of America in the bloodstained industries of this nation.

It is a movement that has brought economic liberty and economic salvation to millions. It is the kind of labor movement that understands, that sympathizes with and that fights for the aspirations of the common people. This is the greatest labor movement that America has ever known; maybe the greatest labor movement the world has ever known.

I can understand how difficult it is for a very ordinary man like myself to fill the shoes of a great man like John L. Lewis, one of America's great citizens. My years of companionship with him have been a source of delightful inspiration. I can understand how difficult it is to maintain the pace of my distinguished predecessor.

BIG INCREASE

It is a source of satisfaction to know that since last November the membership of the CIO has increased approximately one million. Henry Ford once said that he would never deal with a union or meet with an officer of a union—particularly the CIO. But Ford is now negotiating with the United Automobile Workers of America, and I predict that after the election which is to be held, the UAW will have exclusive bargaining recognition.

As to Bethlehem Steel, before the end of the present year, Eugene Grace is going to have his signature on the dotted line of a CIO contract. There is no question about it. Tom Girdler also—before the end of the year his signature will be on the dotted line. And Youngstown Sheet and Tube is preparing itself now for wage negotiations.

I say that the prediction of John L. Lewis at the San Francisco convention will come true before the end of the five-year period and we shall have ten million members.

I propose to go forward day by day with all the power and energy at my command on a great national organizing crusade. Our ultimate goal can only be attained by the complete organization of labor in the United States.

The politicians are not going to permit labor proper representation in state or government of their own free will. But when labor becomes powerful enough, then government will accord it the right to participate. Labor will demand and will secure its rightful participation in the administration of the affairs of government.

Labor does possess the genius and the talent to give leadership to our country, not only in industry but also in government.

This steel state of Pennsylvania is now the best organized state in the union. Labor in Pennsylvania is coming into its own.

SHARE OF PROFITS

Through the CIO, labor is demanding its rightful share of profits. And thanks to the CIO, American workers are today enjoying greater participation in the fruits of American industry than ever before.

The United Mine Workers of America, through the brilliant leadership of John L. Lewis, has just won the most remarkable collective bargaining agreement ever achieved.

The steel negotiations recently completed were the first real collective bargaining in the industry. For the first time we won the right to bargain over every rate; and when new machines are introduced, we shall join with management to bargain over every detail.

In the electrical industry, our union has just won a 10-cents-an-hour increase for every man and woman, and general wage increases are being secured by CIO unions in many other industries as well.

This is real service. This is meat, this is bread, this is butter, this is carpets on the floor and music in the home—a real service which our movement performs for the people of America.

John L. Lewis . . . . . A Voice For Labor

If labor is given its full meed of recognition by the people and by government, then the future of America is safe. On labor rests the responsibility to protect America against any and all influences that would strike down our liberties. Labor must increasingly be given a larger participation in the affairs of state and government.

These are indeed perilous times. The world is in confusion. Men are fearful of the future because they are losing confidence in government and institutions and statesmen. There must be a stabilizing influence in the ranks of the people that has no selfish purpose but to serve and protect all the people in our democracy. Such an institution is labor; labor is anxious to serve.

It does not like suggestions coming from any quarter that its rights or activities be circumscribed, to permit those who are rich and powerful to further enrich themselves at the expense of the people.

The national defense program is not as perfect as it should be, because those called in by government from industry are not as perfect as they should be; because selfish interests have been permitted to make a profit out of the nation's distress.

MURRAY'S PLAN

Philip Murray has offered government a plan. This plan has received too little attention from our statesmen. Washington is over-run by a horde of dollar a year men, who have been previously serving corporations, and who expect to serve them in the future.

As a result nearly 45 per cent of the major defense contracts have been awarded to half a dozen associated financial groups by business men whose authority is unchecked in the concerns of government. As a result 30,000 plants have received no contracts and bottlenecks have been created.

Some say labor is the bottleneck. The reverse is true. The concentration of war orders is the bottleneck which restricts American production for defense. Bethlehem Steel Company has a backlog of three and a half years of orders it took from the Defense Commission. Philip Murray's plan would have avoided that, and would have curbed the rapacity of industrial leaders. It would have retained a check and balance on both policy and administration.

'REVERSE IS TRUE'

Mr. Knudsen is one of those going about addressing Chambers of Commerce and associations of business men, claiming that labor is responsible for the bottlenecks. But the reverse is true. America will never be adequately defended so long as men like Knudsen in his position spend their time baiting and maligning labor. . .

The difference between labor in the United States and Britain is that in England today labor is a part of the government; it sits in policy-making positions and has a voice in formulating policies. In the United States, labor is not represented. It has no place in the government or in the cabinet. It has no adequate representation in the OPM or the NDAC or the War Department.

It is true that there are some individuals from labor in the set-up. But they do not represent labor in government; they represent the government in labor. Their business is to chloroform labor so that it will be voiceless and supine and go along with any policy . . . in the interests of those who would make a financial killing in this emergency.

'DIS-SERVICE'

This war, if there is to be a war, cannot be won by baiting labor. Mr. Knudsen, who has devoted a life time to the baiting of labor, is doing a dis-service to his country and should be restrained or removed.

Those so-called representatives of labor in government who squirm in their seats when Knudsen talks should either stand up and fight like men or resign . . . Mr. Murray will be proud to supply some real representatives.

The CIO is proud of its leadership and proud of its great president. Strange voices are abroad in the world today. Some there are who would have us become Nazis; some there are who would have us become Fascists; some there are who would have us become Communists—when all that labor wants is to be Americans. It does not want to be tied to the philosophy of any foreign country, whatever it may be, nor to become puppets of a foreign power. Nor do we want to take part in any imperialistic war.

SERVES AMERICA

The CIO under Philip Murray is prepared to serve American democracy. I have had the rare privilege of counseling with Philip Murray through long nights and trying days, throughout the years. I have been the beneficiary of his counsels and the proud recipient of his friendship.

During his incumbency in office I expect to support Philip Murray in all his official acts. I expect to support him when he's right and I expect to support him when he's wrong. I have found in my own experience that when I am right I do not need support, but I have found a little help when I am wrong is mighty encouraging.

LABOR AND THE LAW:

Two Rulings On Bargaining Units

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

Protection of Company-Wide Bargaining Units

An employer who is ready to accept the continued existence of a labor union and deal with it in good faith will naturally desire to deal with a single union representing all of his employees regardless of the number of plants that he may operate. For only through the industrial form of labor organization can there be assured the maximum degree of collective bargaining and the establishment of satisfactory relations between an employer and a labor union. On the other hand, where an employer is still hoping to destroy the union he will naturally seek to cover up the employees among many bargaining units, and thereafter destroy all at leisure

A recent opinion of the National Labor Relations Board unfortunately lends comfort to such anti-union employers. The opinion becomes particularly important in the face of a recent U. S. Supreme Court decision which upholds a more constructive policy which had been adopted by the NLRB prior to its recent change of personnel.

LIBBEY-IOWENS-FORD

The recent opinion of the Labor Board involves the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company. In January of 1939, the Labor Board certified the CIO Glass Workers Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employes in all of the company's six plants. The company had refused to recognize the CIO union as the representative of the employees at one of its plants. The union's contract with the company at the time of the Board certification did not cover this single plant because when the pact was originally executed the company had not owned the particular plant. However, the Board found that the union represented an overwhelming majority of the employes, taking all six plants as a unit; and thereby certified it as the collective bargaining representative.

The CIO union filed a charge with the Labor Board against the company because of its refusal to bargain with the union for all of the plants. In the new proceeding—the personnel of the Labor Board having since changed—a majority of the Board reversed its original decision. It now held that the single plant of the company, for which recognition of the CIO union had been denied by the company, constituted a separate bargaining unit.

SMITH'S DISSENT

Edwin Smith, in his dissent, reaffirmed the first decision of the Board on the ground that protection of the right to self-organization and collective bargaining demanded establishment of equal bargaining power between employers and employees. This end, he stated, could only be accomplished in this particular case by establishing the broadest industrial unit in which industrial organization has been affected. In this case it would have been the company-wide unit.

The U. S. Supreme Court recently had before it a similar case involving the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company. In this case the Labor Board had certified the CIO Glass Workers Union as the collective bargaining representative for all of the employees of the company covering all of its plants. This decision by the Board was similar in nature to the original decision in the Libbey-Owens-Ford case. In other words, the CIO union had an admitted majority of all the employees of all the plants of the company. It was conceded that it did not have the majority at one of the plants. Nevertheless, the Labor Board held that the policies of the Labor Act could be effected by the establishment of a single company-wide unit, thereby assuring equality of bargaining power between the union and the employer.

The United States Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Board on the ground that the determination of the appropriate bargaining unit under the Act was left to the administrative discretion and judgment of the Labor Board and that the Court would not interfere with the exercise of such judgment. In the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company the Court held that so long as the Board selected a unit which effectuated the policy of the Act, namely, the policy of efficient collective collective bargaining, the court will not disturb such determination.

The Pittsburgh Plate Glass case should demonstrate to the Labor Board that there is no need to appease the insistent demands of the employers that company-wide units be broken down into smaller units and thereby weaken labor's economic position. This important question is raised in the pending case before the Board involving the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union. There, the AFL is attempting to carve out a single port from a coast-wide bargaining unit established by the I.L.W. U. after several severe strikes and recognized in a coast-wide bargaining contract that has been renewed several times.

Blacklist Illegal

Another important recent case decided by the U. S. Supreme Court involved the authority of the Board to grant reinstatement to discriminated men and the measurement of their back pay. This case involved the strike called by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union at the Phelps-Dodge Corporation at Bisbee, Arizona. In this case the Supreme Court decided the following issues which are of the utmost importance to organized labor:

(1) Where an employer refuses to employ workers because of their membership in a union, such workers can be ordered reinstated with back pay from the date of the company's refusal to hire them. In other words, even though the men had never worked for the company, they may not be denied employment because of their union activities or union membership.

(2) The Court affirmed the Labor Board's authority to order an employer to reinstate discriminated employees even though they had, in the meantime, obtained substantially equivalent empployment. The Court held that the Board has the authority to do this providing it finds, on the basis of facts produced at the hearing, that this kind of an order will serve to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(3) The Court also held in this case that in measuring the back pay to which reinstated employees are entitled, the Board must deduct from what the men would have earned had they not been discriminated against, not merely what they had earned elsewhere but also what they had not earned through unjustifiable refusal to take desirable new employment.

MINORITY DECISION

In a minority opinion written by Mr. Justice Murphy, to which Justices Black and Douglas concurred, the last point of the opinion was severely criticized. It was pointed out that such requirement will place a very difficult burden upon the Board in determining the amount of back pay to which discriminated employees were entitled. It was pointed out by Mr. Justice Murphy in his dissenting opinion, that employees when discriminated against by employers do not normally refuse to take employment because not only are they uncertain as to what disposition will be made of their case, by the Board or the Court but also that normally they haven't the finances to simply retire pending a court abjudication ordering them reinstated with back pay.

The saving feature is the assurance extended in the majority opinion of the Court that the Labor Board will be given wide latitude in its administrative decisions. For this reason, it will be important that the Labor Board insist upon protecting the discharged employees and not give comfort to diverse fictitious claims of employers as to what these discharged employees should have earned.

$100 Annual Raise Won for Salt Workers

Buffalo, N. Y., May 3—A contract signed with the Worcester Salt Co. in Silver Springs, N. Y., will bring a yearly $100 pay raise to 278 employes of the company, the CIO regional office here announced.

All workers received a straight five-cent hourly increase with an additional bonus of five cents for work on the night shift, under the contract signed with the company by Local 12220, District 50, United Mine workers.

The agreement also calls for a closed shop—the first won in the salt industry—paid vacations, time and a half for overtime and check off of union dues.

CIO Sweeps Poll At Aluminum Co. In Cleveland

By TED COX

CLEVELAND, May 3—They said the CIO could never crack the biggest open-shop stronghold of the Mellon Empire—Cleveland's U. S. Aluminum Company—but it was cracked, and workers at what was the biggest non-union industrial unit in Ohio today were preparing to follow up their 2-to-1 Labor Board election victory by demanding 10-cents per hour raises and other CIO conditions in a signed contract.

The organization drive was conducted jointly by the Cleveland Industrial Union Council and the National Association of Die Casting Workers. Cleveland's CIO made it a concentration plant and organizers from all international unions participated in the final week of the campaign.

The results: The NADCW (CIO), 3174; for no union, 1,129.

SLAP FOR DIES

The successful drive against this open-shop fortress which had stood out as the "Ford of Cleveland" while SWOC, UAM and UE organized dozens of other plants at the tip of the highly industrialized Cuyahoga Valley, was noted as a demonstration of how effectively "the toughest" corporation can be cracked when all unions thrown their forces together into one campaign. The characterization of the campaign was made by A. E. Stevenson, executive secretary of the CIUC. Stevenson also noted that the election victory, well publicized by Martin Dies and other anti-labor forces in red-baiting statements, stimulated a wave of spontaneous organization in dozens of other smaller plants here.

Leading the campaign, in addition to Stevenson, was Alex Balint, NADCW regional director, and Louis Petringi, representative, who had been working on the organization of the plant since 1937.

Hosiery Union Holds 13th Convention

By TRAVIS HEDRICK

PHILADELPHIA, May 2—Opposition to any American Expeditionary Force outside the western hemisphere was voiced by the thirtieth convention of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers in a resolution unanimously adopted as the meeting ended its third day in the Hotel Sylvania here.

The resolution indorsed a full and complete national defense and urged a continuation of the fight for "human freedom" in order that civil rights, a free press, majority rule and freedom of expression shall be maintained and increased." It was unanimously adopted.

In addition to this resolution, the convention on its first day adopted another in which it expressed its opposition to "Communists, Nazis and Facists," and went on record as saying that no "officer or appointee" of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers or its branches could be a member of those parties or an organization that is communistic, Nazi or facist in nature.

A motion introduced by the split Milwaukee delegation calling for the withdrawal of the Hosiery Union from the Textile Workers Union of America and the direct affiliation of the AFHW with the Congress of Industrial Organizations as an economy measure was lost.

As the convention moved ahead toward consideration of hosiery industry problems on Thursday a number of major resolutions on this subject were ready for submission to the delegates. They included recommendations of the National Executive Board on the question of renewal of the national agreement that expires Aug. 31, 1941, the third shift problem, operation of three machines by four kniters on short section equipment and others.

The convention wil continue next week.

Liberals Act to Help Bridges

NEW YORK, May 3.—Formation of a Citizens Committee for Harry Bridges was announced here by Orson Welles, theatrical producer, John Henry Hammond, Jr., and Prof. F. O. Matthiessen of Harvard University.

More than 65 prominent educators, writers, critics and other cultural and civic leaders have joined the new group.

The new committee announced that its purpose would be "to inform public opinion as to the realities behind Bridges' second trial, which we consider an attack on all organized labor, on the rights of minorities and a focal point of the entire current attack on organized labor."

SPIES TESTIFY

As the new group was set up, the government's case against Bridges closed in San Francisco with testimony from such individuals as Wm. McQuistion, expelled from the Natl. Maritime Union as a labor spy and once charged with the murder of an NMU member in New Orleans, and Peter J. Innes, also expelled from the NMU for spying—both of them star Dies Committee witnesses against the CIO some time ago.

Lumber Camp's Ban On Organizers Outlawed

Washington, May 3—Exclusion of lagor organizers from lumber camps owned by the Weyerhauser Timber Company, Tacoma, Wash., was declared unlawful by the National Labor Relations Board, and the company was ordered to admit labor representatives into labor camps "upon request of one or more of its employes who live at one or more of such camps . . ."

The order follows closely on the heels of a Labor Board election in which the CIO International Woodworkers of America defeated the AFL. The election victory gave the IWA jurisdiction over approximately 5,000 workers employed in the mills and woods owned by the Weyerhauser Company.

In ordering the company to permit union representatives into lumber camps, the Labor Board declared:

"The respondent in this case by not permitting union representatives to enter the camps at the request of employes is 'exercising domination and control' over the efforts of its employes to engage in collective organization and activity, thereby infringing Section 8(1)."

The Board's order was predicated upon the finding that the exclusion of union representatives constitutes interference, restraint and coercion, particularly where the company's conduct is based upon hostilities to union representatives.

The Board also ordered the company to cease and desist from in any manner infringing the rights of workers guaranteed by the Wagner Act.

STILL PICKETING: Twice rejecting as unsatisfactory proposals made by the Natl. Defense Mediation Board, members of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers are keeping up their strike at the Phelps-Dodge plant in Elizabeth, N. J. The mediation board wanted the workers to end their strike, settle afterwards. The union, familiar with the firm's anti-labor attitude, wants to negotiate first for increases and union shop.

Forestall Inflation By Producing More, CIO Official Urges

WASHINGTON, May 3.—The only real solution to inflation is effective planning of the supply of materials and products, Ralph Hetzel, director of the CIO's Unemployment and Economic Division, declared in a speech over the American Forum of the Air broadcast by the Mutual Network.

"Labor does not want inflation. To us, from sad experience, wartime inflation means rises in workers' living costs that run far ahead of his wage increases. We want to see a public policy that prevents price rises and increased cost of living," the CIO speaker told the radio forum.

HITS PROPAGANDA

Hetzel repudiated suggestions in the daily press and elsewhere that labor's demands for wage increases cause inflation and price increases.

"The wage increases that we have been seeking are available from the greatly increased profits brought to American industry under the defense program. It is not necessary," he said, "to pass these wage increases on to the consumer through increased prices.

"Of course we are well aware that from time to time wage increases have been used by industries, whose position in the market is such as to enable them to control prices, as an excuse to raise their prices," Hetzel declared.

Such price rises are often large enough to pay for the wage increases many times over, the CIO economist said.

NEED LOWER COSTS

The additional wage increases sought by labor should come from the decreased cost in production as a result of labor-saving machinery, Hetzel said. He cited the steel industry as an example of this.

In 1940, Hetzel said, the rate of profit for major steel companies was 8½ per cent, compared to 4½ per cent in 1939. He asserted that the first quarter in 1941 reaped a 13 per cent profit for steel.

"A substantial wage increase can be paid out of such profits without the necessity of affecting the price level," Hetzel said. He pointed to government figures which reveal that labor costs for output per man hour fell from the level of 113 in 1938 to 92 in 1940.

"This process is now under way in most of American basic industry. It is essential, therefore, that even to hold its own in the economy labor must have increased wages," Hetzel emphasized.

The CIO speaker declared that the "most serious upward movements of prices now under way or threatened are in those industries and commodities where wage increases have not been a factor.

"The real influence has been scarcity relative to an increased demand. This may have been caused by speculation in the commodity, by real limitations in the supply, or by a failure to increase the production adequately," Hetzel pointed out as he cited aluminum and "in all probability" steel as examples of this.

BACKS MURRAY PLAN

Adoption of an industry council plan, as proposed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray last December, was urged as the "only real solution to inflation."

The Murray Plan calls for the establishment of industry councils, to include representatives of labor, industry and government, which would organize major industries to provide adequate production to meet the nation's needs.

Also speaking on the radio forum were: Leon Henderson, government price control director; Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio, and Noel Sargent, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers.

DROP CASE

NEW YORK—Charges of unfair labor practices against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company were dropped by the United Office and Professional Workers union when the firm agreed to pay $86,000 as back wages to 43 UOPWA members who claimed they were discriminated against because of union activities.

Rap Cut In Auto Production

Washington, May 3—The announced 20 per cent cut in production of motor vehicles is "a serious blunder" and violates the principles "of sound economics and proper planning," James B. Carey, secretary of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and chairman of the CIO Unemployment Committee, said today.

This criticism is based on four main effects that will result from the announced cut, Carey said:

1. Freezing or reduction of employment in the industry, while the present relatively high degree of unemployment still exists.

2. Serious unemployment in numerous industries supplying the automobile manufacturers.

3. Displacement of workers have no guarantee of jobs in arms industries, or, if they do, have no guarantee that present union conditions will be maintained.

4. Serious price increases in automobiles and trucks needed by business and farmers.

2-Day Strike Wins Demands

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., May 3. A two-day strike at the Stanley Steel Co. last week resulted in an SWOC contract calling for a 10 per cent wage increase, one week's vacation with pay, seniority rights and other gains. The SWOC was recognized as the sole collective bargaining agent for the 975 workers involved, Joseph Mayo, assistant New England CIO director, announced.

UNION IN 1838

Mayo announced that the SWOC was also recognized as the bargaining agent for the 420 employes of the Collins Axe Co., Collinsville, Conn. Negotiations for a union pact will begin Tuesday.

According to company records, the employes of the Collins plant were organized into a union as far back as 1838. An agreement between the company and employes was reached at that time calling for a maximum rent charge of $25 a year and a minimum daily wage of fifty cents, the maximum not to exceed $1.50. The company still owns the houses which surround the plant.

Workers Celebrate As Firm Bows To CIO

TRENTON, N. J., May 3—A Mardi Gras spirit prevailed this week among workers of the John A. Roebling's and Sons Company here and in Roebling, a company-owned town, as the firm agreed to deal with a union for the first time in its history.

The company agreed to recognize the Steel Workers Organizing Committee for its members following a 12-day strike of 5,000 workers at the two plants.

SWOC Sub-Regional Director Michael Harris described the settlement as "a complete victory for the SWOC."

The strike started in the wire rope shop after workers in this department were ordere dto operate six machines instead of four. Under the settlement plan—arrived at with the intervention of the National Defense Mediation Board—the men will continue at work on four machines pending a time study by an official of the Office of Production Management, whose decision will be final.

SWOC officials say the speedup on the six machines is so great that they are confident the OPM representative will rule against the companl plan.

T OSETTLE GRIEVANCES

The settlement also provides that the company discuss long-standing grievances with the union committee at weekly conferences. These grievances include several firings and increased speedups during the past several months under the Bedaux point system. Under the Bedaux system, workers in the nets department who used to make $10.80 a day now make only $8.40.

A Labor Board election is scheduled to be held this month. During the course of the strike the U. S. circuit court of appeals at Philadelphia upheld a Labor Board order calling for the disestablishment of company unions in the two Roebling plants.

The strike was marked with much excitement as company police attempted to break up picket lines in the company-owned town. At one point the police manned fire hoses in an attempt to disperse pickets. An attempt by the company to reopen the struck plant at Roebling failed and both plants remained idle for the duration of the walkout.

Challenge 'Anti-Oakie' Statute

WASHINGTON, May 3—Constitutionally of the "anti-Oakie" law by which California and 26 other states have made it a misdemeanor to bring any indigent person into the state was challenged before the U. S. Supreme Court last week.

Acting in behalf of Fred F. Edwards, of Marysville, Cal., the American Civil Liberties Union asserted in its brief that the law, by interfering with free movement across state lines, "invades the power of the national government over interstate commerce," and denied American citizens the freedom to go and to live where they choose "solely on grounds of poverty."

Shoe Union Asks U. S. Clamp Down On Soaring Prices

WASHINGTON, May 3—Fear that a sharp increase in the price of shoes would curtail employment in the nation's shoe industry was expressed by the CIO United Shoe Workers of America today in a letter to Leon Henderson, administrator of the Price Administration and Civilian Supply.

The CIO union, through Pres. Frank McGrath and Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell, urged Henderson to consider the appointment of a committee consisting of representatives of consumers, manufacturers, the union and his own staff to "study the problem of the prices in the industry and make our knowledge, information and conclusions available to you for action. . . ."

The union pointed out that it is anxious to prevent serious curtailment in employment which "has consistently occurred whenever retail prices rise beyond amounts sufficient to offset legitimate increases in cost." The union cited an experience in 1937 when the industry, using a request for wage increases as an excuse, instituted a general price increase, which led to lower production and a loss of jobs.

The letter continued: "This organization has gone on record and is leading a drive for wage increases in the shoe industry. Census of manufacturers showed an average annual wage of $842. This low average is due particularly to the low wages paid in unorganized shoe centers.

"We feel that an increase in wages in these areas, even a 20 per cent increase in wages, should not materially affect the retail price of shoes. We take this position because labor costs in unorganized factories are a smaller percentage of the total manufacturing costs than in organized plants."

"The protection of the consumer's standard of living is essential to civilian morale and national defense. Unjustified price increases threaten our standard of living by eating up consumer income unfairly," the union emphasized.

Big Toy Firm Can't Play Around With CIO

GLENDALE, W. Va., May 3—The Marx Toy Company—reported to be the larget toy plant in the world—is one firm that learned it can't play the old army game on its workers.

It tried and so that's why its 1,000 employes are entering their sixth week of picketing. Early this year the CIO United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers International Union concluded a successful organizing campaign at the toy plant. An overwhelming majority of the Marx workers were enrolled in the union, but the company doubted the union's claim and insisted on a Labor Board election.

The union readily agreed, hoping that such a procedure would result in a happier relationship with the firm. And so on Feb. 20 the CIO affiliate swept the election, with the ballots showing only 18 votes against the union.

CONCILIATOR FAILS

Soon after the poll, negotiations for a contract began. But one month of conferences failed to bring about any concessions from the company. And when it was discovered that the firm was preparing to remove dies and other equipment to its other plants, the union declared a holiday.

Nicholas Vrataric, UPNTW international representative, stated that the walkout was unavoidable as the company bargained in bad faith. He said that even during the negotiations the firm hired new employes while it sent older workers home "because of lack of work."

Even the efforts of a federal labor conciliator failed to bring about an understanding with the company. The CIO affiliate is asking for wage increases and a union shop. But these requests have been denied, even though the company has granted a union shop and more pay to its workers in the Erie, Pa., plant.

The strike has received active support from unionists throughout this district. Adolph Pacifico, CIO regional director and United Mine Workers leader, rallied his entire staff to assist the strikers.

Bethlehem Signs First CIO Contract

(See Story Page Three)

NEW YORK, May 10—Bethlehem Steel Corp.'s long record of refusing to sign a union contract was smashed this week by the CIO.

The company, one of the most notorious fighters of labor in the nation, signed on the dotted line with the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers. The agreement covers 1,700 employes of the Bethlehem Shipyard Corp.'s properties in Hoboken, N. J.

Pres. John Green of the Shipyard Union and other negotiators signed the pact in the New York regional offices of the National Labor Relations Board. The union had won an NLRB election in the yard. Some months ago the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the company to negotiate with the CIO affiliate.

Meanwhile, Bethlehem was faced with CIO organizing activities in one of its largest steel plants. An NLRB election on May 14 will determine whether 14,000 employes of the company's plant at Lackawanna, N. Y.—scene of a strike two months ago—wish the Steel Workers Organizing Committee as their sole bargaining agency. SWOC Chairman Philip Murray is scheduled to address a mass meeting at Lackawanna on May 12.

Spur Drive To Unionize U. S. Employes

Washington, May 10—An organizing drive to enroll the 180,000 federal employes in Washington was announced this week by Eleanor Nelson, secretary-treasurer of the CIO United Federal Workers of America.

"This campaign will bring to government employes in the District of Columbia the same opportunities to meet the rising cost of living as the United Mine Workers of America, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and other CIO affiliates have brought to working men and women in private industry throughout the nation," Miss Nelson declared.

She said that the fundamental goal of the drive was to "organize for pay raises."

The union is employing the use of a radio program in its organizing drive. Broadcasts are heard over Washington's radio station WINX every Tuesday at 10:15 P. M.

WIN IN SOUTH

Prichard, Ala.—The Textile Workers Union, CIO, defeated an AFL union, 149 to 132, in a Labor Board election held among workers at the J. C. Sanders Cotton Co. here.

Big Housing Project Signs CIO Building Pact

WASHINGTON, May 10—New wage agreements on a 650-unit project at Indian Head, Md., were announced this week by the CIO United Construction Workers.

"Several firms producing prefabricated houses which have obtained contracts to build at Indian Head for occupancy by defense workers have turned to the UCW to supply construction workers in the plants and in the field," a union statement said.

"These houses are built in special plants and assembled on the site with less cost and more speed than older methods allow."

Establishment of a new section to supervise prefabricated housing defense projects as recommended by the CIO Housing Committee has been announced by John Carmody, Federal Workers Administrator.

Among the companies signing wage agreements with the CIO Construction Workers is Lockwall Houses, which has a plant near Baltimore, Md. Its contract with the union covers the workers in the plant, those transporting the house parts to the site, and those assembling them.

Ohio Power Co. Meets Union, Averts Strike

COSHOCTON, O., May 10—An eleventh hour decision by the Ohio Power Co. to meet in negotiations with the Utility Workers Organizing Committee saved AFL's Bill Green from the chore of running to the grocery store for kerosene. This is Green's home town.

The utility company agreed to meet with union officials last Tuesday, a few hours before a strike was to go into effect. Last Saturday the CIO union won by an overwhelming majority an election conducted under the joint supervision of the union and the company.

Harold J. Straub, national UWOC director, said that the union has been seeking recognition from the company for the past four years, and although meetings were held with the company nothing was ever done about grievances. Straub said that wages paid by the power company in this district ranged from 36 to 85 cents an hour while employes in the Youngstown district received $1.10 an hour top.

The union is asking for exclusive bargaining rights and a 20 cents an hour wage increase. This is the first time that the Ohio Power Co. has recognized a labor union, Straub said. He said that the way is now open for the union to organize 12 other divisions, employing between 3,000 and 4,000 workers.

5% Raise Won After 1-Month Strike

Allentown, Pa., May 10—A month-old strike at the Arcadia Knitting Mills, manufacturers of cotton fabrics, has been tentatively settled with an agreement providing for a five per cent general pay increase.

Other terms call for an hourly minimum wage of 37½ cents; a closed shop; paid vacations; overtime pay and arbitration of disputes.

The plant normally employs 1,000 workers.

Main points of the agreement were reached during hearings before the National Defense Mediation Board in Washington.

The Lowdown

NEW YORK, May 10—Answering the critics of the Wages and Hours Bill, Administrator Philip B. Fleming this week declared in a special article for the Magazine LOOK, "Most of those people who want the Wages and Hours Law relaxed are the people who don't want it on the books in war time, peace time or any time."

BACK ON THE JOB: Members of the CIO United Mine Workers leave the pits at the Montour mines in Library, Pa., on the first day of work following the union's smashing of the 28-day lockout. The miners gained a $1 a day increase; southern miners may gain an additional 40 cents a day if the UMW succeeds in eliminating the present differential.

Strike-Break Effort Flops

Warren, Ohio, May 10—A strike-breaking effort at the Packard Electrical Division of General Motors here this week proved a complete washout.

The plant, which has been struck by the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, announced it would open its gates for any of the 1,700 workers who wished to return to work.

Nobody scabbed.

The strike was called when the company locked out a number of union workers. The UE is asking for better wages and working conditions.

Ford Spies 'Covered' CIO Offices

NEW YORK, May 10 (FP)—Labor spies from the Edgewater, N. J., plant of the Ford Motor Co. covered CIO headquarters in both Newark and New York, as well as the lavish Ford exhibit at the New York World's Fair.

This was revealed at an NLRB hearing by John Juliano, one of the 29 workers fired for union activity. He told how Ralph E. White, head of the service department, asked him to cover the CIO headquarters in Newark, because he knew the men better than the spies covering it at the time.

"I've got the New York (CIO) office covered and I know no one better than you to cover the Newark (CIO) office," White was quoted as saying.

When Juliano left his job in the factory, he went to work for White as an outside labor spy at $25 a week plus expenses. At first Juliano was reluctant to take the job, but he consented when White promised that none of the men he reported would be fired. Later, Juliano quit espionage in disgust, went over to the union side and became an organizer for the United Automobile Workers (CIO).

MET AT AIRPORT

Juliano gave detailed descriptions of his meetings with White, in which he reported what he found out. White would pick up Juliano in front of a diner near the plant and they would drive to the Newark airport restaurant where the two men talked. At one of these conferences, White was so pleased with Juliano's work that he offered to buy a bottle of champagne, the ex-spy testified.

Second of the fired unionists to testify was Thomas Di Fabrizio, discharged after 18 years of service only four days after joining the UAW.

After he was fired, he said, White called him into his office and said: "I know what you know and you know what I know, so come on and make a clean breast of it and I'll get your job back."

REFUSED TO TALK

When Di Fabrizio refused to tell what he knew about the union, White said: "Well, if you won't tell me, then I can't do anything for you."

That White had a complete picture of union activity in the plant was asserted by Berla Malles, third of the fired unionists to take the stand.

Malles reported White as saying, "I know what's going on. I paid the little son of a gun (Juliano) out of my own pocket."

Two other witnesses at the hearings were Wilbur Ragland, a stoolpigeon, and Joseph Lago, who refused a request by the service department to become a stoolpigeon because "it wasn't a clean job for me."

Still missing at the hearings was Joseph DeMatteo, who preceded White as head of the service department and whose name has come up repeatedly at the hearings in connection with labor spy activities.

Labor School To Hear CIO Officials

MONTEAGLE, Tenn., May 10—Men and women from the factory, field, mine and office are arriving at the Highlander Folk School for the two weeks' spring session which opens today, Myles Horton, educational director, announced here.

Speakers and special teachers who will assist the regular staff include John T. Jones, director of Labor's Non-Partisan League; Robert L. Cruden, publicity director of the CIO United Rubber Workers, and Paul R. Christopher, secretary of the Tennessee CIO Industrial Union Council.

CIO Drive Speeds At Plane Plant

Akron, May 10—The union wave has caught hold in the Goodyear Aircraft plant here. After a brief organizing campaign the workers at the plant have already applied for a charter from the United Automobile Workers of America.

The UAW-CIO has sent in two of its ace organizers to unionize the plant. Nicholas Dragon, international representative, was sent in first to lay the ground work. Recently, Ernest F. Field, member of the UAW local at the Hudson Motor Co., Detroit, was sent in to aid Dragon. Field has a long history of labor union activity. He was vice-president of a United Mine Workers local at 15.

The organizers predict they will soon be able to report a majority of the workers as being members of the union.

Commenting on the organization drive, both organizers stated that the "workers at the Goodyear Aircraft plant were amazed to hear of the high wages paid in union aircraft plants." That is the main reason why the workers have been joining the union so quickly, they said.

Vote 3-1 For CIO On Coast

LOS ANGELES, Cal., May 12—Production workers in the plant of the Aluminum Co. of America here voted 897 for the CIO United Automobile Workers to 213 for the AFL Molders in an NLRB election, Lew Michener, UAW regional director, announced this week. The vote for neither union was 261.

Celebrate Pope's Labor Encyclicals

Washington, May 10—Catholic and non-Catholic workers and friends of the labor movement this week celebrate two anniversaries of interest to all trade unionists—the 50th anniversary of Pope Leo XIII's Encyclical "The Condition of the Working Classes" and the 10th anniversary of Pope Pius XI's "Forty Years After."

Both Encyclicals made a profound impression not only on workers but on social thought generally at the time of their publication and in the years since, leading church and labor authorities have pointed out.

Pope Leo XIII's historic Encyclical, published in 1891, stated explicitly that workers should be encouraged to form and join trade unions, declaring "that it were greatly to be desired that they should be multiplied and become more effective."

This was followed 40 years later by the equally definite Encyclical of Pius XI, who wrote of the demands of the workers for "more equitable distribution of this world's goods" as "objects entirely and undoubtedly legitimate."

Seamen Win First War Risk Insurance

NEW YORK, May 10—War risk insurance was won for American seamen by the National Maritime Union for trips in dangerous waters for the first time in the history of the American Merchant Marine.

The seamen's victory follows a series of conferences between the NMU and the American Merchant Marine Institute. It was provided that all unlicensed seamen will receive $5,000 in individual insurance and $60 a month war risk compensation for voyages to Africa and Portugal. The concessions were embodied in a supplementary agreement to the present contract which expires Sept. 30.

30,000 TO BENEFIT

Approximately 30,000 unlicensed seamen will benefit by the latest NMU victory. Heretofore, war risk compensation had been set at $30 a month on trips to Portugal and Africa. And during the first World War, seamen were covered only by blanket insurance.

The NMU is now engaged in conferences on compensation and insurance to affect seamen on voyages to the Far East.

Representing the union in the conferences are Pres. Joseph Curran, Sec.-Treas. M. Hedley Stone and Natl. Organizer Jack Lawrenson.

Picket CBS Studio In Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD, May 10—A picket line before the Columbia Broadcasting System continued into its fourth week here as the Columbia Recording Corp., a subsidiary of the broadcasting system, stood firm in its refusal to grant wage increases to 75 striking members of the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers union.

A strike was declared after the union negotiated for five weeks with Columbia's executives. Even a compromise proposal made by a Federal labor conciliator was rejected by the firm. The union is seeking a 75 cents-an-hour minimum wage to replace the present 55-cent rate paid before the strike was called.

The union pointed to the "skyrocketing" rise in the cost of living and suggested that it was vitally necessary for the well being of its members and their families to receive a substantial wage boost at this time. Columbia's profits netted $4,000,000 last year, the URRM&W announced.

Unions have been requested to send letters and resolutions to CBS headquarters in Hollywood, demanding that the raise be granted.

Seamen's Strike Rights Upheld

Philadelphia, May 10—Reactionary critics of CIO maritime labor today had one of their principal war-cries stilled by a federal court decision.

In a precedent-making decision, the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled by a 4-1 majority that a strike of seamen aboard a merchant ship tied up in a "safe domestic port" is 100 per cent within the law.

In the past, almost every seamen's strike aboard a ship in port has been called a "mutiny" by sections of the press and other foes of labor.

NMU HAILS DECISION

Commenting on the decision in New York, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO National Maritime Union declared:

"The decision vindicates the contention of the union since its inception that the seamen are protected by labor laws, like any industrial worker in the U. S., as long as their ship is in a domestic port.

"This change of mutiny has been plaguing strikers since 1936. In every instance where a legitimate strike has been called in an American port the shipowners have raised the cry of mutiny."

The mutiny charge was used against Curran himself when in 1936 he lead a strike aboard the S.S. California. That walkout led to organization of east coast seamen into the Natl. Maritime Union.

UPHOLDS BOARD

The court's decision took the form of an order upholding Natl. Labor Relations Board directions to the Southern Steamship Co. to recognize the NMU as bargaining agent for its crews and to rehire five seamen who were discharged following an 11-hour stoppage in the port of Houston, Tex.

The majority of four justices held that the strike was neither mutiny nor a sit-down strike—which, under the Supreme Court ruling in the Fansteel case, would have deprived the employes of their rights under the Wagner Act.

The lone dissent was filed by Judge William Clark, who described the majority opinion as "untimely in view of present world conditions."

Union Plans Symposium

Chicago, May 10—A symposium on "Labor Looks at Libraries" has been announced by the Chicago Public Library Employes Union.

One hundred CIO union leaders throughout the country have been asked to participate, by sending in statements of about 300 words on what labor expects from the public library and how labor can help libraries.

'IT AIN'T HAY': When Dow Chemical Co., Midland, Mich., finally got around to obeying a Labor Board order and handing out back pay checks to fired workers, the money had really piled up. Grover Alexander, a member of District 50, United Mine Workers, received no less than $8,267.97, a near-record in NLRB history. Six other District 50 members received more than $4,000 apiece.

Bethlehem Signs First CIO Pact; Covers 1,700 at Jersey Shipyard

NEW YORK, May 10—The first CIO contract with the Bethlehem Steel Corp. was signed here last week by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America for the Hoboken, N. J., shipyard, covering 1,700 production workers.

The pact, which grants sole collective bargaining rights to the CIO affiliate for all production workers, was signed in the regional office of the National Labor Relations Board. Other provisions include time-and-a-half for work over 40 hours, double time for Sundays and holidays, one week's vacation for three-year employes and two weeks for those employed 15 years or more.

It was agreed that the wages would remain the same pending the outcome of the Atlantic Coast Shipbuilding Stabilization Conference which was to be held in Washington this week. Four weeks ago at the West Coast Shipbuilding Stabilization Conference in San Francisco, the company agreed to pay $1.12 an hour for its mechanics. The mechanics on the East Coast are at present paid $1.03.

UNION HAILS PACT

Pres. John Green of the shipbuilding union hailed the pact, declaring that an agreement with the CIO is "the best insurance any employer could have for continuous efficient production and harmonious labor relations." Green credited Sidney Hillman, associate-director of the Office of Production Management, with helping the union to secure the contract.

The Hoboken contract was signed, besides Pres. Green, by Philip Van Gelder, international secretary-treasurer, and Anthony J. Oliveri, president, and John Grogan, secretary, of Local 15 of the shipbuilding union. Edward J. Ullmer, labor relations director at the Hoboken yards, signed for the company.

The union head announced that the CIO affiliate is now ready to negotiate contracts for two other Bethlehem shipyards at Brooklyn, N. Y., employing approximately 5,000 workers. The union was certified some time ago as sole collective bargaining agent for the Brooklyn yards by the Labor Board.

The contract follows a series of skirmishes between the union and the powerful steel and shipbuilding firm. The Hoboken yard was affected by a strike in 1937, and as late as March 28 the Hoboken local authorized a strike unless the company negotiated an agreement.

CITED BY NLRB

The Bethlehem Corporation was cited for "unfair labor practices" by the Labor Board on several occasions. Appeals from two orders of the Board calling for disestablishment of the Employes Representation Plan, a company union, are before U. S. Circuit Courts in Boston and Washington. The Boston case affects workers at the Fore River yards in Quincy, Mass., while the Washington case affects the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in its demand for dissolution of the company union at the firm's home plant in Bethlehem, Pa.

14,000 TO VOTE

Next Wednesday some 14,000 workers at Bethlehem's Lackawanna, N. Y., steel plant will vote in a Labor Board election to determine whether they wish to choose the SWOC as their bargaining agency.

Up Goes The Pay!

Fur Workers Get New Pact

New York, May 10—Terms of a new agreement calling for increased pay and greater job security for 15,000 workers in the fur industry here were ratified last week at a general membership meeting of the New York Joint Council, Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union.

Although Abe Chalkin, spokesman for the employers signed the pact, Ben Gold, IFLWU president, said that the employers later disapproved of his action and sent a letter to the union asking for certain changes, which Gold said the union would not accept.

The agreement as ratified at the meeting calls for an extension in the employment security clause from eight to nine months and provides that the higher scale in effect during the busy season, begin June 15 instead of July 1.

At another meeting in Transport Workers Hall, a two dollar wage increase covering 3,000 floor boys and shipping clerks was ratified.

3,800 Win 10c From Steel Firm

Indianapolis, Ind., May 10—Wage increases of 10 cents an hour were gained for 3,800 employes of the Continental Steel Corp. as a result of a renewed agreement with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

James Robb, Indiana CIO regional director, announced that the agreement includes workers in the plants at Canton, O., and Kokomo and Indianapolis, Ind. The pact also grants two weeks vacation with pay for all employes of 15 years service or over.

Laundry Strike Brings Benefits

Toledo, May 10—A two-day strike in Toledo laundry plants brought a smashing victory for members of Local 323, Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

A new contract with the Toledo Laundry Assn. brought five-cent-an-hour increases, full vacations with pay, union shop and the check-off. The stoppage followed refusal of the association to meet any of the terms offered by the CIO union.

The stoppage at the Ideal Laundry was followed by a lockout at six other laundries. During the strike, the union made arrangements to provide local hospitals and medical institutions with adequate laundry service.

Win Walkout At Insurance Firm

Philadelphia, Pa., May 12—A three-day strike of agents of the Home Life Insurance Co. won a union contract calling for substantial pay increases, sick leave and paid vacations the Insurance Guild, United Office & Professional Workers, announced this week.

Conscripts are guaranteed their jobs and are to be given three months' salary. A service bonus ranging from 50 cents to $5 a week based upon length of service; preferential union shop and check-off of union dues are included in the terms of the agreement.

The union's victory is a climax to a three-year struggle for a contract, said Lou Vennett, UOPWA representative.

American Woolen Plant Votes CIO

Webster, Mass., May 10—One thousand workers employed in the Webster Mills here, a plant of the American Woolen Co., will be covered by the general terms of a master contract between the CIO Textile Workers Union, as the result of a Labor Board election won by a ratio of more than three to one early this month.

LABOR BAITERS: Rep. Carl Vinson of Georgia, whose bill to restrict labor's rights, is meeting stormy weather as workers pour in their protests to Washington, looks grim about the whole business. The gent on the phone is an old foe of labor, Edmund Toland. He fought unions and the Labor Board last season for the Smith Committee; this season the House Naval Affairs Committee—which Vinson heads—is making use of his talents.

Con-Ed Utility Bows To U. S., Pays Out $300,000

NEW YORK, May 10—A settlement involving payment of $300,000 in back wages was won this week from the big Consolidated Edison Company by the CIO Utility Workers Organizing Committee, Director Harold J. Straub announced. It ends a four-year old dispute between the CIO union and the company over the discharge of 148 men for union activities.

The settlement involved the largest amount of back pay ever reached through negotiation in the history of the National Labor Relations Board. The Board formally approved the agreement.

WILL REHIRE 60

The company also agreed to reinstate 60 of the men, without loss of seniority. At a special union meeting of the men concerned it was found that there were just about 60 who desired to return to work with the Consolidated Edison Company, so that the settlement covers all of them. Most of the others have obtained other jobs, some as far away as Texas, Michigan and Ohio.

The men also approved a plan for distribution of the $300,000, larger sums going to those who do not return to work with the company.

The agreement was signed for the union by Director Straub of the UWOC and Edward T. Shedlock, president of Local 111, Amalgamated Utility Workers, which is affiliated with the UWOC.

"This is a great victory for the union," Straub declared, "and a complete justification of the position which it has taken in this whole affair."

He expressed appreciation of the assistance rendered by the law firm of Boudin, Cohn and Glickstein, which represented the UWOC in the court fight and the negotiations and of the work of Arthur A. Fink, Julius C. Algase and Leonard B. Boudin, who represented the men in the NLRB hearings.

"We are also grateful to the national CIO which rendered the union the greatest support and encouragement from beginning to end, and to Allan S. Haywood, national director of organization of the CIO, for his able assistance," Straub said.

BEGAN IN 1937

The dispute began in 1937 when the Consolidated Edison Company laid off 6,900 men. The CIO Amalgamated Utility Workers, UWOC, charged that 148 men had been fired because of their activity in behalf of the union.

That was the beginning of the long-drawn-out battle which was taken to the Labor Board and then to the courts, reaching the United States Supreme Court on two occasions. It also included a Labor Board election among employes of the company a year ago, which the union lost by a narrow margin.

ARPPEAL TO NLRB

The UWOC appealed to the National Board because of the conduct of Director Elinore Herrick of the local board during the campaign which preceded this election and in the election itself. As a consequence, the dispute involving the 148 men was taken out of her jurisdiction and the National Board itself handled it.

The terms of the settlement were arrived at as a result of conferences between representatives of the company, the union and the Labor Board in Washington.

Officials of the UWOC pointed out that one of the significant features of the fight was that it and the Board had secured a decision of the United States Supreme Court in December, 1938, that the company was subject to the National Labor Relations Act. At the outset of the struggle the company had claimed that it was immune from the act's provisions.

Shipyard Parleys on At Capital

Washington, May 10—Negotiations to establish uniform wage, hour and working standards in east coast shipyards started this week in Washington under the auspices of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee.

Attending the sessions were representatives of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, AFL craft unions, employers and government. Barred from the meeting were leaders of company and so-called "independent unions," which had been bragging what they "were going to do."

The parley will set a uniform wage rate for the entire east coast, where, OPM Associate Director General Sidney Hillman told the meeting, 75 per cent of the nation's defense maritime construction is under way.

From 64 members of the CIO shipyard union who attended a Washington conference preliminary to the parleys, a sub-committee of six was elected to continue the negotiations. They are Pres. John Gelre, Vice-Pres.; Charles Palmer, Gelder, Vive-Pres.; Charles Palmer, Thomas Gallagher, Peter Flynn, and Robert Palumbo.

Laud CIO Support of Negro Rights

Washington, May 10—Discrimination against Negroes is prevalent in defense industries and even among many AFL trade unions—but is entirely lacking in CIO affiliates—an official of the U. S. Office of Production Management revealed today..

Dr. Robert C. Weaver, engaged on Negro employment projects in Sidney Hillman's OPM labor division, said that racial discrimination is found in both northern and southern industries.

He reported that many employers in the rapidly-growing aircraft industry have tried to alibi their refusal to hire Negroes by claiming that the unions wouldn't allow them to join.

"Most of the aircraft companies are open shop, so that the union argument would not apply," Dr. Weaver pointed out. "At the same time, the CIO unions which have contracts in some aircraft plants are not discriminating against Negro membership," although the AFL machinists union is doing so.

20 Pct. Pay Demand Follows Victory in Poll

Detroit, May 10—Following up a Labor Board victory, the United office and Professional Workers this week presented the R. L. Polk Co., publishers of city directories, with a request for a 20 per cent wage increase, two weeks vacation with pay and a union shop.

The Polk election was the largest ever held by the Labor Board among white collar workers. It ended in a sweeping victory for the CIO affiliate. The union's demands were ratified at a meeting attended by 700 Polk employes.

Lewis Merrill, UOPWA president, who flew from New York City to the Detroit meeting, urged the workers to "hold strong their ranks and continue with the same splendid spirit which characterized your work in winning the NLRB election."

The union president hailed the election victory as a splendid example for the white collar and professional workers to follow. He predicted that the Polk victory would be a powerful impetus to the unorganized workers.

Congressmen Assail Vinson Bill

Washington, May 10—Speeches in Congressional Record and interviews with visitors from the working voters back home indicate that some Congressmen are aware of labor's indignation at the union-busting Vinson bill and are ready to speak and vote against it.

Speaking in the House earlier in the week Rep. Lee Geyer of California told his fellow Representatives "while we are abusing labor we might pause for a moment to glance at the other side of the picture," adding that Congress might turn from its anxiety to pass labor restrictive laws to "insist that even great industrial establish-

Union Dividend

The people who invest only their capital in industry are usually the first to "get theirs" when business booms.

A survey by the National City Bank shows that profits of 345 leading corporations increased by 17½ per cent in the first quarter of 1941 over 1940. The figures, company by company, run into millions and in a number of cases represent increases of several hundred per cent.

And all these profits are "net", that is to say, clear gravy, after all excess profit and other taxes have been paid.

The people who invest their lives and their daily labor in industry do not do so well. But where CIO industrial unions are strongly organized, labor too has a chance to keep its end up.

New agreements won by CIO unions in the first four months of 1941 will result in annual wage increases totaling $380,000,000, the CIO Economic Division estimates.

That is the kind of dividend that CIO membership brings. It is one of the reasons why a million more workers have joined the CIO ranks since last November.

Heating-Up Periods

The theory advanced by advocates of the Vinson Ball and other anti-strike bills before Congress is that compelling American workers to work against their will for a fixed period will "cool them off" and prevent strikes.

Experience in Minnesota with a state law of this character indicates that the chief trouble with this theory is that it isn't so.

In repeated instances Minnesota unions have found that employers take full advantage of the cooling-off period to refuse any serious negotiations until it expires. With wages frozen and the boss sitting tight, for as long as he fears no strike, the workers don't cool off but get hotter and hotter and madder and madder.

So when strikes occur under such circumstances, they are liable to be longer and tougher to settle than where collective bargaining has been unimpaired. In fact, the official figures show that in 1938, before the "cooling off" law, the average number of days lost per striker in Minnesota was about 16, while in 1940 it had increased to about 31 days per striker.

As to stopping strikes, the time lost through strikes in the United States as a whole decreased by 64 per cent between 1939 and 1940, whereas in Minnesota under the "cooling off" law it decreased by only 8 per cent.

A Question For Gallup

The Gallup poll would have us believe that most Americans attribute strikes to Communist agitators—rather than to profiteering employers who refuse collective bargaining, deny overdue wage increases and compel workers to strike because of their economic needs.

The Gallup poll is one of those mystic entities that answers to no power but its own conscience—and perhaps to the wealthy publishers which finance it—for the way it phrases its questions and chooses its samples.

We of the people, from whose ranks the Gallup poll selects its timorous and dazed guinea pigs, have no chance to argue back to this sublime arbiter of public opinion. But with all diffidence, we would like to suggest a question of our own to the Gallup wise men:

If strikes are caused by Communists, how come there were twice as many strikes in 1917, when there was no Communist movement in the United States, as in 1940?

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

NOBODY bothers much about counterfeit money until he gets stuck with some. We sometimes pass it on without realizing it is phoney. But sooner or later someone gets stuck with it—and then it's just too bad.

It's the same with counterfeit ideas. So many have been put into circulation of late that millions of people accept them at their face value, without examination.

Let's bite some of these plugged nickels. Let's drop some of these lead quarters on the counter to see if they ring. Let's examine the writing on the phoney dollar bills. If we don't we're going to be the suckers who get stuck.

Here are a couple of samples that are easy to test:

(2) Workers have no right to demand or strike for higher wages, while drafted men are going to camp for $21 a month.

(2) The poor don't pay taxes, so new taxation should reach to the lower income groups to make everyone feel he is doing his share.

THE soldier boys are supposed to be mad at all workers who get more than $21 a month and still think they're underpaid. Who says so? Politicians who get $10,000 or more a year; publishers with million-dollar incomes; coupon-clippers whose war profits have risen to fantastic heights.

Anyone can misrepresent the soldier boys, it seems, with such insults to their intelligence. They don't own any papers or radio stations to tell the world for themselves how they really feel.

In the first place, there is no fair comparison between the army $21 a month and wages in industry. Granted that the $21 is all too little, it is a starting wage that rises to $30 after three months, and the more "skilled" such as corporals, sergeants and officers get higher wages.

Then government figures show that the clothing, food and shelter of each private cost about $60 a month, so that the basic "unskilled" wage in the army may be said to be $90 a month.

Further, this wage takes into account only the needs of single men without dependents, whereas most workers in industry have wives and families to support. On this basis, a man and his wife without children should receive at least $180 a month.

But the costs of food, clothing, medical care, etc., are much higher for the industrial worker than for the soldier, since the army makes all its purchases on a wholesale and mass scale.

Even so, the estimated cost of the average meal in the army is 15c, whereas careful surveys have shown the army is about 15c, whereas careful surveys have shown that 90% of the workers do not earn enough to afford the average 11c a meal considered necessary in a minimum health budget for a worker and his family. And millions subsist on an average of only 5c per meal.

BUT quite apart from all such statistical comparisons, the great majority of conscripts are workers themselves, the sons of workers or from low-income families.

They know that the unions in demanding higher wages are protecting their families from poverty and misery, and improving conditions on the jobs to which they themselves will return when they leave the army.

So why should they be mad at their own folks, their own fellow workers and their unions for defending American living standards and the democratic rights for which they themselves are ready to fight?

If they want to make comparisons with their $21 wage, surely they will compare it with the soaring incomes of the millionaire war profiteers, the hundred-thousand-dollar executives and the corporations whose net profits, after all taxes, are rising by the millions.

SO the poor don't pay taxes and should be made to do their share! Says who? Wealthy tax-dodgers, war profiteers, big business lobbyists and others who are advocating today that Congress slap excise and sales taxes on the necessities of life; and that it lower income tax exemptions so even the worker starving on less than $10 a week will pay income tax.

CIO President Murray threw this phoney idea on the Congressional counter recently, and it fell with the dull thud of a lead quarter.

Actually, he pointed out to the House ways and means committee, the poor have been paying a larger and larger part of federal taxation in the past ten years; while the over-rich have been paying a smaller and smaller share.

The taxes that soak the poor are the consumption, excise or sales taxes, added to the prices of the food and other necessities which even the poorest must buy. These have been rising constantly. The taxes that fall chiefly on the rich are the income, corporation, inheritance, excess profits and other similar taxes. These have accounted for a constantly decreasing share of federal income.

MURRAY declared that the proposed new taxes are nothing but "wage cuts in the guise of taxation." The CIO is calling on all its its members to fight as vigorously on the legislative field to protect its wage standards against such cuts by taxation, as they have fought on the industrial field to raise their money wages.

In the last war, Murray pointed out, "in spite of taxation rates very much higher than they are now, perfectly fantastic profits were made. The country blossomed with war profiteers."

He declared that "nothing could so seriously weaken our morale than to place heavier burdens upon the common people and the working people in taxation, while the wealthy individuals and corporations continue to pile up great incomes and profits without being effectively restrained by taxation."

STOP THE VINSON BILL!

The Vinson bill, (HR 4139) is scheduled to come up on the floor of Congress within the next few days.

If passed, this bill will:

1. Destroy the right to strike by forced mediation and "cooling-off" periods.
2. Freeze wages and working conditions by outlawing the union shop and officially blessing the open shop.
3. Put an open season on union members by allowing employers to fire anyone suspected of being "subversive."
4. Destroy the Wagner Act by outlawing so-called "coercive methods" of unions—which can mean any normal union activity.

ACT NOW TO SAVE YOUR UNION ---- YOUR WAGES AND YOUR JOBS ARE AT STAKE!

Write, wire to your Representative. Tell him to speak and vote against the Vinson bill (HR 4139) and all similar bills to curb labor's right to strike or to organize.

More CIO Protests Reach Congress On Vinson Bill

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, May 10—Congressional activity on the Vinson bill—designed to freeze the open shop and embalm wages—was at a comparatively low ebb this week. Following last week's action of the House Rules Committee in reporting it out, the anti-labor measure rested in its progress toward debate on the House floor, with Capitol hill rumor indicating it might take another week before it came up for discussion.

In the meantime both labor and progressive forces fighting the bill and anti-labor groups pushing for its passage were active.

Rep. Vinson's House Naval Affairs Committee, where the bill originated in a record-breaking two-day hearing, put out a questionnaire to unions and employers as part of its probe into the progress of the arms program.

NEW QUESTIONNAIRE

The questionnaire, drawn up by Committee Counsel Edmund Toland, who was also counsel for the Smith Committee that spent two years smearing the National Labor Relations Board and the labor movement generally, put 62 questions to the unions, a slightly higher number to employers.

The questions put to the unions ranged from queries on the number of strikes, whether or not reds and/or aliens were members of the union, how much they charged for dues, initation fees and assessments, and a long series on the manner in which strike votes were taken. It also wanted to know how much money each union had taken in between October, 1939, and March, 1941, and how it was spent.

Employers were asked a long series of questions on the number of strikes in their plants, what the causes were, with three separate and searching items on the amount and nature of "violence" committed during the strike, with the effect such violence has had or will have on defense production. Neither unions nor employers were asked about wages or conditions on the job that may have led up to a strike.

PROTESTS MOUNT

CIO unions and other groups were active during the week in forwarding protests to Congressmen and in urging them to speak and vote against the bill. In New York the Transport Workers Union, currently fighting an open shop drive by Mayor LaGuardia, urged all members to wire protests at once to Congress. From Denver the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers took action to let their Congressmen know that labor was opposed to the bill. The Natl. Maritime Union urged its membership, spread over three coasts, to enter similar protests.

The United Mine Workers Journal, official organ of more than 600,000 United Mine Workers, described the bill as "anti-union and anti-strike," and as a threatened "death-knell to unions in this country." The Journal called on all its readers to wire Congress immediately to halt this "vicious legislation."

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Textile Workers Union registered their protests together with hundreds of other groups throughout the nation, both CIO and non-CIO. In Pennsylvania, the state AFL accepted a convention report declaring the bill would "deny labor the exercise of democracy at home in the name of protecting democracy abroad."

And also in Pennsylvania Pres. Green of the AFL took a few minutes out from an hysterical attack on the CIO to criticize the bill. According to reports, this part of his speech was loudly applauded.

Timely! Informative! Eye-Opening! That's what they're saying about the CIO's latest pamphlet: "The Right To Strike — Keystone of Liberty." Order your copies today from the CIO Publicity Department, 1106 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D. C. 100 Copies for $1.75, 500 for $5.75.

Strike Wins 10 Pct. Pay Boost At Interwoven

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., May 10—A five-week strike at the Interwoven Stocking Co., nation's largest men's hosiery plant, ended in victory for the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers, a division of the Textile Workers Union.

The strike came to a halt when the firm agreed to a general 10 per cent wage increase, time and one-half for overtime and the check-off. The agreement is effective for one year and involves 1,500 workers.

The negotiations which resulted in the strike's ending were started at the direct intervention of labor-supported Gov. M. M. Neely. Pres. Alexander McKeown arrived here directly from the New York convention of the textile union to direct the negotiations.

Other gains made in the new agreement include provisions for a more effective grievance machinery, an improved lay-off clause and an escape clause protecting the workers against any sharp increase in the cost of living.

Squeeze on Labor Halted by CIO

Columbus, O., May 10—A backhanded effort to sabotage the State Minimum Wage Division by slashing the funds necessary to enforce wages and hours laws was killed in the state legislature here last week.

Senator Otto J. Bartunek, who attempted to amend an appropriation of $264,000 to enforce state labor laws, quoted arguments of Herschel Mowery, lobbyist for the Ohio Hotels Association. Mowery attacked the minimum wage system before the state finance committee the week before.

Vinson Bill's Twin On Senate Docket

WASHINGTON, May 10—Apparently feeling that one anti-strike bill at a time is not enough, Senator Ball of Minnesota this week introduced a counterpart to the Vinson anti-union shop bill in the upper House, which would impose a compulsory "cooling-off" period of 30 days between a strike vote and strike action by a union.

Senator Ball, who was appointed to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Senator Lundeen, modeled his bill on the Minnesota state law requiring a similar no-strike period, which passed the state legislature despite the unanimous opposition of CIO, AFL and all other organized labor and progressive groups in the state.

According to the newly appointed Senator and to Governor Harold Stassen of Minnesota, the bill has reduced strikes in the state and has resulted in a more stable labor situation than before. This contention, made in hearing held before the Senate Labor Committee here, was flatly contradicted by CIO witness Ralph Helstein, who used the Governor's own figures to disprove his testimony.

According to the Governor's figures, there were 8,000 fewer mandays lost in strikes in 1940 than were lost in 1939, indicating at best a slight decrease. In the country as a whole the time lost through strikes decreased by 64 per cent.

The 1939 Minnesota figures, however, included a strike of some 15,000 WPA workers not employed in total, you have an actual increase rather than a decrease in the number of mandays lost due to strikes in industry since the Minnesota law was put into effect.

ments obey the laws that are already on the statute books."

The Hon. Wm. H. Larrabee of Indiana devoted a 30-minute speech to the bill, describing it as an attack on labor's basic right "to organize into unions free from interference of employers, to bargain collectively with employers and to strike when these rights are violated or threatened."

"OR ANY OTHER FORM"

Reps. August B. Kelley and Samuel A. Weiss of Pennsylvania pledged that they will oppose the Vinson bill "in its present form or any other form" in an interview with a CIO visitor from the industrial Allegheny valley.

"The minute you pass a bill of that nature you are undermining collective bargaining," Rep. Weiss said. "Sure, they yell about strikes and 'labor unrest' but why don't they bring out the fact that labor is not getting its share of the defense pie."

"I'm opposed to the Vinson bill because I'm opposed to any attempt to outlaw strikes by legislation," said Rep. Kelley. "I consider it a breach of constitutional rights."

$171.51 Pay Per Hour:

Wages High Enough—For Chosen Few!

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, May 9—The U. S. Securities & Exchange Commission today released its 1940 "blue book" of American industry's top salaries. The document should be required reading for those who want labor to "sacrifice" while big business continues to pay out sky-high dividends and six-cipher salaries to a chosen few.

Four of the highest 10 salaries went to Hollywood motion picture moguls, but such industrial corporations as Bethlehem Steel, General Motors and American Tobacco also placed in the top money.

The ten highest-salaried men together received no less than $3,567,472 for the year.

That averages—in case you've been trying to figure your own paycheck against rising living costs—exactly $6,860.50 per man per week. Or, on the basis of a 40-hour week, an average of $171.51 per hour.

Louis B. Mayer, big mogul of MGM pictures, was way out in front of the pack in 1940, with a salary of $697,048. Hunt Stromberg and Nicholas Schenck of Loews each made over $300,000, while W. C. Fields, the comedian, netted $225,000.

No. 2 salaried man in the nation was Eugene Grace, the president of the long anti-union Bethlehem Steel Corp. Grace was paid $478,-144 for the year, or $9,195 a week, or $229 an hour. Bethlehem, it will be recalled, fought right up to the Supreme Court to avoid paying 62½ cents an hour to its employes.

Even with the recent 10 cents an hour increase forced by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, Grace was getting 315 times the pay given a worker receiving Bethlehem's minimum.

Three executives of American Tobacco Co. were among the SEC's list of the top ten, with President George E. Hill's $456,415 for the year presumably giving him plenty of opportunity to "be kind to his throat."

GM PAY HIGH

Charles E. Wilson, acting president of General Motors while William S. Knudsen serves the OPM for $1 a year, made out rather well at $278,324 to place No. 6 on the list. GM's vice-president, Charles Kettering, got salary checks and dividends estimated to total $247,-965. Another GM bigwig, Donaldson Brown, received an equal amount.

General Motors has been fighting wage increases for its production employes, and has forced the CIO United Automobile Workers to threaten a strike. The dispute is now being heard by the National Defense Mediation Board.

WEIR WELL PAID

Ernest T. Weir, chairman, and George R. Fink (sic), president of the anti-labor National Steel Corp., each paid themselves $245,000, while one director of the company got a trifling $150,000. Two officials of Bethlehem Steel cleared $179,-506 for their year's work.

While these figures are high, they represent the income of the managers of American industry, rather than of the "sixty families" which own it. Figures on income from interest and dividends are not reported to the SEC, and the Bureau of Internal Revenue does not make them public.

GM Parleys Continue

WASHINGTON, May 9—Hearings before the Natl. Defense Mediation Board on the threatened CIO auto workers' strike at 61 General Motors plants continued all through this week without announcement of the progress made.

The United Automobile Workers, CIO, has asked for 10 cents an hour wage increases and improved working standards for the 160,000 GM employes.

Walter Reuther, head of the UAW-CIO division, revealed that a conference of local leaders was scheduled in Detroit for Saturday, May 10, to hear a report on the status of negotiations.

FILE NOTICE

In Detroit, meanwhile, it was announced that the UAW had filed a 30-day notice with the Michigan Labor Mediation Board of intent to call a strike at the Hudson Motor Co. plant. The union is seeking a 15-cent hourly raise for some 8,500 000, and two others had to be content with $139,506 for their year's work.

UAW demands for wage boosts and contract improvements at the Bendix Aviation Corp. in South Bend, Ind., were to be heard by the National Defense Mediation Board. The dispute was certified to the Board when the union threatened a strike to force consideration of the workers' demands.

Rem-Rand Employes To Vote On Union

TONAWANDA, N. Y., May 10—Workers in the Tonawanda and North Tonawanda plants of the Remington Rand Co. will participate in a Labor Board election within 30 days to choose between the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and the Independent Union of the Tonawandas, or by neither organization.

The election climaxes a long fight to establish a union at the Remington plant. The president of the company, James Rand, is noted for the infamous "Mohawk Valley Formula" which has been used by many of the nation's employers to break strikes.

STRIKE WAS BROKEN

In 1936, an AFL office workers council led an unsuccessful strike at the Remington Rand plants. The strike was broken with the use of vigilantes and four strikebreaking and labor spy agencies.

When the AFL strike ended on July 12, 1936, the company president cheered the success of the "Mowahk Formula" at a celebration attended by a great number of manufacturers and industrialists. Rand declared at that meeting that "2,000,000 businessmen have been looking for a formula like this, that business has hoped for, dreamed of, and prayed for such an example as you have set, an example that will go down in history as the Mohawk Valley Formula."

RAND'S FORMULA

The Rand formula included the use of "enraged" citizens, newspaper advertising, and other means of anti-labor propaganda to break a strike. During the Rand strike, professional strikebreakers, men and women, went from house to house selling soap and other products in order to spread false rumors and hatred among the citizens against the strikers.

CIO Pushed Wages Up—But Profits Soared 17.5 Pct.

WASHINGTON, May 10—Wage increases amounting to $380,000,000 annually have already been won by the CIO in the first four months of 1941, according to the current issue of Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the Economic Division of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

At the same time, the Outlook pointed out, profits continued to show large increases over 1940, having jumped 17.5 per cent over a similar period last year.

These profit increases, figured in terms of profits per dollar of shipment, "greatly outstripped the increases in payroll per dollar of shipment," and "during the periods compared the payroll figure dropped in all but one case, and that was durable goods whose increase was a reflection of heavy armament manufacture."

"In addition, wage increases are already threatened by "encroachments on several fronts," the Outlook pointed out. "Two of the most important ones are the rising cost of living and increased consumer taxation."

UNFAIR TAX BILLS

Current proposals for new taxation offered by the Treasury Department would "aggravate the unduly heavy burden of taxation upon the low income groups," the Outlook pointed out, citing proposed increases in income levies in the lower brackets and in sales taxes on specified commodities.

Other proposals "prepared by experts working directly with Congress" would decrease the income tax burden but would impose "many more taxes on things that working people consume such as coffee, sugar, tea and cocoa."

The Outlook cited CIO President Philip Murray's tax proposals presented to the House Ways and Means Committee last week as a new approach to the tax problem that would "greatly improve the distribution of the federal tax burden."

Taxes on consumption and on low incomes were described as a "hidden wage cut," the Outlook pointing out that 26 per cent of all taxes are now paid by persons with incomes under $1,000 a year. According to U. S. figures cited by the Outlook, workers with incomes under $500 had to pay 21.9 per cent of their earnings in taxes, those with $1,000 incomes, 18 per cent, and those with incomes between $1,000 and $3,000, 17 per cent. These percentages are for 1938 and 1939, and were increased by the Revenue Act of 1940.

Approaching shortages in steel are due entirely to the "failure to plan adequately," the Outlook declared, and have already caused severe cuts in domestic production, as in the 20 per cent reduction in automobiles.

Production continues to rise, reaching 143 in March, but unemployment continues to show only very slight declines. According to the CIO estimate, there were 9,574,-000 unemployed workers in February, a 5 per cent drop from January.

This continued huge figure underlines the need for increased WPA appropriations as requested by CIO President Murray in recent testimony before Congress.

Push Use of CIO Labels

Detroit, May 10—"Pin a CIO button on your dollars and make them talk union" is the slogan employed by the Michigan CIO during its Union Label Week which began yesterday and ends May 18.

In its campaign to educate every unionist to be Union Label conscious, the Michigan CIO distributed 40,000 gummed stamps for use on union correspondence, 30,000 windshield stickers for automobiles and 3,000 two-color display posters. In addition, the state CIO mailed out over one thousand letters to local unions asking for full cooperation.

Murray Backs School Aid Proposal

WASHINGTON, May 10—Strong support for Senate Bill 1313, which would provide federal aid to primary and secondary schools throughout the country, was voiced here by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The CIO leader's statement, presented to the Senate Labor and Education Committee by Ralph Hetzel, Jr., director of the CIO economic division, pointed out that "adequate education of our children is just as important to the defense of our country and of our democratic ideals as the manufacture of arms."

"The neglect of this vital function of democracy at this time would be to throw away the substance for the husk," Murray's declaration warned. "Guns alone cannot preserve democracy."

LABOR'S ROLE

He recalled that organized labor has always been in the forefront in "seeking improved public education," and that the CIO, both through convention action and through a statement read to the committee by Ex-Pres. John L. Lewis, has endorsed the principle of federal aid to the schools.

"The children who suffer most from the inequities of educational opportunity are the children of working people and farmers," Murray said. "The large part of this inequity exists because in the places where working people and farmers live, there are not adequate facilities for education. . . . It is on these grounds that the CIO is in support of this measure."

Urges Buying Of U.S. Bonds

Washington, May 10—CIO Pres. Philip Murray today addressed a letter to CIO affiliates urging cooperation with the United States Treasury "in informing your membership of the defense savings bonds program and assisting any of your members who wish to purchase such bonds." In his letter, President Murray stated:

"The United States Treasury has announced a program to finance a considerable part of the national defense program by selling defense savings bonds to individual citizens instead of by borrowing from banks and financial institutions.

"The Secretary of the Treasury has asked the cooperation of the CIO in the presentation of this plan to our members. I have assured him of our ready cooperation.

"The purchase of the defense savings bonds is wholly voluntary. It seems to me such bonds offer an excellent way to invest savings, besides offering an opportunity for voluntary cooperation and assistance to the government of the United States in a period of grave emergency."

LUDLOW GOING CIO

Chicago—Fed up with attempts to win improvements through a helpless independent union, 250 employes of the Ludlow Typograph Co. voted enthusiastically to join the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee. Contract negotiations were to start this week.

PLAN FOR HEADQUARTERS: This is an architect's drawing of the proposed headquarters building for the CIO National Maritime Union. NMU officials point out that large amounts are being spent for their present "inconvenient and dilapidated" offices. Discussion about the proposed building will be carried on during the union's forthcoming convention in Cleveland this July.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The Ford election is set for May 21, marking another high point in the CIO organizing drive in King Henry's empire. There can be no doubt of the outcome—85,000 Ford workers will show the industry and the entire nation that they are CIO.

This election is the result of months of hard slugging work by the director of the Ford drive, by all the organizers, by the rank and file union men who spent their days and nights building an organization that can truly represent the workers.

And the results of the election—an overwhelming majority for the UAW-CIO—will demonstrate once again that no corporation is too big or too powerful for CIO to organize.

The victories of the United Mine Workers and of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee brings millions of dollars not only to the workers directly involved but to wage earners throughout the nation. They broke down the resistance of employers to wage increases.

The effects of these great CIO victories have already been felt in all affiliated unions. Increase in membership has already been shown by all of them.

GLENN MARTIN STRIKE

Director Frank Bender reports a victorious settlement of the strike at the Glenn Martin plant in Baltimore, for the first time establishing shop committees in the plant. This has intensified organizing activities in that area. In addition to this, he reports the winning of an election in the Chas. S. Walton Tannery in Curtis Ray with results of 92 votes for the CIO and 55 against.

Regional Director Pieper reports another agreement signed in the sugar industry. He has just consummated an agreement with the Henderson Sugar Co.

Secretary A. E. Stevenson of the Cleveland IUC reports a victory at the U. S. Aluminum Co. with 3,174 votes for the CIO as against 1,129.

Regional Director Robb reports an election victory at the Central States Envelope Co. where the CIO United Paper, Toy and Novelty Workers Union received a vote of 117 as against 19.

Regional Director Morgan reports an election victory in the hardware division of the Z. C. M. I. in Cheyenne, Wyo. The votes showed 49 for CIO and 19 against.

Sub-Regional Director Mayo reports on Labor Board election results at the Marlin Rockwell Co., Plainville, Conn., where the CIO received 840 votes as against 40 votes for no union.

From Tennessee, Director Paul R. Christopher reports that the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union won a Labor Board poll at the American Limestone Quarry, Harriman, Tenn.

THE FORD ELECTION

Another conference was held in Detroit this week with the Ford Motor Co. in which this writer participated. The conference resulted in successful adjustment of all cases presented for consideration.

Sentiment for the union is running high among Ford workers as they eagerly await the Labor Board election. Committees in the Ford plants have rapidly adapted themselves to grievance procedure which has spread from the River Rouge plant to other Ford plants.

It's a great day for the CIO. The workers of the nation have confidence in our movement. Additional thousands are now seeking organization for the first time. ON WITH THE MARCH TO ORGANIZE THE UNORGANIZED!

Regional Director George Craig of Eastern Pennsylvania reports Labor Board election victories at the Linear Packing and Rubber Co. where the United Rubber Workers received 54 votes as against 46 for an independent union and 2 votes for neither; the other victory was scored at the General Chemical Co., Camden, N. J., where District 50, United Mine Workers received 50 votes as against 32 votes for no unions. Nine votes were challenged at this election.

Regional Director Ray Thomason announced that the United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers received 102 votes in contrast to the 21 for no union at the Fibre Board Container Co., Richmond, Va.

The workers at this plant were formerly affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, AFL. They recently voted to join the CIO. The AFL union was so confident of a CIO victory that it did not even participate in the poll.

NEW SWOC PACTS

Seven new contracts, covering approximately 700 workers in Detroit steel producing and fabricating plants, were signed by the SWOC since March 15, Michigan SWOC Director James E. Robinson reports.

Negotiations are now being conducted with the Whitehead & Kales Co., steel fabricators in River Rouge, Robinson says.

Severino Pollo, CIO field representative, reports that the 400 workers at the Webster Eisenlohr Co., at Detroit, makers of Webster Cigars, will vote this week on ratification of a contract with that company. The company has agreed to a 10 per cent wage increase and improved working conditions.

While pickets are continuing a 24-hour-a-day vigil at the Grand Ledge Clay Products Co., at Grand Ledge, Mich., the union negotiating committee is meeting with the management in an effort to end the three month strike there.

From Mobile, Ala., comes the news that the Textile Workers Union won a Labor Board election at the J. C. Sanders Cotton Mill Co., at Prichard, Ala., where the AFL has had a contract for the past two years.

Appointed

J. C. Lewis

J. C. Lewis Heads Packing House Union

Washington, May 10—CIO Pres. Philip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations today announced the appointment of J. C. Lewis as Chairman of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee.

Lewis will take the place of Van A. Bittner, who requested to be relieved of his duties as Chairman of the PWOC, on account of the pressure of his other duties. "The manifold duties of Mr. Bittner in steel and coal mining necessitate acceptance of his resignation," Murray said.

Bittner is director of the organizing campaign of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the plants of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and president of District 17 of the United Mine Workers of America in West Virginia.

LAUDS APPOINTEE

In announcing the appointment of J. C. Lewis, Murray declared: "He is a man of high integrity and unimpeachable character. He has had many years of training as an officer of the United Mine Workers of America and has held many important assignments of trust for that and other labor organizations.

"I am calling upon our representatives, officers and members to cooperate to the fullest extent with Brother Lewis. It is the purpose of CIO to assist in every way possible toward a completion of a perfect organization in the packing industry. This is essential for the workers to secure a higher standard of living and greater security."

LONG RECORD

J. C. Lewis is a former president of Iowa District 13 of the United Mine Workers of America and was for 16 years president and legislative representative of the Iowa State Federation of Labor. In 1936 he went to Europe as technical advisor on coal and steel on the United States delegation to the Geneva conference of the International Labor Office.

Mr. Lewis was a member of the federal Bituminous Coal Commissioner from 1937 to 1939, and since that time has been a special representative of the United Mine Workers of America.

He has served as director of District 3 of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee in Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota, and recently was appointed as temporary administrator of the Washington State Industrial Union Council. More recently he has served with the Priorities Board of the Office of Production Management in Washington.

Alaska Mine Must Shell Out $60,000 Back Pay

JUNEAU, Alaska, May 10—A crack-down by the federal courts and the U. S. Wage-Hour Administration today gave the Alaska Juneau Gold Mine Co. no alternative but to pay out $60,000 in back overtime due its 1,000 employes.

The company, under contract with the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, accepted a consent decree in the U. S. district Court at San Francisco, and promised to abandon its phoney "double pay rate scheme."

The Alaska Juneau and other companies have sought to get around the Wage-Hour law by establishing a fictitious "regular" rate for a certain number of hours, and a false "overtime" rate for the remaining hours of the shift.

Net result of the scheme was that the employes frequently worked more than 40 hours a week while receiving the same pay, or even less, than they had been given before the Wage-Hour Act was passed.

Labor Dept. Lists 'Visual' Exhibits

Washington, May 10—A guide to motion pictures, exhibits slides, posters and charts on subjects of interest to wage earners has just been issued by the U. S. Dept. of Labor under the title of "Visual Information."

Among the large standing displays available, including mural panels, groups of photographs or theatrical sets with scale models of people, machinery, etc., are exhibits on causes of leading poisoning; cause of accidents in the sand gravel industry; safety and health in foundries; occupational disease; and the social cost of low wages.

Films with superimposed narration and sound effects are also available on such subjects as silicosis, women's part in mass production, technological changes affecting women workers and steps that can be taken to prevent occupational accidents and disease.

A copy of the "Visual Information" guide may be obtained by writing to the Office of Exhibits, U. S. Dept. of Labor, Washington, D. C.

District 50 Certified

Richmond, Va., May 10—District 50, United Mine Workers of America, was certified as the exclusive collective bargaining agency for the workers at the Heald Division of the Mead Corp., Lynchburg, Va., as a result of a Labor Board poll which resulted in 234 votes for the union as against 91 votes for no union.

Ray Thomason, CIO regional director, announced that negotiations for a contract with the company will begin soon.

Canadian Unions Act To End 'Frozen' Pay

Toronto, May 10—Growing resentment over the failure of the Dominion Government to enforce its pronouncements affecting labor's rights during wartime, culminated last week in the resignation of A. R. Mosher, president, and C. H. Millard, executive member of the Canadian Congress of Labor, from the National Labor Supply Council.

The National Labor Supply Council, composed of representatives of central labor bodies and employes, approved Order-in-Council 7440 last Fall which provided substantially that wages shall not be increased over 1926-29 levels and if at all through a cost-of-living bonus. Although a few workers received high money wages in those years, the average Canadian's income was no more than $600 yearly.

Growing belief that the Order-on-Council was being used to freeze wages was followed last week by the unanimous decision of 50 delegates at a Canadian SWOC conference in Montreal, who instructed C. H. Millard, executive director of the SWOC to resign from the Supply Council. The convention also demanded the immediate repeal of the legislation.

FROZE WAGES

The latest proof that Order-in-Council 7440 was being used to freeze wages was received in a conciliation board* report which found that 340 employes of Peck Rolling Mills, Montreal, should not have their wages of 30.7 cents an hourly increased. J. L. Cohen, K.C., union representative on the board, recommended a 10-cent hourly wage increase and an additional cost-of-living bonus to that given by the company.

Although it would be a distinct gain in this sweat-shop province of Canada to obtain a 10 cents hourly wage increase, SWOC delegates at the convention laid plans to seek a 62½ cents hourly minimum. The average basic rate in Canada now is 45 cents.

As further evidence of the resistance of Canadian workers to government attempts to discourage union activity, delegates at the SWOC conference decided that 15,000 members of SWOC would participate in a 24-hour strike unless a conciliation board recommendation was accepted by the National Steel Car Co. at Hamilton, Ont., and the president of the local reinstated. The National Steel Car has received war contracts totaling millions of dollars.

Following the decision of the SWOC conference, the workers in the Peck plant struck. They returned to work temporarily when officials of the munitions department explained that removal of finished steel in the plant should be expedited for Newfoundland defense work. The government guaranteed 40 cents hourly for the work of removing the steel, which was a partial victory for the strikers.

J. L. Cohen, legal counsel for the SWOC in Canada, told delegates at its conference that Order-in-Council 7440 was deliberately planned by Canadian employers to freeze wages and retard the growth of labor organizations in wartime. The government's interpretation of the Order-in-Council had made 30.7 cents an hour, "a fair and reasonable wage in the steel industry in Quebec, no matter how much higher wages were in other parts of Canada."

Textile Pact Boosts Pay

New York, May 12—Renewal of a contract covering 700 workers of the Skenandoa Rayon Corp., Utica, N. Y., was announced this week by Herbert Payne, director of the synthetic yarn division, Textile Workers Union. A four-cent hourly increase in the base rate is provided under the new agreement which continues the closed shop called for in the previous contract.

Through the operation of the incentive system, Payne said the four-cent increase in the base rate will mean an actual five-cent boost in the hourly rate and will increase the yearly payroll about $70,000.

Union's Support Aids N. Y. Drug Strike

New York, May 10—Public support behind the strikers at the Whelan Drug and United Cigar stores, both owned by the same company, has cut the business volume down to where it really hurts, the CIO Retail Drug Store Employes union reports.

The union's figures indicate a sales drop of 40 per cent in the Whelan stores, and a 20 per cent cut in United Cigar stores for the 13 weeks of the strike as compared to last year's business volume for the same period.

Picket lines will be maintained before the stores "till hell freezes over," Benjamin L. Gudes, union secretary-manager, declared, unless "a satisfactory agreement is reached, reinstating all strikers and protecting their jobs."

WIN PAY BOOST

Rock Falls, Ill.—A five-cent wage increase and improved working conditions were won by employes of the Geyer Manufacturing Co. in this city. They are members of Local 111, CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee.

Pres. Murray To Speak at Transit Rally

NEW YORK, May 10—CIO Pres. Philip Murray will be the principal speaker at a mass rally to be held in Madison Square Garden here on Wednesday, May 21, the Transport Workers Union announced today.

The rally will seek to enlist further public support in the campaign to protect the collective bargaining rights of the city's 32,000 transit employes.

Pres. Murray has announced his support of the transit workers' campaign and has publicly called on Mayor LaGuardia to bargain collectively with the CIO union on wages, hours and working conditions.

CIO LEADERS TO SPEAK

Other speakers will include Joseph Curran, national CIO vice-president and president of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council, and Allan S. Haywood, national CIO organization director.

Last Thursday, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, discussed the New York transit situation over radio station WAAT. Murray, Haywood and Pressman have been in constant touch with the developments in the transit labor controversy since early last month when Mayor LaGuardia publicly declared his opposition to collective bargaining for city transit workers.

On April 10 Murray, in a letter to the Mayor, expressed amazement at LaGuardia's anti-union position and urged him to meet and discuss with TWU officers the problems of the transit workers on the basis of a declaration of policy adopted by the TWU's international executive board in March.

The May 21 Garden rally will be Murray's first appearance before a large gathering in New York since his election as national CIO president last November.

PUSH CAMPAIGN

Delegates from 200 New York local unions met last Thursday evening where they formulated plans in support of the transit workers' fight for collective bargaining. The union has been pushing ahead with plans to extend its direct-to-the-people campaign for support.

A series of street corner meetings will be held following the Garden meeting and the union's weekly public pamphlet entitled "Transit Truths" will be circulated to 1,500,000 New Yorkers. The union will also inaugurate a public petition signature campaign, it was announced.

Bus Drivers Win Strike

New York, May 10—Wage increases from 10 to 18 per cent for 131 drivers and mechanics on the Jamaica Bus lines, operating in the Queens district, were gained by the Transport Workers Union following a three-day strike.

The increase will boost the weekly wage of drivers to $3.50 more while mechanical employes will gain from $3 to $5 more per week, Austin Hogan, president of the New York TWU local, announced.

In addition to the wage increases, it was agreed to submit future grievances, those that cannot be settled between the company and the union, to an impartial arbitrator to be chosen by Arthur S. Meyer, chairman of the State Board of Mediation.

Pres. Hogan hailed the pact as a victory for the TWU and said that the new agreement provides greater security for the workers.

Charter New Local

Morgantown, W. Va., May 10—A new local union was chartered here by the CIO United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers Union at the Fairmont Box Co.

Victor Brandon, president of the Marion County Industrial Union Council, declared that there has not been such a wave of enthusiasm here for unionism since the spirited days in 1936. Of the 115 workers employed at the box factory, 94 signed up immediately.

Hosiery Workers Ask 15 Per Cent Wage Boost

By TRAVIS K. HEDRICK

PHILADELPHIA, May 10—A general wage increase of not less than 15% will be demanded of the hosiery industry when the American Federation of Hosiery Workers begins negotiations for its national and individual shop agreements in the next few weeks.

The wage increase decision was one of the highlights of the thirtieth convention of the AFHW at the Sylvania hotel which opened here April 28 and neared a close May 8 after the delegates had re-elected William Smith as general secretary-treasurer.

Smith, a trustee of the Textile Workers' Union of America and a member of the executive board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, has been secretary of the hosiery union since 1924. He won 122 to 52 over Vance White, of Paterson, N. J.

McKEOWN PRESIDENT

Other national officers of the hosiery union, President Alexander McKeown; First Vice-President Alfred Hoffman and Second Vice-President Edward F. Gallagher, were named to two-year terms in Milwaukee last year.

Alexander Welch, general secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Hosiery Workers' Union (unaffiliated), is attending the convention here as a fraternal delegate. He came from Toronto and addressed the delegates May 5 with a vivid picture of what labor unions face under wartime conditions.

Welch told how Canadians have lost the right to habeas corpus, trial by jury and appeal; how more than 60 trade union leaders have been arrested without warrants, and are jailed in concentration camps across the border.

MAJOR RESOLUTIONS

Major resolutions of the convention included:

A ban on any person "who is a member of the Communist party or any Nazi, Facist or Communist organization" from election or appointment to any office in the AFHW or its branches.

Condemnation of the Vinson bill and other anti-labor legislation that does not contain specific guarantees to protect the right to strike, to picket peacefully, to bargain collectively and join unions of their own choosing.

Support of the national defense program and opposition to sending any American Expeditionary Force "outside of the Western Hemisphere."

Two week paid vacations for all hosiery workers.

A bonus of $200 for every worker drafted into the armed services to be paid by the employers.

With the Councils:

Most Reactionary Bills Defeated In The States

By JOHN BROPHY

Director of Industrial Union Councils

Through the increased legislative activity of the CIO Industry Union Councils throughout the country, the forces of organized labor have succeeded in beating back a great proportion of the reactionary bills dumped into the hoppers of the state legislatures at the beginning of the current sessions.

While it is true that our gains have not been large in the various states, we do have a substantial number of improvements which will react to the benefit of the workers.

VIGOROUS STEPS

Had it not been for the very vigorous steps taken by the officials and legislative representatives of the CIO councils in the states, however, such dangerous proposals as the "model anti-sabotage" bill might well have been placed on the statutes almost universally throughout the country.

At the time these so-called "model" bills were recommended to the state legislatures by a "Federal-State Conference on Law Enforcement Problems of National Defense," CIO Pres. Murray and other union leaders warned that these measures would be far less effective in accomplishing their stated ends than in tying new knots to curb labor's freedom of action and movement.

In many cases these bills were introduced in the legislatures by members who, if they had read them, certainly did not understand their implications.

CHANGED HIS MIND

In one New England state, for instance, "an anti-sabotage bill was introduced in the Senate early in the session at the request of the Governor. When we contacted the Senator who introduced the bill, he admitted he had not read nor did he know the contents of the bill. When we explained our stand, he said we had 'nothing to worry about.' The bill has not come out of committee, has remained inactive in committee, and we feel it will die there."

In Illinois, CIO Regional Director Ray Edmundson outlines the picture to be found in many other states: "While it is not possible to report much progress in securing additional labor legislation, we are encouraged to the extent that we have been able thus far to prevent passage of any anti-labor legislation."

Colorado CIO officials report "not much was done" on social and labor measures at the legislative sessions, except for passage of a 30-day strike notice bill, constitutionality of which will be tested in the courts.

DEFEATED BILLS

James A. Davis, legislative representative for the CIO in Missouri, helped bring about the defeat of "several vicious anti-labor bills." Possibility of the passage of several measures favored by the unions was noted by the council. In New Jersey, vigorous campaigns conducted by the CIO council and Labor's Non-Partisan League stopped the "model anti-sabotage bill," which seemed destined for certain passage.

Utah, a welcome exception to the general rule, reported that no anti-labor legislation was passed this year, while a number of union-favored measures were accepted. Delaware, Montana and West Virginia CIO groups were strong enough to force defeat of the anti-sabotage bill and other similar proposals.

Ben Henry, CIO regional director in Iowa, reported that although "this has been one of the most reactionary sessions . . . during my experience . . . organized labor in the state has weathered the storm. While no important social gains were made, I am pleased to report that organized labor was not hurt to any noticeable degree."

WHAT WE MUST DO

That is the general picture. It is fortunate that the CIO unions, by taking an active part in legislative affairs, have been able to keep in check the forces of reaction that for a time threatened to do serious damage to the progress made by the organized workers.

But it is not enough merely to hold the opposition in check. During the next few months, the city, county and state Industrial Union Councils must give serious consideration to the next meetings of their state legislatures in order that labor may be prepared not only to ward off attacks but to make fresh gains in the future.

Emerson Radios On Unfair List

New York, May 10—A national do-not-buy-Emerson radio campaign was announced this week by the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America.

The union is conducting a strike of several hundred workers against the company's plant in New York City. The strike was declared at the plant April 7 after the company initiated a move to organize a company union.

A National Labor Relations Board election was set for April 2, but with the announcement of the Board election the company foremen and supervisors threatened workers with loss of jobs if the CIO union won. The company's anti-union campaign was so brazen that the Labor Board called off the election. And when the attempt to organize the company union was made, the union retaliated with a strike.

Emerson is one of the lowest paying firms in the radio industry. Wages as low as 34 cents an hour are very common.

Honor Union Head

Philadelphia, May 10—CIO members here honored Frank L. Cassidy, president of Local 163, United Distillery Workers Union, at a testimonial dinner held here recently.

Cassidy has a long record of devotion to the labor movement. Many prominent Philadelphians were present and offered great praise for the CIO leader's work for labor.

HEAR CIO APPEAL: Workers at the Boeing Aircraft Co. in Seattle crowd around as CIO aircraft organizers urge them to join the United Automobile Workers. The men belonged to the AFL machinists until the AFL big-wigs, using typical splitting tactics, suspended their local and tried to disrupt it.

EASY VICTORY

Baltimore, May 12—The CIO swept to an easy victory in a National Labor Relations Board election held at the Charles S. Walton Co. tannery in this city.

CIO Regional Director Frank Bender revealed that the CIO had gained 92 votes, to only 55 for no union.

Bethlehem Plant Votes CIO

Wire Union To Protest Threatened Job Loss

WASHINGTON, May 18—A nationwide campaign against a threatened job loss by 17,000 telegraph, cable and radio workers will be launched by the American Communications Assn., CIO, at a conference of union delegates from all over the U. S. scheduled to begin here today.

The threat to thousands of communications workers is con-tained in proposed merger of telegraph, commercial radio and cable companies coming before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee the first of this week, ACA officials explained.

"Main job before the Emergency Merger Conference will be the organization of a nationwide campaign to defeat the plans of the companies and the Federal Communications Commission for creation of monopolies in the land line telegraph and radio and cable fields which threaten the jobs of 17,000 workers," ACA headquarters announced.

Joseph Selly, president of ACA, will lead the delegates in testifying before the Senate Committee against the bill.

25th PLANT GOES CIO

Emeryville, Calif., May 17—Local 1412 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has just added the 25th to the group of Westinghouse plants where the CIO electrical union has won sole bargaining rights.

Workers at the Emeryville Westinghouse plant voted 156 for the CIO to 127 for the AFL Electrical Workers at a Labor Board election held early this month.

Oil Workers Win Raise

Oil City, Pa., May 17—A general 10 cents an hour wage increase was won for 360 employes of the Pennzoil Refining Co. here by the Oil Workers International Union last week.

The company signed a contract with the CIO union after it won a Labor Board election over the AFL's International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers.

Other provisions in the contract include: Recognition of the union as sole collective bargaining agency, six-hour day, 36-hour week, one week paid vacations, seniority rights and a dues check-off on an authorization basis.

Anthony J. Federoff, CIO regional director, announced that the pact was a spearhead for an organizing drive in the Northwestern Pennsylvania district. He said that organizers are now busy organizing two other refineries in near-by Franklin and Butler.

FACING HOOSEGOW: This young lady looks more cheerful than you might expect, considering that she faces a possible jail sentence in a case that has aroused all labor in California. She's Miss Merle Reese, head of Local 126, State, County and Municipal Workers; with 18 other fellow unionists she's appealing a contempt conviction for refusing to give membership lists to the state's Yorty (little Dies) Committee. Case is now before state supreme court.

SUES: This is no lady from Mars, but Miss Zara duPont of Brookline, Mass., who this week sued the Bethlehem Steel Corp.—of which she is a minority stockholder—for a million dollars wasted by "illegal and wrongful" anti-union activities. Picture was taken when Miss duPont walked on a Boston seamen's picket line in 1939.

Have you written to your Congressman to protest the vicious antilabor Vinson Bill (HR4139)? If not, do it today. Address your card or letter to your Representative, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Chicago CIO Store Drive Zooming

CHICAGO, May 17 (FP)—The most sensational organizing drive in this city—biggest industrial center in the world—is now focused on State Street, Chicago's main stem.

Local 291 of the CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes has been successful in lining up a majority of employes of The Fair, and of Marshall Field, the two biggest department stores in the mid-west.

The union has field petitions with the Labor Board for sole bargaining rights at both stores after the managements had refused to negotiate.

"State Street," Msgr. Hillenbrand, Catholic rector, told the union recently, "is the symbol of Chicago, and I hope it will soon be an organized symbol."

Steel Union Gains Sweeping Majority; Ford Poll May 21

LACKAWANNA, N. Y., May 17—The CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee this week rolled up a major Labor Board election victory at the Lackawanna, N. Y., plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corp.

Over 8,000 workers voted for the CIO affiliate, while less than 3,000 voted against it, thereby assuring the steel union of certification as sole bargaining agency. The plant—scene of a four-day strike which ended in victory a few months ago—is the first Bethlehem Steel unit where the CIO has gained exclusive bargaining rights.

SWOC scored another point against the big corporation, second largest in the steel industry, when the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered dissolution of Bethlehem's notorious Employes Representation Plan. The long-awaited decision upheld National Labor Relations Board charges that the company had flagrantly violated the Wagner Act.

PREDICT FORD VICTORY

CIO leaders hailed the election victory at Lackawanna as a good omen for the Ford Motor Co. election scheduled for Wednesday, May 21, in Detroit. Over 80,000 employes of the River Rouge and Lincoln plants will cast their votes, with the CIO being regarded as a heavy favorite.

A high-powered election campaign conducted by the Ford Organizing Committee and the United Automobile Workers, CIO, winds up with a mass meeting in Cadillac Square, Detroit, at which CIO Pres. Philip Murray will be the chief speaker.

Court Upholds NLRB In Ford 'Terror' Case

WASHINGTON, May 17—A petition by the National Labor Relations Board for an enforcement of its order against the Ford Motor Company's plant in Dallas, Texas, has been granted by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court found, however, that part of the Board's order was too general, and required that an insertion be made to show that the order applied only to the Dallas plant, and a general clause be stricken out.

As modified the court ordered enforcement of the Board's order to "cease and desist from assaulting, beating and otherwise engaging in physical violence, or inciting, encouraging or assisting others to assault, beat, or otherwise engage in physical violence for the purpose of discouraging membership in, or activities on behalf of, any labor organization of its employes."

Other clauses upheld by the court ordered the Dallas management to stop maintaining a spy system; inciting disruption of union meetings; compelling employes to contribute to any anti-union campaign and discouraging union membership by firing or refusing to reinstate employes.

AFL's Pact Is Public-- But Secret!

Boston, Mass., May 17—Something new under the sun—a secret labor agreement worked out by a public arbitration board—today was being regarded with amazed interest by leaders of the CIO United Shoe Workers.

The award in question was accepted by an AFL shoe workers union in Haverhill, Mass., and the Haverhill Shoe Manufacturers Board of Trade. In announcing it, the Massachusetts Arbitration Board said wage raises would run up to 20 per cent.

But, the board said, only the union and the employers knew the "complexities" of the wage schedule, based on 4,000 different items, adding it was being kept secret because it would allegedly be of important value to competitors of the Haverhill manufacturers.

How AFL members will know what they gained, if anything, under the secret agreement, was not explained!

Big Creamery Votes CIO, 2-1

SIOUX CITY, Ia., May 17 (FP)—The "biggest creamery in the world" is now a union creamery as well.

Employes of Frank Pilley & Sons, Inc., which advertises that its Sioux City plant is the world's largest single creamery, voted 81 to 43 to be represented in collective bargaining by Local 135, Packing House Workers Organizing Committee.

The consent election was held May 9 by the National Labor Relations Board.

MORE OF THE SAME: The Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., which forced a two-month strike at its West Allis, Wis., plant earlier this year, caused a one-day strike at its LaPorte, Ind., factory. The union, the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, ended its walkout and agreed to submit the dispute to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

Marx Bows To CIO Toy Workers

GLENDALE, W. Va., May 17—Settlement of the Marx Toy Co. strike on the union's terms was announced here by Alexander Ravitch, president of the CIO Intl. Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers Union.

The union won a 10 percent increase in pay, checkoff for members, paid vacations, and a provision that all workers who signed union application cards must remain in good standing as union members.

Insults Bring Halt To Maritime Parley

NEW YORK, May 17—A grossly insulting remark of a shipowner's representative to a member of the Natl. Maritime Union's negotiating committee disrupted a conference on war risk compensation for seamen sailing to the Far East, the NMU announced here.

The insulting remark was made by one N. T. Lawrence of the U. S. Lines, who said to M. Hedley Stone, NMU secretary-treasurer: "I don't have to sit here and listen to any dirty little kike."

Following this, the NMU negotiators left the room, taking the position that American seamen, "either as union representatives or as American citizens, are not compelled to submit to insults from shipowner representatives whose salaries are paid largely by Federal subsidies."

The NMU is asking for war risk compensation on voyages to the Far East similar to that already won for trips to Africa, Portugal and Red Sea ports—$60 a month risk bonus, plus $60 for each port touched and $5,000 life insurance paid by the companies.

The German government has threatened to "sink on sight" any American vessels carrying supplies to British troops—hence the demand for extra compensation. The Africa-Portugal agreement marked the first time American seamen have won such compensation.

1,500 White Collar Workers Win Contract

DETROIT, Mich., May 17—A contract with R. L. Polk Co., largest directory publishing firm in the country, was signed this week by the CIO United Office and Professional Workers.

The agreement, first to be signed by the company, covers 1,500 employes, the largest number of white collar workers so far included in a CIO contract.

President Lewis Merrill of the Office Workers, came here from New York to sign the agreement.

In a message congratulating the officers and members of the union on the terms won, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said that the agreement "brings substantial wage increases, vacations with pay, the protection of the closed shop and other major benefits to more than 1,500 workers.

"It is the natural consequence of the overwhelming victory won by the union in a recent National Labor Relations Board election, and demonstrates once again that the workers of this nation can win improved living and working standards by organizing in the industrial unions of the CIO."

Nova Scotia Miners Win Big Award

Halifax, N. S., May 17—An extra $200,000 has just been stuffed into the pay envelopes of some 10,000 mine workers in Nova Scotia.

The money was paid under a retroactive clause for wage increases in new contracts which have just been signed by the District 26 United Mine Workers of America executive with four major coal producing companies.

The contracts had the approval of the international executive and were signed with the Dominion Coal Company, Cumberland Railway and Coal Company, Old Sydney Collieries Limited and the Acadia Coal Company.

Shipyards Idle As 18,000 Strike

San Francisco, May 17—Refusal of 18,000 workers to pass through picket lines closed the huge Bethlehem Shipbuilding yards in the bay area here, as members of the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the AFL Machinists went on strike for a 15-cent-an-hour increase and improvements in overtime rates.

The workers are demanding a raise over the OPM-sponsored "master agreement" in order to bring weekly earnings up by $6.16 a week. The AFL Machinists, whose strike has been denounced both by AFL Pres. Green and by John P. Frey, head of the AFL Metal Trades Division, have been supported by their own union, the Intl. Association of Machinists.

Win Strike

Evansville, Ind., May 17—A four-week strike by members of Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee Local 130 at the Weil Packing Co. here has won a total of 5½ cents an hour in pay boosts, vacations with pay, grievance adjustment machinery, seniority and other benefits.

With the exception of several United Mine Workers walkouts, this is the first strike to have been won here in 20 years.

Sanitation Workers Get Charter

New York, May 18—Marking the turning point in a highly successful organizing drive, the CIO Sanitation Workers' Organizing Committee will issue a permanent local union charter to more than four thousand New York City CIO Street Cleaners, Garbage Collectors, Dump Laborers, Incinerator Men, etc., today.

The charter presentation will take place at a gala rally at Stuyvesant High School. Main speaker scheduled to address the sanitation men is Allan S. Haywood, national director, CIO. Abram Flaxer, president of the State, County and Municipal Workers of America, who is chairman of the Sanitation Workers Organizing Committee, will preside at the meeting. Henry W. Wenning, national secretary of the SCMWA, will present the charter. The Sanitation Men's Strategy Committee has chosen John Alessi, garbage truck driver of garage 31, Brooklyn, to accept the charter in their behalf. Alessi is the temporary shop steward of his garage, where 98 out of 103 employes are CIO members.

CLIMAXES DRIVE

The issuing of the charter is the culmination of an organizing drive which employed direct-by-mail promotion, a series of radio broadcasts and a dozen city-wide leaflet distributions some 200-odd job locations, carried out by a corps of volunteer leaflet distributors from other CIO unions, principally other New York City locals of the SCMWA.

The drive was not all smooth sailing. James Griesi, acting assistant sanitation foreman, was dismissed following his appearance on the first CIO Sanitation Broadcast; papers on his appeal will be filed in court this week. Vincent Petrilli, driver of garage 10 Manhattan, only last week was framed up on false charges which the prosecution's own witnesses failed to substantiate, so that the frame-up had to be dropped for lack of evidence.

STAR-CHAMBER

A few days later Hermand Guskind, sweeper of District 12, Manhattan, was grilled for over an hour in a star-chamber hearing before Acting Commissioner John B. Morton, who cross-examined him on his address before the Board of Estimate a month ago, and even asked him why he took it upon himself to go to this public hearing at all. City Council President Newbold Morris, who promised Guskind immunity from reprisals at the time of the budget hearing, has, at the request of CIO leaders, interceded to protect Guskind from disciplinary action.

Sen. LaFollette Charges:

Flouters of Civil Rights Wrap Aims In 'Defense' Alibi

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, May 17—Sen. Robert LaFollette of Wisconsin, an outstanding fighter for civil liberties and labor's rights, this week lived up to his reputation with a forthright 4-point program to help preserve American democracy.

Addressing a banquet tendered him in New York City by the Workers Defense League, which presented the Senator with its annual civil rights medal for his work in connection with the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, LaFollette said:

4-POINT PROGRAM

"A wise public policy to protect labor's rights and promote the national defense will include:

"1. The defeat of all legislative proposals designed to destroy or weaken labor's civil rights.

2. A paid extension of collective bargaining and agreement procedures throughout defense industry.

"3. A removal of the shackles on an all-out production program.

"4. A greater participation on the part of labor and its leaders in the discharge of responsibilities for national defense production."

Sen. LaFollette paid tribute to the "unselfish and zealous cooperation" of Sen Elbert Thomas, who worked on the Civil Liberties Committee investigations over a four-year span.

STEPS TO DICTATORSHIP

Declaring that the nation today is readying itself for defense of our free institutions "from a serious menace—political totalitarian dictatorship," he warned that:

"The first step, the sure sign, the essential aggression of every dictatorship that seeks to destroy democratic institutions is to strike down free trade unionism and with it the right of labor to speak its protests against economic under-privilege, to assemble together and organize for joint action, and to bargain collectively with the managers of industry, be they private or public."

PROPAGANDA NUMBS

LaFollette charged that the nation is either "asleep" to the danger of legislative action which would weaken labor and civil rights, or "numbed by the obvious propaganda that has reached a new high in promoting national disunity under the pious garb of patriotism.

"We cannot save democracy by destroying it at home," he continued. "It would be one of the tragic ironies of history if in the process of preparing for the defense of our national democracy, we blindly sacrificed it in a legislative lynching bee."

PRAISES UNIONISM

Best protection against work stoppages in industry, Sen. LaFollette said, is "the voluntary collective agreement between employer and union containing provisions for voluntary mediation and arbitration before strikes or lockouts . . .

"Every absence of a collective bargaining agreement, every refusal to bargain collectively, constitutes a threat to production for national defense. . . . Powerful groups having dominant positions in the defense industries have for years devoted their time, their money, their energy and their great influence to prevent the exercise of labor's rights, to avoid collective bargaining and to violate the law of the land which has been on the books since 1935.

"This is not a loose statement. The record of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee shows that a large percentage of the companies involved in strikes officially listed today as affecting national defense, have been guilty of violations of the civil rights of their employes and recalcitrant in their attitude toward our national labor policy."

Paper Plant Goes CIO

Berlin, N. H., May 17—Workers at the Brown Company, pulp and paper manufacturer, turned in an overwhelming vote for District 50, United Mine Workers, snowing under a competing AFL union, at a Labor Board election held here this week.

Among the pulp workers, the vote was 1010 for the CIO to 315 for the AFL. The electricians unit cast 67 ballots for the CIO to 31 for the AFL and the watchmen 20 for the CIO to 15 for no union.

The AFL carried a plurality in the election among paper workers with a vote of 123 for the AFL to 98 for the CIO and 32 for no union, but failed to gain the necessary majority to win.

Tory Drive Fails to Halt 'Frisco Unions' Gains

SAN FRANCISCO, May 17—CIO keeps rolling along in San Francisco, despite the intimidation and hysteria built up by anti-labor forces in the Bridges trial added to the usual anti-union propaganda turned out daily in the commercial press and over the radio.

Activities and accomplishments of the CIO here over the past 10 days or so include a major drive to bring CIO organization to some 4,000 craft-ridden hotel employes and a number of contracts bringing wage increases to industrial workers in the Bay area.

The hotel drive is headed by Mervyn Rathborne, secretary of the San Francisco Council, and was undertaken to end "interminable jurisdictional disputes between various AFL craft unions," and to aid the workers who have been "plagued with such racketeers and gangsters as George Scalise" and others.

WIN ELECTION

Contracts and other victories include election wins by CIO unions at the Merco-Nordstrom plant, won by SWOC to the tune of 387 to 73, a 10 cent increase at the California Corrugated Culvert Co., raises at California Wire Cloth Co., and at the Charles Harley Co., scrap metal dealers.

AFL workers at another plant, seeing these gains and noting that they had been five months without a contract, voted by three to one to join the CIO, choosing Local 50 of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

CIO Gains 10c Raise At GM; Steel Union Wins At Bethlehem

Bethlehem

LACKAWANNA, N. Y., May 17—The CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee this week swept to a decisive victory in its first Natl. Labor Relations Board election at a plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co.

Workers at the big Lackawanna plant cast this history-making vote:

FOR THE CIO	8,223
AGAINST	2,961
CHALLENGED	353
BLANK	29
VOID	24

That the vote was a solid expression of confidence in the SWOC was attested by the fact that 11,590 out of the 12,445 workers eligible cast their ballots.

The CIO victory marked another turning point in Bethlehem's long record of opposition to unionism. Two weeks ago the company signed its first contract for one of its big shipyard plants in New Jersey, coming to terms with the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

SWOC WON STRIKE

The NLRB election was preceded some months ago by a walkout of the plant's 14,000 employes, who subsequently won the first strike against Bethlehem in labor history. As part of the settlement, the company agreed to non-discriminatory rehiring of all the strikers and to withhold opposition to a forthcoming NLRB vote.

The SWOC leaders worked up a big campaign to insure the highest possible vote for the CIO affiliate. A big mass meeting held in Lackawanna on May 12 taxed the capacity of the largest hall in the city, and thousands listened to loudspeakers outside.

SWOC Chairman Philip Murray was the principal speaker at the turnout. The mayors of both Buffalo and Lackawanna—which adjoins Buffalo—were present, as were a number of other political, church and civic dignitaries.

MURRAY ON STRIKES

At a press conference preceding the meeting, Murray estimated that the degree which work stoppages had impeded the defense program was "infinitely small." More serious, he indicated, was the Vinson anti-strike bill.

"No logical defense can be made

Black Week For Steel Firm

WASHINGTON, May 17—It was a black week for the Bethlehem Steel Corp.

In addition to having its pet company union scheme knocked out in the courts, and to having the CIO win a Labor Board poll at its Lackawanna, N. Y., plant—

The company found itself on the receiving end of a law suit filed by a minority stockholder seeking to recover a million dollars allegedly "wasted through illegal and wrongful labor-baiting activities."

Filing the suit was Miss Zara du Pont, liberal-minded kin of the economic royalist du Ponts. A month ago she raised a fuss at the company's annual stockholders' meeting by demanding the company change its labor policy to one of cooperation with the union of its workers.

Now Miss du Pont wants damages based on the charge that in maintaining company unions, using labor spies, bringing officials and supporting citizens committees, the company's high-salaried bosses were violating their duties and trusts . . . as officers and directors of the corporation."

U. S. Court Cracks Down On Bethlehem

WASHINGTON, May 17—Bethlehem Steel Corp.'s hope of preserving its antiquated company union system collapsed here this week under the impact of a resounding decision in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

By a 2-1 vote, the judges upheld in its entirety a Natl. Labor Relations Board order demanding dis-

Ford Election Drive Zips Into Home Stretch

DETROIT, May 17—Leaders of the United Automobile Workers today went into the home-stretch of their campaign to win a CIO election victory at the giant River Rouge and Lincoln Motor plants of the Ford Motor Co.

Michael F. Widman, director of the Ford Organizing Committee, predicted that the 80,000 Ford employes will vote CIO by "90-95%" for the UAW-CIO in the NLRB election scheduled for Wednesday, May 21.

More than 200 Natl. Labor Relations Board officials, working under the guidance of Regional Director Frank Bowen, will be on hand to insure a fair-square vote at the Rouge plant, scene last month of the first successful strike in Ford history.

80,000 TO VOTE

About 80,000 workers at River Rouge—which is the largest industrial plant in the world—will be eligible to vote. They will have a choice between the CIO, an AFL federal local, or no union. About 400 patternmakers will be given a chance to name either the UAW-CIO, the AFL Patternmakers League or no union. Over 3,000 workers at the Lincoln Motor plant will choose between the CIO and the AFL union.

Winding up a big pre-election campaign which has involved the distribution of thousands of leaflets and special papers, and a series of broadcasts on local radio stations, the UAW-CIO will hold a giant mass meeting in Cadillac Square, Detroit, on Monday, with CIO Pres. Philip Murray and UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas as the principal speakers.

Ford Organizing Director Widman predicted, meanwhile, that the union would soon seek elections in two other Michigan Ford plants, and then proceed to ask polls in outlying areas. His statement:

"Ford workers will vote 90-95% for the UAW-CIO. Our dues paying membership in both the Rouge and Lincoln plants is already substantially above a majority.

"As soon as the election is over and the UAW-CIO is certified as the sole collective bargaining agent, negotiations for a contract covering Rouge and Lincoln employes will be instituted. The UAW-CIO has already petitioned for an election in the Ford Highland Park Plant. Within the next few days, petitions will be filed for elections in the Flat Rock and Ypsilanti plants, and as soon thereafter as possible, for all other outlying plants.

"With the Rouge and Lincoln election won, organization of the entire Ford empire throughout the United States and Canada will be completed by the end of the summer and democratic and industrial relations will be established for the first time in the history of this corporation."

A hypothetical picture of what will happen to consumer consumption of a product produced by an industry that fails to expand properly.

NEED FOR PLANNING: The effect of industry planning, envisaged by the Murray Industry Council Plan—so far ignored by the government—is graphically shown in these two charts from the CIO Economic Outlook. Top chart shows CIO proposal: increase factory productive capacity, so that both national defense military needs and civilian consumption of commodities may rise.

Bottom chart shows what is happening now: Total capacity isn't being increased enough. The result: Factories producing civilian goods are turned over to military production and production of goods needed by consumers drops. That means shortages, priority difficulties, price increases.

GM Pact

WASHINGTON, May 16—The CIO United Automobile Workers today won a 10-cent-an-hour wage increase for General Motors' scores of thousands of employes, just four hours before a strike zero hour.

That General Motors had bowed to the union's demand was announced here by Vice-Chairman William H. Davis of the Nat'l Defense Mediation Board, which had been working on the dispute for nearly a fortnight.

At 12:30 a.m. Davis read to assembled newspapermen a letter from GM Pres. Charles E. Wilson declaring that he had "decided it was the best thing to do in the interests of all concerned."

Wilson's decision, which will bring an additional fifty million dollars into the pockets of nearly a quarter-million GM employes, came after 21 hours had passed out of a 24-hour strike postponement and ultimatum period, during which the Board had told the company either to accept or reject its proposals.

FOUR PLANTS CLOSED

As it was, the postponement of the strike at 4:10 a.m. on May 15 came so late that four locals in Flint, Mich., which failed to get word of the 24-hour additional truce, went out on strike, closing two Fisher Body plants and two Chevrolet and Buick factories. Four other significant points in the contract were:

1. The agreement is to run for one year, rather than indefinitely in the past, with a 60-day termination notice provision.
2. The jurisdiction of the impartial arbiter, who is paid jointly by the union and the company, will be widened, with the arbiter given power to review penalties imposed by the management on workers for alleged violation of contract or rules.

SENIORITY

3. Advancement of workers will be based on seniority where ability, merit and capacity are equal.
4. The company agrees not to lock out employes during the life of the contract. A prohibition again strikes was already in the agreement.

Negotiations between GM and the UAW-CIO had been in progress for several months. In mid-April the union gained strike authorization from the GM locals in 61 plants, but agreed to defer the walkout pending discussion with the Mediation Board in Washington.

NOT AGAINST DEFENSE

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW and Walter Reuther, director of the union's GM division, led the union representatives at the negotiating sessions. Reuther had insisted that if a strike took place, the UAW would permit work to continue on all GM's defense work. The company, swinging away from its critical attitude when Reuther's plan for mass production of airplanes in auto plants was proposed early this year, this time claimed it would be impossible to differentiate between work for civilian consumption and for national defense.

The pay boost will bring GM employes' average hourly pay to about $1.10, far above the wage level in pre-CIO days.

The mediation panel which studied the dispute almost constantly from May 1 to the present, included Davis, Gerard Swope, ex-head of General Electric; Eugene Meyer of the Washington Post; Sec. James Carey of the CIO and John Brophy, CIO director of Industrial Union Councils.

Strike At Hudson

Detroit, May 16—Seeking a 15-cent-an-hour wage increase, 8,600 members of the CIO United Automobile Workers went out on strike at three plants of the Hudson Motor Co. The strike followed long negotiations,

Coal Negotiations:

Lewis Warns of New Mine Shutdown Possibility

NEW YORK, May 17—Failure of the Southern coal operators to make any progress toward a settlement of the contract negotiations with the United Mine Workers brought a blunt warning from John L. Lewis that all work in the Appalachian area mines would cease unless an agreement was reached by Monday, May 19.

"The mine workers are of the belief that this conference with the Southern operators should be able to conclude its work by the end of the week, that it should either make an agreement on matters still in negotiation or demonstrate its inability to make an agreement," Lewis said.

"In the event there it no agreement by Monday, (May 19) the situation will be reported to the union's policy committee and the obligation of the United Mine Workers under the Northern agreement will be taken into consideration. The miners are the guarantors of that agreement. The responsibility of protecting the integrity of that agreement devolves on them."

LONG NEGOTIATIONS

Lewis's statement came after the Southern operators had used up a month in negotiations without making progress.

Southern miners have been working pending agreement on the wage differential and other points. They went back to the mines following a lockout caused by the operators' earlier refusal either to grant the UMWA demands or to continue working under the old contract, with revisions to be made retroactive, as originally proposed by the union.

The return to work was carried out under this provision, following similar proposals made by the National Defense Mediation Board and by President Roosevelt. These proposals were at first rejected by the operators, later accepted.

IDLE AND FUTILE

"The issues before this conference are clearly drawn, are fully understood by all the negotiators, and it will be idle and futile to continue the waste of time in discussion of these matters beyond the current week," Lewis said.

Lewis also pointed out that the Southern operators had already added 30 to 35 cents a ton to their prices, covering "every conceivable item of the yet unaccepted Southern agreement."

The UMWA, which has won a $1 a day increase for the miners, paid vacations and other major benefits, is fighting to abolish the 40 cents a day differential in pay between Northern and Southern mines.

DUE FOR A FALL

CIO Wins, Three to One

The splendid victory of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at the Lackawanna plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. is one of those key events whose significance reaches far and wide.

"We are watching the turning of the tide," Pres. Philip Murray said, in the long and hard campaign of the CIO to win collective bargaining from Bethlehem—one of the wealthiest and toughest foes the unions ever had.

The vote of 8,223 to 2,961 for the SWOC shows how the workers feel about the CIO when they have a chance to vote. Its impact will be felt in every other plant of Bethlehem and the other "Little Steel" companies, and will lead to all of them before long signing on the dotted line with the CIO.

Coming on the eve of the big Ford Motor Co. election, the Lackawanna victory shows beyond all doubt which way the wind is blowing. It will encourage the Ford workers to roll up a thumping majority for the CIO. And the whole country can see from this key election that nothing can stop the CIO from fulfilling its mission of complete organization of the mass-production industries.

Anti-Poll Tax Week

Every time labor fights for its life against vicious anti-union legislation, every time it finds progressive measures blocked in Congress, it should be reminded of one great blot on our proclaimed democracy.

Leading the fight on the side of reaction every time is a bloc of members of Congress who represent not the people of their states but only a privileged and propertied minority.

Some ten and a half million Americans are denied the right to vote by the poll taxes in force in eight southern states. The majority of the working people, of farm and industry, are disfranchised in those states.

As a result, as John L. Lewis put it at the CIO convention, "a small minority of the citizens of a state, the privileged minority who are property owners, send their representatives to Washington to exercise an improper, unfair and outrageous control over the policies of the rest of the nation."

For example—Senator "Cotton Ed" Smith of Georgia was re-elected by only 5.5 per cent of the voters of his state. Rep. Martin Dies, red-baiting foe of labor, was sent back to Congress by only 7.7 per cent of the adults in his district. Rep. Howard Smith of Virginia, leader of the fight against the Wagner Act, was elected by but 9.7 per cent of the men and women of his district.

The week of May 11-17 has been proclaimed as National Anti-Poll Tax Week, to center attention on a nationwide drive to get the 218 signatures necessary in the House to force a vote on the Geyer anti-poll tax bill. This bill has the support of the CIO, as well as of all other labor and progressive organizations.

In its own and the nation's interests, as well as in the interests of the disfranchised millions in the poll-tax states, labor cannot afford to rest in this or any other week until democracy has been won for this large section of the United States.

Let your Congressman know that you expect his active support to win passage of the Geyer anti-poll tax bill.

The Ball Bill

While attention is centered on the vicious Vinson anti-strike bill, let us not forget that a similar measure, introduced by Senator Ball, is being more quietly pushed at the same time in the Senate.

The Ball bill does not include some of the features of the Vinson bill, but it is based on the same anti-labor principle of the so-called "cooling-off" period.

Under the Ball bill, workers would be forbidden to strike during a period of from 20 to 50 days. Employers would be permitted to go into any District Court to start court proceedings to punish unions or workers for violating the bill's involuntary servitude provisions.

The Ball bill is modeled on the Minnesota anti-strike law, which has aggravated industrial disputes and under which the time lost per worker through strikes has increased.

It would seriously interfere with collective bargaining, revive extensive use of the anti-strike injunction, and deprive American workers of their democratic rights as effectively as the Vinson bill.

Labor wants none of the Ball, the Vinson or any other anti-strike bills now being pushed by those who would undermine American democracy.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

WHILE Philip Murray was speaking in Lackawanna, N. Y., Rudolf Hess was dropping out of the sky to a Scottish moor. But if Hess had dropped into Lackawanna instead that evening, he might well have been overlooked by the seething crowds whose mind was only on the CIO.

People sometimes have crazy dreams about meeting up with a Hess or a Hitler. But the people in the steel city of Lackawanna were witnessing another kind of dream come true—and a dream that meant a lot more to their every-day lives.

The CIO has been pictured as a fantastic bogyman—violent, lawless, troublemaking—in nearly every industrial community from which anti-union corporations have sought to bar it.

But as it has gained strength, the working people of that community have come to realize that this CIO bogeyman they were asked to fear is nothing but their own reflection in the mirror of organization—the outline of their own desires for a better living, for less toil and poverty and for more democracy.

IN LACKAWANNA, on the eve of the election that captured the big Bethlehem plant for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, the bogeyman stories had become a joke to the thousands of steel workers who had joined the CIO and knew what it meant for them.

The mayors of both Buffalo and Lackawanna were on hand to welcome the CIO leaders, the churches were well represented, and the throngs that turned out for the great parade could see for themselves that Lackawanna was becoming a CIO town.

The thousands who jammed the meeting hall and crowded around the loudspeakers outside, to see and hear the CIO leader, responded as one man to his message. For he was telling them how they could make their own dreams and hopes come true through their own organization.

FOR FOUR and a half years, Murray said, the SWOC has been organizing the Bethlehem plants "and now we are watching the turning of the tide."

The victory at Lackawanna, he told them, will set the pace for the victories to follow at every other Bethlehem plant. "The Ford workers have their eyes centered on Lackawanna, and your success will inspire countless others as well in all parts of the country."

The CIO lawless? Why, on that very day, Murray pointed out, a federal court had upheld the conviction of the Bethlehem Co. for anti-union intimidation and espionage, for bribery and corruption, and had ordered the dissolution of its company unions in all its plants. All the CIO asked was its legal rights.

The CIO un-American? On the contrary, Murray said, "it is an American institution, devoted to achieving American ideals and objectives, based on American democratic traditions, and dedicated to making this country a better place in which to live."

The CIO is growing by leaps and bounds, Murray declared, because of the service it renders. He told of the wage increases it has won, of the wrongs it has redressed, and of the better food, clothing, housing and opportunity it has made possible for countless men, women and children.

EARLIER that day, Murray had spoken to a different and smaller audience in Buffalo—a meeting of the Buffalo Ministerial Association, with ministers of many different denominations present.

"The aspirations and ideals of the CIO," he told them, "come close to the teachings of Christ himself. We aim to give to the poor, the lowly and the oppressed a better chance in the game of life, an even chance to improve their conditions of employment, their wages and their living standards—so that cultural opportunities may be open to them and an understanding and appreciation of higher values."

If they would take the time to look into fundamentals, Murray said, all right-thinking people would acclaim the work which the CIO is doing in the country today.

He ended his talk on a note of challenge to the churchmen.

Pointing out how labor works and fights for "the material and economic salvation of human beings," in conformity with the proclaimed principles of churches "seeking the spiritual salvation of human beings," Murray said:

"I have often wondered why ministerial associations should stand aloof and watch the parade go by, why they should not take a greater interest in the economic welfare of a community."

Professions of neutrality are a sign of indifference, he declared, urging the ministers to take a stand with labor for the high and worthy objectives for which it fights.

STOP THE VINSON BILL!

Signs are multiplying on Capitol Hill that the Vinson bill (HR 4139) may be rushed to the floor of Congress for a quick vote within the next few days, as Congressional reactionaries hope to use current strike situations as a smokescreen for quick passage.

If passed, the Vinson Bill will:

1. Destroy the right to strike by forced mediation and "cooling-off" periods during which union men on strike would be punished by $5,000 fine, a year in jail or both.

2. Freeze wages and working conditions at present levels by outlawing the union shop and officially blessing the open shop.

3. Put an open season on union members by allowing employers to fire anyone suspected of being "subversive."

4. Destroy the Wagner Act by outlawing so-called "coercive methods" of unions—which would mean any normal union activity.

Act Now To Save Your Union--- Your Wages and Your Jobs Are at Stake!

Only the immediate, vigorous protest of millions of union members can block this vicious anti-union bill. Wire your Congressman at once. Tell him to speak and vote against the Vinson bill and all similar plans to curb unions, destroy the right to strike and cut living standards.

Vinson Bill Vote Due Soon In House

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, May 17—The anti-union Vinson bill (HR 4139) is set to come on the floor of Congress for a vote within the next few days, following action of Rep. Howard Smith, poll-taxer from Virginia, in forcing a rule through Congress calling for early debate.

Smith's rule, submitted to the House Wednesday last, automatically brings the bill up within the following seven legislative days, on call of any member of the House Rules Committee. Smith, noted for his anti-labor record in the House and author of the Smith amendments to the Wagner Act, is a member of this committee, as are Gene Cox of Georgia and Martin Dies of Texas—both poll tax states.

EARLY DEBATE

Filing of the rule that clears the way for early debate on the union-breaking bill came less than three weeks after the House Rules Committee had considered the bill—a short period when compared with the time this committee has held up progressive legislation such as the Wage-Hour Act in the past.

It also came within three weeks of the favorable report on the bill from the House Naval Affairs Committee, where it went through in the record-breaking time of two days—during which only one labor witness was permitted to testify, for one hour.

LABOR PROTESTS

Protests from all sections of the organized labor movement, led by the CIO, had succeeded in slowing up this blitz campaign for the period between the Naval Committee report and the Smith rule. CIO, Labor's Non-partisan League, AFL and other labor and progressive groups and individuals have been showering their Congressmen with demands to speak and vote against the bill, and are expected to redouble the campaign now that the bill is headed for the floor.

TORIES STRIKE SNAG

Parallel with the anti-labor haste in getting the bill out of Committee, Vinson's group, the House Naval Affairs Committee, has struck a snag in its plan to smear labor through a new probe into the progress of the defense program.

The snag appeared when members of the Committee learned, through another source, that a 62-item questionnaire prying into the affairs of unions had been sent out by Committee counsel without their knowledge or authorization. This short-circuit trick was pulled on Vinson's own committee by Edmund S. Toland, hired as investigation counsel despite the anti-labor bias he showed as counsel for Smith's smear committee during the Wagner Act probe.

COMMITTEE PROTEST

Naval Affairs Committee members, several of which signed a minority report sharply condemning the Vinson bill, indicated that they would protest the unauthorized questionnaire, particularly since they had been assured by Vinson that no such move was contemplated.

The Vinson bill, piously described as a means of promoting defense, would destroy the right to strike through enforced "cooling-off" periods and heavy criminal penalties against striking workers; would freeze the open shop by outlawing union shop contracts; would lay union members open to persecution through permitting employers to discharge them on mere suspicion of "subversive activities;" and would cripple unions by outlawing so-called "coercive methods" under which any normal union activity could be defined.

Mediation Head Raps Ball Bill

WASHINGTON, May 17—The Vinson bill's stable mate in the Senate, the Ball bill requiring a 30-day "cooling-off" period during which striking workers would be subject to criminal penalties, was condemned in testimony before the Senate Labor Committee here by Wm. H. Davis, vice-chairman of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

Davis told the committee that the only feasible way to secure cooling-off without destroying labor's right to strike was the way unions did it by writing such provisions into collective bargaining contracts.

He added that the government should cooperate by restricting its contract awards to those firms that have collective bargaining contracts with unions. This should be a matter of national policy, he pointed out.

Witnesses from CIO unions are scheduled to appear next week.

The Ball bill is modeled on the Minnesota state cooling-off law, praised last week by Governor Stassen of Minnesota, who appointed Senator Ball to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Senator Lundeen.

This state law was shown last week by a representative of the Minnesota state CIO to have no effect in cutting down the number of strikes. In fact, it was proved from the Governor's own figures that more, rather than less, strikes had taken place since passage of the law.

"Bethlehem Decision Means End of Fake Unions" - - - Murray

WASHINGTON, May 17—CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who is chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, hailed the U. S. Circuit Court decision in the Bethlehem Steel Co. case as spelling the end of company unionism at the firm's plants. His statement in full:

"The decision of the Federal Circuit Court means the end of company unions in American industry, because Bethlehem Steel was the originator of the Employe Representation Plan more than twenty years ago, and imposed it on its workmen after the last war.

"It is well to note that the Circuit Court not only ordered the dissolution of all company unions in Bethlehem Steel Mills, but also upheld the National Labor Relations Board in finding Bethlehem Steel guilty of spending $36,000 for bribery and corruption at its Johnstown, Pa., plant in 1937; and of the use of spies to intimidate its workmen—all designed to frustrate the rights of its workmen to join legitimate labor unions.

"In its decision, the Circuit Court said: 'The petitioners' (Bethlehem Steel) defiance of the law as stated in the Wagner Act and plain decisions of the Supreme Court was clearly shown.'

"As has been frequently pointed out there is but one union in the steel industry and that is the SWOC. That the men in the Lackawanna plant of the Bethlehem Steel want SWOC will be demonstrated in the election there on Wednesday."

"Vinson Bill Endangers Organizing Plans"

NEW YORK, May 17—Passage of the Vinson anti-strike anti-union bill would be "a cease and desist order to further organization," Lewis Merrill, president of the CIO Office and Professional Workers wrote today to all members of Congress in urging its defeat.

The bill should be defeated in any form it comes up, Merrill wrote, since "no amendments can change the fundamental dangers which this bill presents nor alter its basically un-American character."

"The right to strike would be fundamentally abrogated by enactment of a 25 day 'cooling-off' period and compulsory mediation, with violations punished by a year's imprisonment and a $5,000 fine," he added.

"Unions which reject proposals of employers or the mediation board, regardless of merit, could be fined and officials jailed under this provision."

The CIO and The Churches

(Excerpts from an Extemporaneous Address by CIO President Philip Murray before the Buffalo Ministerial Association, May 12, 1941)

When we started the CIO, we anticipated criticism. We knew that we would be slandered and reviled for the work we were undertaking. I need not tell you how untrue the slanders have been.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations is composed of human beings, of men and women like you and me. None of its members are perfect, but they are just about as good as the rest of us, and I hope no worse.

The aspirations and ideals of the CIO come pretty close to the teachings of Christ himself. We aim to give to the poor, the weak, the lowly and the oppressed a better chance in this great game of life, an even chance to improve their conditions of employment, their wages and their living standards—so that cultural opportunities may be open to them and an understanding and appreciation of higher values.

The CIO organizations hope through intelligent, legitimate collective bargaining to alleviate some of the pain and some of the agony that follows in the wake of men who work for a living.

The Only Way

The only way to achieve these ends is through organization.

We do not seek strikes. We do not want violence and destruction of property. It is our objective, through sane constructive collective bargaining, to wring from industry the highest wages economically possible, without interfering with a reasonable rate of profit.

There is nothing new in this philosophy. Religious denominations of all kinds down through the ages have preached this kind of philosophy.

It is to the best interest of the community and the public to lend every legitimate support to labor for the fulfillment of these aspirations. Through their fulfillment, the worker becomes a better citizen, the community becomes a better community, the state becomes a better state, and the nation becomes a better nation.

Our efforts to elevate the standards of labor mean pictures on the wall, carpets on the floor and music in the home—a chance for the children to have a better education, a better understanding and appreciation of the values of life, and to become better citizens who can make a greater contribution to society.

CIO Is Slandered

The CIO has been critcized; it has been slandered and abused. Yet I have never known a single solitary instance wherein the right of the CIO to exist and to function has not been sustained when it came before the courts, and when the validity of our position has not been upheld.

Who is wrong? Employers like Bethlehem that have consistently refused to bargain, have maintained company unions, have employed private detectives, have exercised coercion and discrimination—and have been found guilty of violating the law on this account? Or the CIO, which asks only its rights under the law for the attainment of its constructive objectives?

If people would take the time to look into the fundamental wrongs of this question, if they would really get down to the basic facts, there is no doubt that all right-thinking people would acclaim the work which the CIO organizations are doing in the country today.

We are not trying to deprive industry of the right to exist. There is nothing in our constitution that even faintly suggests any change in our form of government or democratic institutions. We are just asking for the right to live and for the right to go forward in an orderly way to our common goal.

The Church and Labor

The churches seek the spiritual salvation of human beings. I believe, in common with the principles of the churches, that labor has the right to fight for the material and economic salvation of human beings.

Out of this common crucible men can be made better citizens. Labor and the churches should be linked together in this common, noble and holy endeavor.

We who believe in this country of ours, know that in the not distant future it may need a strong substantial labor movement to help it meet the raging storms which the people of our nation may have to face.

I am talking of the things that may trail in the wake of war, when industry slows up, when war production ends, when workers are laid off, when millions of our young men go home from the army. What then, America? Whither are you going?

Time For Thinking

The American people and American industry should begin thinking now not only about the solution of our present problems, but about doing a little economic planning for the days to come.

You do not read much about these things in the papers, it is true. About all the papers like to carry is sensational matter about individual cases, rather than material about the deep-rooted economic problems that cause social convulsions.

The rock on which the CIO hopes to build is the rock of sound, sane thinking. We do not appeal to hatred, prejudice and passion. All civic-spirited groups should support the CIO.

I have often wondered why ministerial associations should stand aloof and watch the parade go by, so far as the labor movement is concerned—why they should not take a greater interest than they do in the economic welfare of a community.

I wonder if the churches would not do better by taking a stand on labor questions than by professing neutrality. For after all, passivity is a sign of indifference.

Personally, I would rather have leaders of the church denounce me from the public platform than to stand aloof and say, "I want to blind myself to this situation."

Bridges Defense Charges Witnesses Intimidated

SAN FRANCISCO, May 17—Intimidation of one pro-defense witness and the mysterious disappearance of another featured the seventh week of the second deportation hearings in which the government is trying to deport Harry Bridges, west coast CIO leader and head of the Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

One of the witnesses, Thomas Imper, testified last week that he would not believe Robert Wilmot, a government witness, under oath. Wilmot had testified that Bridges once said to him: "We Communists must stick together." This week Imper was fired from a job with the Oregon state government, where his chief told him: "because of the publicity given the affair, it is necessary to let you go."

The other witness, Maurice Cannalonga, has simply vanished, Bridges defense leaders said, "under mysterious circumstances giving the suspicion of foul play." Cannalonga had said that earlier anti-Bridges testimony was extracted from him under threats of 20 years imprisonment by the FBI.

FBI LINK SEEN

George Wilson, secretary of the Bridges Defense Committee, charged the FBI with retaliating against pro-Bridges witnesses. "Circumstances once more indicate that the FBI has retaliated against an individual who dared testify for Bridges," he said. "First the FBI succeeded in getting Jim O'Neil's job with a Marysville radio station; next Maurice Cannalonga, marine fireman, disappeared under mysterious circumstances giving the suspicion of foul play, and now Mr. Imper has been fired."

Wilson announced that the full protection of the CIO would be given to witnesses persecuted by the FBI or the Dept. of Justice for pro-Bridges testimony. "We have received assurances from Philip Murray, president of the CIO, that the national CIO will come to the defense of any individual against whom the Dept. of Justice may seek reprisals for telling the truth about the methods of the FBI in this case," he said.

Details of the firing of Imper and an affidavit from him are being forwarded to Pres. Murray, Wilson added.

in favor of the bill," the CIO head declared. "The bill violates all that the people of the United States hold near and dear.

"Labor doesn't want to engage itself in strikes, never did, and, I hope, never will."

CIO NOT TO BLAME

The strikes which have occurred, Murray pointed out, were "in no way the responsibility of the CIO organization, but rather of the attitude of the employer in refusing to recognize either the true spirit of collective bargaining or the right of workers to secure for themselves, through these processes, improvements in wages and working conditions to which they are justly entitled and which industry, under present circumstances, is able to afford."

30% PAY BOOST

Toledo, Ohio, May 17—A 30 per cent boost in wages will go into the pockets of workers at the H. H. Buggie Co. here as the result of a new contract signed between the company and Local 363, United Warehouse, Wholesale & Delivery Employes.

LABELED: In a year featured by name-calling and labeling, it's a pleasure to see someone proud of their label. In this case it's a group of girls representing Michigan unions calling on Ben Probe, acting CIO council secretary-treasurer, in preparation for the Michigan Union Label Week. Left to right: Virginia McNamara, electrical workers; Aimee Josefka, garment workers; Viola Kowalsky, cannery workers; Maxine Kershner, dairy workers; Barbara Gordon, bakery workers; and Kathleen Jones, office workers.

solution of Bethlehem's notorious Employe Representation Plan—a plan which has been sailing through rough weather since the Steel Workers Organizing Committee drive began to show results at the company's plants this year.

"It is clear," said the court's majority, "that the company dominated, interfered with and supported the plans; the Board's other findings, to which we have referred, are supported by substantial evidence."

MURRAY PLEASED

The decision was quickly hailed by Philip Murray, head of the CIO and of the SWOC, as spelling the doom of all company unions in the United States.

The 10 branches of the company union ordered dissolved by the court are located at the corporation's Cambria, Lackawanna, Lebanon, Steelton, Sparrows Point, Bethlehem, Contractor, Rankin and Leetsdale 1 and 2 plants.

In addition to supporting the Labor Board's findings against the company union set-up, the judges upheld contentions of the NLRB that during the 1937 Little Steel Strike, Bethlehem had "surreptitiously" handed over money to Mayor Daniel Shields of Johnstown to "insure continuance of his anti-union attitude and conduct, and that the corporation must be held responsible therefore."

The court also endorsed CIO and Labor Board charges of widespread anti-labor espionage on the part of the steel corporation. The decision pointed out that the company's employment of detectives constituted conduct in which the "employes had been interfered with, restrained and coerced in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by the (Wagner) Act to form or join labor organizations, and to engage in concerted activities for collective bargaining."

U. S. Official Lauds Labor, Raps Baiters

Austin, Tex., May 17—Joseph S. Myers, United States Commissioner of Conciliation at Houston, said here Texas labor should be commended for its attitude toward national defense, and not "slapped in the face by labor-baiting, demogogic political leaders."

Asserting he was thoroughly familiar with labor conditions throughout the state, Myers said there had been no hindrance of national defense projects by strikes this year.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The NLRB election at the big River Rouge plant of the Ford Motor Company will be held Wednesday, May 21. Some eighty thousand Ford workers will cast their ballots for a collective bargaining agency. Everybody on the scene predicts a smashing victory for the UAWA-CIO.

On Tuesday, May 20, a gigantic mass meeting of Ford workers will be held in Cadillac Square, Detroit. President Murray will be the principal speaker. R. J. Thomas, the writer and others will address the gathering. There is no building in the Detroit area large enough to accommodate the membership of Ford Local Union No. 600.

STEEL:

The election at the Lackawanna (Buffalo) plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation will be over by the time this goes to press. Vin Sweeney and Van A. Bittner report enthusiasm running high, and forecast a substantial majority vote for the SWOC. A victory at this plant means eventual complete organization of the workers at all plants of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. On May 12 the Circuit Court outlawed all Company unions in all Bethlehem Steel plants.

UTILITY:

Let there be light! Following up the great accomplishment of the Utility Workers Organizing Committee in forcing the largest utility corporation, the Consolidated Edison Company, to pay $300,000 back pay and reinstate discharged workers, an agreement was consummated with the Ohio Edison Corporation. This takes in the town of Coshocton, Ohio, William Green's bailiwick. CIO will now furnish Bill with light to enable him to see that industrial unionism is here to stay; that the CIO is the real live, energetic labor movement serving the needs of American workers, accomplishing great things that Bill and his bench warmers always said couldn't be done.

RUBBER:

An important conference will be held at Akron, Ohio, May 17-18 of URWA delegates from Goodyear Rubber plants throughout the country to draft demands to be presented to the Goodyear Company—the largest of its kind in the world. Director Robert Davidson reports remarkable progress in enrolling the workers at these plants into the union. The writer will attend this conference.

It is expected the Goodyear Company will read the signs of the times correctly and enter negotiations with a sincere desire to negotiate a satisfactory and equitable agreement upon which confidence can be established and continuity of operations assured.

AVIATION:

Another victory in the aviation field—Director Mosele reports the workers in the Bendix plant in Long Island voted more than two to one for the CIO over the AFL, and organization work is progressing at the company's two plants in New Jersey.

TRANSPORT:

The Transport Workers Union will hold a mass meeting in Madison Square Garden May 21. CIO President Philip Murray and the writer will address the gathering. The CIO is determined to protect the rights of the transit workers to have their union represent them as their collective bargaining agency.

Peace on the New York City transportation lines can be maintained, and needed confidence restored if the City Board of Transportation will approach the problem with a desire to recognize realities and bargain with the union in good faith. Failure to do this will place the responsibility squarely on the Board.

The URWA had a smashing victory in the Goodrich Rubber plants in Cadillac, etc., after a very vicious anti-union campaign in the community.

Results, as follows:

URWA	296
INDEP.	48
NO UNION	35

$18,000,000 PACT: Leaders of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Clothing Manufacturers Assn. sign a contract which will bring an estimated $18,000,000 in annual wage increases to 135,000 workers. The pact was negotiated at Atlantic City, N. J., several weeks ago, went into effect May 1. Sec.-Treas. Jacob Potofsky (second from right) was one of the union's leading negotiators.

N. Y. Furriers Lift Wages $2,000,000

NEW YORK, May 17—Pay boosts totalling $2,000,000 for 20,000 members of the CIO Fur and Leather Workers featured the new three-year contract ratified here at a mass meeting called by the Furriers' Joint Council here.

Individual workers will get increases ranging from $3 to $5 a week and up under the new contract, it was announced. Employers found sending work to non-union contractors will be fined the total cost of the work if done under union conditions. Workers cannot be discharged during a total of nine months of the year under another provision.

The contract was once rejected May 1 by the Associated Fur Coat and Trimming Mfgrs., who changed their minds May 9 and agreed to the contract as originally put to them.

The contract also provides for improved safety and health conditions on the job.

WANT HOSPITAL

Toledo, Ohio, May 17—The CIO Industrial Union Council here is backing a proposal to build a new municipal hospital.

10 Percent Pay Raise Gained For Shirt Makers

NEW YORK, May 17—Following annual wage increases of 10 and 13 percent for 50,000 clothing workers in the metropolitan area, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America yesterday announced an agreement with the Shirt Institute whereby 15,000 shirt workers along the Eastern seaboard will receive a 10 percent increase and vacations with pay.

In conformity with a decision of the General Executive Board of the Amalgamated, the union will immediately request similar increases in other unionized sections of the industry which will affect a total of 50,000 shirt workers.

The agreement with the Shirt Institute, according to Alex Cohen, manager, Shirt Department, ACWA, provides for a general 10 per cent wage increase and a vacation fund into which the employers will pay 2½ per cent of their weekly pay roll. Members of the Shirt Institute met Wednesday to ratify the agreement.

The effective date is still open, the union insisting upon the new scales beginning June 2, while the employers have requested deferment until July 1.

SIGN CONTRACT

Toledo, Ohio, May 17—A one year's contract has been signed with the Gulf Refining Co., Local 346 of the Oil Workers International Union announced here.

Quick Strike Lifts Pay At Arms Plant

HARTFORD, Conn., May 17—Some 5,600 workers at the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Co. had returned to their jobs today after a 48-hour stoppage that swelled their thin pay envelopes by an estimated $2,000,000 a year.

Robert Mintz, organizer for the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, said the agreement had also liberalized existing vacation schedules.

TURNED TO UNION

The strike started as a spontaneous demonstration against the low wage scale maintained by the company, which is one of the nation's largest munitions factories and its chief source of machine guns.

The walkout was conducted by the CIO affiliate at the request of the strikers, who have been flocking into the union in recent weeks. After an unsuccessful conference between the employes and management, the men called the strike and asked the UE to take over.

REFUSED 3.8 CENTS

A management counter-proposal to the workers' demand for a 20-cents-an-hour raise consisted only of an offer to lift pay by 10%. That is only 3.8 cents an hour for the lowest paid workers in the plant.

Maytag OKs 10 Pct. Boost

Des Moines, Iowa, May 17—William Sentner, a general vice-president of the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America announced here today that as a part of a contract negotiations now going on between the union and the Maytag Company at Maytag, Iowa, the company had agreed to a general 10 per cent wage increase for the employes, members of UE Local 1116.

The wage raise is effective at once. Meantime, conferences are going forward to complete the agreement. This is the first time since the big 1938 strike at Maytag that substantial progress has been made toward an agreement with this company.

Wages Up At Armstrong Cork

Pittsburgh, May 17—A renewed contract with the Armstrong Cork Co. brought wage gains of 6 to 8 cents for the 850 workers employed in the plant here.

The pact was renewed with CIO Local Industrial Union, Local 1, and was negotiated by Anthony J. Federoff, CIO regional director, and Thomas Shane, Jr., CIO field representative.

The contract followed a strike threat. It also included a more liberalized vacation plan.

Ford Spy on Witness Stand, Admits Use of Frame-Ups

NEW YORK, May 17 (FP)—The Ford Motor Co., through its labor spies, rounded up complete data on all unionists in its Edgewater, N. J., plant and then proceeded to frame them.

This was brought out at NLRB hearings ip testimony by Homer J. Bryans, who, as a student, worked in every department of the plant. Bryans was admittedly a company man and cooperated with the spies in the various departments.

When Bryans was working in the hood department, one of the service men named Wagner told him: "We know all their (the union men's) names. We'll get rid of them for poor workmanship or stealing or something. Eventually we'll get them all out."

The extent to which Ford spies went in collecting data on union men was revealed to Bryans by Roy Tabbi, one of the service men. Tabbi said that spies attended meetings at the home of John Juliano, one of the fired unionists, and took notes. They also recorded the numbers of license plates on autos parked outside the house and if necessary checked these numbers with the state bureau of motor vehicles in Trenton.

ADMITS PAST CASES

When J. Brown, body foreman, told Bryans how he was going to get rid of Walter Hughes, a worker with 20 years of service who joined the union, Bryans asked: "You'll frame a man?" "It's been done before,'" Brown replied. Subsequently Hughes was fired because some union literature had been found near where he worked.

At one time Bryans asked Ralph E. White, head of the service department, to be transferred from the commercial to the service department.

White told Bryans he was more useful where he was "because those guineas up there are promoting a union. Be on the lookout for union buttons and union cards and report to me immediately." The union was the CIO United Automobile Workers.

port to me immediately." The union was the CIO United Automobile Workers.

MANY ALIBIS

Preceding Bryans on the stand were a number of the 29 workers discharged for union activity. Some of these men said they were fired without reason, while others were given such excuses as poor workmanship.

Their cases were summed up in the testimony of Joseph Tutsla, eighth of the workers to testify. When Tutsla went to Bradley Wyatt, employment managers, to ask why he had not been rehired, Wyatt said: "If you hadn't got mixed with that outfit on the outside (the union) you'd still be working today."

Ain't Unions Terrible?

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, May 17—Ten cents an hour blanket increase, plus steward and grievance machinery, paid vacations and other gains were won by 200 members of Local 402 of the United Automobile Workers.

The pay boost, added to five cents given earlier in a futile attempt by the Buffalo-Springfield Roller Co. to forestall organization, brings the total up $400-$500 annually for each worker.

Whelan Drug Chain Bows, Signs Pact

NEW YORK, May 17 (FP)—Strikers who picketed 53 Whelan drug stores for 14 weeks were all back at work May 12 under a union contract. The agreement, with Local 1199, CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes, covers 800 workers.

Gains in the new contract include a $2 weekly wage increase, a reduction in the work week from 54 to 52 hours, four paid holidays and one month's pay and job guarantee for draftees. Sodamen, who make up the majority of Whelan employes, will get $22 a week. The raises total $25,000 annually.

The contract contains a special arbitration clause protecting strikers returning to work against dismissals and demotions.

Tories' Meddling In Plane Parley Blasted By CIO

LOS ANGELES, May 17—Interference by the aeronautical chamber of commerce into peaceful negotiations now being held between the CIO United Automobile Workers' aircraft union and the North American Aviation, Inc., was blasted this week by Richard T. Frankensteen, national director of the UAW aircraft drive.

"While peaceful negotiations are being held daily between a duly elected collective bargaining representativ and a cooprative management," Frankensteen said, "the chamber has interfered by claiming our demands are 'extravagant.'

"This interference is entirely uncalled for," he said while adding that the chamber's speculations can do nothing "but lead to strained relations."

The UAW leader referred to a statement issued by the aeronautical chamber of commerce pres-president John Jouett, who said the demands of a 75-cents-an-hour minimum made by the workers were high and that the men were taking advantage of the national defense effort.

THREE-WEEK SESSIONS

Contract negotiations have been in progress for more than three weeks. UAW local 683 was recently certified sole collective bargaining agent by the national labor relations board for the 11,000 North American employes.

"It is ironical that the chamber should make this statement," Frankensteen, who is here from Detroit for negotiations, said.

"It should be remembered that the manufacture of planes for national defense was more than two months late in getting started because the manufacturers, led by the aeronautical chamber of commerce, were back in Washington bickering over what their profits would be."

Radio Men Win, 9-1

New York, May 17—Radio operators employed on 11 ships of the Sinclair Refining Company tanker fleet voted 9 to 1 for the American Communications Association, CIO, as their collective bargaining agency in an NLRB poll, Murray Winocur, ACA Marine Organizer, announced today. The other organization on the ballot was the Commercial Telegraphers' Union, AFL.

Winocur stated that negotiations for an agreement with Sinclair Refining will begin immediately.

Canadian Steel Strike Won by CIO

Toronto, Can., May 17—The plant of the National Steel Car Co. at Hamilton, employing 2,700 workers, was closed last week by a brief strike in protest against refusal of the company to reinstate the local president of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

After production at the plant had virtually ceased, and the Dominion Government had placed a controller in charge of operations, the union official was reinstated.

C. H. Millard, executive director of EWOC hailed the end of the strike as a clear-cut victory for the union members. The reinstatement was followed by spontaneous organizing efforts in many sections of Canada. The action to compel the company to rehire the union president was seen as proof that laws guaranteeing the right of collective bargaining were ineffective in Ontario unless supported by union action.

A general walkout of 10,000 SWOC members in other parts of the Dominion was averted by the Government's intervention and appointment of a controller at the plant. SWOC members at Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Montreal, Quebec, and Sydney, Trenton and Amherst, Nova Scotia, set a joint deadline for a "24-hour conference" to discuss the situation unless the union officer was reinstated.

The strike at the Hamilton plant was called after the company refused to accept the majority report of a conciliation board recommending the union president be reinstated. The board also recommended that the department of labor conduct a secret ballot election among employes of the plant to determine whether they want the SWOC to act as their collective bargaining agency.

DIRECT TO THE CONSUMER:

Virtually boycottd by New York's commercial press and radio, the CIO Transport Workers Union has been taking its case for maintaining union contracts with the city to the public direct. City transit riders have been getting the CIO side of the case in millions of leaflets, pamphlets, etc., handed to them by TWU train crews. In addition, almost nightly mass meetings have been held. This week CIO Pres. Murray is scheduled to speak at Madison Square Garden mass rally, Wednesday, May 21.

Charge Radio 'Gags' Transit Union

NEW YORK, May 17—Sharp protests were made by the Transport Workers Union here against denial of free speech on the air by radio companies which have flatly refused to sell time to the union for a presentation of its case in the current dispute with the Board of Transportation and Mayor LaGuardia over contracts on the city subways.

The TWU protest, made to the Natl. Association of Broadcasters, charged that "radio stations in this area have denied the Transport Workers Union opportunity to present to the public facts and issues concerning collective bargaining rights of transit labor on city owned subways."

This denial was "allegedly based on Natl. Association of Broadcasters rules," the union said, in urging the NAB to ask for fair play to the union from member stations. The union pointed out that one station, WAAT in Jersey City, had agreed to sell time but had abruptly cancelled the contract after receiving payment in advance.

CONTRACTS INVOLVED

The TWU campaign is aimed at retention of collective bargaining contracts already won on the city owned systems. These contracts were taken over by the city when the subways went into its ownership, but Mayor LaGuardia and the Board of Transportation are now attempting to cancel them on the ground that the 32,000 workers involved are now "civil servants."

The union has been taking its case to the public through distribution of millions of leaflets to subway riders, through open air mass meetings, etc. The national CIO is backing the union in its fight to preserve collective bargaining, and President Philip Murray will address a mass rally at Madison Square Garden, Wednesday, May 21.

Offer Crew For Supply Ship to Eire

New York, May 17—CIO seamen will man ships carrying relief to blockaded Ireland, it was announced by National Maritime Union President Joseph Curran here. The NMU offer was made in a wire from Curran to Robert Brennan, minister of Eire to the U. S.

"It has been brought to our attention that a ship is now available to carry foodstuffs, medical supplies and other material urgently needed by the people of Ireland," Curran wired.

"These supplies, we are told, have been withheld up to now through pressure and we are reluctant to believe that various governments would exert pressure against relief of innocent suffering people of Ireland simply because of the desire of these people to remain at peace.

"The NMU is glad to hear that such a ship is now available for the humanitarian purpose of carrying these sorely needed supplies to the Irish people. May we point out that the NMU has competent American seamen to sail this ship to Ireland."

APPROVE PACT

Brackenridge, Pa., May 17—Approval of the 1941 contract with the Allegheny-Ludlum Steel Co., was voted by SWOC locals in plants here and in Leechburg.

Labor and the Law:

SWOC Conquers Bethlehem Steel

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

After four and a half years the Bethlehem Steel Company has finally had to yield and actually obey the law of the land. In 1937, as a result of the unfair labor practices conducted by this company, the SWOC was compelled to call a strike at the Johnstown plant of the company. As a result of strike-breaking activities carried on by the company the local public officials, the strike proved unsuccessful at that time.

The SWOC filed charges with the National Labor Relations Board against the Bethlehem Steel Company. These charges were directed against the company's illegal company-union, the intimidation and coercion practiced by the company against its employes in the exercise of their right to choose their own union, the illegal payments by the company to local public officials for the purpose of thwarting union activity, and the hiring by the company of the Pinkerton Detective Agency to spy upon their employes.

TRIED TO STALL

Bethlehem Steel used every device to prevent a final decision in this case, but the Labor Board finally issued an order in 1939 completely substantiating the charges of the SWOC. The Labor Board ordered the Bethlehem Steel Company to disestablish all of its company unions, to refrain from any further interference with the rights of its employes to organize into a union of their own choice, and branded as unfair labor practices the illegal payments of money made by the company to the local officials in the Johnstown strike and the hiring of the Pinkerton Detective Agency to spy upon their employes.

After two years of wrangling before the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals, the court the other day rendered a decision completely supporting and upholding the order of the National Labor Relations Board. The father of all company unions is now illegal and ready for burial.

WON ELECTION

The election held this week at the Lackawanna plant of Bethlehem Steel came about only as a result of the strike which the SWOC had been compelled to call because of the refusal of the company in any way to adjust grievances or to negotiate with the union.

The election resulted in an overwhelming victory on the part of the SWOC. This union will now sweep through the other plants of the company and be in a position to compel the corporation to deal with it as the collective bargaining representative of all the employes of the Bethlehem Steel Company.

STOCKHOLDER SUES

The employes of the Bethlehem Steel Company are not the only ones that are dissatisfied with its policy because of the flagrant violations of the law being practiced by the corporation. A stockholder of the Bethlehem Steel Company recently filed suit against the directors and officers of the company alledging that as a result of the illegal activities which these men had the company engage in, the company expended unlawfully over $1,000,000.

The stockholder in the suit requested the officers and directors to reimburse the company for all such monies. The unlawful expenditures set forth were those made in connection with the maintenance of the illegal company union, the hiring of Pinkerton Detective Spy Agency, and the monies paid over to the local public officials in connection with the Johnstown strike.

If this suit is successful, and there appears to be ample legal justification for it, it would probably be one of the most effective methods for enforcing the National Labor Relations Act. A victory in this suit for the stockholder would mean that where a corporation engages in unfair labor practices under the Wagner Labor Act, then the officials and directors are to be personally responsible for any money loss that the corporation may suffer.

A personal liability of this kind imposed upon the directors and officers of the corporation which violates the National Labor Relations Act will make many corporation officials reluctant to flout this national law which they now do with ease because of the absence of personal liability.

On Capitol Hill:

Where The Bills Stand

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

Congress is continuing to give much attention to legislation which concerns greatly the welfare of labor:

Anti - Strike Legislation: The House Judiciary Committee reopened hearings on anti-labor legislation last week. In the Senate, the Commitee on Education and Labor has been holding hearings on the Ball anti-strike bill, S. 683. A number of labor representatives are scheduled to testify against this bill within the next few days. No definite date has been set in the House for action on the Vinson anti-strike bill, but conversations with Congressmen indicate that it will be brought out for action whenever its supporters think chances for passing it are most favorable.

Congressmen who come from labor districts are beginning to voice more firm opposition to anti-strike legislation. This is unquestionably due to messages they are receiving from unions and union members back home.

Taxation: The House Ways and Means Committee is holding hearings on the tax legislation for 1941-42. Eccles, Chief of the Federal Reserve Bank, and Leon Henderson, Defense Price Control Chief, supported CIO President Murray's recommendations that higher taxes should be levied on excess profits, and less taxes on consumer items.

Wire-Tapping: Hobbs has asked for a special rule on the wire-tapping bill in order to bring it up for early action in the House. There is danger that the Rules Committee will give the bill a special rule this week. Organized labor continues its 100 per cent opposition to this legislation.

Anti-Labor Investigation: It appears that anti-labor attorney Edmund Toland, hired by Chairman Vinson of the Naval Affairs Committee, has sent out the labor union questionnaire without authorization from Committee members. Labor organizations in Washington are watching closely to see whether the Naval Affairs Committee will allow Toland to turn the investigation of defense contracts into an anti-labor inquisition.

Housing Legislation: Congress is giving favorable action to defense housing bills. One bill was enacted which provides $150,000,000 for defense housing. Two other bills were passed by the House—one provides $150,000,000 for community facilities in defense areas, another provides $150,000,000 for general housing and $15,000,000 for trailer camps.

CIO WINS FORD POLL, SWAMPS AFL BY 5-2

FORD WORKERS CHEER CIO: Here's part of the crowd—one of the largest in Detroit labor history—that turned out in Cadillac Square in the motor capital to hear CIO leaders predict victory in the Ford Labor Board election. The meeting, held on Monday, May 19, was addressed by CIO Pres. Murray, UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas, Michael Widman, head of the Ford Organizing Drive, Allan S. Haywood, and others.

Auto Union Sweeps Rouge, Lincoln Voters

DETROIT, May 24—The CIO United Automobile Workers this week swept to an overwhelming victory in National Labor Relations Board elections at the huge Ford River Rouge and Lincoln plants.

The victories, climax of a four-year campaign to organize the auto industry's last remaining open shop stronghold, will be followed up by demands for contract negotiations.

At the River Rouge plant, the UAW-CIO received 51,866 votes, compared to only 20,364 votes for the AFL and a mere 1,958 for neither.

At the Lincoln factory, the CIO, with 2,008 votes, had a near 4-1 lead over the AFL.

CIO Drive Wins 10% Boost At Arms Plant

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 24—Faced by a CIO organizing drive, the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. granted a 10 per cent blanket wage increase to its 10,000 employes. The increases will total approximately $1,500,000 more annually to these workers.

Representatives of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, the union which won the increases at the Colt plant, have been distributing leaflets at the Winchester plants.

This is the second increase granted by Winchester during the past month. The firm announced a 5 per cent raise for workers on the two night shifts on April 19.

The recent raise was announced when machine shop workers put down their tools.

Steel Union Wins 2-1 In Jersey

TRENTON, N. J., May 24.—The John A. Roebling's Sons workers broke into the news again this week. This time it was with the announcement of a Labor Board election victory by a two to one vote.

The election was held in the Roebling plants at Trenton and nearby Roebling, a company-owned town. The vote was 2,912 for the SWOC and 1,477 against.

Last month the 5,000 Roebling workers returned to work after a 12-day strike which ended in victory for the SWOC. The strike started in the wire rope shop after workers in this department were ordered to operate six machines instead of four.

Under a settlement plan, which was arrived at with the intervention of the National Defense Mediation Board, the workers returned to work on four machines pending a time study to be made by an OPM official. The company also agreed to bargain with the SWOC committee on grievances.

Oil Workers Win Check-off

Falling Rock, W. Va., May 24—The Oil Workers International Union has just completed negotiations for a dues cseck-off at the Falling Rock Cannell Coal Co.

VOTING AT FORD: Scene during the big NLRB election at the Ford River Rouge Plant in Detroit on May 21, where workers chose the CIO by a 5—2 ratio over the AFL. Some 70,000 workers cast ballots.

Clothing Pact Signed; 135,000 Get Wage Boosts

NEW YORK, May 24—An $18,000,000 annual wage increase for 135,000 clothing workers in all parts of the country went into effect May 18 as a result of a collective agreement reached between the Clothing Manufacturers' Association of the U. S. and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

The pay rise, union officials stated, will result from 10 to 13 per cent wage increases agreed upon in negotiations recently concluded.

The union, according to Jacob S. Potofsky, general secretary-treasurer, and Frank Rosenblum, executive vice-president, is continuing to press for a fund to be set up into which employers will pay 3 per cent of their weekly pay roll to provide health and life insurance for all employes covered by the contracts with the Amalgamated.

The $18,000,000 wage rise was reached, through amicable negotiations, without a threat of strike or lockout, the union officials pointed out.

SHIRT WORKERS

The Amalgamated was also able to announce yesterday that the Shirt Institute has ratified an agreement with the union providing for a 10 per cent wage increase for 15,000 shirt workers, as well as a vacation fund. The agreement is effective June 2.

CIO Scores in New England; Takes Rubber Poll, 3-1

Hartford, Conn., May 24—The CIO is winning Labor Board elections in this district by huge landslides, Joseph Mayo, assistant New England director, announced.

A major victory was scored by the United Rubber Workers in an election at the U. S. Rubber Co., Naugatuck, Conn., where the CIO union received 3,198 votes compared to the 626 for no union. In the maintenance department, the AFL won by 100 votes as against 36 votes cast for the URW.

Election victories were also scored at the National Manufacturing Co., Plainfield, Conn., where the SWOC received 175 votes as against 12 votes for no union. The SWOC also recorded 266 votes out of 385 ballots cast in an election at the Collins Axe Co., Collinsville, Conn.

Furniture Workers List Big Gains, New Pacts

CHICAGO, May 24—Substantial organizing progress in the past three years has established the CIO United Furniture Workers as "the dominant organization in the industry," Pres. Morris Muster reported to the second constitutional convention of the union. The convention was attended by about 100 delegates from all important furniture centers.

In the past few months alone more than 10,000 have been organized and brought under newly-signed contracts, he stated. The union has expanded particularly in Indiana, where membership has almost doubled, in New England, on the West Coast, in Michigan, in the South, and in Chicago where Secretary Jack Hochstadt has been directing an organizing drive. Fifty-five new local unions have been chartered since the union's first convention in Rockford, Ill.

DEMOCRACY'S DEFENSE

"We are daily proving that the proper protection and extension of democracy is best had when the worker gets a better living wage," Muster declared. "It is clear that expanded social and labor legislation, absolute guarantees of civil liberties and general recognition of the right of collective bargaining are the strongest defense within and without from the enemies of democracy."

A high spot of the convention was the report made by striking workers from Austell, Ga., where a strike has been in progress since April 4 against the Austell Cabinet Company. H. W. Denton of the Atlanta Industrial Union Council told of the difficulties of organizing in the South, of the low wages there, Ku Klux Klan anti-union activities and other troubles.

He related, however, that in the Austell strike, a precedent-setting injunction had been obtained against the "sheriff, officers, mayor, stockholders, management and leading citizens of Austell" against coercion and intimidation of the strikers and against abritrary arrests. The convention voted full support to the Austell strike and made organizing in the South one of the major tasks confronting the union.

CIO representatives addressing the convention included Ernest B. Pugh, regional director for Chicago, who congratulated the union on its fine work in that area; Len De Caux, CIO publicity director and editor of The CIO NEWS, and Powers Hapgood.

De Caux reported on the million membership gain of the CIO since last November and declared that present attempts to turn "public opinion" against the CIO were largely motivated, as in 1937, by employer attempts to counteract this rapid progress.

CHICAGO, May 24—Concrete evidence of the swing from AFL to CIO cheered delegates attending the United Furniture Workers convention, when a Labor Board election at the Chicago Upholstery Supply Company resulted in a vote of 186 for the CIO Furniture Workers to 37 for the AFL Upholsterers Union.

The shop was formerly organized in the Upholsterers Union, but the workers revolted against low wages and AFL do-nothing policies and went on strike. Delegates from the UFW convention took part in the picketing.

"The manufacture of public opinion for private profit is a big business, like any other," De Caux said, warning that one of the purposes of this campaign was to prepare the atmosphere for putting over legislation like the Vinson and Ball bills to cripple the unions.

Ben Meyers, the union's attorney in Chicago, also addressed the convention. He spoke of "the Chicago formula," which is now being used against labor, describing it as a combination of AFL leadership, corrupt politicians and big business. "It is my feeling," he said, "that unless the labor unions continue to exist in this country there is no hope for democracy."

Greetings were received from President Philip Murray, John L. Lewis and other CIO leaders, congratulating the union on its substantial progress.

The convention adopted a resolution against convoys, "which would mean war," and declaring that "our security, our institutions and our American way of life are threatened by these same forces that are advocating our country's entrance into the war, and attempting to strip labor of its hard earned gains, freedom, civil liberties and democratic rights."

Other resolutions adopted denounced the Ball bill, the Hobbs concentration camp bill, the Vinson bill and other anti-strike legislation; called for independent political action by labor; and apposed discrimination in employment against Negroes and foreign-born workers.

Glass Union Certified

WASHINGTON, May 24—The CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers was named sole collective bargaining agent for the employes at the Johnston Glass Co., Hartford City, Ind., by the National Labor Relations Board last week.

The Labor Board certification covers production, maintenance and clerical employes directly connected with production. The Board's action follows an election which the CIO union won over the AFL by a 57 to 46 vote.

Ship Union Signs Up Consolidated

New York, May 25—A union shop agreement covering 800 workers of the Consolidated Shipbuilding Corp. has been signed by Local 38, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers. Union spokesmen hailed the contract as the best in the industry.

Terms call for pay increases ranging as high as 40 cents an hour, vacations with pay and other benefits.

The company agrees to recognize the union as sole collective bargaining agency and to conduct its plant as a union shop, applying to the union for all new employes in the categories covered by the agreement. If the union fails to supply such help within eight hours, the company can employ outsiders, but all new employes must become members of the union within 30 days.

Seniority rights are established in the contract with the provision that seniority lists are to be maintained upon to the inspection of shop stewards and the grievance committee.

An eight-hour day, 40-hour week is called for, with time and a half pay for hours worked above this limit, and with double pay for work in excess of 16 hours daily, and for work on Sunday and eight holidays. Dirty work is also to be paid for at the rate of time and a half.

D. C. Service Union Certified

Washington, May 24—The National Labor Relations Board this week named the CIO United Building Service Workers Union as the sole collective bergaining agency for maintenance workers in the 19 apartment houses in Washington, D. C., operated by Bliss Properties, Park Road Company, Inc., Arthur L. Bliss and James McD. Shea.

The certification followed a secret ballot election in which 55 votes were cast for the union and five against.

CIO Union Sees Victory In Priorities Fight

WASHINGTON, May 24—Modification of aluminum priorities in the die casting industry will be suggested to OPM Associate Director Sidney Hillman by Dr. Isador Lubin, economic advisor to Hillman, it was announced following a conference between officials of OPM, die casting manufacturers and the National Association of Die Casting Workers.

Both the union and company officials argued that unless priorities were modified, or unless the industry was given a more favorable opportunity to participate in defense orders, that most die casting plants would have to go out of business.

13% FOR DEFENSE

It was pointed out that the extent of the industry's defense orders did not amount to more than 13 per cent of its entire work, the remainder is work on consumers' goods.

Officials of OPM stated that a special engineer was named to investigate to what extent the die casting industry can be utilized for producing parts for the aircraft industry.

Unless defense orders can be obtained soon, union and company spokesmen said, some 17,000 workers in the industry will be out of jobs. A great number of other workers in industries dependent on die castings would also feel the effects of unemployment, it was pointed out.

ASKS QUICK AID

Edward T, Cheyfitz, executive secretary of the NADCW, urged quick action in getting priorities modifications and defense orders.

He suggested that in the meantime the industry should be granted an exemption from full priorities rulings for a period of 30 to 60 days so that the industry can adjust itself to the new changes which will take place with the transfer from consumer production to defense production.

AFL Transit Local Swings To CIO

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 24—An AFL local of street car and bus men employed by the Columbus & Southern Ohio Electric Co., this week switched its affiliation to the CIO.

The change took place at a special meeting of the group, which has become Local 208 of the CIO Transport Workers Union. A. L. Calhoun of Akron, TWU international representative, who was called here by the local, said the CIO would launch "an intensive organization campaign among each wage and hour worker employed by the company."

All but one of the officers of the former AFL local were re-elected after the union joined the CIO.

The union became dissatisfied with the AFL's assistance—or lack of it—during negotiations with the street railway company over a new agreement. The old contract expired on April 25.

Truckers Get Wage Increase

New Orleans, May 24—Wage increases amounting to $250,000 for the next 24-month period were gained by the Transport Workers Union in a renewed contract with the New Orleans Trucking association.

The new pact provides for a general 5-cent boost for the first 10 months to be followed by another 5-cent raise for the duration of the contract. The increases establish a record wage standard for truck drivers, chauffeurs and helpers in this district.

The truckers' association is comprised of 13 local companies and the pact was signed by representatives of each company.

Rail Unions To Seek Big Pay Boosts

CHICAGO, May 24 (FP)—A 30 per cent increase in all basic pay rates of 350,000 railroad workers will be asked by the "Big Five" railroad brotherhoods on June 10. Announcement of the demand was made May 19 following a three-day conference attended by 600 representatives of the brotherhoods.

The brotherhoods will also demand 2-week vacations, expenses for workers away from home, and limitations on the length of trains, said Pres. D. B. Robertson of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen (unaffiliated).

"The railroad business is good; it's getting better, and will keep on that way for the next two or three years, at least," Robertson said. "The country can't spend millions of dollars and not expect to have workers benefit from the prosperity."

Other unions represented at the conference were the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors (all unaffiliated) and the AFL Switchmen's Union.

Two Construction Pacts Signed

New Kensington, Pa., May 24—The United Construction Workers Organizing Committee announced that it signed union shop pacts with two firms here during the past fortnight.

The pacts were signed with the McFetridge Bros., brick plant, and A. Deitch, scrap metal dealers. The contracts called for 10-cent wage increases at McFetridge's and boosts from 7 to 10 cents at Dietch's. Some 40 workers are employed at McFetridge's and 30 at Dietch's.

The pacts also included time and a half for overtime, 40-hour week and the check-off.

CIO Sweeps Ford Election; Swamps AFL By 5-2 Margin

SINGS FOR WORKERS: Paul Robeson, world-famed Negro baritone, sang a number of workers' songs at the giant mass meeting in Cadillac Square, Detroit, as part of the pre-election campaign at the Ford Motor Co. Listening to Robeson are (left to right) Richard Leonard, United Automobile Workers regional director; UAW Pres. R. . Thomas, CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Michael Widman, Jr., director of the Ford Organizing Committee.

DETROIT, May 24—The CIO today had won sole collective bargaining rights for more than 80,000 employes of the Ford Motor Co.

In the second largest election in National Labor Relations Board history, the United Automobile Workers gained a better than 2—1 majority over the votes cast for both an AFL federal local and for no union.

The final results:

RIVER ROUGE PLANT

UAW-CIO	51,866
AFL	20,364
Neither	1,958
Challenged	3,492
Void and Blank	143

LINCOLN PLANT

UAW-CIO	2,008
AFL	587
Challenged	181
Neither	146
Void and Blank	5

In a separate unit election held among patternmakers at the River Rouge plant, the UAW led the AFL Patternmakers League by almost 2—1, but because of the large number of challenged votes, the result is still in doubt. The count in the small election was:

UAW-CIO	161
AFL	90
Neither	8
Challenged	143

WILL SEEK PACT

UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas and Michael Widman, Jr., director of the Ford Organizing Committee, announced immediately after the election results were made public that the union would immediately seek negotiations with the Ford Motor Co. looking towards a contract.

The UAW has already asked for NLRB elections at certain other Ford plants in Michigan, with a long-range plan in view of seeking elections in Ford assembly plants throughout the entire country.

CLIMAX OF DRIVE

The election victory came as a victorious climax to a four-year campaign to organize the Ford Rouge plant, largest industrial unit in the world. Despite vigorous attacks by Ford thugs enlisted in the service squads, the union survived.

The present organizational drive, sponsored jointly by the UAW and the CIO, with each contributing $50,000 was started last autumn. Widman, who is CIO Asst. Director of Organization, was placed in charge of the campaign, which met a ready response from the thousands of Ford employes.

FIRST FORD STRIKE

Early in April the union conducted the first strike in Ford history, shuting down the Rouge plant completely—a feat which many believed impossible.

Part of the agreement which ended the 10-day strike was a promise by the NLRB to rush the election as soon as possible.

AFL CLAIMS EXPLODE

The workers' votes buried the ridiculous claims put forth by the AFL in recent months that it represented a majority of the Ford employes and that the April walkout was the action of a small minority.

It was believed that high bigwigs of the federation had made a deal with the Ford management to try to oust the CIO. At any rate, Pres. Green announced several months ago that the AFL was rapidly lining up the Ford workers and would seek a contract very soon.

Shortly afterwards, members of the service squad and supervisory foremen were distributing AFL membership cards throughout the plant.

UAW Pres. Thomas said the union will ask Ford for a 10-cent-on-hour increase and a large number of other improvements. His statement follows:

The UAW president characterized the outcome as "the end of an era in American industry," and added:

"It means the defeat of the type of uncompromising anti-unionism represented by Henry Ford. Fordism has been repudiated by the men who know it best, by the Ford workers.

"The UAW-CIO is ready to draw the curtain on the past. We hope the Ford Company will do likewise. We are anxious to erase all bitterness and to substitute for it genu-

Miners Will Not Yield, Lewis Says

NEW YORK, May 24—Southern coal operators whose stalling tactics have held up completion of the United Mine Workers' contract were bluntly told by John L. Lewis that the UMWA intends to abide by the contract already signed with the Appalachian Joint Conference and will not yield on the question differential or other points in it.

"It will not come to pass," Lewis said, referring to the Southern operators demand for a lower wage scale. "The Mediation Board cannot in equity or good conscience ask 70 per cent of the bituminous coal industry of this country to make a special scale to suit a special group of gentlemen who have a grievance.

"The agreement has been made. The rules of the industry have been promulgated. The United Mine Workers of America has given its word to the Appalachian Joint Conference that they accept this contract and that this is the contract, and if I understand the United Mine Workers of America it will not recant the pledged word it has given."

UP TO BOARD

The dispute was referred to the Mediation Board after continued stalling by the Southern operators, led by companies in certain parts of West Virginia, Virginia and Kentucky, brought an earlier warning by Lewis that work in the Appalachian area would cease unless they signed.

Lewis's warning came last week after the Southern operators had dragged negotiations along for more than a month without making any progress. Southern miners have been working under a temporary arrangement by which all changes in the final agreement will be made retroactive to the time work was resumed.

Lewis pointed out that the Southern operators "owe money to the United Mine Workers," declaring: "We are going to present them a bill when they get to Washington again before their Mediation Board, and we are going to demand payment of that account. We expect them to pay. We are going to encourage them to pay."

Coal prices have already been hiked 35 cents a ton and more by the Southern operators, Lewis revealed, pointing out that the rise "covers every possible element of cost in this program."

In addition, the Southern operators continue to chisel on workers' wages through inflated prices in the company stores—known to the miners as "pluck me" stores, he said.

"Perhaps they are making a profit out of this condition which they are continuing," he said. "The Mine Workers do not propose to let that profit long continue on that basis.

CIO Signs Chicago Cannery

CHICAGO, May 24—Wage increases ranging from $2 to $4 were gained for employes of the Libby, McNeil & Libby Co. under the terms of a new contract signed with the CIO United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America.

Donald Henderson, international president, hailed the new pact as the latest addition to the number of canning plants now operating under union conditions.

Henderson announced that the new contract grants full plant-wide seniority for all but a few of the newer employes, one to three weeks' vacation with pay, time and one-half for overtime and double time on Sundays. He said that the contract compares favorably "with those we have in force in other companies."

Other provisions included in the pact are: An efficient grievance machinery, assurance of a minimum 32-hour week, the right to post union notices, the observance of holidays and a bonus of two weeks' pay for workers inducted into selective service.

The Libby plant is located in nearby Blue Island and employs from 250 to 700 workers.

Anthracite Miners Win Pay Raise in New Pact

NEW YORK, May 24—Renewal of the contract between the coal operators and the United Mine Workers brought pay increases of 7.5 per cent, with an increase to 10 per cent in October, vacation payments of $20 a year, and other benefits to 100,000 anthracite coal miners.

Negotiations had been going on for several weeks, and were brought to an end with the renewal of the pact after a one-day shutdown by the miners.

Following the renewal, which runs for two years and includes retroactive benefits to April 1, the Mine Workers policy committee headed by President John L. Lewis, described it as a record that "should be a source of great satisfaction and pleasure to all of our members."

"We are very happy to make this splendid report to our members of achievement and progress which is entitled to receive general approval and should be the source of great satisfaction and pleasure to all of our members affected, including their families, the anthracite communities, the state and the nation," the committee said.

Ford Workers' Fight Is Battle of America

DETROIT, May 19—"This is the battle of America—to organize the unorganized millions," CIO President Philip Murray told a cheering crowd of more than 50,000 who filled Cadillac Square at a Ford election rally.

Predicting the smashing victory for the CIO United Automobile Workers which later brought the world's biggest industrial plant into the CIO fold, Murray declared:

"The Ford empire down through the years has believed itself to be mightier than the American people.

"That great captain of industry, Henry Ford, has stood aloof, has defied America and has defied his workers.

"But Ford is now confronted with the inevitable, the organization of his employes into the UAW-CIO.

"After five years of travail, discrimination and anti-union persecution, the Ford workers today are free men and women.

"The Ford empire will crumble and out of its ruins will rise the power and dignity of that mighty force known as the UAW-CIO."

Relating the growth of the CIO from 800,000 to five million members, Murray declared: "From coast to coast, there is today greater enthusiasm to join the CIO than at any time in history."

The demonstration was marked by a huge parade of Ford workers who marched into the square to the cheers of the thousands already assembled there. Paul Robeson, the great Negro singer, who appeared as repreesntative of the National Negro Congress, thrilled the crowd as his voice boomed out in the "Ballad for Americans," "Joe Hill" and other songs.

Murray emphasized that the CIO organizes Negro and white alike

A RECORD CATCH

The Ford Workers Are Coming

"The Ford workers are coming." That was the cry that arose from thousands of throats in Cadillac Square, Detroit, at the great pre-election rally. It carried with it a world of meaning and brought hurricanes of applause.

The huge square was half filled when the meeting began, and some felt disappointed that there was not a bigger crowd. But when the cry was heard, "The Ford workers are coming," the people on the platform stood up on chairs and tables, and there, at the far end of the square for as far as the eyes could see, came a sea of moving banners, with wave upon wave of marching men and women.

The Ford workers filled up the square as they poured into it in a seemingly endless procession. They brought with their numbers and enthusiasm complete assurance to everyone present that the Ford workers would vote CIO.

The inspiring victory of the CIO United Automobile Workers in the Ford election will have the same kind of impact on every union man and woman in the United States, as the cry "The Ford workers are coming" had on that crowd in Cadillac Square.

The name Henry Ford has for decades been synonymous all over the world with modern American mass-production methods. But it has also been synonymous with non-unionism and industrial autocracy.

Many other great corporations have been organized by the CIO. But the Ford company, it was said, would hold out to the very end against union organization and industrial democracy.

But now the biggest industrial plant in the world, employing more than 80,000 workers, the Ford Rouge plant, has been organized by the CIO. Its employes have declared their independence by voting for a union as modern, efficient and up-and-coming as their own industry.

"The Ford workers are coming." A great army of reinforcements is joining the millions already in the CIO. And everywhere in American industry it will bring new heart, new courage, new enthusiasm and new assurance of victory to the onward-marching hosts of labor.

Back Up The Mine Workers

The action of the Southern coal operators in resorting to expensive advertisements in many papers, which dodge or misrepresent the real issues and concentrate on personal attacks on John L. Lewis, reveals an attitude of desperation.

These operators, or rather the northern financial interests which use them for a front, are resisting the completion of one of the most constructive and beneficial agreements ever achieved through collective bargaining in any industry.

In an attempt to preserve for themselves an unlimited right to profiteer, they have raised coal prices to the consumer and are trying to steal back from the miners the wage increases already accorded, through extortionate prices at their company stores—at the same time as they refuse to sign an agreement equalizing northern and southern wage rates.

And now since they have failed to prove their case not only with the miners but also with a majority of the country's operators, they have the gall to attempt to buy public support for their anti-social profiteering through abusive and lying advertising.

The United Mine Workers of America is fighting the battle of all American labor, in both north and south, in its struggle to level up southern wages. Its success will also aid every union whose members suffer from the competition of exploited and unorganized southern labor.

One good suggestion there is in these ads, when they ask readers to write to their Congressmen and Senators and other government officials. Write to them by all means, and tell them that American labor and all fair-minded Americans are 100% behind the United Mine Workers and expect the government and Congress to aid in bringing the Southern operators into line.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

DURING the big Ford election rally in Detroit's Cadillac Square, much hilarity was caused in the crowd by the appearance of an airplane above, pulling a sign reading "Vote A. F. of L."

"The poor old AFL is always up in the air," remarked Philip Murray, who was speaking at the time. "I shouldn't be surprised if Bill Green doesn't bail out and parachute down, like Rudolf Hess, in abject surrender."

There was something indecent about the antics of the AFL in the Ford election. It spent money lavishly in an attempt to appear modern. But the rouge on its wrinkled lips and sunken cheeks, the painted claws on its palsied hands, and the high-heeled shoes on its tottering feet only emphasized its decrepitude.

And every time it tried to kick up its heels, you could hear its bones creak.

Detroit is a city of the most modern mass-production industry. Its workers have to be young to stand the pace. They are lusty and vigorous, and irreverent of ancient frauds.

The CIO is built to their model and geared to their tempo. It is modern, streamlined, democratic and militant; it has met every test by producing results.

The horse-and-buggy methods of the AFL, its craft divisions based on an earlier age, and its swivel-chair leadership never had any appeal to the auto workers.

The AFL entered the Ford picture as a company union. All the organizing work was done by the CIO. The AFL came in at the last moment with company support, with foremen distributing its cards, and with the usual red-baiting propaganda of company unions. It received no more votes than almost any company union might have polled among workers never before reached by the message of real unionism.

The magnificent victory of the CIO in the Ford election is therefore not so much the triumph of one of two competing labor organizations as it is a victory for genuine unionism over open shoppery and company unionism.

In Detroit it establishes the overwhelming supremacy of the CIO. It stirs new hope among the rank and file of the AFL there that through the CIO they too may free themselves from racketeering leaders and craft divisions.

Throughout the country, when coupled with CIO successes in the steel and other industries, it establishes the fact that no anti-union stronghold is so strong that it can resist its workers desire to organize—and that the CIO is the only movement through which the millions still unorganized can achieve their union emancipation.

The next time anyone tries to tell you that "public opinion is turning against the CIO," ask him if the 53,000 Ford workers who voted CIO are not part of the public.

Ask him about public opinion in Lackawanna, N. Y., where the whole community cheered the three-to-one election victory of the CIO in the Bethlehem plant—or opinion in the countless other industrial communities throughout the country where millions are turning to the CIO to better their conditions and defend their democratic rights.

If the atmosphere was electric with enthusiasm in the huge pre-election rally in Detroit, there was equal enthusiasm and determination at another kind of demonstration which President Murray also addressed in New York during the same week.

A packed gathering in Madison Square Garden creates an atmosphere of its own. Twenty thousand people are brought close together in such a way that ripples of applause spread from one part of the hall to another in growing waves, until the whole sea of humanity reverberates in unison.

The Garden was jammed to the rafters, with not a seat vacant and with thousands unable to obtain admission, when Murray rose to pledge the support of the whole CIO to the Transport Workers Union in its fight to preserve the threatened right of collective bargaining on the city-owned subway.

Murray made the right of this great CIO union to exist a national issue, when he demanded to know of Mayor LaGuardia, in his capacity as newly appointed national director of civilian defense, "What is your attitude going to be on this great fundamental national issue of collective bargaining?"

A national issue of growing importance it is, too. For, as Murray pointed out, "slowly and inexorably the government is assuming many of the functions which have been those of private industry." If this process is to be accompanied by union-smashing and denial of collective bargaining, as threatens in New York, what will become of American labor's basic democratic rights?

U. S. Witness Lied, Bridges Counsel Show

San Francisco, May 24—Depositions introduced into the government hearing against Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, revealed that a government witness lied against the CIO West Coast leader, according to defense officials here.

The depositions were given by Maurice Cannalonga, marine fireman who "disappeared" after repudiating false testimony that he had previously given against Bridges.

Cannalonga's original testimony, which the FBI bolstered with "statements", was seen in its true light as a deposition from the missing man was read into the court record. The deposition was confirmed by Roscoe Graycraft, Portland longshoremen's official, who witnessed its taking.

THREATENED BY FBI

Graycraft told the court that he talked to Cannalonga after he first appeared as a witness, and that the fireman admitted hat he lied on the stand. Cannalonga stated in the presence of Graycraft and Richard Gladstein, defense attorney, that when he denied to FBI men that he knew Bridges was a communist, one of them implied that they would send him to the "pen" for 20 years on an alleged Mann Act charge.

Another witness, President Henry Schmidt of Local 1-10, ILWU, gave the lie to statements made by Nat Honig, who testified that he had been in 16 "top fractions" meetings of the Communist party with Bridges and Schmidt during 1934.

Schmidt said that he never saw Honig before. He also denier that he had ever attended Communist meetings.

Testimony as to Bridge's straightforward leadership of West Coast Unions was introduced earlier during the week by Dean Wayne L. Morse, West Coast longshore arbitor, and Sam Kagel, assistant director of the Pacific Coast Labor Bureau.

All CIO To Aid N. Y. Transit Workers—Murray

By C. W. FOWLER

NEW YORK, May 22—More than 22,000 New York workers, with thousands turned away at the gates, jammed Madison Square Garden here last night to hear President Philip Murray pledge the aid of the entire CIO to the Transport Workers Union in its fight to maintain collective bargaining and to improve wages and job conditions on the city-owned rapid transit lines.

"I speak as President of the CIO and as the official representative of $5,000,000 organized workers affiliated with this great movement, and I say to you that it shall be the purpose of the national CIO to fight legitimately and constructively on every front, no matter where it may be, for the preservation of our God-given collective bargaining rights," he said.

"It is our judgment . . . that the Transport Workers should be given the undivided support of all organized workers throughout the country, particularly CIO, and each of our units, President Quill, will lend you every possible support in that direction."

6,000 PARADE

The mass meeting, described as the largest union rally ever held in the Garden, was preceded by a parade of more than 6,000 of the 32,000 TWU members in the city. Wearing white service caps with TWU-CIO stamped on them, and led by bands of Irish pipers, the parading workers marched into the meeting to cheer President Murray, Michael Quill, head of the TWU, and other CIO leaders.

"We are taking our case to labor tonight," Quill told his audience, "because we are underpaid, because our standard of living as city workers is low, because the cost of living is going up, because children must get food, clothes and education, because we have right and justice on our side, because we want to crush company unionism, because we are human beings—because of all this, the Transport Workers Union will score another final victory in the coming weeks."

Referring to Mayor LaGuardia's contention that civil service laws would not allow collective bargaining on municipally owned lines, President Murray pointed to numerous other cities where such a point had never been even raised, citing such cities as Seattle, San Francisco, Detroit and Toronto, Canada, as examples.

All of New York's anti-labor forces "are united behind the leadership of Mayor LaGuardia," Joseph Curran, president of the NMU and head of the N. Y. CIO Council, said. "I want to tell Mr. LaGuardia that all the organized workers of New York are united in this fight behind the leadership of Philip Murray and Mike Quill."

Allan S. Haywood, national organization director of CIO, brought greetings from the Ford workers in Detroit and pledges of support from organized CIO workers throughout the country. "I hope Mayor LaGuardia will recognize the signs of the times and realize that once the CIO is in the hearts of men and women, that no city ordinance, no judge's decree, can take CIO away from them."

John Santo, secretary-treasurer of the TWU, reminded his audience—and the Mayor—that the constitution of the state of New York, the Wagner Act, and other social laws guaranteeing workers' rights made no exception for transport workers, no matter who employs them.

Mrs. Mollie Grogan, head of the TWU Ladies Auxiliary, pledged that Union women would fight side by side with their husbands and brothers in the struggle for union contracts.

Priest Hails Strike Rights

PHILADELPHIA, May 24—Labor's right to strike, "even in our national emergency," was stoutly defended by a Catholic priest—Dr. Anthony L. Ostheimer, of the faculty of the Roman Catholic School for Boys—at a meeting commemorating the 50th anniversary of the famous labor encyclical by Pope Leo XIII.

The priest said it "would be a trenmendous mistake to take away the right to strike, even in our national emergency." While observing that in some cases strikes are holding up defense work, he called this fact "only half of the story."

"What of the delays caused by the refusal of certain plants to accept government orders, except at their own will and on their terms?" he asked.

CIO Leaders Fight 'Cooling Off' Bill

WASHINGTON, May 24—Labor's united opposition to enforced "cooling-off" periods designed to restrict the right to strike was expressed by leaders of three major CIO unions in testimony on the Ball bill (S 683) before the Senate Labor Committee here this week. The Ball bill, Senate companion to the anti-labor Vinson bill (HR 4139) calls for severe punishment of workers who strike dur-

The attack on the Ball bill was led by Clinton S. Golden, eastern Regional Director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, who told the committee bluntly: "It is impossible to legislate strikes out of existence and remain a free country," adding: "The only way to enforce strike prohibitions and restrictions in an industrial country is to man industry with slaves."

Golden's opposition to the anti-strike bill was followed by testimony of Sherman H. Dalrymple, president of the United Rubber Workers and a vice-president of the CIO, and by Julius Emspak, secretary-treasurer of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America.

Dalrymple pointed to the rapid decline in the number of man-days lost through strikes in the rubber industry as evidence that organization and collective bargaining was the best way of securing continuous production, declaring: "It is our belief that labor disputes would be reduced far below the present level if all industrialists accepted collective bargaining and tried to adjust their disputes in an orderly procedure provided for in collective bargaining agreements."

ENFORCE ACT

Emspak, calling for defeat of the bill and all similar measures, told the committee that enforcement of the Wagner Act and denial of contracts to law violating corporations would do much more to reduce strikes than restrictive legislation could possibly accomplish.

This bill and silimar proposals, if enacted, he said, would simply permit employers to "cripple the union, so as to make self-protective action by the union impossible, even at the end of the waiting period."

Sec. Carey Blasts Cut For WPA

Washington, May 24—CIO Secretary James B. Carey, chairman of the unemployment committee, declared today he was "profoundly shocked" by President Roosevelt's request for an $866,000,000 WPA appropriation for the next fiscal year.

Carey said the amount is between "one and a half and two billion dollars short of what is really needed." He asked the House Appropriations Committee to permit a representative of the CIO to express the views of that organization on the WPA oppropriation.

TEXT OF STATEMENT

Full text of Carey's statement:

"We are profoundly shocked by the size of the appropriation suggested by the President for WPA next year. It is so inadequate that it seems impossible that the President was fully acquainted with the facts when he approved this budget proposal.

"The figure of 886 million dollars for the next fiscal year is between 1½ and 2 billion dollars short of what is really needed. This terrible reduction of WPA to an average of less than a million workers next year runs exactly counter to the facts set forth in the President's own message. These facts justify rather the proposal by President Murray of the CIO, calling for 2½ billion dollars.

7 MILLION JOBLESS

"The national defense program will not wipe out unemployment in the next year or within the foreseeable future. That it will is an argument used only by the same persons who have always fought decent provision for the unemployed. Those who know the facts about unemployment know that it will not fall below 6 or 7 million within this year.

"Our nation is calling for the effort of every American to help in the national defense. It would be cruel mockery to serve up to the unemployed in the name of this effort the loss of their meager WPA jobs.

OFFSETS IMPROVEMENTS

"The proposals in the President's message to wipe out the vicious 18-months lay-off provisions, to end the costly and useless investigations of need and to end the inhuman prohibition of jobs for aliens are excellent and would considerably improve the program. Such improvements, however, must be implemented by adequate appropriations or they mean nothing."

City Council Hits Rent Hike

Arnold, Pa., May 24—The city council here has adopted a resolution against rising costs of living and rent increases. Three CIO members are councilmen here.

WARNING!

THE VINSON BILL (HR 4139) HAS GOT THE GREEN LIGHT FOR AN EARLY VOTE IN CONGRESS. IT CAN BE BROUGHT UP ON THE FLOOR AT ANY TIME THIS WEEK, OR NEXT.

If passed, the Vinson bill will:

1. Abolish the right to strike by enforced cooling-off periods, compulsory mediation.
2. Freeze wages and conditions by outlawing the union shop and blessing the open shop.
3. Put an open season on union members by allowing employers to fire at will on suspicion of "subversive activities."
4. Block normal union actions by outlawing so-called "coercive methods" of unions.

Write, wire your Congressman Today!

Tell him to speak and vote against HR 4139, the Vinson anti-strike, anti-union bill.

If you've told him before, TELL HIM AGAIN!

Don't let Congress cool off your wages! DEFEAT THE VINSON BILL!

N.Y. Transport Contract Fight Seen Important For All Labor

ine, cooperative collective bargaining.

"We shall immediately seek negotiations for a contract to include a flat 10 cents an hour wage increase for all Ford workers, adequate union recognition, a system of seniority to govern layoffs and rehiring, vacations with pay and all the other elements of a constructive labor agreement."

This statement was made by Michael F. Widman Jr., director of the CIO Ford organizing committee:

"The Ford workers have scored a magnificent victory for democracy in America. The most bitter and most powerful anti-union employer in America has been brought to terms by his employes.

"Within a few days, practically all of the Ford workers who voted for the AFL or for no union will be CIO members now that this overwhelming vote has shown that the UAW-CIO is indisputably the choice of the vast majority.

"The representatives of the Ford workers who go in to negotiate with the Ford management will carry a mandate from this election to win a union contract which will include job protection through seniority, wages comparable to those paid in other organized automobile plants and general improvements in working conditions long overdue in the Ford plant.

"The UAW-CIO vote in this democratic secret election will be the most powerful single weapon in the hands of the negotiators."

HAYWOOD COMMENTS

Commented CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood:

"The overwhelming victory by the CIO in the election at the Ford Motor Co. is one more demonstration of the fact that American workers choose the CIO form of organization against all others when given a chance to vote in a secret ballot election.

"The smashing defeat of the AFL, inflicted by the Ford workers despite efforts of the company to aid the AFL's attempt at splitting the workers, is one more repudiation of William Green and his anti-CIO, anti-industrial union conspiracies.

"The members of the CIO and all workers and friends of American labor join in congratulating the Ford workers on their tremendous victory. A new chapter in the history of American labor relations has opened. It remains only for the Ford Company to write a fitting sequel by signing a collective bargaining contract with the UAW-CIO."

with equal rights and without any discrimination as to color, race, nationality or religious belief.

EQUAL RIGHTS

"The CIO does not enter into political denunciations of minority groups," he said. "It is working for the emancipation of all the workers."

He reported that the CIO has won in the last few months alone wage increases approximating half a billion dollars annually for American workers.

He belittled the futile attempts of AFL leaders to create confusion in the election, describing them as "a swivel-chair leadership that represents nobody, that never has represented any one and never will."

President R. J. Thomas of the UAW told the crowd that Harry Bennett of the Ford Company had himself predicted that the CIO would win by 60 per cent, but he himself predicted a far greater majority.

He also said that Bennett had told him, after he had protested the assertion that the AFL had anything to do with Ford wage increases, that "the workers know who got those increases."

Thomas gave detailed figures to show how the CIO had won the wage increases recently put into effect and predicted that the Ford workers would get as much in wage increases as the General Motors workers, "even with the recently won 10 cents on top."

IMPROVE CONDITIONS

Other speakers who addressed the demonstration included UAW Secretary George Addes; Michael J. Widman, director of the Ford organizing drive; Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization; city and state CIO leaders, Tracy Doll and August Scholle; R. T. Leonard, who acted as chairman; and Mrs. Fay Stevenson, national chairman of UAW Women's Auxiliaries.

Widman declared that as a result of CIO organizing activities, "conditions at Ford's are already 100 per cent better than they were six months ago—and we haven't started yet."

He urged the UAW members to go to the rank and file of the AFL in Detroit, which is already moving toward the CIO, and say to them "let's make this city 100 per cent CIO."

Wire Union Fights Job Loss Threat

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24—Officials of Postal Telegraph, Western Union and three government agencies joined together last week in an "all out" campaign for merger in the communications industry which would place in jeopardy the jobs of some 17,000 telegraph workers. Recommendations made before a sub-committee of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, which has been conducting hearings here since last Monday, offered no more than lip service to protection of the interests of labor and the public.

Meanwhile, 50 delegates representing locals of the American Communications Association throughout the country filled the hearing room daily, devoting all of their spare time to visiting the Senators and Congressmen from their home states, bringing to their attention the union's strong stand in opposition to uncontrolled and unregulated merger.

Theh ACA delegates met in preparation for the Senate Committee hearings Sunday, May 18, and mapped plans for a nation-wide campaign. A brief outlining the union's position on the merger question was approved by the conference and will be presented before the Senate Committee early this week by Joseph P. Selly, president of ACA.

James Lawrence Fly, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, was lead-off witness at the hearing, reading to the committee from an 89-page document augmented by some 50 charts and tables. Fly nodded in the general direction of labor, but avoided any recommendation for specific guarantees for labor. Spokesmen for the Army, Navy and the Reconstruction Finance Committee all okayed the merger plan and likewise avoided mention of safeguards for either labor or the public.

Edwin S. Chinlund, president of Postal Telegraph, and Roy B. White, head of Western Union, took the stand and stated publicly for the first time their demand for legislation which would permit consolidations in the industry. Their testimony corroborated the ACA's repeated charges that the two wire outfits have long been planning a merger behind the scenes. Both spokesmen for industry projected plans which, if consummated, would mean the elimination of thousands of jobs in the industry.

Vital Principles At Stake, Murray Warns

NEW YORK, May 24.—Following are excerpts from the speech of CIO Pres. Phillip Murray at a mass meeting sponsored by the Transport Workers Union, whose efforts to negotiate a new contract on city-owned subways are being opposed by Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia.

I am here to defend the 32,000 men and women who work on the transit lines of New York City. They are the ones who suffer when the union is vilified. They are the ones who will be hurt if this transit labor problem is not solved in the only way possible—through collective bargaining.

That is the issue In this dispute, the only real issue. I know that there have been efforts on the part of some to becloud that issue. Nevertheless, collective bargaining—and that alone—is the issue: Shall the 32,000 employes on the city's transit lines continue to have the right to bargain collectively with the City of New York?

There is, today, only one manner in which workers can bargain with their employer in thei reffort to improve their wages, hours and working conditions. That is through a labor union. This is not my opinion only, nor that of students of labor history. It was the opinion of Chief Justice Hughes, speaking for the majority of the Supreme Court. On April 12, 1937, Mr. Hughes said: "Long ago we stated the reasons for labor organizations. We said that they were organized out of the necessities of the situation, that a single employe was helpless in dealing with an employer. That union was essential to give to laborers opportunity to deal on an equality with their employer."

DEMOCRATIC WAY

The employes on the city's transit lines have chosen the union they want to represent them, in the democratic way — through secret elections. By overwhelming votes the workers have chosen the Transport Workers Union in every election held.

The contracts which the union had with the private companies were taken over by the city upon unification a year ago. These contracts expire on June 30 of this year. For two months now officers of the union have been endeavoring to persuade Mayor LaGuardia and the Commissioners of the Board of Transportation to meet with them around the conference table—in the American way—to arrange for continuance of these contracts. The union is not asking for anything new. It seeks simply to continue the contractual arrangements which it has had for four years.

One single argument is advanced as the reason why the transit workers should not have collective bargaining: civil service. Because the men in the city-owned transit lines are now on civil service, we are told that they don't need collective bargaining.

NO SUBSTITUTE

That argument is entirely fallacious. Civil service has not been, annd is not now, a substitute for collective bargaining. Organized labor has always been the strongest defender of civil service. We have fought to have civil service laws enacted and then strengthened. But civil service is designed merely to provide a channel for the hiring of the best qualified workers for government employment. It formulates the manner in which promotions shall be made—again to protect the worker from the machinations of politicians.

The civil service laws do not even scratch the surface of the complicated subject of labor relations. They deal only with the manner in which employes may be hired, promoted, demoted, discharged, or laid off. As to wages, hours and working conditions, they say absolutely nothing. Yet these are the matters with which workers are primarily and most vitally concerned.

NATIONAL STRUGGLE

We of the CIO cannot help but view this situation wits apprehension and alarm. We see in this struggle, local though it may seem, a struggle with larger implications—a struggle which may soon be extended to the national scene.

An important precedent will be established in this fight between the transit employes and the City of New York.

It must be apparent to everyone by now that slowly and inexorably the government is assuming many of the functions which have been those of private industry. Whether we like it or whether we don't, it is happening.

This process is here. And now is the time that a definite labor policy must be established for such agencies taken over by the government.

What should that policy be? Shall it be one of cooperation and consultation between government and the representatives of the unionized employes, as has hitherto prevailed? Or shall a precedent be set whereby civil service employes are denied the rights granted to all other workers? Are organized workers to be unorganized merely because they work for the government—a government which has sanctioned our efforts to organize the unorganized?

That must not happen.

We of organized labor who have fought for civil service, we do not now want to see it altered into a weapon to be used against labor.

THREAT TO THE NATION

Yes, that is the threat, not only to the transit employes of New York City, but to workers throughout our nation. If one employer can use the phrase "civil service" to enforce an open shop, then other employers will leap at the idea. It would be an evil day for labor and for the country as a whole should that come to pass. Civil service is too fine, too splendid ever to be subverted in this manner.

The way to decide this question is at the conference table, with representatives of the Transport Workers Union on one side and the Mayor and the commissioners of the Board of Transportation on the other side.

I understand, as you understand, what collective bargaining means. Collective bargaining in its substance, in its very essence, means bread, butter, carpets on the floor, pictures on the wall, music in the home, culture, annd education.

Collective bargaining, wherever it is enjoyed, means that deep-rooted thing which you and I call economic freedom, the right to be free, the right to enjoy the kind of freedom that God in His infinite wisdom said all of the peoples should enjoy, equality of bargaining power so that the individual may be properly protected through the influences and might and main of his own organization.

FINAL ATTITUDE

For a period of weeks and after having several conversations with the Mayor of this great city about this matter, I am still in a state of wonderment as to what the final attitude of the Mayor is going to be with relations to the Transport Workers' rights to enjoy the blessings of collective bargaining in the great City of New York.

The City of New York, so far as I am aware, is the only municipality anywhere in the United States of America where the right of the workers to enjoy the protective influences of collective bargaining is really being contested by a city administration.

FORD-BETHLEHEM TAKEN

As had been predicted last week, victory at the Bethlehem Steel plant at Lackawanna, N. Y., is a fact. The Labor Board poll resulted in a landslide for the SWOC. And last Thursday, contrary to the predictions of William Green, a smashing election victory was scored at the Ford River Rouge and Lincoln plants by the CIO United Automobile Workers Union!

This is final and complete proof that the workers of this country in the mass production defense industries know that the CIO stands as the best guarantee for security and the building up of sound industrial relations.

OPPORTUNITY FOR FORD

If Ford will now proceed on and enter into collective bargaining in good faith, and sign a contract comparable with existing agreements in the auto industry, he has a great opportunity to contribute to the cause of National Defense.

The Ford victory was won in the face of collaboration between Green and representatives of the Ford Company, and in the face of irresponsible attacks by reactionary Congressmen, such as Congressman Hoffman of Michigan. The results at Ford should be the answer to all enemies of the CIO that the workers want the CIO to represent them in their labor relations with management.

It is proof again that the CIO has a contribution to make to the defense of this nation, namely; establishment of democratic relations in our industries so that the workers of this country will defend democracy, knowing that they enjoy its benefits.

GREEN REPUDIATED

Our readers will remember that Green predicted an overwhelming victory for the AFL and wired the Governor of Michigan during the recent Ford strike urging him against bringing about a settlement of that strike . . . just as he did during the General Motors strike in 1937.

This overwhelming vote for the CIO is a repudiation of Green's company union tactics and his attempt to force upon the workers a Ford setup.

The Bethlehem and Ford victories will inspire every officer and organizer and member of the CIO to go out and work untiringly for our movement . . . and will be the spearhead in the CIO drive for 10 million members.

All those who participated in these two major drives are to be complimented for their splendid work. Victories are being won daily by CIO affiliates . . . and we can expect more victories from now on. The green region. A munitions plant with 2,700 workers was taken over by the Reports of CIO victories in Natl. Labor Relations Board elections still come pouring into the headquarters of our Organization Department. They indicate that the workers in the mass production industries are becoming more convinced every day that only through CIO can they fulfill their needs for higher wages and better working conditions. Here are some of the latest reports of CIO successes:

CONNECTICUT:

Joseph Mayo, sub-regional director, lists three NLRB election victories. At the National Manufacturing Co. in Plainfield, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee got 175 votes to only 12 against. The SWOC has gained a contract with the closed shop.

The SWOC scored another win at Collinsville, getting 266 votes among employes of the Collins Axe Co., to only 119 opposed.

One of the largest CIO victories in Connecticut history took place at the U. S. Rubber Co. in Naugatuck, where the United Rubber Workers of America piled up a 5-1 margin. The URWA, which deserves high praise for its success, polled 3,198 votes among the production workers, to 626 against. In a small vote among the maintenance employes—a craft union carved out of the big plant—the AFL was able to squeeze out the CIO union.

IOWA:

Out in what most people think of as the "farm belt," the CIO is going to town, just as in more highly industrialized sections. Regional Director Ben Henry tells us that workers at the Campbell Heating Co. plant in Des Moines have joined the SWOC, winning 10% wage increases, the closed shop and the check off.

KANSAS:

Wage increases running to 10% have been signed by a number of CIO affiliates with firms in Kansas City, and the SWOC has organized the Carswell Manufacturing Co., we're told by Regional Director Neil Beam. Keep up the good work!

Steel Union Wins Canadian Poll, 3—1

HAMILTON, Ont., May 24—In what is believed to have been the largest collective bargaining election conducted by the Dominion Department of Labor, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee won a three-to-one endorsement in the National Steel Car plant here last week.

The historic victory of the SWOC, which made a huge dent in the open-shop armour of Hamilton, was achieved despite printed attacks on the union inside the plant just prior to the vote. A total of 1,750 workers voted for SWOC and 542 against.

The vote was held after a brief strike which resulted in the federal government placing a controller in charge of the plant. The controller put into effect a recommendation of a conciliation board that the local union president be reinstated prior to the election.

Since the original application for the conciliation board only covered four departments, C. H. Millard, executive director of the SWOC in Canada, withdrew the union request that wages and hours be considered. Wages and hours could not be limited to four departments, he declared.

REFUSED TO BARGAIN

Millard said an effort had been made to negotiate with the company since the vote was taken, but that Controller Brunning refused. The controller said he would be bound by any decision of the board but in his dual position as representative of the crown and manager of the company he did not feel free to negotiate.

Labor and Defense Is Forum Subject

Philadelphia, May 24 — Labor's role in defense of civil liberties will be discussed at a meeting of the Committee for People's Rights Monday, May 26, at 8:30 p. m., in the Town Hall here.

Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union, will be the feature speaker.

Pres. Quill and others will speak on what role American labor should play in defending American civil liberties and the Bill of Rights. The speakers will also discuss how the American worker can make certain that democracy will be protected in our nation.

McNutt Tells Confab:

Low Income Keeps 45,000,000 On Poor Diet

By WALTER PETERS

WASHINGTON, May 24—At least 45,000,000 persons today have inadequate diets primarily because their incomes are so low they cannot afford to buy sufficient quantities of dairy products and other vitamin-rich foods necessary for healthy bodies.

That was the statement made this week by Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, who is also Coordinator of Health, Welfare and Related Defense Activities.

McNutt's statement preceded the National Nutrition Conference for Defense which has been called in Washington by President Roosevelt for May 26, 27 and 28.

"Three-fourths of the non-farm families of the United States are now getting along on diets considered poor or only fair," McNutt pointed out.

"During the depression years of the 1930's we became accustomed to having 20 to 25 million persons on relief and we know that even today there are still 15 million persons dependent on public assistance for all or part of their means of subsistance."

MILLIONS IN GROUP

The Federal Security Administrator said that there are 30 million persons in the low-income group who are economically little, if any, better off than those who are depending on aid from social agencies.

"How can we expect to step-up production of airplanes, munitions and ships, if we do not step-up the health and general fitness of the workers who make production possible?" McNutt asked.

"Rising employment and larger wages resulting from the defense program will not be sufficient to have any pronounced effect on widespread undernourishment in this country either this year or next," McNutt asserted. He suggested that one of the most important questions to be asked at the forthcoming National Nutrition Conference "will be how are we going to bridge the gap quickly between low incomes and nutritionally adequate diets."

At the same time, Dr. Hazel K. Stiebling, of the Bureau of Home Economics, pointed out that "nearly half the non-farm families in the country—the ones making up our great middle class—have diets that are only 'fair' because they do not include necessary protective foods."

NEED 'PROTECTIVE' FOODS

Dr. Stiebling said that if the average consumption of such protective foods as eggs, butter, wholegrain cereals and flours, leafy vegetables and citrus foods was increased to the necessary level the consumption increases would add up to approximately as follows:

"Milk, 20 per cent; butter, 15 per cent; eggs, 35 per cent; tomatoes and citrus foods, 70 per cent; and green and yellow vegetables, 100 per cent."

One of the proposals to be considered by the conference will be the adoption of a national food stamp plan applicable to all families receiving incomes of less than $1,000 annually.

Government officials believe that such a plan would cost approximately $500,000,000 and would benefit some 20 to 22 million persons in the low-income group as well as the farmers whose produce would be purchased.

Union Ask Probe Of American Potash

DENVER, Colo., May 25—Investigation of the possibility that Nazi German control of the American Potash & Chemical Corp. may be responsible for the company's stubborn refusal to settle a strike which has stopped production for two months was asked this week by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

In telegrams sent to William Knudsen and Sidney Hillman, co-directors of the Office of Production Management, and to Sen. Harry S. Truman, head of a committee investigating the progress of defense production, Reid Robinson, national president of the unuion, cited an admission by the company, largest potash and borax producer in the nation, that the majority of its shares are held by "Dutch interests".

Seizure of the Netherlands by Hitler makes that an admission of Nazi control, the union charged.

SIX-YEAR FIGHT

The American Potash & Chemical p alit, nnthe heart of the Mojave desert, near Death Valley, was shut down by a strike two months ago after negotiations for a contract broke down. The local has been fightipng for recognition and a contract since 1935. Early this year it won a Labor Board election by an overwhelming majority.

"Stung by remarks of Senator Nye on the Senate floor recently," Robinson's wire to Knudsen and Hillman said, "American Potash & Chemical Corp. officials admitted in the Congressional Record of May 16, 1941, that the majority of the company's shares are owned by Dutch interests and the remainder by British.

"With Nazis dominating The Netherlands, this is a shocking disclosure: that joint Nazi-British corporate interests control the American Potash & Chemical, which still refuses to meet demands of American workers on strike for two months.

"If ,as your office maintains, national defense production is being adversely affected by this strie, your office may well consider whether this strange foreign control does not explain the continued stoppage of production."

Although the dispute was certified to the National Defense Mediation Board over protests of the union, which contended that defense production was not involved, the union agreed to acctpt the proposed settlement formula of the Mediation Board panel, but the company rejected the proposal.

FOREIGN FINANCES

American Potash's mysterious foreign financial connections were brought into the open in a speech on the floor of the Senate by Sen. Gerald P. Nye of North Daota, who demanded kan investigation of the corporation. The company attempted to answer his charge.

In a letter to Senator Nye, President Robinson declared that the company's assertion that "it is essentially an American enterprise, operated by Americans" was an attempt to bury the factual admission that "the majority of the shares" are owned "by the Dutch", while the rest is still "retained by British interests".

"Is it not an amazing and sensational revelation that there should be in this country a corporation under joint Nazi-British control which has for years ignored our federal laws and which still today refuses peacefully and in an American way to deal justly with its American workers?" Robinson wrote.

Rubber Union Serves Demand For Goodyear National Pact

By ROBERT CRUDEN

AKRON, Ohio, May 24—The URWA-CIO drive for a national contract in the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., lone holdout in the rubber industry, was under way today following presentation to Pres. E. J. Thomas of the company of a union demand for "an agreement covering wages, hours, working conditions and other conditions of employment in the various plants" of Goodyear.

The letter was sent by Pres. S. H. Dalrymple of the rubber union following a unanimous vote of the Goodyear National Conference, representing workers in seven Goodyear plants, instructing such action.

The conference gave a mandate to Dalrymple and Robert J. Davidson, director of the CIO-URWA Goodyear Organizing Compaign, to carry through negotiations with the company until an agreement is reached. A representative negotiating committee from workers in the affected plants will be sent up to participate in the negotiations.

LIST DEMANDS

Points to be incorporated in the proposed pact were mapped out by the delegates at the two-day meeting. They provide for a general hourly increase of 10 cents an hour, improved paid vacations, uniform seniority and grievance procedure and other concessions. Special attention is to be given the Goodyear plant in St. Mary's, Ohio, where wages range from 30 cents to 40 cents an hour.

SUPPORT OF CIO

Following a stirring speech by CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood, in which he urged the delegates to stand firm for a national contract and pledged full assistance from the CIO in obtaining it, the delegates adopted a public statement of policy pledging themselves and their unions to "complete cooperation in action to achieve the objectives set forth at the conference".

The statement pointed out that Goodyear's hostility to labor has now reached the point where it constitutes a threat "to the successful consummation of the defense program insofar as Goodyear is concerned". (Goodyear has more defense contracts than any other rubber company, despite its well-known antagonism to labor.)

"In our judgment, only the signing of a national agreement will stabilize labor relations in Goodyear plants and so eliminate the danger of work stoppages," said the delegates' statement.

WOULD BRING PEACE

"Our judgment on this point is vindicated by the experience of several other industries which have settled grave disputes in an orderly manner through the medium of national agreements with CIO unions. These industries have found that such agreements pave the way for harmonious, efficient and cooperative relationships between management and labor. There is no good reason why Goodyear cannot sign a national agreement with the United Rubber Workers of America, CIO."

The delegates also voted to intensify the current organizing drive during negotiations on the contract. "Since the company won't recognize the law of the land, perhaps it will recognize the organized strength of the workers," said one delegate.

The conference, called by Pres. S. H. Dalrymple and Director Davidson, was the first in the history of the rubber union. More than 18 delegates attended the sessions. Plants represented, in addition to Akron, were St. Mary's, O.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Chicago, Ill.; Jackson, Mich.; Gadsden, Ala., and Cumberland, Md.

Rubber Strike Wins Raises

Erie, N. Y., May 24—Wage increases of seven cents an hour were gained for workers at the Continental Rubber Co. by the CIO United Rubber Workers after a six-week strike.

The strike ended when an agreement was worked out between the union and company by the National Defense Mediation Board.

The company also agreed to set the minimum wage at 50 cents for new male employes and 38 cents for new women employes. A 40-cent rate is to be paid to women workers after six months of employment.

The agreement also provided for one week vacations with pay for employes of one year's standing or over.

In a recent case the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphit confirmed the right of seamen to strike, and approved the order of the National Labor Relations Board which compelled the steamship company to reinstate the seamen who had been discharged for engaging in the strike.

In this case the National Maritime Union, affiliated with the CIO, organized the seamen of the Southern Steamship Company. Following an election the National Maritime Union was certified as the collective bargaining agency for the seamen on certain of the ships of the company. The company refused to bargain with the union.

As a result the seamen aboard one of the ships which was moored at the dock in safe harbor discontinued their work. After a day of this strike the company recognized the demands of the men and initiated bargaining with union. After the steamship sailed from the port, and when it arrived at another port, the company discharged a few of the seamen who had been involved in the strike as a result of which the others went on strike along with the discharged men.

NLRB Ordered Rehiring

The Labor Board, in a proceeding which followed initiation of the filing of charges by the discharged men, held that the company had engaged in unfair labor practices as a result of which the strike had occurred. Further, the Labor Board held that the discontinuance of work by the seamen on board ship while it was safe at harbor did not constitute mutiny but was merely a strike. Sitting down on the deck, the Board stated, did not represent such serious infraction of the law as to brand the strike as a sitdown strike. For these reasons the Board ordered the company to reinstate the seamen with back pay and to bargain with the National Maritime Union as the collective bargaining agency. This order of the Board was confirmed and approved by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals.

This decision is of the utmost importance for the seamen. Only a few years ago the U. S. Maritime Commission, of which Joseph P. Kennedy was then chairman, severely condemned a strike of seamen aboard one of the ships operated by the Maritime Commission, the S. S. Algic, which was in the marbor at Montevideo, Uruguay. Because of this strike the seamen on board that ship, when the ship returned to port in the United States the men were indicted for violation of the mutiny statute.

Their conviction under this age-old statute threatened to extinguish the right of seamen to strike, placing them in a status of economic slavery.

Seamen's Rights Upheld

However, this recent opinion of the Labor Board, confirmed by the Federal Court, establishes the right of seamen as well as all other workers throughout the nation to strike. In this connection the Court said that: "Upon reason, however, we think that there is no sound basis for depriving seamen of this right (right to strike) when, as here, their vessel is moored to the dock in a safe domestic port."

The Board and the Court, in addition to confirming the right to strike, injected full protection of the exercise of this right by stating that where the seamen on board the ship sit down they are not engaging in an unlawful sitdown strike as to prevent an order of reinstatement if they are discharged. In other words, the court refused to permit the employer in this situation to offer a defense to the unlawful discharge of strikrs that the men had engaged in serious unlawful conduct. Such minor infractions of rules will not be held by the Labor Board or the courts to justify what would otherwise constitute unlawful discharges under the National Labor Relations Act.

Seamen Win War Risk Pay, Insurance

NEW YORK, May 24—All members of the Natl. Maritime Union sailing to ports outside the western hemisphere are now covered by war risk insurance and will receive extra compensation, following signing of an agreement between the shipowners and the NMU here to include voyages to the Far East. An earlier agreement covered trips to Africa and Portugal.

The agreement provides $5,000 in free life insurance, a $2.00-a-day bonus on far eastern voyages, $35 extra for each port of call in the Red Sea and a $50 bonus for passage through the Suez Canal.

Three weeks of negotiations preceded the signing of the contract.

UP Makes News, $75,000 Increase

NEW YORK, May 24—A new contract bringing wage increases of $75,000 to some 420 employes was signed this week by the United Press and the CIO American Newspaper Guild.

The pact, covering UP bureau employes in 62 cities throughout the country, followed a Guild threat to strike. Numerous Guilds had cleared the decks for action in case the walkout in nine principal bureaus had gone into effect.

The big news service, faced by the union's united stand, agreed to further bargaining and offered wage increases above those previously turned down as unsatisfactory.

Standard nation-wide salary minimum pay rates, the 5-day, 40-hour week for most employes, and severance pay ranging up to 26 weeks after 200 months of employment, were included in the agreement. Guild negotiators who worked out the final settlement were Sec.-Treas. Vic Pasche and Intl. Rep. Joe Carroll.

Tannery Settles, Then Reneges

Waukegan, Ill., May 24—Here is one strike that the nation's free press is quiet about.

Some 600 tannery workers at the Griess-Pfleger Co. here went on strike two weeks ago. The International Fur & Leather Workers Union called the strike afte ra series of federal labor conciliators attempted to get the company to arrive at a settlement on a wage demand made by the CIO union.

At one point, a federal conciliator got the company to agree to a four-cent an hour increase, union shop and vacations. The union accepted but as soon as the conciliator left the city the company backtracked and cut wages instead.

Majority at Quaker Oats Joins CIO

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., May 24—You'll probably soon be able to start your day off with a union breakfast cereal.

Ben Henry, CIO regional director here, announces that more than 500 of the 769 production workers at the Quaker Oats Co. plant here are members of the United Cereal Workers Local Industrial Union.

At a Labor Board hearing held here early this month two AFL unions sought to claim 10 sheet metal workers and 21 millwrights under their jurisdiction. It is expected that the Labor Board will soon announce an election of which the CIO is sure of winning.

SILENT STRIKE: These members of the CIO United Furniture Workers have to use sign language to conduct their strike at the Lillenfeld shop in New York—for they're deaf and dumb. At top, a discussion with finger spelling during a shop unit meeting; below, two of the strikers on the picket line. They claim the boss deducted $1 in "forced savings" out of their $12 weekly pay, forced them to do all sorts of menial jobs.

Auto Union Plans To Push Ford Drive Throughout U. S.

DETROIT, May 29—Pleased by the CIO'S tremendous Labor Board election victory at the Ford Motor Co.'s River Rouge and Lincoln plants, leaders of the United Automobile Workers today were making plans for extension of their organization drive to other Ford factories throughout the country.

The union is preparing to ask Ford to sign a contract covering the two plants affected by last week's election, where almost 80,000 workers voted in one of the largest NLRB votes in history.

Meanwhile two Labor Board hearings were revealing further anti-union activities of the Ford service squad.

The hearings are being held at Detroit, as the result of charges filed by the UAW early this year; and in Edgewater, N. J., where tales of spying and discrimination at a Ford assembly plant are being placed on the record.

NLRB Orders Elections At Harvester Plants

WASHINGTON, May 31—An order, long awaited by the CIO Farm Equipment Workers, calling for elections in six plants of the International Harvester Co. was issued by the National Labor Relations Board last week.

The elections will be held "as soon as possible within 30 days," the Board announced. Plants covered by the order are:

Production and maintenance employes at the six plants will vote on representation by the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, or by AFL federal locals, or by neither.

CRAFT UNITS SET UP

In several cases, the Board set up separate election units for small groups of patternmakers, with ballots giving a choice between the Pattern Makers League, AFL, or no union. At the West Pullman Works, the die sinkers also will vote as a separate union on whether or not they want to be represented by the Intl. Die Sinkers Conference, unaffiliated.

Frank Sliva, national director of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers, predicted "a sweeping victory for our union in the elections.

"It seems," he said, "that our program has taken on real meaning in the light of our consistent fight in the interests of the majority in the plants."

Pure Oil Co. Signs Pact

Charleston, W. Va., May 31—A contract with the Pure Oil Co. Refinery recognizing Local 327, Oil Workers International Union, as sole bargaining agency for all its employes has just been signed, John B. Easton, president of the W. Va. CIO Council announced today.

The agreement calls for vacations with pay, seniority rights and improved working conditions. The question of wages will be taken up at a later date. Representative Ben Schafer of the Oil Workers assisted the union committee in negotiating the contract.

Negotiations with three other companies are under way, Easton said, and another local is being organized.

Union Asks FCC Study Wire Firms

WASHINGTON, May 29—A plea that the Federal Communications Commission make a thorough investigation of the Postal Telegraph Co. and the Western Union Telegraph Co. was voiced to a Senate subcommittee by CIO officials this week.

Warning that ill-considered action on a plan to merge the two telegraph companies would bring about the loss of 17,000 jobs, Pres. Joseph Selly of the American Communications Association declared:

"It would ordinarily be assumed that the Commission, before making recommendations concerning the disposition of jobs of workers in the industry, would make some attempt to find out what the current picture was."

DON'T KNOW FACTS

Recalling that the FCC has had six years to study all angles of the proposition, the ACA leader accused the government agency of having failed to learn all the facts involved.

"The Commission, since its establishment, has done nothing whatever in the way of actual field investigation of the type of work performed by employes in the industry, and their wages, health and other conditions of work. It has maintained no staff with the remotest knowledge of the problems involved. In addition, the forms used by the Commission for collecting data on employes in the industry are thoroughly antiquated and inadequate."

Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, who also appeared at the hearing, conducted by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, discussed the question of job security.

THREAT TO MORALE

"The addition of 17,000 workers to the ranks of the unemployed would be a serious blow not only to their welfare, but to the morale of workers throughout the nation," he said.

Charge City Employes Get Threats

New York, May 31—The newly chartered CIO union of Sanitation Department men charged this week that the city's Sanitation Dept. was using "threats and intimidation" to force employes to pay dues to a "dishonest, illicit, racketeering company union."

In a statement submitted to Mayor LaGuardia and William F. Carey, sanitation commissioner, by Abram Flaxer, president of the State, County & Municipal Workers, the union declared that officers of this group have been "found guilty of theft or diversion of funds," and that in spite of this, the Sanitation Dept. gave "its official blessing to the organization."

"Grievous working conditions and unjust personnel practices" prevail in the department, the statement declared, including a disciplinary system "which is almost feudal in its autocratic character."

City sanitation men have received pay increases totaling $1.15 a week in the past 11 years, the statement said, "although the rise of living costs during this same period have been far in excess of that amount."

RUSTIC SETTING: It was a hot day when members of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee went on strike at the LaPorte, Ind., plant of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., so they held their mass meeting in a wooded grove on the shore of Clear Lake. The man perched in the tree is Dick Marhanka, president of the local, who charged that the company had discriminated against the local in dismissing three shop stewards. Company is the same one that provoked an 86-day strike at its West Allis, Wisc., plant earlier this year.

Textile Union Gets Pacts With Two 'Key' Mills

NEW YORK, May 29—Collective bargaining agreements with two of the largest manufacturers of sheeting were announced today by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America.

The firms are the Nashua Manufacturing Co. of Nashua, N. H., and the Utica & Mohawk Cotton Co. of Utica, N. Y.

The contract signed by the Nashua company, said to be the second or third oldest industry in the United States and now employing about 4,000 persons, is the first in its history for the New England plant. President Rieve revealed that a new contract will soon be negotiated for the firm's plant at Cordova, Ala., which has been under contract with the TWUA for several years.

WINS GAINS

The agreement sets a minimum pay rate of 37½ cents an hour and gives the two parties the right to seek general wage revisions twice a year, with the union having the right to seek general wage and work load adjustments at any time. The company has already granted the general wage increase recently negotiated by the TWUA throughout the textile industry.

Other provisions of the pact include one week's vacation with pay, prohibition of strikes or lockouts during the life of the contract, check off and recognition of union grievance committees.

UTICA CONTRACT

Meanwhile workers at the Utica & Mohawk Cotton Co. ratified an agreement worked out by the National Defense Mediation Board. The company employs about 3,000 people.

The company and the union, in the contract, recognized the advisability that all workers who are now members or who may become members of the union shall maintain their membership in good standing for the duration of the contract.

WEEK'S VACATION

Other terms include a week's vacation with pay, which the workers voted to forego in lieu of an extra week's pay in order to help make up production lost during the 7-week strike which preceded the contract; sole recognition of the union and recognition of grievance committees.

In addition to the 10% raise granted by the company during the general wage increase in the industry, an extra sum was set aside to be distributed among the lower brackets in negotiations between the company and the union.

Niagara Falls Strikers Seek Pay Boost

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., May 29—Recognition of a company union and a phony contract freezing wages for a year—in violation of an understanding with members of District 50, United Mine Workers — today had forced a strike of the 3,000 employes of the Carborundum Co. plant here.

The walkout followed a company promise not to negotiate with the fake union, called the Carborundum Employes Union, until the National Labor Relations Board could rule on District 50 charges that it was illegal under the Wagner Act.

VOTED 17-1

Following a 17-1 strike vote after the "shotgun" recognition of the company outfit, District 50 members went out on the picket lines.

Union leaders charged that Niagara Falls police assaulted pickets as they marched around the plant. Charles A. Doyle, District 50 organizer, who was later arrested and booked "without charges," sent this wire to Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York:

PROTEST TO LEHMAN

"We protest the Niagara Falls Police Department's provocation and their brutal action in denying the rights of the workers to peacefully picket. We condemn this un-American action and violation of our civil rights.

"The police not only acted as strikebreakers but did everything to provoke the workers who were on the picket lines."

The union is seeking arbitration of the discharge of a woman employe, an election to determine the collective bargaining agency and cessation of its favoritism for the company union.

STRIKE SCENE: Niagara Falls, N. Y., the honeymooners' paradise, is no picnic spot for workers at the big Carborundum Co. plant there. When the 3,000 employes, organized in District 50 of the United Mine Workers, went out on strike, cops nabbed the union leaders. Here's Jack Doyle, organizer, being pinched. He was booked "without charges."

Clothing Union Urges Locals Buy Defense Bonds

New York, May 29—The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, which has already subscribed to half a million dollars' worth of U. S. defense bonds, this week called upon all its joint boards, local unions and national representatives to aid in the purchase of additional bonds and defense stamps.

In letters to representatives of the union's 265,000 members, Secretary-Treasurer Jacob Potofsky pointed out that the ACWA's national office had purchased $50,000 worth of the bonds—the maximum permitted to any one person or organization—and that local unions had taken up the rest of the amount.

"You can help the government and help yourself by buying U. S. Defense Bonds," Potofsky's letter said. "Let us give a clear demonstration of our united, wholehearted support of the nation's defense program by our vigorous participation in this campaign."

Robinson Answers Slanders

DENVER, May 31—"Two things are obvious from the slanderous remarks made in the House by Rep. Joe Starnes of the Dies Committee," President Reid Robinson of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, declared this week.

"It is apparent that the Nazi-dominated American Potash & Chemical Corp. would like to obscure the fact that foreign owners are sabotaging defense by stalling settlement of the AP&CC strike at Trona, Calif., through using mouthpieces for a 'red' smear against honest, American trade unionists.

STOOGE FOR INTERESTS

"It is further obvious that the readiness of Joe Starnes to stooge for these foreign absentee owners is due in no small part to our union's militant fight for abolition of un-American poll tax which denies the franchise to 90 per cent of the Southern voters and makes it possible for such characters as Starnes to get into Congress."

Robinson continued:

"Starnes' charge that I am a Communist is as vicious as it is stupid and baseless, but it fits in with the consistent strikebreaking activities of the Dies Committee which prompted CIO President Philip Murray to charge in a letter to Rep. Martin Dies."

WIN STRIKE

Evansville, Ind.—A hard-fought four-week strike at the Weil Packing Co. brought 4-cents-an-hour wage increases for members of Local 130, Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee.

'Go West, Young Man' Transit Union Tells N. Y. City Officials

NEW YORK, May 31—Seattle was cited as an example of a city owning its transit lines and bargaining collectively with a union representing its civil service employes by the fifth edition of "Transit Truth," the leaflet published weekly by the Transport Workers Union, and distributed to subway riders.

The leaflet asks: "Can a city bargain collectively with its civil service employes on municipally owned transit lines?"

"Mayor LaGuardia says no, it can't happen here.

"Seattle says YES!

"And Seattle knows. It has an agreement with an AFL union on the city-owned street cars and buses.

"Mayor LaGuardia says the city cannot have anything to say about union dues.

CHECKOFF TOO

"In the agreement the city of Seattle has with the AFL union for its transit employes there is provision for the check off of dues. That is something the Transport Workers Union has never asked for from the city of New York."

"Transit Truths" features also an article on safety on the transit lines and recites the case history of one of the hundreds of grievances which the TWU has been seeking to have the Board of Transportation adjust.

Because the Board of Transportation has disregarded the contract with the Transport Workers Union, the lines are not fully manned, the article stated. The result is that the seven-day week has been brought back for many men, others are being forced to work 10 and 12 hours daily, and the vacations of many men have been postponed until after warm weather.

CITES FAILURES

The leaflet also cited "other glaring failures of the Board of Transportation in serving the people."

"Wooden cars are still in use. Automatic block signals have not been installed universally. The cars are not kept clean, due to a lack of men, creating insanitary conditions. There are not enough platform guards and station agents, especially at night."

Meanwhile, final briefs were filed by the TWA in its court suit to compel the city to live up to collective bargaining contracts here. The TWU brief was in answer to an appeal by the city for a "declaratory judgment" from the court that would give a legal flavor to its refusal to bargain.

The union indicated that it will drop its motion to deny the city such a judgment if the city will demonstrate its willingness to bargain, "as soon as and as far as the courts decide to be within their powers," enabling the main suit on the situation to be brought to trial.

Unions Giving Full Support

NEW YORK, May 31—Messages demanding that Mayor LaGuardia bargain collectively with the CIO Transport Workers Union are pouring in on him from all parts of the nation, local President Hogan announced here. Organizations in all but seven of the 48 states have shown their solidarity with the TWU by such messages, he said.

More than 5,000,000 organized workers are represented by the groups that have written or wired the mayor demanding that he live up to the contracts the city assumed when it took over the subways.

MANY AFL UNIONS

Fifteen AFL internationals are in the list, including the Intl. Ladies Garment Workers, the Teamsters, the Carpenters, and others. The full support of the entire CIO was pledged to the TWU by President Murray some time ago.

"Many expressed concern over the denial and abridgement of the rights of workers in government employ and urged the mayor not to set a precedent detrimental to labor and which would be followed in every instance where government takes over the functions of private industry," the union said.

Vinson Burned Up; 'Cool-Off' Bill In Cooler

WASHINGTON, May 31—Rep. Vinson, who comes from the poll-tax state of Georgia, has announced here that his bill to outlaw strikes through forced cooling-off periods will come up within the next few days, or he will know the reason why.

Labor protest has held the bill up in committee since it was first announced some weeks ago. Vinson's statement calling for a vote also contained a promise—in return for a quick floor vote, he has scaled it down so that only cooling-off is left.

The original bill contained three other sections, designed to freeze the open shop by banning union shop contracts, to declare an open season on union members by allowing employers to fire at will on suspicion of "subversive activities," and to cripple normal union activities by outlawing "subversive methods."

The Vinson bill now becomes the twin brother of the Ball bill in the Senate, which calls for cooling-off only. Labor leaders and rank and file of all sections of the organized labor movement have joined in denouncing cooling-off as an attempt to rob labor of its fundamental right to strike.

FORD DRIVE SPREADS TO OUTLYING PLANTS

By CARL HAESSLER
Federated Press

DETROIT, May 29 (FP)—The tremendous union victory in the Ford labor board elections May 21 was only another milepost in the drive of the United Auto Workers (CIO) to organize all the eligible workers in the Ford Motor Co.'s domain.

The huge organizing staff is being kept intact, says Director Michael F. Widman, Jr., of the UAW-CIO Ford Organizing Committee, and assignments are being made to outlying parts and assembly plants.

Formal bargaining for a standard UAW contract has not yet begun but today bargaining on grievances, including pay raises, is proceeding more merrily than before the decisive election.

NLRB HEARINGS

Labor board hearings on the anti-labor practices of the Ford Motor Co. are under way in the federal building. The frantic efforts of Counsel I. A. Capizzi of the company to prevent or delay the hearings failed after some initial successes on May 26 when Trial Examiner Horace Ruckel ordered the hearings to proceed.

An expert labor board staff of investigators headed by Heber Blankenhorn who formerly served the LaFollette senate committee on civil liberties, has assembled damning evidence against Ford with the help of the UAW-CIO and Ford servicemen who have turned state's witnesses.

AFL LOST BET

Among many amusing incidents during the count of the ballots May 22 was the laying of a bet between an AFL officer and a Ford serviceman. The AFL man said the CIO would get less than 25,000, but the serviceman knew better.

The 10c wage increase which is the first demand of the CIO from Ford will look very modest after the other auto employers get through hearing from their own organized employes.

General Motors has already given a blanket dime, Hudson gave 8c and now Chrysler, Packard and Nash are all confronted with 10c requests. The Packard demand has reached the stage of an ultimatum, with strike notice filed May 26 with the state labor board.

Ford may have to give two dimes if he lives up to his promise to pay equal or better wages than his competitors.

Steel Union Asks Polls At 6 Bethlehem Plants

PITTSBURGH, May 29—Following up its recent 3-1 Labor Board election victory at the Lackawanna, N. Y., plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corp., the Steel Workers Organizing Committee today had asked for polls in six more of the company's plants.

In the petition, which was filed with the NLRB here by SWOC General Counsel Lee Pressman, the steel union claimed a membership of 12,836 out of the 15,383 workers in the six properties.

The plants where elections are asked include the Cambria plant at Johnstown, Pa., with 12,000 workers; Pottstown, Pa., with 1,200; Rankin, Pa., with 650; Leetsville, Pa., with 700; and two plants in Los Angeles, Calif., with 833 employes.

ONE BARGAINING UNIT

All the employes in the six plants should constitute one collective bargaining unit, the SWOC petition claimed.

Bethlehem has refused to bargain with the union, SWOC asserted, although the union "represents a substantial majority of the imployes in the . . . unit, and has offered to make records available to the employer in proof of its claim."

The SWOC won the Bethlehem Lackawanna vote on May 14 by 8,223 to 2,961 against.

GM, Electrical Union Sign Pact; Wages Up 10c

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 29—Negotiations between the General Motors Corporation and the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America have resulted in a national agreement which is now before the local unions affected for ratification, James J. Matles, Director of Organization of the union, announced at the close of a week of negotiations in Detroit, Mich.

The agreement covers approximately 25,000 employes of the General Motors Electrical Division, and includes a general wage raise of 10 cents per hour, retroactive to April 28. Plants covered are two Frigidaire plants at Dayton, Ohio; Delco Products plant at Dayton; Sunlight Electrical Division plant at Warren, Ohio; Delco Battery plant at Bloomfield, N. J., and Moraine Products at Warren, Ohio. All are subdivisions of General Motors.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

In addition to the general raise of 10 cents per hour, the contract provides for group raises by negotiation at any time. Other provisions include time and one-half for work in excess of 40 hours a week; double time for holiday or Sunday work; bonus for night shift; one week's paid vacation, and full seniority protection for employes.

Workers of less than two years' service keep seniority intact for two years; those of more than two years' service keep their seniority unbroken for a period of time equivalent to their service, but not more than five years. Seniority also remains unbroken in case of leaves of absence for union duties, military service or illness.

The new national setup between GM and UE corresponds in general to the national systems governing relations between the union and General Electric and the union and Westinghouse Electric.

Thomas Raps Ball Bill Dangers

WASHINGTON, May 31—The Ball bill (S 683), providing a compulsory cooling-off period of 50 days between a strike vote and strike action, "definitely and for all practical purposes destroys labor's right to strike," R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers and a vice-president of the CIO, told the Senate Labor Committee in testimony here this week.

Such cooling-off periods will be used by employers to weaken the union, he pointed out, and will result in economic slavery for workers. The Auto Workers, Thomas said, have had enough experience with voluntary cooling off to warrant their uncompromising opposition to the proposed bill.

LABOR'S GAINS

Thomas was preceded on the stand by Arthur Meyer, chairman of the New York State Mediation Board, who was equally emphatic in condemning the Ball bill.

Drawing on the UAW's experience with Ford, General Motors and other huge corporations, Thomas pointed out that voluntary cooling off as practiced by the unions was ample to prevent any possibility of impulsive strikes.

"The UAW and the Ford workers have been cooling off for four years and we are still no nearer fair labor relations in the plants of that company," he said, citing Harry Bennett's statement: "We will bargain with them until hell freezes over, but we will give them nothing" as an example.

INDUSTRY COUNCILS

Thomas urged that the industry councils plan put forward by CIO President Philip Murray be adopted as an answer to problems of labor relations. "Industry councils, in addition to assuring maximum production for defense, will assure also through their democratic representation that labor will be given its proper voice in the determination of questions vital to its welfare and future," he said.

Mediation Board Hears Plane Plant Dispute; Strike Vote Taken

LOS ANGELES, Calif., May 29—Some 11,000 employes of the North American Aviation Corp., who voted overwhelmingly in favor of a strike to enforce contract demands, today watched Washington for development in Natl. Defense Mediation Board hearings on their case.

Negotiations for pay increases and the first union agreement in the firm's history have been under way for the past seven weeks, since the CIO United Automobile Workers won a National Labor Relations Board election victory at the plant.

Richard T. Frankensteen, UAW aircraft division head, left here for the east to head the union's representatives at the mediation board hearings. Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins certified the case to the board a few hours after the strike vote was taken.

ASKED PAY BOOST

The union has been seeking a minimum wage of 75 cents an hour and a 10% increase for all production employes, as well as seniority, vacations with pay and other working improvements. A fortnight ago the union blasted efforts of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce to interefere in the parleys.

The chamber officials had branded the demands as "ridiculous," though union leaders pointed out they were identical with demands at Ryan and Vultee, where the UAW won Labor Board election victories and went on to gain contracts.

SUPPORT FROM COUNCIL

Meanwhile the Los Angeles CIO Industrial Union Council made plans for all-out aid to the North American local in case it was forced to strike for the "richly deserved" wage gains.

"It will be the crucial struggle for the CIO in southern California and we might as well be prepared," Secretary Philip Connelly told affiliates of the council.

GM SUBSIDIARY

"This company, a subsidiary of General Motors, is part of a combine which, while reaping millions from the national defense project, pays 75c minimum wages in one section of Los Angeles, but keeps its North American employes performing equally exacting tasks down to the substandard level of 50c an hour."

The company has orders of more than two hundred million dollars from the U. S. Army and from Britain's Royal Air Force for training and fighting planes.

Cafeteria Strike In Washington

Washington, May 31—The S & W big cafeteria here which feeds thousands of Washingtonians and sightseers daily, was declared on strike this week by the CIO United Cafeteria Employes The union, which won a Labor Board election at the cafeteria on May 2, said the management had stalled on signing a contract granting pay increases and shorter working hours.

CIO Wins Poll At GM Ohio Plant

Warren, O., May 29—Workers at the Packard Electric Division of General Motors will soon come under the national agreement just reached by the company and the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, covering non-automotive units in the corporation's string of plants.

In a National Labor Relations Board election the employes voted 925 for the UE to 489 against. The plant will be the seventh covered by the pact.

Michigan CIO Holds Parley

Jackson, Mich.—(FP)—The convention of the Michigan CIO May 23 went on record against convoys for supplies to England, against involvement in war, against Roosevelt's post-election war policy, against anti-labor redbaiting, and also against the "election or appointment of any known Nazi, Fascist or Communist to any office within our organization."

August Scholle was re-elected president and Ben Probe, Detroit auto worker, was elected secretary-treasurer.

LEST WE FORGET: The time: Memorial Day, 1937. The place: Chicago, Ill., near the Republic Steel plant. The action: Chicago police brutally attack striking CIO steel workers, killing 10, injuring scores of others. Now, four years later, with Little Steel slowly bowing to the strength of CIO unionism, these martyrs to labor's cause are not forgotten.

U. S. Indicts Two AFL Leaders for Extortion

NEW YORK, May 29—Two AFL bigwigs today faced U. S. charges of extorting $550,000 from the movie industry.

The two men were George A. Browne, president of the Intl. Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and a member of the AFL's executive council; and William Bioff of Hollywood, the union's czar in the movie industry.

Bioff only recently completed a six-month jail term for an old conviction of pandering in Chicago, and faces income tax evasion charges in California.

The two men, according to the federal indictment, got the money from four big movie organizations under threat of pulling strikes, at times when employer-employe relations in the industry were running fairly smoothly.

Thus, the U. S. charges assert, it would have been necessary to stir up trouble in order to carry out the union leaders' crack down threat. But they were never forced to lay their cards on the table; instead, about $400,000 was paid over to them in 1936 in bills of $1,000, $500 and $100, according to the government.

DEFLATED

What Is Un-American?

As a follow-up to "I am an American Day," how about an "I am un-American Day," so that the other crowd can stand up and be counted?

What is it, to be un-American?

It is to deny to Americans their freedom to speak freely, to meet freely and to organize freely.

It is to break American laws by refusing to bargain collectively with the workers' freely chosen representatives.

It is to spy and snoop upon Americans, to curtail their civil liberties, and to use improper power over their right to earn a living, to intimidate them and coerce them.

It is to advocate legislation like the Vinson bill to condemn Americans to involuntary servitude by destroying the right to strike.

It is to profiteer upon the nation's needs by hogging huge profit increases while refusing to grant American workers a fair wage and a decent standard of living.

It is to lie about and slander Americans who demand their rights as Americans.

It is to stir up intolerance, division and dissension by Jew-baiting, Negro-baiting, red-baiting, alien-baiting, labor-baiting, and by turning Americans of different races, creeds and beliefs against each other.

It is to advocate inequality by cutting relief, increasing the tax burden on the poor, and permitting the rich to buy unfair privileges and exemptions.

It is all these things and a lot more that violates American ideals of liberty, justice, democracy and equality of opportunity.

If an "I am un-American Day" is proclaimed, it will give quite a string of anti-union employers, exploiters, petty tyrants, labor-baiting politicians, profiteers, propagandists and other enemies of true Americanism a chance to have their day and to stand exposed for what they really are.

The Real Test

Fortune magazine, a year ago, produced a poll purporting to show public belief that Henry Ford had done more for labor than any other figure.

Last week, Fortune produced another poll, again purporting to show that the anti-union policies of Ford and Bethlehem found high public favor.

Fortune evidently did not poll Ford and Bethlehem employes, who are in a position to have the most informed opinion on this subject. But the Labor Board did. Its poll was all-inclusive and by secret ballot, under impartial government supervision—not a big business publisher's poll of a hand-picked few.

The Bethlehem poll, at Lackawanna, showed a three-to-one majority for the CIO and collective bargaining. The Ford poll showed nearly 54,000 for the CIO and only 2,000 for Ford's non-union policies.

High Cost of Living

The cost of living is increasing rapidly, according to latest government figures, particularly in food and rents which represent the heaviest expenditures of wage-earners.

The rent increases have been greater in the homes occupied by the lower-paid than in those occupied by the more prosperous. In five cities where there is much defense production, rents increased by from 12 to nearly 22% for the cheaper homes between October, 1939, and January, 1941.

Retail food prices, as reported by the U. S. Dept. of Labor, have increased by from 8 to 10% in many cases between April, 1940, and April, 1941, the inscreases being from 8 to nearly 10% in many cases. Substantial increases are also already reported in wholesale prices for clothing, furniture and other articles, and are now filtering down to retail prices.

Two points should be noted:

(1) Price increases are not primarily due to wage increases, anti-labor propaganda to the contrary notwithstanding. The most serious upward movements of prices are in those industries and commodities where wage increases have not been a factor.

(2) The raising of money wages is necessary to prevent the cutting of real wages by increased living costs. But if unions are to perform their essential function of raising the standard of living and getting a fairer share for labor of soaring profits, wages should be raised considerably higher than present or anticipated increases in living costs.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

ONE of the latest refinements in the racket of manufacturing public opinion for private profit is quite whimsical. It consists of an attempt to prove, through so-called public opinion polls, that American labor is anti-labor.

It's all just too cute for words—if your sense of humor runs to knocking crutches from cripples, putting "help yourself" signs on blind beggars' cups, and the like.

The Gallup poll weekly advances "evidence" of public belief that labor is more to blame for stoppages than anti-union profiteering employers; that strikes are caused by Communists; that labor, not big business, has too much power; that wages should be kept down and hours lengthened; that union activity should be curbed by law; that new taxation should fall chiefly on the poor.

Now comes the Fortune magazine "survey of public opinion," with similar evidence of public demand for anti-strike legislation and compulsory arbitration; greater sympathy for anti-union employers than for union pickets; brickbats for union leaders and bouquets for the labor policies of Henry Ford and Bethlehem Steel.

So far, it would seem, the polls are trying to prove to the big business publishers which finance them that the public are suckers for their anti-labor propaganda.

It is something like a radio station trying to prove statistically to a sponsor that the radio public is crazy for his Tootsie-Wootsie Tid-Bits. If such a survey showed the public would sooner take its poison straight than with a Tootsie-Wootsie sugar-coating, it just wouldn't be made.

But no Tootsie-Wootsie poll has ever gone quite so far as to "prove" that parents love it when their children get sick from Tootsie-Wootsies; that the kids think candy prices should be raised; and that anyone who hates Tootsie-Wootsies is a communist.

It has been left for the Gallup, Fortune and other similar polls to offer their big business sponsors such super-super-service.

With all sorts of statistical mumbo-jumbo, they now purport to show that the workers themselves want to have their wages "frozen," their hours lengthened, and the possibility of improving their conditions averted through anti-labor legislation.

Perhaps the cutest one of the month was the Gallup tax poll. At a time when war profiteers are lobbying to have the poor pay for their swollen boodle through wage-cutting taxation, a poll is announced that delicately avoids the issue of putting the tax burden on wealth.

Instead, it asserts that "the public" by a big majority favors the heavy taxation of low incomes.

And then—deftest touch of all—the poll announces that even the poorest, with incomes at near-starvation levels, favor paying additional taxes equivalent to two weeks' wages.

That was such a hot number, that many profiteer lobbyists chuckled themselves into hiccoughs.

How are all these amazing results achieved? Ah, that, my friends, is a secret. Even if the publisher's statisticians told, we wouldn't understand.

The atmosphere of higher mathematics, statistical controversy and academic bluff is so rarefied that the ordinary mortal gasps for breath and is glad to escape with his life.

But we can at least think these thoughts:

(1) The method of selection of the few thousand human guinea-pigs, who are supposed to represent public opinion, undoubtedly determines poll results.

(2) The phrasing of the questions obviously determines the kind of answers that may be expected.

(3) When you're barely getting by on a low-wage job, and just want to be left alone, and when an official sort of person visits you and starts snooping into your private opinions—wouldn't your first thought be to get rid of him speedily without incriminating yourself?

When the press constantly proclaims that strikes are un-American, that labor must be curbed in the national interest, that patriotism demands sacrifices from the poorest, how many are going to lay themselves open before a snooping stranger even to such phoney charges of being unpatriotic, selfish, etc.

But be all this as it may, we make this offer: Give us the wealth, power and facilities available to the interests that manufacture public opinion—and we will soon offer similar evidence of public belief that not labor, but the domestic cockroach, is responsible for all evil.

With press and radio blaring out daily against the cockroach menace, with intimations of Congressional, FBI and other investigations of anyone who is sceptical on the cockroach question—we guarantee to find enough suckers, milquetoasts and cockroach-powder salesmen to support even the most extreme crusade against the unfortunate insect.

CELEBRATE CIO VICTORY AT FORD: Members of the United Automobile Workers cheer their history-making Labor Board election victory at the Ford River Rouge and Lincoln plants. Union is now asking Ford to negotiate a wage and hour contract, forget his old anti-union policies. Holding up left hand side of the sign is Michael S. Widman, Jr., who directed the Ford Organizing Committee campaign; at right, UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas.

Bridges Raps Prosecution Claims

SAN FRANCISCO, May 31—A denial by Harry Bridges that he had attended a "top fraction meeting" of Communists in Los Angeles during the 1934 west coast strike, together with a recital of his career as a worker and union organizer featured testimony in the first day of Bridges' appearance on the stand at the deportation hearings here.

REFUTES WINDOW PEEPER

Bridges' statement denied the testimony of a government witness named Laurence who swore that he had seen Bridges at a Communist meeting by peeping through a window. Earlier another witness, revealing Laurence's bias against Bridges, quoted him as saying: "I hate that Bridges. I hate that son-of-a——. I would lie to hang him."

Bridges also testified that he had once been a member of the IWW and of the Marine Workers Industrial Union, adding that he had left the IWW as soon as he learned of its anarchistic policies.

U. S. ALTERED CHARGE

The government charge was amended after the new hearings began to include this admission—made two years ago at the first hearings—marking the first time the U. S. has attempted to deport anyone for past membership in such an organization.

Earlier in the week the CIO Bridges aid committee, headed by Sherman H. Dalrymple, president of the Rubber Workers, and David J. MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, urged all CIO affiliates to contribute to the defense fund. They asked CIO unions to make their contributions at the rate of one cent per member.

Shrunken Bellies:

Nutrition Parley Hears 40 Million Lack Enough Food

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, May 29—Talking in terms of vitamins and green vegetables, calories and balanced diets, food experts addressing the National Nutrition Conference for Defense this week indirectly backed up CIO demands for a better distribution of the national income.

At the same time they gave the lie to those reactionary critics of labor who have tried to stall every effort of the nation's workers to improve their lot in life.

For the speakers, most of them high government officials, admitted again and again that America's health level is far too low—and that the reason is solely the inability of millions of people to buy the food they need. Their speeches echoed the assertions of John L. Lewis that if the nation is to act in its own best interests, it must do something about "52,000,000 shrunken bellies."

But, though the speakers recognized the cause of the problem, they had little to say about its solution, outside of recommendations that rising prices be checked before more millions drop into the undernourished classification.

REPORT TO FDR

On the final day of the session the delegates, taking note of the economic causes of diet deficiencies, urged improved economic status for America's low income family groups.

A report submitted to Pres. Roosevelt urged:

"Vigorous and continued attack on the fundamental problems of unemployment, insecure employment, and rates of pay inadequate to maintain an American standard of proved in many cases that underliving. It has been abundantly proved in many cases that undernourishment and ignorance are twins born of the same mother—poverty. The newer knowledge of nutrition should be a powerful stimulus to greater effort to alleviate and eventually eliminate poverty."

DANGER TO DEFENSE

That low income, with its consequent semistarvation, is endangering national defense, was pointed out by Brig. Gen. Lewis Hershey, deputy director of the Selective Service Act.

"We are physically in a condition of which nationally we should be thoroughly ashamed," he said. Noting that 400,000 out of a million potential draftees had to be rejected for physical reasons, the general declared:

"Probably one-third of these are suffering from disabilities directly or indirectly connected with nutrition."

Despite the higher standard of living in this country, Vice-Pres. Henry A. Wallace told the conference, "we find that at least three-fourths of the people in the United States do not have what can be called good diets by any reasonable standard.

"At least 40,000,000 people in the United States are suffering from very bad diets.

"When you spend only 5 cents a meal per person for food at the grocery store, it is difficult, unless you are a trained dietitian, to buy enough food value to supply the necessary energy, let alone the proper combination of minerals, proteins and vitamins."

Federal Security Administrator Paul McNutt quoted statistical reports to show how the depression left millions of people "below par in initiative and alertness." He berated Tory criticism of governmental efforts to improve the lot of the undernourished, though making no reference to the current budget figure for WPA, which would throw hundreds of thousands of jobless off the rolls.

HUNGER IN TEXAS

McNutt cited the case of a Texas county that admitted that "20 per cent of the deaths in this county in 1938 were hastened by lack of sufficient amount and balanced diets."

Another county in the home state of Martin Dies, a leading Congressional foe of the CIO and its efforts to help America's low-income groups, had a similar report to make, as quoted by McNutt: "Malnutrition has been a contributing cause in approximately 60 per cent of the deaths in this county for the past five years."

Ford Firing Policy Bared At Jersey NLRB Hearing

By JAMES PECK

NEW YORK, May 29 (FP)—Union members fired from the Edgewater, N. J. plant of the Ford Motor Co. for "poor workmanship" were complimented by plant officials upon their skill—until they joined the CIO United Automobile Workers.

This was brought out in testimonny during the fourth week of an NLRB hearing upon a complaint of unfair labor practices. Although the hearing has provided a graphic picture of the Ford espionage system from inside sources, it has been consistently boycotted by the metropolitan press.

TYPICAL STORY

Typical was the story of Louis B. Anastasia, a metal finisher fired in February, 1940.

Two weeks after Anastasia joined the UAW, he was called down the line by the foreman of the body shop, who showed him a deep dent on the cowl of one car on the belt.

Although Anastasia denied responsibility and pointed out that such a thing had never happened before, he was immediately fired. Because of his good workmanship, he had previously been promoted to a skilled metal finisher's job.

GETS WARNING

Two weeks before being fired, Anastasia had been warned by his pusher (checker), called Big Frank: "You fellows better watch out. They're after you."

Another witness, Joseph C. Chabot, had been accused by the body foreman of fitting doors badly. "It wasn't my job to fit doors," Chabot retorted. "What I was doing was welding down at the job." Cabot, who had joined the UAW a few weeks earlier, was, nevertheless, fired.

James McGuiness was eating lunch with his partner on the line when somebody doctored his partner's work to make it appear that the other man had carried out instructions, but McGuiness had not. McGuiness was immediately fired.

Frank Ciesla, a skilled electric welder, was fired after joining the UAW on the excuse that there was not enough work for him. Another man was promptly hired in his place.

FIRED AFTER 20 YEARS

Walter Hughes was dismissed after 20 years of service when some union application blanks were found near his bench. After the discovery, service men walked up and down watching constantly, Hughes said. He was then laid off and told he would be rehired when new steel arrived.

Upon applying for reinstatement, Hughes was sent to Ralph E. White, head of the service department. First White tried to prejudice Hughes against organized labor because "there is a lot of criminals in unions." When he made no headway, White concluded: "If you can show me you can stay from unions, I will give you a job." Hughes was never rehired.

CIO Proposals on New Taxation

● New taxes face every American, taxes designed to finance the national defense program. In Washington, reactionaries are trying to make the new tax bill a "soak the poor" bill, while allowing profit-making corporations and other real sources of revenue to escape their share of the burden.

● The CIO has made definite proposals for an honest tax program, and The CIO NEWS herewith presents those suggestions, as outlined by Pres. Philip Murray in a recent statement to the House Ways and Means Committee.

LABOR as represented by the Congress of Industrial Organizations believes that taxes should so be written as to best serve the public welfare. We believe that sound taxation is progressive taxation. Taxes should be based upon the ability to pay and should rest most heavily upon those incomes, private and corporate, which are not productively employed.

In the last ten years the burden of federal taxation upon the working people has grown heavier in size and proportion. It is a shocking record. In 1930, for example, approximately 68% of all federal tax income was raised by taxes on individual income, corporations, inheritance, and gifts, while about 32% came from consumption taxes, excise or sales. In 1940 the percent of taxes coming from the income, corporation and other progressive taxes fell to 44.4%, while taxes bearing primarily on consumption, that is sales and wage taxes, rose 55.6%.

The various tax proposals before the House Committee would aggravate this unsound condition.

CIO Proposals

The CIO proposes three major principles to govern a new tax program at this time:

1. Relief from income taxes for all incomes below the 1939 exemptions of $1000 and $2500, and the lifting of all excise and sales taxes from commodities that are not clearly luxury goods.
2. No additional excise or sales taxes and no extension of income taxes or surtaxes on income below 1939 exemptions of $2500 and $1000.
3. All new tax income should at this time be collected from increased taxes on high individual incomes, estates, and growing corporation profits. This includes taxes on excess profits, undivided profits, tax exempt securities and inheritances.

This is a period when everything possible must be done to strengthen the foundations of democracy. Nothing could so seriously weaken our morale than to place heavier burdens upon the common people and the working people in taxation, while the wealthy individuals and corporations continue to pile up great incomes and profits without being effectively restrained by taxation.

Don't Soak the Poor

1. Relief from present excise and income taxes for all incomes below $2500.

Senator O'Mahoney, of the Temporary National Economic Committee, has pointed out that 26% of all taxes imposed by federal, state and local governments were in 1939 paid by persons whose incomes were less than $1000 a year. A further study of the Temporary National Economic Committee showed that in 1938-39, 21.9% of the income of persons with income under $500 was paid in taxes, 18% of persons under $1000, and approximately 17% of the persons in the income class from $1000 to $3000. These figures included state and local taxes as well as federal. In federal taxes, 7.9% of income below $500 was collected, 6.6% below $1000, and an average of 6½% in the brackets between $1000 and $3000.

These figures do not take into account the Revenue Act of 1940 which was calculated to raise an additional 375 million dollars in consumers taxes, and a further 375 million dollars in personal income taxes, a substantial portion of which has come out of the low bracket tax payers, due to the lowering of exemptions.

It is well known that very little of family incomes below $2500 is saved. It takes, according to the Heller Committee of the University of California, $2200 to maintain an average worker's family at the barest level of health and decency.

TAX BURDEN: By far the heaviest proportionate share of taxes for arms is carried by workers and low-income groups, and new tax proposals now before Congress would increase this. Chart on cover of CIO's new pamphlet shows that taxes levied on $20,000 incomes leave plenty for the rich man's groceries, while taxes on wage earners eat into already meager budgets. Order pamphlet from Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. Price, 100 for $1.75, 500 for $5.75.

Every dollar of tax placed upon such incomes cuts into the standard of living of workers—a standard far too low.

These taxes in these brackets do not mean less savings or fewer luxuries. They mean less food, clothing and shelter.

A sound tax program would release these incomes from federal tax burden and let them be devoted to the health and welfare of American working people.

No Sales Taxes

2. No additional excise or sales taxes and no extension of income taxes below 1939 exemptions of $2500 and $1000.

Both the Treasury proposal for new taxes and the proposal of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation would add an enormous burden upon consumers and lower income groups.

In the case of the Treasury proposals, a more substantial portion would come from exceedingly heavy income tax rates on lower brackets. The increases in income tax, called surtax, under the Treasury proposal would increase the percent of income tax paid by the lower brackets enormously. For example:

Net income before personal exemption	Percent increase in tax under proposal
$2,300	1,200%
2,500	554
3,000	390
4,000	345
5,000	360

To Be Continued In the Next Issue

Carey Tells Congress:

Don't Cut WPA Appropriation!

WASHINGTON, May 29—Facts and figures were set forth this week to the House Appropriation Committee by CIO Secretary James B. Carey to support labor contentions that the WPA budget figure for the next fiscal year is far below the needed amount.

Carey, who heads the CIO Committee on Unemployment, charged that Pres. Roosevelt's request for an appropriation of $886,000,000 for relief "is totally inadequate to care for the large number of needy unemployed who are able and willing to work.

"It is estimated," he told the committee, "that this amount will provide WPA work for about an average of one million people. The CIO estimate of the number unemployed in this country in March is 9,071,000.

"At best, this number will be reduced only by an average of two million during the next year, leaving seven million people unemployed. At the very least, three million of these will be in need."

Excerpts from Carey's testimony follow:

Conditions Worse

With money enough to provide work for only 1,000,000 of these, the remainder are left with no alternative but to try to get on local relief rolls. In many states level of relief is becoming steadily worse.

The CIO urges that you appropriate at least enough to care for the 3,000,000 needy unemployed. This can be done with no less than $2,500,000,000.

It is beginning to appear that we are being blinded to the plight of this large segment of our population by the pressure for increased defense production. We hear that since defense employment is increasing so enormously, there will be no unemployment. Unhappily that is not the fact.

Unemployment High

In spite of the huge defense program, in spite of skyrocketing production indexes, in spite of cries of labor shortages, unemployment remains extremely high. The net increase in employment due to the national defense program has amounted to only 717,000 workers during the ten-month period from May, 1940, to March, 1941.

Paradoxically, the defense program is causing unemployment in a serious degree. The institution of priorities in basic materials such as aluminum, steel and copper is making it necessary for many plants to shut down their production because of the inability to obtain the necessary supplies. The employes in these plants will be thrown into the ranks of the unemployed.

Government economists are now estimating that these will be a shortage of between 20 and 30 million tons of steel in 1942. From now on throughout the country the effect will be that of forcing the shutdown of plants that have no defense orders, adding new people to the army of unemployed.

* * *

For example, reports have come within the last two weeks from CIO unions indicating that certain brass fabricating plants making brass for shell casings have had to drop from three shifts to one shift because supplies are insufficient. This is a defense industry. Those industries not given defense orders will almost surely have to stop production—causing more unemployment.

The announced 20 per cent cut in automobile production will either freeze or cut down employment in that industry and the extensive unemployment that still exists in the automobile centers will not be relieved. Serious unemployment will be caused in the hundreds of industries now feeding into the automobile industry, and the labor thrown out of work by this cut has no guarantee that it will receive jobs in defense industries.

* * *

President Roosevelt's own statements in his budget message point out the dire necessity for increased WPA appropriations. The President points out: "The labor force will increase, partly due to natural growth and partly due to additional employment of workers such as students who during normal times would continue to pursue an education. Also, many youth and workers on submarginal farms will obtain jobs during the present emergency."

* * *

The President goes on to say: "An additional factor militating against as great a reduction in unemployment as might appear possible is that there are many of the presently unemployed who have little chance to be absorbed by the defense effort. Certain regions of the country are not affected by defense activities, and many types of workers are not in demand."

Temporary Jobs

According to a recent survey conducted by the WPA, only 29 per cent of all workers laid off in September and October were employed at the time they were interviewed, two to four months after separation. Although 55 per cent had been employed at some time since they were cut off of WPA rolls, so many of their jobs were temporary that at the time of interview 32 per cent were completely unemployed in non-defense areas, 48 per cent after exhausting every available means of finding a job had been fortunate enough to get back on WPA, and only 20 per cent were employed.

Even in those areas having defense contracts, the situation was not much better: at the time of interview, 29 per cent were completely unemployed, 30 per cent had been reassigned to WPA and only 41 per cent were able to find employment.

* * *

The conception of total defense calls for use of these unemployed people in work of public benefit. It will be most destructive to national morale if these working people, desperately wanting and needing work, are left idle when every effort is being called for.

The CIO stands firm in its belief that it is absolutely necessary for at least $2,500,000,000 to be appropriated for the Works Progress Administration during the next fiscal year.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The effects of the recent landslide election victories at Bethlehem and Ford plants are echoing throughout the land. Workers everywhere are calling for the CIO. Every affiliated CIO union reports increased organizing activities, and influx of new members.

Elections are being won, contracts negotiated with wage increases and general improvements in working conditions. CIO is in the hearts and minds of the workers. They are talking about it in the homes, the shops and on the streets. CIO's ability to go out and do the job and do it where it was claimed it couldn't be done has won the confidence of the vast majority of workers throughout the country.

SLANDER CAMPAIGN FAILED

These results have been won in spite of the vicious and lying campaign of slander indulged in by our opponents, which indicates more than ever that workers of the nation approve of CIO.

The best answer to all critics is do a better job. The CIO is doing just that. I predict additional election victories in other Bethlehem and Ford plants in the near future, also contractual gains in other major spheres. Ford negotiations begin next week. We hope the Ford Motor Co. will approach this problem in good faith.

MANY VICTORIES

These are the major victories of the CIO. Lesser achievements—just as important, however, in bulding the CIO—are continuing to pile up. Philip Connelly reports from Los Angeles that the workers at the Baby Line Furniture Co. have upped wages from 32.5 cents to 50 cents an hour following a six-day strike. Ralph Dawson, field representative in California, adds a strike victory for the UERMW that raises wages from 55 cents to 65. From Alabama, Yelverton Cowherd reports a statewide contract between the Construction Workers and a general contractor.

Toys with a union label will soon be coming from the Holgate Toy Co. of Kane, Penna., following an election victory by the CIO Toy and Novelty Workers over the AFL, in which the AFL was snowed under by 321 to 127. The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers has won another victory at the American Zinc and Oxide Co., 107 for CIO to 24 against. The Paper, Toy and Novelty Workers won another at the Hercules Box Co. in Columbus, O., where the union rolled up 129 votes to four against.

The anniversary of the Chicago Massacre is here. Let all here and now rededicate themselves and demonstrate by deeds that these gallant souls did not die in vain.

So let us go forward with faith in our cause and bring the blessings of organization to the millions that are calling for it now.

PLEASED BY GAINS: Members of the United Mine Workers in the Pennsylvania anthracite coal region were mighty pleased by the new two-year agreement won by their negotiators, which brought with it 7½ and 10% wage increases. These men were photographed as they returned to their jobs at the Hudson Coal Co., Scranton, Pa., after a one-day stoppage.

Auxiliaries Back CIO Position On Taxes

WASHINGTON, May 29—Full support of the CIO position on taxation, as expressed recently by Pres. Philip Murray, was voiced today by the CIO's National Coordinating Committee for Women's Auxiliaries.

In a statement sent to the House Ways and Means Committee by Chairman Kathryn Lewis of the Auxiliaries, it was pointed out that "we believe with the CIO that 'taxes should be based upon the ability to pay and should rest most heavily upon these incomes, private and corporate, which are not productively employed'."

EFFECT ON HEALTH

Warning of the burdens of a tax system which would fall most heavily on the low-income families of the nation, the Auxiliary noted the fact that "the army in calling up draftees had to assume that one out of every three men would have to be rejected as physically unfit" is a dramatic illustration of the fact that the average American is already undernourished. What effect this will have upon our nation's future is assuredly unpredictable, but it cannot be other than derogatory."

Miss Lewis's statement quoted a recent article in McCall's Magazine which revealed bad health conditions among American school children, and she described the figures as a "terrible indictment" of the American nation.

"It is upon the children of the nation that we must depend to carry on American civilization and the tradition of American liberty," she added. "The United States is unquestionably the richest nation in the world, and as such, we should at least be able to insure that her children should not die of malnutrition, or should not live impaired in mind or body by the ravages of disease or hunger. . . .

HIDDEN TAXES

"If further inroads are made upon American small incomes by income taxes, by hidden taxes, and by consumers' taxes, we shall be lowering the already dangerously small incomes of the majority of our people to a point where hunger and disease will have an inevitable effect upon the human beings of the United States.

"We hope that the Congress will refrain from imposing further the burdens upon those Americans whose incomes are already too small adequately to care for their families. We ask this as American citizens, and we ask it on behalf of the future of America."

'Labor Today,' New Magazine, Makes Bow

CHICAGO, May 29—A new type labor magazine made its appearance this week, called "Labor Today." The magazine, printed in a pocket-sized form, is a readers' digest of articles of general interest to labor.

"We've looked through everything that prints anything about labor," says "Labor Today" in introducing the June issue as Volume 1, No. 1, "and we've selected, to save your time, what appeared most interesting and significant."

REPRINT ITEMS

From the CIO News, a humorous brief was picked up about saving a grand duchess the embarrassment of walking through a picket line.

Items from other CIO union publications include an article by Charles W. Ervin in "Advance," official organ of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and a short news story from Steel Labor, published by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Labor and defense, housing, cost of living, child labor and other social problems are dealt with in the 17 articles digested in the 48-page magazine.

Marines Pass CIO Picket Line, Take 'Hot' Products

NEW YORK, May 29—Nearly 1,000 members of the United Cnostructon Workers Organizing Committee employed by nine metal door and door frame manufacturing plants in New York City are on strike in a city-wide general walkout that began two weeks ago.

Grievances that caused the strike include substandard pay scales as low as 30 cents an hour in some cases, insecurity, unsafe working conditions, absence of seniority, anti-union discrimination through dismissals of union men and refusal to enter into a genuine collective bargaining agreement.

From the beginning of the strike production in the plants has been at a standstill and 24-hour picket lines are being maintained at the various shops in the Bronx, Brooklyn and Long Island. Wives and sweethearts are aiding the strikers on the picket lines.

Organization work under direction of Regional Director Leon Zwicker has been going on among these workers for some weeks and a petition for a Labor Board election was filed recently. It was then the AFL Carpenters' Union came forward to disclose it had a secret back-door agreement with the employers. Though it called for high pay scales, the agreement was never enforced, the rates were not paid and the men were told nothing about the contract!

One of the most sensational developments of the strike to date has been an invasion of one picket line by the U. S. Marines aided by city police. Escorted by two policemen, a truck manned by two Marines from the Brooklyn Navy Yard, operated by a U. S. Navy Yard employe, drove through a picket line at the Biltwell Steel Products Co., in Brooklyn, and took out two loads of finished door frames.

Affidavits signed by men on the picket line at the Biltwell plant relate that the Marines first appeared about 12:30 Friday, May 23. A police squad car manned by a sergeant and a policeman accompanied the truck. No explanation was offered the pickets except a remark by the police that "this is a government job."

COP BOUGHT LIQUOR

While the Marines waited inside, the police officer was sent out to buy a bottle of liquor. The two Marines and the police sergeant drank from the bottle while the employers and a few workmen from an adjacent plant, which is not on strike, loaded the truck. The truck returned later in the afternoon for a second load.

In a telegram of protest to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, Zwicker said:

"United Construction Workers, CIO, asks you investigate immediately breaking of our picket line by Navy truck manned by Marines at Biltwell Steel Products, Brooklyn. This employer has violated Federal law and refuses to bargain collectively with his employes."

Full support of the strike was pledged by Chairman A. D. Lewis of the UCWOC in a telegram which was wildly applauded.

Seamen Expect 500 At 3rd Convention

NEW YORK, May 31—More than 500 delegates representing some 65,000 members on deep-water, river, harbor and Great Lakes craft are expected at the third convention of the Natl. Maritime Union, scheduled for July 7 in Cleveland, it was announced here by Ferdinand Smith, NMU secretary. Joseph Curran, NMU president, will preside.

"The interest that is being aroused in this convention is almost unprecedented in the history of maritime labor," Smith said. "Seamen on the west coast as well as the east are looking forward to participation. West coast ships and west coast unions will be represented by fraternal delegates."

The call to the convention, issued earlier, urged as the main slogan: "a delegate from every ship," declaring:

"At this time, when there is a general blackout of democracy throughout the world and the civil rights are being trampled underfoot, it is with firm conviction that the National Maritime Union is preparing to demonstrate further that the democratic way not only be made to work but can be extended.

"It is this belief in democratic action which has enabled the NMU, since its inception, to throw off those who would give lip service to democracy while denying the expressed will of the entire membership. We have proven to ourselves and others that only through democratic expression can we hope to maintain and advance our interests."

Washington — A recommendation by the industry committee for the jewelry manufacturing industry to Wage-Hour Administrator Philip Fleming this week urged a 40-cent minimum wage scale.

Rap Plan To Exempt Canneries From Wage Law

WASHINGTON, May 31—The opposition of the CIO to a proposed exemption from Walsh-Healey Act provisions for fruit and vegetable canners working on Army contracts was expressed in a letter from Anthony Wayne Smith, assistant counsel of the CIO, to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson.

"The requested exemption from the overtime provisions of the act could not be granted, in view of previous rulings by the Administrator, except as part of a complete exemption from all provisions of the act," the letter said.

"The result would be a breakdown of standards and a deprivation of statutory protection in regard to both hours and general conditions of employment throughout the industry, whose employes are already underpaid and overworked and live under intolerable conditions."

NO SHORTAGE

The requested exemption cannot be defended on the ground of labor shortage, the letter continued, while there are still 9,000,000 or more unemployed.

Furniture Union Re-elects Muster, Maps Big Drive

CHICAGO, May 29—Unanimous reelection of President Morris Muster and the selection of other International Officials wound up the final session of the CIO United Furniture Workers second constitutional convention, held here last week.

Vice Presidents representing the four major regions of the country are Max Perlow, East; Joseph Persily, Midwest; Davis Spears, South and Jack Kauffman, West.

Ernest Marsh, of Los Angeles, serves as secretary-treasurer and Jack Hochstadt occupies the newly created position of Director of Organization.

Some 25 members of the General Executive Board were elected from regions and branches of the industry under the jurisdiction of the furniture workers.

In his acceptance speech, Pres. Muster stated: "The United Furniture Workers of America has now the distinction of being the acknowledged union in every section of our nation where furniture and accessories are being made. . . . I know that the goal we have set for ourselves of 100,000 by 1943 will be achieved, must be achieved . . ."

Announcement of the results of the Ford election brought cheers and applause. Telegrams of congratulations were sent to the UAWA-CIO, Michael Widman, John L. Lewis and CIO President Philip Murray.

Mr. Burton E. Oppenheim, Director of the industry branch, Wage-Hour Division, addressed the convention on the workings of the Fair Labor Standards Act, with particular emphasis on the furniture industry.

Furniture Union representatives on the furniture industry committee include Pres. Morris Muster, Sec.-Treas. Ernest Marsh and Morris Pizer.

ATTACK POLL TAX

Additional resolutions adopted in an earlier session pledged support to the organizing drive of the International Woodworkers and opposed lengthening of hours, increased taxes and called for support of the Geyer Anti-Poll Tax Bill.

The newly elected General Executive Board met after the close of the convention to discuss practical measures of carrying out the slogan motivating the convention: "Now is the time to organize!" Assignment of organizers to important furniture regions was the principal topic of discussion.

File NLRB Charges At Plane Plant

Buffalo, N. Y., May 29—A complaint charging the Curtiss-Wright Airplane Division with Wagner Act violation was filed with the Labor Board here by Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director.

The CIO statement charged the company with a policy of "support and domination of the Aircraft Independent Union."

At the same time Thompson answered statements by leaders of the dummy union that the CIO represented only a small number of the employes and that it was seeking to provoke a strike.

ANSWERS CHARGES

Thompson said charges by Frank Kriegbaum, head of the independent union are "without foundation."

"We of the CIO at Curtiss have been extremely tolerant and restrained in the past, conducting our organizing campaign on a law-abiding, democratic basis at all times."

NLRB, Courts Hit Girdler, Ford

Washington, May 31 — Republic Steel should be ordered to reinstate with back pay 520 workers at its Chicago plant and offer back pay to 38 additional workers, the National Labor Relations Board was told in an intermediate report filed by trial examiner Gustaf B. Erickson.

The report was an outgrowth of the "Little Steel" strike of 1937 and the Memorial Day massacre at the gates of the Republic Steel Co. in Chicago.

Erickson found that the strike was part of the strike against Republic and that it was caused "by the long series of unfair labor practices which occurred prior to the strike."

This was the cause assigned to the strike by the board in a previous decision directed against Republic Steel which was verified by the courts.

USED LABOR SPIES

The NLRB trial examiner also found that the company had engaged in espionage and participated in the formation of a company union, the Steel Workers Union of America.

He recommended that the NLRB issue an order directing the company to withdraw all recognition from the SWUA and not to bargain with it as a representative of its employees.

The company has 20 days within which to comply with the order or notify the board that it wants to argue the case orally.

Washington, May 31 — In its ninth decision against the Ford Motor Co., the National Labor Relations Board last week ordered the company to offer to reinstate 975 employes fired at its Kansas City, Mo. plant, and to throw out a company union known as the Independent Union of Ford Workers.

The Board also ordered the company "to reimburse these 975 named employes for certain losses of pay" and to reinstate 46 other workers upon application.

In making the ruling that workers should be offered their jobs back regardless of the fact that they may have obtained equivalent employment elsewhere, the Board pointed out that the Supreme Court had directed it to make a definite explanatory ruling on the point.

10c Raise Gained At Brass Plant

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., May 29—The CIO extended its chain of 10-cents-an-hour wage increases into Connecticut's famed "Brass Valley" this week, gaining the high pay boost for 4,200 employes of the Bridgeport Brass Co.

The gain was chalked up by the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in its first contract with the management. The pact knocked the props out from under attempts of two other firms to "appease" the workers by granting six-cent boosts.

Officials of the union said the Bridgeport Brass agreement paves the way for similar increases throughout the state's brass fabricating industry.

The CIO pact lifted the minimum wage for women employes from 38½ cents an hour to 50 cents, and set the minimum for men at 65 cents. In addition, the workers gained double time for Sunday employment and for six holidays and time and a half for Saturdays. Strong seniority and grievance clauses were also included.

Profiteers Snatching Wage Gains

Birmingham, Ala., May 31—Wage gains won by union miners and steel workers in Alabama in recent weeks are being taken away by increases in rent and prices at company stores, according to charges made by members of the United Mine Workers and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

CIO local unions are planning to open a strong protest campaign against advances in living costs which they term are "reprisals."

Support Zooming For Murray Plan

By JOHN BROPHY
Director of Industrial Union Councils

I have been much interested recently in communications which have reached me from all parts of the country on the proposals which President Philip Murray has made for the increased participation of labor in industrial management.

From the time the Murray Plan and the Reuther Plan were first announced, there has been a warm reception from all parts of the country. The important thing is that there has been no lapse of interest, no loss of enthusiasm; on the contrary, interest has definitely grown with the passage of weeks and months.

The interest of people in these proposals has not been tempered in the slightest by the fact that the government has thus far seen fit to do nothing about them. It is no surprise to anyone who understands the operation of our national politics to find that the administration has not picked up these suggestions at once and put them into effect.

PUT ON THE HEAT

I think that most CIO members with any experience in the political field know quite well that nothing is going to be done until we build a fire under the whole issue, a much bigger fire than we have started as yet.

I think that the officials in the defense agencies who have been neglecting to give the CIO defense plans the attention they deserve are in for a rude awakening. My own correspondence and records show quite clearly that the demand for action along these lines is growing.

The demand is going to be satisfied, because there is no other solution to our problem of national defense, and the American people, particularly American labor, are not going to let defense production slide.

Canadian Steel Workers Fight 'Frozen' Wages

TORONTO, Ont., May 31—Nearly 2,500 workers in Canadian Acme Screw & Gear plant won recognition of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee as their bargaining agency as well as other concessions in a four-day strike here last week.

At the same time a SWOC conference was held at Montreal to determine further steps to be taken to end the strike of 340 workers at Peck Rolling Mills where a conciliation board recommended that wages be frozen at 30.7 cents hourly under Order-In-Council 7440. The Peck workers have been on strike nearly six weeks.

The strike at the Canadian Acme plant was spontaneous and without union initiation. After several days the workers voted to join SWOC and an international representative sat in conference with the negotiating committee and management.

In a preliminary conference the management agreed to union recognition, equal pay for women doing equal work, no discrimination, rotation of night work, grievance procedure and seniority. It was also agreed that representatives of the union, the management and a neutral would investigate the company's ability to pay higher wages.

ORDERLY STRIKE

The strike was completely orderly despite the provocative statement of General Manager N. T. Petersen that "if the strike is not settled a recruiting sergeant will be called to the plant to urge them to join the army. If they don't want to work they can join up."

Seeking a solution of the Montreal strike, the SWOC conference adopted a policy that "Order-in-Council 7440 will not be permitted to force Peck Rolling Mill employes of Dosco to work for 30.7 cents per hour, or to force exploitation just because Order-in-Council 7440 attempts to create the fiction that these low wages, virtual economic slavery, become 'fair and reasonable' because they were just as bad in 1926-29."

Board Suggests Abolition of Coal Wage Differential

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The National Defense Mediation Board today revealed the handwriting on the wall for the 40c-a-day wage differential in the nation's southern coal mines.

A report issued by a Board sub-committee derided claims by the Southern operators that they could not afford to pay the same wage rate as the northern mine owners. It found that operating costs in the south are about eight cents a ton less than in the north, and that the proposed wage increase would amount to only 3c or 3½ cents a ton.

The Mediation Board, it was announced by Vice-Chairman William H. Davis, set a deadline of 6 p. m. on June 9 for replies from the northern and southern operators and the United Mine Workers.

The report also favored vacations with pay, but urged that in view of the "critical state of the nation's affairs," the vacations not be taken this year unless the loss in production could be made up.

The Board at the same time recommended against a number of the Mine Workers' other demands. No comment on its findings was immediately forthcoming from UMWA headquarters.

Murray Urges Lumbermen Accept Mediation Offer

WASHINGTON, June 7—President Philip Murray of the CIO today urged acceptance of the recommendations of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board to end the strike of 20,000 northwest lumber workers, in a communication addressed to the officers and members of the International Woodworkers of America in the Puget Sound area.

Noting that the officers of the IWA had refused to accept these recommendations, Murray accused them of indulging in "a campaign of misrepresentation, slander and abuse contrary to all of the well defined policies of the CIO."

He declared that a statement issued by IWA President O. M. Orton had "accused the National Defense Mediation Board, if not directly, then by implication, of being a labor-busting organization."

'DEFAMATION'

Murray described this charge as "a most reprehensible, lying defamation, for the very simple reason that the statement implies that Thomas Kennedy, secretary--treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, and Philip Murray, president of the CIO, are engaging in this kind of activity.

"A continuance of the strike, under existing circumstances," Murray said, "is no longer regarded as being directed against the employers, but rather against the National Defense Mediation Board.

"The position of the president of the CIO should not be misunderstood. I want it to be definitely known that I am opposed to a grant of arbitrary powers to any government tribunal which would seek to deprive workers of the right to exercise their economic power for the purpose of seeking redress of wrongs."

The board's recommendations included a union maintenance agreement, a basic wage increase of 7½ cents, a revised vacation suggestion and a study by joint committees of the relation of piece work to hazard, Murray said.

The board panel further recommended that work be resumed pending the findings of an investigating commission and final recommendations of the board with the understanding that final proposals on wage rates and vacations affecting payments should be retroactive to the time of resumption of work.

No Defense Issue In This Strike!

Portland, Ore., June 7—An aircraft strike here that had nothing to do with national defense has made the headlines and hit the funny bone of the newspaper boys.

The strike was against the American Junior Aircraft Co., world's largest manufacturers of toy ready-to-fly model airplanes.

Ralph Peoples, secretary of the CIO Oregon Council, said that a majority of the company's 58 production workers walked out to win their demands for increased pay and improved working conditions. The strike was called by Local 450 of the CIO United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers.

"The local union is in good spirits," Peoples said, "with the members determined to gain some decent conditions in the toy manufacturing industry."

'Blue Card' Union Gets Red Light From Courts

ST. LOUIS, June 7—The infamous "Blue Card" company union, an affiliate of the AFL, which for years tried to keep honest labor organization out of the Tri-State lead mining area, marched a step nearer the grave last week.

The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a Natl. Labor Relations Board order which directed the Eagle-Picher Lead Co. to cease "dominating, supporting or favoring" the fake union, to stop interfering with the rights of its employes, and to reinstate 200 members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers with back pay.

MAJOR VICTORY

CIO officials hailed the decision as a major victory and predicted speedy organization work throughout the Tri-State area.

The case started in May, 1935, when the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers went on strike. A company union, formed by an operator and led by company men, staged a phoney pick-handle parade and a back-to-work movement.

The stooges' terrorism gave the governor of Oklahoma and Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas an excuse for calling in the militia and smashing the strike—though it was not called off. The union filed its NLRB charges in July, 1935, and for the past six years they have been "cooling off" in the maze of government red tape.

Capital vs. Capital Chief Source of Delay, Carey Tells N. Y. Groups

WASHINGTON, June 7—CIO unions are playing their full part and are emphatically not responsible for delays in production, James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO, declared in two speeches delivered this week, one in New York and the other over the radio.

"It is not the disputes between labor and capital that seriously menace our defense effort," Carey said in his radio speech.

"It is rather the disputes between capital and capital and between the government and capital. There is more waste in the fact that 80 percent of the defense contracts have been hogged by 100 interlocking large corporations than in all the labor disputes of the past two years."

Lauds CIO Plans

Speaking at a conference of the Natl. Industrial Conference Board in the Waldorf-Astoria at New York, Carey told his listeners of the CIO's record in furthering production through the industry councils plan, formulated by Pres. Murray, through the steel production plan, through the housing plan, and through the Reuther airplane production plan.

"In the light of this record we in labor look with some cynicism upon those who in public life and in the press try to make labor to blame for whatever may be the shortcomings of our industrial effort," he said.

"The little delay in production because of strikes pales into insignificance compared to the delays that hang upon the failure to expand industry. The public press with glee makes labor the whipping boy for interruptions to defense while the real stoppages, the dangerous interruptions rest upon the unheralded decision of corporation executives and government officials sitting on plush in panelled offices."

Draft Board Rescinds Anti-Strike Action

Cambridge, Mass., June 7 (FP)—Local Draft Board 47 has withdrawn its statement that all defense strikers would be subject to reclassification. Announcement of its decision was made by a member of the board to a delegation of the Cambridge Peace Council, which fought the board's edict along with labor and civic organizations.

The board rescinded its statement, it was said, because a West Hartford, Conn., draft board reversed itself after canceling the draft deferment of Donald G. Olson, CIO striker at the plant of the Hanson-Whitney Machine Co.

The West Hartford board was severely rebuked for the cancelation by an investigating committee appointed by the Connecticut draft director.

COUNCIL MEETS: Delegates to the Tennessee Industrial Union Council pose for the cameraman during one of the recent convention sessions at Chattanooga. The convention pushed plans for further organization, assailed the poll tax which keeps thousands of low-income workers from voting.

Georgia, Tennessee Councils Plan Drives

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 7—Pres. William Turnblazer and Paul Christopher, executive secretary-treasurer, were re-elected at the second annual convention of the Tennessee CIO Industrial Union Council held here earlier this week.

More than a hundred delegates from 80 CIO locals throughout the state attended the two-way convention.

In his address to the delegates, Pres. Turnblazer, who is head of District 19, United Mine Workers, spoke of the efforts of UMW Pres. John L. Lewis and the membership to remove the 40-cent wage differential between Southern and Northern mine districts, and said the Southern miners were determined to bring their wages up to the $7-day agreed upon for the North.

CHARGES DOUBLE CROSS

In his report to the convention, Sec. Paul Christopher accused Governor Prentice Cooper of Tennessee of "double crossing" the people of the state by pledging before election to support repeal of the law requiring payment of a poll tax by citizens before they are eligible to vote, and later using his influence to defeat the measure.

Christopher also charged the Governor with deliberately sabotaging legislation to amend the workmen's compensation law to provide wider coverage and with repeatedly disregarding the wishes of labor.

"It was generally conceded in Nashville political circles," Christopher said, "that our chief executive was simply a tool of Ed Crump, Shelby county political boss and bitter foe of the CIO.

Delegates voted later to hold the next convention of the Tennessee Council in Crump's stronghold, Nashville.

ATTACK VINSON BILL

Following a vigorous attack by Edward F. Callahan, vice president of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, on the Vinson bill, which calls for a "cooling-off" period before a strike can be declared, the convention voted unanimously to condemn such legislation as "merely subterfuge that would tend to stop entirely the work of organizing the unorganized."

Walter Smethurst, assistant CIO director of organization, declared in a speech made earlier, that the "majority of defense industry strikes in which the CIO has been involved have been provoked by employers for the purpose of securing legislation to suppress the rights of workers."

Other speakers at the convention included Joe Cannon, director of the Distillery Workers Organizing Committee; Franz Daniel, organizer for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and William Eaves, regional director for the Wage-Hour Administration.

ATLANTA, Ga., June 7—CIO unions in Georgia have made great strides the past year in membership, elections won and contracts signed, officers of the State CIO Industrial Union Council reported at the annual convention held here June 1. Credentials from locals affiliated with CIO unions were presented by 183 delegates.

H. W. Denton, president of the Atlanta Industrial Union Council, reported vigorous growth in this city, with the CIO movement spreading rapidly.

RE-ELECT GILMAN

The convention re-elected Pres. Charles H. Gilman and Vice Pres. John Holt and elected Bernard Borah, Southern director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, as secretary to succeed Miss May Bagwell, who withdrew her nomination in favor of Borah.

Miss Ola Warren was elected treasurer, and the following were named to serve on the Executive Committee: Walter Morris, Miss Birdie Pittard, J. T. Welch, Dewey Mays, William Frazier and M. C. Perdue.

MANY SPEAKERS

Among the speakers who addressed the delegates were David McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee; Noel Beddow, SWOC executive director in the South; Walter Smethurst, CIO assistant director of organization, and Roy R. Lawrence, Southern director of the Textile Workers Union.

The convention endorsed CIO Pres. Philip Murray's plan for Industry Councils and asked that a copy of the resolution be sent to President Roosevelt.

In other resolutions, delegates backed the anti-poll tax bill; called upon Mayor LaGuardia of New York to recognize the Transport Workers as the bargaining agency for the city subway workers; urged protection of the civil liberties of workers, and called for the maintenance and extension of social gains.

Postpone Walkout At Alcoa Plant

Cleveland, Ohio, June 7—A strike of 5,000 workers at the big plant of the Aluminum Co. of America here was averted this week when the CIO National Association of Die Casting Workers voted to postpone action pending a hearing before the National Defense Mediation Board.

The strike was called for last Wednesday midnight after negotiations with the company broke down. The management flatly refused to consider the wage demands of the workers, the union said.

WILL MEDIATE

The union's decision to postpone the strike was taken after a policy committee of 300 took up consideration of a telegram from Clarence A. Dykstra, Mediation Board chairman, requesting the union to send representatives to a conference in Washington scheduled for Monday, June 9.

The CIO Die Casters union announced that it was sending its entire negotiating committee of 12 members to the conference.

Local 55 of the NADCW won a Labor Board election at the Cleveland Aluminum plant last month by a vote of 3,174 to 1,229, and took steps immediately after the victory to start negotiations for a signed contract.

The union's main demands are for a dollar a day pay increase for all workers; a 75 cents hourly hiring rate; improved working conditions; complete job reclassification and a union shop.

Hit Navy Finking

Newark, N. J., June 7—Condemnation of Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox for attempts to break the strike in San Francisco shipbuilding yards was expressed by the CIO Council here in a resolution that reaffirmed support of the striking workers.

Strike Shuts Coast Plane Plant; Seek Decent Pay Level

LOS ANGELES, Calif., June 6—Some 12,000 employes of the huge North American Aviation Corp. formed picket lines today after union leaders announced that "negotiations have broken down."

Several officials of United Automobile Workers Local 683 were in Washington with Lew Michener, UAW regional director, awaiting Natl. Defense Mediation Board action on their dispute with the company.

The UAW won a Labor Board election at the plane plant, which has large defense orders, and has been negotiating unsuccessfully for several months in an effort to increase minimum wages up to 75 cents an hour and to institute improved working conditions.

An earlier strike had been postponed at the request of the Mediation Board last week, and union officials have been in Washington for several days.

UNION STATEMENT

Elmer Freitag, president of Local 683, announced that the Local 683 negotiating committee would meet with the National Defense Mediation Board on June 5 as scheduled.

"Our committee has been instructed by the membership of Local 683, UAW-CIO employed at North American Aviation, Inc., not to accept any proposal which is less than the union's request for a minimum scale of 75c an hour, now in effect in many aircraft operations, and 10c per hour blanket increase for all workers," he said.

"Negotiations have been in progress in California since April 16. By a secret ballot vote of 5,834 to 210 the membership of Local 683 on May 23 voted to strike. In the intervening 13 days the union has made every effort to reach a just and peaceful settlement.

"We are striking, not because we like to strike, but because we have been unable through negotiations to obtain a living wage. We believe that no compromise is possible where the right of an American worker to an American standard of living is involved."

Earlier Michener had assailed the Dies Committee for attempting to throw negotiations between union and the company into "confusion" and to "cloud the issues involved."

The Dies Committee had heard a number of witnesses slander the local and red-bait against its leaders.

Michener denied that the union officials are Communists and charged that one of the Dies Committee witnesses was a "disgruntled former member who turned against the union because it would not back the Vigilant America group he heads in Los Angeles . . ."

"We are loyal citizens of the United States who find ourselves untruthfully accused only because we are trying to carry out the mandate of the workers at North American Aviation who want a wage increase that will permit them to have a decent standard of living."

Missing Bridges Witness Shows Up With Hazy Memory and Four G-Men

SAN FRANCISCO, June 5—The most dramatic moment of the Bridges hearings came this afternoon as the government presented its second rebuttal witness. He was Maurice Cannalonga, who disappeared on May 7 after giving Defense Attorney Richard Gladstein a deposition which contradicted his original testimony. He walked into the courtroom with an FBI agent on either side of him.

The first two questions revealed that the FBI has had him in custody since May 29, but did not produce him. He showed the subpoena which the defense had ordered served on him on May 7, and the next moment admitted that he had been served with another subpoena in Seattle on May 29, and had not received the defense order until he arrived in San Francisco on June 1.

MEMORY TROUBLE

Under direct examination, he stated that he was drunk at the time he talked to Gladstein and gave him the deposition, and that he could not remember what was asked of him. Then Prosecutor Del Guercio read from the deposition and wanted to know if he had been asked questions concerning his original testimony, and if he had given the answers contained in the deposition.

Cannalonga, whose "recollection of the meetings was hazy," immediately remembered that he had not been asked the questions and had not answered them. Under cross-examination he admitted discussing his testimony with and giving a statement to Earl V. Connelly, assistant chief of the FBI.

FOUR SHADOWS

He admitted that four G-men constantly accompanied him since his arrival in San Francisco. "There were four of 'em," he said. "They relieved each other." Q. (by Gladstein) "Was there any time when they were not with you?" A. "Yeah. When I went to bed."

He named Agents Medalla, Devereaux, Means, and one whom he pointed to in the courtroom and called "Joe". Cannalonga was very evasive about his interviews with FBI agents, not recollecting things which happened two days ago. He said that since his mysterious disappearance, he has been fishing in the mountains near Olympia, Wash.

His deposition was given in the presence of Rosco Craycraft, Portland Longshore official; Wm. Lord, law partner of Oregon's Governor Sprague, and Ray Shoemaker, a Supreme Court reporter. Craycraft stated that the night before the deposition was made Cannalonga said that FBI Agents Medalla and Dickstein had threatened him with 20 years' imprisonment on a Mann Act charge if he did not sign false statements against Bridges. When the actual deposition was taken, Cannalonga refused to answer questions about the FBI and walked out of the room.

Ask Election at Inland; Youngstown Settles

PITTSBURGH, June 7—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee today announced it had filed a petition for a Labor Board election at Inland Steel Company plants at Indiana Harbor, Ind., and Chicago Heights, Ill.

At the same time, John Mayo, SWOC sub-regional director at Youngstown, Ohio, announced that the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Company today had paid $170,000 in back wages to 260 employes, in settlement of the SWOC case against that company. The money was distributed by the Labor Board's Cleveland office.

Involved in the Inland Steel election will be approximately 12,000 steel workers, of which the SWOC claims to have 10,000.

This election is another of those being sought among "Little Steel" firms. On May 14, the SWOC won a three-to-one victory at the Lackawanna (N. Y.) plant of Bethlehem Steel. Since then the union has petitioned for elections at Johnstown, Pottstown, Rankin and Leetsdale plants of Bethlehem Steel, and at two Los Angeles plants of the same corporation.

Both Inland Steel and Youngstown Sheet and Tube were involved in the so-called "Little Steel" strikes of 1937. Youngstown Sheet and Tube agreed to settle the charges against it growing out of that strike, without a formal Labor Board hearing.

URGE DEFENSE BONDS

In announcing the payment of the money, Mayo said:

"While it is not the policy of the SWOC to advise its membership on what use ought to be put to their back wages received through the NLRB for discrimnatory discharges, yet in view of the symbolic relationship this case has with the functioning of democracy in the United States at the present time, we urge all persons who received a share in this money to devote as large a proportion as possible to the purchase of United States Government Defense Bonds.

"This is one way of showing our appreciation and faith in the form of government which protects our right to organize and bargain collectively. Except under the American democracy there would be no NLRB, no Sheet and Tube case, no reinstatement to former jobs, no back wages. This democracy deserves our support and protection now more than ever before."

Mediation Board Asks End of Southern Coal Differential

WASHINGTON, June 7 — Recommendations for the abolition of the 40c-a-day wage differential in the southern coal fields were included in findings of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board forwarded this week to coal operators and the United Mine Workers of America. The Board asked both parties for action on its proposals by 6 p. m. Monday, June 9. The recommendations were contained in a 26-page report released by NDMB Vice-Chairman William Davis after a study of the industry's economic and wage conditions.

MEETS OBJECTIONS

In announcing the report, Davis wryly exhibited a full page advertisement inserted by the southern coal operators in a number of metropolitan papers a few weeks ago. He remarked that "all the items which these gentlemen professed to be so much concerned about" had been eliminated by the Mediation Board's report.

The NDMB report recommended a vacation with pay, but suggested that it not be taken this summer in view of the "crtical stage of the nation's affairs" unless the industry could arrange to make up the production which would be lost during the vacation period.

The Board sub-committee's report was signed by Davis, representing the public; Clinton S. Golden of Steel Workers Organizing Committee, for labor; and Walter S. Teagle of Standard Oil, representing the employers.

LOWER COST IN SOUTH

Looking into the question of freight rate differentials and other cost factors, the mediators reported that costs in two typical northern districts were eight cents a ton higher than in the south.

Accordingly, they said, the figures offered by the southern operators "hardly support the contention that the addition to their cost of three cents to three and one-half cents a ton represented by the 40-cent differential will subject them to an unendurable competitive burden."

The Board ruled against the miners' demands for the right to conduct memorial mourning shutdowns of the mines, and against the "reject" clause, under which operators have often penalized the coal miners unfairly.

LONG DISPUTE

The Board's recommendations covered issues in the long dispute between the United Mine Workers and the operators. Negotiations for a new two-year agreement commenced in March, and when the operators rejected the UMW's proposal that the mines stay open after April 1, with pay increases retroactive to that date, the industry was closed down.

Among the stumbling blocks to resumption of production was the southern bloc's refusal to consider the differential question and other union demands, and its effort to smash the Appalachian Joint Wage Conference—a collective bargaining unit covering about 300,000 workers in half-a-dozen states.

The UMW consistently showed itself ready to reopen the mines if negotiations would continue on a retroactive basis.

CIO Wins 8c Raise At Chrysler

DETROIT, June 7—Following up recent wage gains at General Motors, Hudson and other major auto plants, the CIO United Automobile Workers today had won an 8-cent-an-hour increase for 70,000 employes of the Chrysler Corp.

Chrysler locals started voting early this week on ratification of the agreement, which will add $15,000,000 a year to the workers' pocketbooks.

The increases, added to a 2-cent raise won earlier this year, bring the total boost to 10 cents an hour and keep Chrysler rates at the highest in the auto industry.

Employes of the company will get a $45 bonus in lieu of vacations.

Gain Pay Boost At Packard

Detroit, June 7—A blanket pay increase of eight cents an hour and a 40-hour vacation bonus was won by Packard Local 190, United Automobile Workers, following a strike threat.

2,800 Win 10c Boost in Philly

Philadelphia, June 7—Some 2,800 workers at the Electric Storage Battery Co. won a ten-cent hourly raise under a contract signed with the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The company also agreed to give a further three per cent boost in December in case the cost of living rises. Under the new rate the hourly minimum will be 65 cents for men and 54 cents for women.

The agreement averted a threatened strike.

Wages Spurt Up In Bendix Pact

Brooklyn, N. Y. June 7., (F.P.)—An agreement providing up to 73% wage increases has been signed between the (CIO) United Automobile Workers and the Bendix Aviation Corp. The contract covers 830 workers in two local plants of the firm's marine division.

Women who used to get 35c and 40c an hour now get a minimum of 60c and men fomerly paid 40c and 45c, now recive 70c, said Loren Hauser, sub-regional director of the UAW's aircraft drive. He described the contract as "the best ever signed with an eastern aircraft parts plant." Two-week vacations and other union conditions are provided.

On the heels of the contract signing, the UAW launched a drive to organize other Bendix plants in New York and New Jersey, where workers are still paid low wages.

10c Increase At Bell Aircraft

Buffalo, N. Y., June 7 (FP)—Hourly raises of 10 cents for 7,700 employes of the Bell Aircraft Corp. are provided in a new contract won by the CIO United Automobile Workers. The agreement followed four weeks of negotiations.

City Workers Get $50,000

Youngstown, Ohio, June 7—Pay increases amounting to $50,000 a year will go to the 180 employes of the City Water Dept. here under a settlement accepted by Local 157, Utility Workers Organizing Committee. Members of the local had previously voted to strike.

The settlement, which provides increases of $10 a month for all salaried employes, and 15 to 17 cents an hour for all employes paid on an hourly basis, was set forth in an ordinance passed as an emergency measure at a special meeting of the City Council.

Order Bethlehem Shipyard Poll

Washington, June 7—Some 4,000 employes of the big Bethlehem Steel Corp. shipyard, at Sparrows Point, Maryland, near Baltimore, will vote June 12 to decide if they wish to be represented by the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

The balloting will be the first NLRB poll at a Bethlehem plant to be conducted with the consent of all parties concerned.

The shipyard union several months ago won elections at Bethlehem Shipyards in the New York City area, and has since signed a contract covering the Hoboken yards—the first pact signed by the company with the CIO.

Caterpillar Tractor Goes CIO

PEORIA, Ill., June 7—Sole bargaining rights for 13,000 workers in the Caterpillar plant here were won this week by the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee in a contract signed with the giant implement company.

Terms of the agreement call for a flat wage increase of three cents an hour with negotiations for further increases to be opened within 60 days, and a complete revision of wage-rate inequalities, with additional raises ranging from three to 40 cents an hour.

'MAJOR MILESTONE'

Hailing the new contract as "a major milestone in the history of the FEWOC," union officials said it would give a big impetus to the drive of the International Harvester workers for a smashing victory in the Labor Board elections scheduled for June 18.

Grant Oakes, FEWOC chairman, said the "Cat" contract "should clinch the deal for the remaining Harvester workers who have not yet decided to vote CIO."

BREAKS PRECEDENT

The pay raise stipulated in the agreement is the first increase over the uniform five-cent hourly increase given recently by all major implement companies as a result of the CIO's strike at the Harvester plants, the union stated. Until the present contract was signed, Caterpillar has resisted organization, breaking strikes in 1937 and 1938.

In addition to wage raises, the contract provides for a strict seniority system; grievance procedure; recognition of the steward system, and gives the union the right to solicit membership and collect dues on company property.

Ford, CIO Auto Union Open Negotiations

Detroit, June 7—The first formal bargaining after a Labor Board election ever conducted by the Ford Motor Co. with an American union started June 2 at the Rouge plant. The offer to negotiate came from the company and was accepted by President R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Auto Workers before the Labor Board had certified the union as sole bargaining agency for the 89,000 Rouge employes and the 3,500 Lincoln workers.

Principal union demands are a 10 cents blanket raise, standard seniority and overtime clauses and an effective steward system in the shop so that the contract can be rigidly enforced. Union negotiators include Thomas, Sec.-Treas. George F. Addes, Board Member R. T. Leonard, Wm. B. Taylor, CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood and a technical staff.

History Repeats Itself At Ford NLRB Hearing

By CARL HAESSLER

DETROIT, June 7—Newspapermen who covered the Ford Labor Board hearings in Detroit in the summer of 1937 have the feeling, as the present Ford case unrolls in the Federal Building under Trial Examiner Horace Ruckel, that the Ford Motor Co. is in for the same drastic verdict and for the same curt treatment from the federal courts if the case is to be appealed there.

The CIO United Automobile Workers and the NLRB are unfolding the same watertight case, with former Ford spies and servicemen as witnesses, telegrams, hotel registrations, lists of names and other unimpeachable documents. A long string of victims of the Ford labor policy are awaiting to be heard.

FORD LAWYER HELPLESS

NLRB Counsel Harold Cranefield and UAW Counsel Maurice Sugar and their staffs are keeping the battery of Ford counsel helpless and apprehensive. Last time it was Ford Counsel Colombo who bungled the Ford case, doing nothing except enter objections which were quietly overruled.

This time, with Colombo tossed in the ashcan by Ford, it is Counsel I. A. Capizzi—the man who publicly denounced the Labor Board as "an exact replica of the so-called courts by which the Communist, Nazi and Fascist parties purge the men who resist their tyrannies".

OBJECTS IN VAIN

Capizzi objects, is overruled, objects again and is again overruled. Once in a while he learns a bit of procedure from the other attorneys read previous Ford labor board testimony.

Chester Zrdojewski, for example, testified May 28 that he had been a UAW-CIO organizer under Homer Martin, had played around with Ralph Rimar, a Ford spy while still on the union payroll, had received money from Ford lawyers and from Marlett for union espionage, had sworn to false affidavits prepared by Ford's New York law firm and had tried to get Labor Board witnesses in the first Rouge Labor Board case to alter their testimony in preparation for Ford's luckless appeal to the Circuit and Supreme and the trial examiner. One afternoon he suddenly moved to exclude prospective witnesses from the courtroom. This was because the former spy on the stand identified in the courtroom Norval Marlett, retired Detroit cop, who was put in charge of Ford espionage. Marlett had also been identified in the morning and Capizzi thought the second identification had been based on the first.

It was pointed out that such motions are usually made at the start of hearings, that the hundreds of Ford workers who are parties to the case could not be excluded, and that the witness himself had not been in the courtroom in the morning.

Capizzi shamefacedly withdrew his motion.

The burden of the testimony is familiar stuff to those who have courts.

The Detroit attorney who took him to New York was Buelle Doelle, then an associate of Harry Toy, also a Ford counsel at various times. Ford's New York law firm was Cravath, DeGersdorff, Swaine & Wood, and the particular lawyer was named Duncomb. Atty: Doelle instructed the witness, he said, to register under the false name of Charles Zack at the Roosevelt in New York.

EXAGGERATIONS

"My affidavit was not wholly true," Chester said under oath. "I put in exaggerations. I did not write it myself. It was composed by Mr. Duncomb and I initialled

Ask U. S. Supreme Court Void Poll Taxes

WASHINGTON, June 7—The U. S. Supreme Court was asked to declare the poll tax illegal and unconstitutional, in a brief filed here by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, and Crampton Harris of Birmingham, Ala.

The case, involving a voter in Tennessee, was aided by Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers and by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. The brief argues that the poll tax, which disfranchises Negro and white workers and farmers in eight southern states, is illegal on three main grounds:

U. S. RIGHTS

1. "The right to vote for members of Congress is a right arising from and fundamentally based on Article I, Section II, of the Constitution of the U. S.

2. "Rights and privileges arising out of the constitution of the U. S. are not subject to state taxation in any form.

3. "The 14th amendment to the constitution of the U. S., in prohibiting any state from making or enforcing any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the U. S., renders invalid and unconstitutional the imposition . . . of a poll tax."

FINE FOR TORIES

Leading Congressional labor-baiters come from poll tax states, where as little as five per cent of the eligible population is permitted to vote.

Such Representatives include Carl Vinson, of Georgia, author of the Vinson anti-strike bill; Martin Dies of Texas, Gene Cox of Georgia, who wants to put all strikers in jail; Hatton Sumners of Texas, who recommends electrocuting them, and others.

Typos To Stay Out of AFL

Indianapolis, June 7—The Intl. Typographical Union will not reaffiliate with the AFL, following a referendum of all members which showed a vote of 25,632 for returning, 33,498 against.

The ITU left the AFL in January, 1940, when it refused to pay the special assessment levied by the AFL as a war chest to fight the CIO. Charles P. Howard, late president of the union, was the first secretary and one of the founders of the CIO, though the ITU did not affiliate as a union.

CIO Sweeps Election At Rem-Rand

TONAWANDA, N. Y., June 7—The CIO this week rolled up a 3-1 victory in a Labor Board election at the Remington-Rand Co., long an AFL stronghold.

The United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers polled 420 votes to 123 received by a company union. The local at the plant shifted to the CIO from the AFL in May, 1940, shortly after the conclusion of a one-month strike.

The Tonawanda plant was one of those involved in James Rand's nationally infamous "Mohawk Valley" brand of strike-breaking, first used several years ago. It was based on winning over public sympathy from the workers and forcing the strikers to return, defeated, to their jobs.

THE 'COOLER' IDEA

Hands Off WPA!

One of the paradoxes of our economic system, or lack of system, is the constant presence of poverty, hunger and want alongside great wealth and potential plenty for all.

This paradox is today glaringly apparent in the continued unemployment of some nine million Americans at a time when profits are soaring and production bounding upward—and when there seems no limit to the increased production demanded.

Because there are boom-towns here and there, and bottlenecks and backlogs in production in certain sectors of industry, many people think there should be jobs for all and that such measures as WPA employment can be drastically curtailed. There should be jobs for all, it is true. But there aren't.

WPA has been cut and cut, but only at the expense of much human misery to many of the unemployed thus left destitute. A recent WPA survey revealed that only 29 per cent of all workers laid off in September and October had found jobs two to four months later.

Now President Roosevelt has proposed that WPA be cut still further, through a request for an appropriation of only $886,000,000.

On behalf of the CIO, Secretary James B. Carey has pointed out to the House Appropriations Committee that this is between $1.5 and $2 billion short of what is really needed. CIO estimates show that WPA jobs will be needed for at least three million needy unemployed in the coming year. These cannot be provided for less than $2,500,000,000.

The proposed reduction to an average of less than a million WPA jobs for the year would cause terrible misery to millions of jobless; and CIO Pres. Murray has urged all CIO unions and members to act at once to let their Congressmen know labor's opposition to the proposed drastic cut in WPA.

Priority For Profiteers

Major shortages are apparently developing in aluminum, steel, copper and other metals, as well as in railroad and shipping facilities.

The effects of these shortages will be to cause the shutting down of many plants dependent on these basic metals, and the unemployment of many workers, at a time when the cry is for more and more production.

This situation is far more disruptive of war production than any number of strikes. It has been caused, not by labor, but by the selfish, planless profiteering that marks the stranglehold of the dollar-a-year men on the defense program.

What is being done to cope with this situation? The answer is priorities, a cure that is in many ways worse than the disease.

The arbitrary imposition of priorities—namely, the cutting down or discontinuance of civilian production so that military production may have first call—will produce several results.

It will cause "priorities unemployment", throwing more people out of work in non-defense plants, when there are already nine million unemployed.

It will result in a decreasing supply of consumers' goods, at a time when demand is increasing. This will lead to open or hidden price increases, higher living costs and a lowering of real wages.

It is already leading to talk of "priorities in labor", or control of the labor supply in such a way that workers may be forced to stay on certain jobs or move to others, regardless of their wishes.

This is the program, or lack of program, of the dollar-a-year men—bottlenecks due to monopolistic allocation of contracts; artificial and unnecessary shortages; curtailment of civilian production through priorities; higher living costs; priorities unemployment, and forced labor.

And in face of all this, the big business crowd and their stooge press and politicians have the nerve to attack labor for interfering with production; and to demand wage-freezing, anti-union legislation and heavy taxation of the low-paid. They want labor to foot the bill for their blunders and profiteering.

CIO President Murray offered a proposal for real planning in place of the present situation. He proposed carefully planned expansion of production for civilian as well as military needs, to avoid shortages and priorities. His plan envisaged protection of labor's rights and raising of living standards.

But evidently these proposals run counter to the ideas of those who seek to make a financial killing and to crack down on labor, at no matter what cost in industrial dislocation. Is that why they have been disregarded?

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

A MILLION Scotsmen can't be wrong. No matter how long the meal, no matter how intoxicating the drinks, no matter how distracting the floor show—someone is going to get stuck with the check.

In past wars it has been customary for Mr. Financier to get a call to the phone about check-time, while Mr. Industrialist finds he has another pressing engagement and must hurry off. Mr. Politician is, of course, too polite to grab for the check.

So good old Bill Labor pays, as usual. Or if he hasn't the dough, he lands out on the post-war sidewalk, or works it out washing dishes.

Economics is one of those things that works while you sleep. You don't even know it until you awake. But then—Oh my!

Economics is also a cynical old devil of a science. It pays no attention to sacred truces, national unity, nor capital-labor cooperation. When the war drums are beaten, when hearts are lifted in patriotic fervor, Old Man Economics just continues business as usual—only more so.

About the only question he seems interested in is who is going to pay for it all; and he insists on all bills being paid.

In the last war, labor got a lot of kidding about its silk shirts and silk stockings. As Mr. Profiteer salted away his millions, he made dirty cracks about labor's "selfish grabbing" and "excessive wages."

Yet all the time, Old Man Economics was adding more and more to labor's bill, through soaring living costs, consumption taxes, industrial dislocation, etc., while Mr. Profiteer slithered out of reach.

Let us quote from a Philadelphia politician of the name of John B. Kelly for a sample of this war's "silk shirt" slogans.

Addressing an American Legion meeting, he declared that labor is becoming "too strong and too uppity." He attacked union leaders for taking advantage of the country's crisis "to go out and grab, grab, grab."

"As I see it," Mr. Kelly declared, "they are attempting to grab millions in excessive wages." So he advocated the use of troops to break strikes and other similar measures.

The big business press, as it smugly pats its own inflated profits and distracts attention from the war-swag of its biggest advertisers, leads the campaign to make labor pay for the war.

Government figures show that the average weekly wages of American factory workers are still only about $28 a week. This is some $14 less than is required for a minimum health standard of living for the average worker's family.

At the same time, industrial profits (after all taxes have been paid) are skyrocketing, with far, far higher percentage increases than any wage boosts show.

But the press repeats the same kind of lying catch-cries as Mr. Kelly, and uses them to create sentiment for wage-freezing, compulsory mediation or arbitration, and anti-strike legislation.

But this type of propaganda and action to keep wages down is only one of the methods of ganging-up on labor to make it pay for the war.

Its obvious counterpart is belly-robbing price increases, high rents and other increased costs for the necessities of life.

A wage-cutting tax program, such as is now proposed in Congress, is another part of the ganging-up on labor—through heavier taxes on lower incomes, and sales and other taxes on consumers' goods.

One of the less obvious means whereby labor is maneuvered into paying the check, is the present misdirection of the war production program.

The sitdown strikes of big business, the unchecked self-seeking of dollar-a-year men, the misallocation of defense contracts and other similar malpractices, as CIO President Murray has repeatedly pointed out, have created bottlenecks and shortages from which labor is one of the chief sufferers.

Now comes that blessed word Priorities to cover this multitude of sins, and to commit new sins in the process.

The theory of priorities is plausible enough, namely that defense production must come first. But in practice it means that plants are closed and workers thrown out of jobs, through the arbitrary dislocation of non-defense production; while shortages thus caused in civilian goods result in higher living costs and lower living standards.

Murray foresaw all this when he advanced his industry council plan to give labor more adequate representation; to plan within each industry for needed civilian as well as defense production; and to provide for reemployment and industrial expansion which would make the present priorities unnecessary.

Pressman Charges:

'Long Range Plan' Behind Attack On Labor Rights

DETROIT, June 7—The anti-labor offensive in Congress and the daily press, "now reaching new heights of fury and vindictiveness," is not simply the result of war hysteria alone, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, told the fifth convention of the National Lawyers Guild here.

It is the result of a "long-range plan to destroy labor's organized strength in order to guarantee monopoly profits for the employers, profits that can only be secured at the expense of labor, the farmers and the common people generally."

The backers of this plan, Pressman said, are using current hysteria as a mask, but the real sources of the campaign against labor go back to even "the golden days of social legislation," when anti-labor forces fought the Wagner Act, the Walsh-Healy Act, the Wage-Hour Act, and other progressive laws.

SAME OLD STORY

"These people—the polltaxers who front for big business—were in positions of power in Congress then," Pressman said. "They are still in the same strategic places.

"They are more vocal now, perhaps, and they get more attention in the press. But they were doing the same dirty work three and four and even five years ago. They didn't wait behind the walls for this period of war hysteria. They've been out in front all along."

This drive has three main objectives, he pointed out: 1. Destruction of the right to organize, bargain collectively and strike, and the imposition of forced labor; 2. Destruction of unions as barriers to unchecked profits; 3. Establishment of big business control of the entire national economy and of the government.

GUILD PROGRAM

The program worked out by the Lawyers Guild to meet this anti-labor conspiracy included opposition to anti-strike laws, to so-called "anti-sabotage" laws in reality designed to hamstring labor, to taxation of workers and low income groups as proposed to Congress, and to other attacks on labor and minority groups.

In addition, the Guild urged extension of social security, low-cost housing, relief and WPA, youth training, and other progressive measures.

Boss Scores Anti-Strike Bills

AKRON, O., June 7—Here's an employer who agrees with labor and all socially minded people that anti-strike laws such as the Vinson and Ball bills mean dictatorship on Nazi patterns. He's H. P. Schrank, vice president in charge of production for the Seiberling Rubber Co., who wrote to Local 18 of the United Rubber Workers, CIO:

"Much talk has been heard about anti-strike legislation, cool-off periods, and legislation to freeze union contracts. Even though this would give an apparent advantage to the employer, I, for one, am not in sympathy with it, because it represents the taking away of freedom of action and liberty, and resembles the Nazi pattern."

N. Y., Jersey LaborGroups Hit Tory Bills

Washington, June 7—More than 500,000 CIO members in New York and Newark, N. J., are ready to fight any proposal to destroy the right to strike through the Vinson and Ball bills, current cooling-off measures backed in Congress by anti-labor forces, according to a delegation of 50 who spent a day visiting their Congressmen and Senators here.

"Proposals such as the cooling-off periods of the Vinson and Ball bills not only fail to remedy the cause of industrial strife—they would actually encourage employers to resist collective bargaining and lend government sanction to continued violations of the Labor Relations Act," the delegates said in a statement released here.

"Most objectionable of all, however, is the fact that the so-called cooling-off periods would mean, in effect, forced labor. Nothing could be more destructive of the morale of American workers in their destination to defend the democratic principles of our country."

Same Old Story At Ford Hearing

Gabriel A. Ricci, another witness, said he was fired in 1937 after telling Ford higherups about thefts by others of stolen tires and parts. He was promised his job back if he would turn in information about union memberships and activities. He didn't get it back.

Bruce Turell, former Ford serviceman with a criminal record, testified that Police Chief Carl Brooks of Dearborn threatened him and refused to hold another Ford employe who had stolen Ford property.

WINKED AT VIOLENCE

Chief Brooks, now under indictment as a shakedown protector of gambling joints and brothels, told him, Turell said, "You can't hold this man because he is one of the boys who took care of the UAW sound cars—blew them up". He added that Brooks said this after having had a talk with Personnel Director Harry H. Bennett of the company.

Other witnesses testified that if a man was fired for theft he was usually rehired, but if he was fired for union membership he never got his job back.

Seamen Urge CIO Call Anti-War Parley

New York, June 7—A nation-wide meeting of trade unions and other progressive organizations "for the purpose of organizing the fight to get out and stay out" of the war was urged by a membership of the Nat'l Maritime Union here.

Officers of the NMU were urged to petition the national CIO to invite all CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and other labor and progressive groups to take part in the conference. The Greater N. Y. CIO Council was also urged to hold a mass peace rally at New York's Yankee Stadium at an early date.

One Orange One Day Gave Doctor Dismay

Staten Island, N. Y., June 1 (FP)—If the New York City administration hadn't given the Sea View Hospital employes an orange for breakfast on the morning of May 27, a lot of trouble might have been avoided.

But that one moment of weakness was fatal. After tasting fresh fruit for the first time in months, some 500 workers got the idea that life would be sweeter and much richer in vitamins if they could have fresh fruit every day.

WANTED VITAMIN C!

One week later, the dining room of the LaGuardia administration's big tuberculosis institution was boycotted. The employes, members of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers, asked for not only the right to start the day with a shot of vitamin C, but also the pleasure of having fresh vegetables other than lettuce.

It was further suggested to Dr. Morris A. Jacobs, medical superintendent, that the virtues of salary warranted consumption oftener than twice a year (Thanksgiving and Christmas).

GETTING LEFTOVERS

Still another complaint was that the workers were receiving the food not used by the tubercular patients, and that the dietitian was removing the cream from milk served to the employes. Local Pres. Morris Berlin said the grievance committee had made 22 separate complaints to Jacobs, but after small improvements the food invariably became worse each time.

Jacobs referred Federated Press to the Department of Hospitals. A spokesman there retorted: "Do you have fresh fruit for breakfast every day?"

After checking the menus, the departmental aide pointed out with a sort of triumph that things weren't nearly so bad as the union made out. "They had bananas for breakfast on Sunday, May 26, and again on May 21," she said.

Union representatives said they wouldn't settle for bananas.

Miners Voice Strong Criticism of Ball Bill

WASHINGTON, June 7—The United Mine Workers of America, 600,000 strong, is "in wholehearted protest against any legislative step that will tend to weaken, negate or destroy" the right to organize and the right to strike, John T. Jones, president of UMWA District 16, told the Senate Labor Committee in testimony on the 50-day cooling-off bill sponsored by Senator Ball of Minnesota.

The most effective way of preventing strikes, Jones said, is to enforce the laws of the U.S. requiring employers to bargain collectively with unions, "not in legislation which undermines or weakens this practice."

The Ball bill, he pointed out, "instead of reducing industrial strife, would greatly increase industrial frictions."

The right to strike, even when not used, "is the only really effective bargaining instrument workers have when dealing with unfair employers," he said. "Take this right away by law, and such employers will not bargain in any real sense. . . . They have nothing to lose by such action. They know that for 50 days no effective action could be taken by the unions."

CITES UMWA

Jones cited the Mine Workers as the country's leading example of stable labor relations achieved through collective bargaining. He described UMWA procedure in negotiations with coal operators as an example of how collective bargaining, when carried on in good faith, and when backed up by the right to strike on the part of the union, can stabilize an industry. Such collective bargaining, he emphasized, must be voluntary.

"I would like to emphasize further that the benefits which I have described to you have been achieved by voluntary means," he said. "This bill, through instituting compulsion, would be the first step away from voluntary collective bargaining procedure. I believe that the experience of my union has shown that through established collective bargaining procedures you get the best guarantee of industrial peace."

FREEZING WAGES

Bargaining and contract procedures of the UMWA and other unions provide ample means for avoiding strikes when employers negotiate in good faith, Jones explained, pointing to the fact that the strike is only used as a weapon of last resort when negotiations break down. To substitute coercion of the union for this voluntary procedure would destroy collective bargaining and would give the employers an unfair advantage that they would be quick to use against the workers.

"The Ball bill would freeze all wages and working conditions during a period up to 50 days after the termination of a contract with the UMWA," he said. "The union would be forbidden from taking any action during this period and would be subject to injunction proceedings in Federal Courts if it did so.

"This means that the UMW, in common with other labor organizations, would lose the protection which they have obtained under the Norris-La Guardia Act, and unions would be faced with the old well-known weapon which was long used to abuse the rights of labor."

ASKS PROTECTION

Jones urged enforcement of the present laws such as the Wagner Act and the Walsh-Healey Act, emphasizing that lawbreaking corporations should be denied government contracts, as the best way to guarantee industrial peace.

"We are told over and over again that we are in a crisis, that defense production is critical. We say that if it is so critical, why isn't it critical enough to enforce the laws of our land, the Natl. Labor Relations Act, for example?"

Jones also urged adoption of the industry councils plan as drawn up by CIO President Philip Murray as a further answer to the problem of maintaining stable labor relations.

"This plan, if adopted, would bring about that degree of participation by labor in industry and in government that is essential to maintaining industrial peace on a democratic, lasting basis," he said.

Jones Raps Anti-Labor Putsch Try

MONTEAGLE, Tenn., June 7—John T. Jones, director of Labor's Nonpartisan League and CIO legislative representative, flayed the Vinson Bill and other anti-labor legislation in a speech to students attending the two-week spring session of Highlander Folk School here.

The 28 full and part-time students taking the course include sugar and construction workers from New Orleans, boatmen and packinghouse workers from Memphis, and teachers, office workers and miners from eight states.

81 AT CONFAB

A week-end conference on Labor and Politics was attended by 81 representatives of 23 national unions from all branches of labor.

A six weeks' summer term for industrial, farm and office workers opens August 16 at Highlander.

From June 8-15, the school will conduct a Junior Union Camp for workers' children between the ages of 8 and 15. The camp was held for the first time last summer.

Agree to Election

Detroit, June 7—A five-hour strike by the CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes brought an agreement from the Cunningham drug store chain to consent to a Labor Board election.

The strike was conducted by pharmacists, porters and counter clerks.

CIO Proposals on New Taxation

● The CIO has made definite proposals for an honest tax program, and The CIO NEWS herewith presents those suggestions, as outlined by Pres. Philip Murray in a recent statement to the House Ways and Means Committee. The first section of the statement appeared in last week's issue.

These increases would be above and beyond those which were made last year by reducing the exemptions from $2500 to $2000 for families and $1000 to $800 for single persons. Last year's increase in income taxes on the lower brackets were made at the same time as federal sales taxes, which also bear on these brackets, were increased. There is no conceivable reason for extending income taxes against these low incomes as long as such federal excise taxes remain.

Out of the Treasury proposal to raise $3,600,000, approximately one-third will come from excise taxes, that is sales taxes. A few of those taxes are on luxuries that are not bought by lower income groups, but a very heavy percent will still come from goods bought by working people. Gasoline, tobacco, soft drinks, tires, matches, etc., are all on the treasury list for increased taxation.

'There's No Excuse...'

Although the proposal of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation proposes less heavy income taxes, it provides much heavier consumption taxes upon such necessities for low income groups as coffee, sugar, tea and cocoa. It seems to use there is no excuse for such consumption taxes, especially upon food. Therefore the alternative proposal of the Joint Committee is not a satisfactory substitute.

In 1935-36, 89.3% of all the American people received less than $2500. A tax which strikes the standard of living of these people strikes at the standard of a vast majority of Americans.

Labor has been fighting these last few months to protect and improve the living standards of American workers. The federal government should not be in a position of instituting wage cuts in the guise of taxation.

These wage cuts by taxation in the brackets of workers' incomes mean less food, less clothing and less shelter for American working people. A nation that sets itself up as an example of the democratic way of life must not institute wage cuts for its working people.

The Place to Tax

3. All new tax income should be collected from increased taxes on high individual incomes, estates, and growing corporation profits. This includes taxes on excess profits, undivided profits, tax exempt securities and inheritances.

The President of the United States has said that "It is the firm policy of the government that no citizen should make any abnormal net profit out of national defense." If this policy is to be put into effect, substantial improvements must be made in the taxation upon profits and high income.

It is labor's firm conviction that the necessary additional national revenue can be obtained by the increase and improvement of taxes on high incomes, corporations, and estates. It is not necessary to add to the hardships of the low income farmers and working people.

It is well known that during the first World War in spite of taxation rates very much higher than they are now, perfectly fantastic profits were made. The country blossomed with war millionaires. We are now entering a period of even greater expenditures than then took place. Yet we have even less effective taxes to prevent "abnormal net profit." The public interest in this period can best be served by the most effective taxation possible upon the high concentration of wealth.

The CIO therefore urges, on behalf of the working people of the country, some proposals which would gain substantially increased revenue for the nation, which would prevent undue and unpatriotic profits, and which would stop wage cuts through taxes upon wage earners. These proposals encompass means for establishing a sound federal tax system.

Sources of Revenue

1. An Effective Excess Profits Tax.

The Excess Profits Tax as it was passed last year and further weakened by the generous relief provisions of this Spring is a mockery of excess profit taxation.

For the calendar year 1940 it may bring a possible maximum of 100 million dollars. World War excess profit taxation yielded 1,639 million dollars in 1917, 2,500 million dollars in 1918, and 1,439 million dollars in 1919.

A large number of the major corporations now making extensive profits on armament contracts will avoid any excess profits burden. The law is so written for example that companies like the General Motors Corporation and the Chrysler Corporation can earn over 25% profit upon net worth before paying excess profits taxes. Major companies in the steel industry are also able under the tax to escape excess profits taxation in spite of enormous increases in profits.

In order to carry out the expressed policy of the Administration, an effective excess profits tax should be established.

Such a tax should be based upon profits exceeding, say, 6% of invested capital, and the rate should be substantial, at least as high as 75%. The average earnings method of computing tax credit should be eliminated, and the allowance for borrowed capital under invested capital should be wiped out.

2. Tax on Normal Corporation Income.

The rise of 6% in a surtax upon corporate income as suggested by the Treasury is certainly not too large.

3. Taxation of Undivided Business Profits.

One of the serious loopholes in taxation continues to be the failure to reach undivided business profits. Large sums of money are being withheld from effective taxation by remaining in corporate surpluses of various kinds. This enables major stockholders to escape taxation on large amounts of dividends.

Either the corporate undistributed profits tax should be restored, or corporations should be required to report to stockholders the amount accruing to them in undivided profits and stockholders would then be required to include as taxable income these undivided profits.

4. Estate and Gift Taxes.

An enormous amount of potential revenue escapes taxation through the present system of estate and gift taxes. There is no reason why, as at present, tremendous fortunes should be allowed to be passed on from generation to generation through inheritance and gifts.

It would be socially sound to place very heavy taxes upon the transfer of such fortunes. There should clearly be a limit to the amount of estate that can be passed on. The unhealthy influences of the great inherited family fortunes in American industrial life are only too well known. This nation's greatness is not founded upon dynasties of wealthy families.

We therefore propose that effective taxation be placed upon estates and gifts. This can be done by the adoption of an integrated estate and gift tax system which will lay a single set of drastically graduated rates upon the whole fortune, including the estate plus all gifts and plus all other transfers of wealth from it. The consolidated exemption could well be lowered to $10,000.

The tightening of this tax would be one of the most helpful reforms that could be made in the American tax system. It would do more to make democratic and American the control of American industry and wealth than perhaps any other measure.

5. Taxation of Income From Tax Exempt Securities.

The first step in abolishing tax exempt securities has been taken in establishing the taxation of the income of future issues of federal bonds. Steps should now be taken to reach into that substantial reservoir of existing tax exempt bonds, federal, state and local.

Some of the greatest fortunes in the country employ the use of tax exempt securities to avoid paying effective income taxes. These persons with incomes in the neighborhood of a million dollars are the ones who most effectively benefit by tax exempt securities. It has been estimated by the Treasury that the federal government could secure from 179 million to 337 dollars dollars additional revenue annually if all existing tax exempt governmental securities were subject to federal tax.

6. Increases in Upper Bracket Income Taxes.

There is still room for higher rates in the upper bracket income taxes. But more than that there are a number of loopholes which should be closed in order to make the nominal rates the effective rates. The income from tax exempt securities is one of these loopholes. Another is allowing separate returns for married persons. By dividing property between husband and wife it is often possible for wealthy persons to reduce their taxation substantially.

The use of the corporate device is also another loophole by which wealthy persons have been able to escape the effective rates of existing income taxes.

These loopholes should be effectively closed so that fantastically high or unearned income will be wiped out in this nation. There is no economic or moral excuse for some of the enormous incomes of this nation.

7. Reduction of Excise Taxes and Low Bracket Income Taxes.

The foregoing measures would provide in our judgment sufficient income to justify the proposed reduction in all excise taxes and these sales or excise taxes in the federal tax system which are not clearly luxury taxes. It would also justify relieving of income tax the taxpayers in the brackets below $2500 and $1000.

Of course the lifting of the burden of federal taxation from such groups still leaves upon them the heavy and unfair burdens of state and local taxes, a vast majority of which are retrogressive taxes bearing most heavily upon the lower incomes.

Should Set Example

It seems clear that the federal government would do well to set a sound example for state and local tax authorities in taking steps to relieve low income taxpayers and to abolish retrogressive taxes.

Labor strongly believes that the tax instrument is one to be used to promote the welfare of the majority of American people. It has been too extensively used against the public welfare, in part because the ordinary working people and farmers had no way to express their feeling about taxation. The subject of taxation has been made so abstruse and difficult that it requires experts to determine the effect of taxes.

We urge upon this Congress the enactment of a tax program which will make taxation beneficial to the American economy and a protection to the common people of the country.

Sees Danger In 'Labor Control' Proposals

DENVER, June 5—"Labor controls" and "labor priorities", now being much discussed as ways of meeting the alleged shortage of workers in the arms program, are in reality serious threats to the freedom of workers and of the people in general, Ralph Hetzel, CIO unemployment director, told a convention of the Intl. Assn. of Public Employment Services meeting here.

"The measures which are generally spoken of as controls are ones which involve ordering labor to take a new job or not to take a new job," Hetzel said. "Such orders are presumed to be made by the government or by employers and the government. I am convinced that such controls are both unnecessary and highly undesirable.

"These controls are unnecessary because their purpose can be accomplished better through democratic means. They are undesirable because they strike at the base of our democracy."

FASCIST PATTERN

Labor controls are the first items on the Fascist agenda, Hetzel said, citing laws against workers enacted in Germany that curb their right to move from one job to another, or to remain on a job they want to quit. From this it has been a quick step to a point where "the working people are reduced to slavery".

Such controls are both unwise and unnecessary in view of the fact that 5,000,000 workers will still be unemployed at the height of the arms program, he pointed out. In addition, Hetzel said, the system of industrial priorities will increase the number of workers without jobs.

INDUSTRY COUNCIL PLANS

A planned approach to the problem would include adoption of the industry councils plan proposed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, which would give labor a voice in training programs and in questions of labor supply, as well as a share in general industrial planning, Hetzel said.

In addition, industries should be located near available labor supply, workers should be provided with proper housing, transportation and other necessary services, and the principles of industrial organization as practiced by the CIO should be pupt into effect everywhere.

"Frankly, I am not too hopeful that such a program will be followed," Hetzel said.. "The management of the national defense program in Washington is much too chaotic and diverse. Nevertheless, I feel that it is imperative that we make every effort to establish a program which could enlist the wholehearted and efficient participation of everyone."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The vitally important negotiations with the Ford Motor Co. began early this week, with the writer participating. The tremendous victory in which the UAW-CIO swamped the AFL by better than five to two is a pretty good indication that the union will come out of the negotiations with real gains for the workers. At the same time, the Ford drive will be pushed even harder than before, with the object of signing up all the workers in outlying Ford plants.

The United Shoe Workers campaign is also going ahead. An overflow meeting last week at New York's Manhattan Center registered the determination of thousands of shoe workers to go ahead with the drive full steam until the unorganized shoe workers are brought into the union.

NRLB ELECTION VICTORIES

More Labor Relations Board victories continue to pile in, showing that workers throughout the nation will choose the CIO over the craft-ridden AFL when given the chance to vote. Latest reports include a nine-to-two victory for District 50 of the United Mine Workers, the vote totalling 941 to 237. The Automobile Workers have won again, this time by a landslide—251 to seven—at the Natl. Battery Co. in Buffalo, N. Y. An almost 10-to-one victory for the Aircraft Division of the UAW was marked up at the Breeze Corp., in New York, when the UAW scored 302 votes, the AFL 37.

And following up election victories with contracts is another CIO specialty. This time the UAW has won a 10-cent raise all around for all workers at the big Bendix Corp., in Brooklyn, N. Y.

HELPING HAND: Something new in picket lines was this one presented by the Hollywood Theater Alliance's Mobile Unit for the benefit of CIO strikers at the Columbia Recording Plant in Los Angeles. The Alliance has put on a number of shows for union groups. (See Story Below.)

The Labor Reader:

The Transport Union

By C. W. FOWLER

Six years ago the TWU held its first open meeting, attended by a handful of workers who braved one of the tightest spy systems in American industry to listen to Mike Quill, Austin Hogan, John Santo, Douglas MacMahon and a few other devoted leaders talk about unionism. A year before that, they met in tiny restaurants, in hallways, in basements and even under bridges. When the union bought a desk, it had to be big enough for Quill to sleep on—there wasn't enough money for him to sleep anywhere else.

BEFORE THE UNION—AND AFTER

There was need for a union. Men and women worked 12 hours a day, seven days a week, the year round. There was no such thing as a day off—not even Christmas or July 4. Pay was enough to keep workers alive, no more; it condemned their families to coldwater flats, their kids to rickets and malnutrition. Of course there was a company union, and as far back as 1916, the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. paid out $3,500,000 for thugs to break an AFL strike.

Today the TWU is organized; it has more than 35,000 members in New York alone, double that number in the country. It has brought wages up, cut hours from 70 and more a week, moved its members out of the slums and their families out of the semi-starvation levels.

A STORY OF STRUGGLE

The story of this union's accomplishments, and particularly of its struggle to hold its victories in the strike of March, 1941, is told in Leo Huberman's new book, "The Great Bus Strike."

The bus strike of March 1941 is already a classic in labor history. The opposition was about as powerful as it could be; an alliance of a huge corporation with profits at 16 percent for 19 consecutive years and a trebled net worth in the same period, and the mayor, the newspapers and police of the largest and richest city in the world. On its side, the union had its members, united and militant, the backing of 400,000 other CIO members in New York, of 5,000,000 throughout the country, and the full support and active aid of President Philip Murray of the CIO, of CIO Director Allan S. Haywood and of John L. Lewis.

The strike involved basic issues. The companies (there were two of them, owned by a holding corporation), wanted to cut pay and worsen conditions. They were willing to be reasonable, however, according to their own lights. They would "arbitrate," provided the sole subject of arbitration was paycuts and worsening of conditions.

The Mayor, the press and the companies thought this was fair. The men thought otherwise. They thought that wage raises, not wage cuts, were fit subjects of arbitration. They thought that working conditions should be better, not worse. They thought they should have more security, not less.

12 DAYS THAT SHOOK THE MAYOR

So the men voted unanimously for a strike. Immediately the companies, the mayor, and the press threw everything in the book at them. The mayor called the strikers and their leaders "bull-headed, obstinate and stupid." The companies spent thousands of dollars on ads denouncing them. The newspapers responded with free company propaganda in their editorials, tracing the whole business to Moscow, and, as an afterthought, Berlin.

Despite the efforts of the mayor, the press and the companies, there was no violence. There were no scabs, either—and no busses rolled. The strike had the best response from the public ever known in a transit tieup. All efforts to whip the straphangers into hysteria failed. And after 12 days, the strike was won. The original offer of the TWU was accepted—and the question of wage raises, not wage cuts, the question of better condtions, not worse, were submitted to arbitration.

Today ,the TWU is fighting as it fought in March, 1941, this time to preserve wages and conditions won on the city-owned subways from attack by the mayor and the officialdom of the City of New York. The mayor asserts such things cannot be the subject of collective bargaining. The TWU and the entire CIO—whose support has again been pledged by Philip Murray—say they can.

When you read "The Great Bus Strike," you will understand why the TWU will win this current struggle for the right to work and to live under decent conditions and at decent wages as it has won other struggles. Every union member and his friend should read it, for its lesson to all labor in America.

One Night In Alabama!

ATLANTA, Ga., June 7—John B. Whitson, CIO field representative working in the South, on his return here from a recent trip to Sheffield, Ala., related calmly, as all in the day's work, an account of a sinister incident that happened during his journey.

Whitson said he registered at a hotel in Sheffield where W. R. Goddard of the CIO Aluminum Workers of America was staying with his wife. After talking to Goddard until about 10:30, Whitson went up to his room to bed.

POLICE AT DOOR

Around two in the morning he was awakened by a violent hammering on his door. When he opened up he found Goddard with two uniformed police and a man in plain clothes outside. At Goddard's request, he dressed and went with him and the police to Goddard's room, where Mrs. Goddard was in bed surrounded by five plainclothes men and two uniformed police.

"The policemen advised us to get out of town as there was a mob of men searching the town for us," Whitson said. "We asked who this group of men were, and the police told us they were a group of angry citizens who were mad because we were in town. We asked who this group of citizens were and the police said they were a group of AFL men.

"They said that the men had torn off some windows of the hotel looking for us.

NO PROTECTION

"The policemen told us they could not give us protection if we remained in the hotel or the town, and urged that we leave at once. Even with the sheriff's force, they would be unable to handle the situation, they said.

"Seeing that the police force was lined up with the AFL group and that we could not expect any kind of local protection, we agreed to leave.

"We loaded our baggage into our cars, while two carloads of men parked nearby. The police informed us that they would escort us out of town. A police car went in front and another in our rear, we were escorted out of Sheffield to a point about one mile beyond the center of the city of Tuscumbia, where the police escort left us."

The unionists thereupon proceeded to Birmingham, without further incident.

Young Coast Actors Serve As 'Panzer' Group For Unions

By JULE SEIBEL

LOS ANGELES, June 7 (FP)—California employers have discovered with a good deal of alarm that the labor movement has a panzer division.

The new force is the Mobile Unit of the Hollywood Theater Alliance, the group that produced "Meet the People" and brought the show to Broadway for a successful run. All over southern California the Mobile Unit is performing before groups of electrical workers, longshoremen, fishermen, jewelry workers, furniture workers and white collar people.

Here's a sample of the unit in Action: Early this spring a telephone call came from the CIO Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers. Facing an NLRB election at the Nazi-controlled plant of the American Potash & Chemical Co. at Trona, the union wanted a show—fast.

DASHED ACROSS DESERT

Piling props and cast into two cars, the unit made a 185-mile dash across the desert and through a mountain snowstorm to the village of Trona. One of the cars was lost in the blizzard, but the first half of the contingent started the performance on time.

The audience yelled for more. It was still applauding at midnight when the second car finally arrived, and it was long past midnight when the complete show ended.

YOUNG ACTORS

The Mobile Unit is composed of a group of young actors who think that the theatre belongs to people, not to stuffed shirts. They work on short order and on shorter budgets, sometimes producing a play—complete with scenery, costumes and lighting effects—in four days.

Fourteen thousand people have seen the unit's performances since January. About 90% of the audiences, it is estimated, had never seen a stage show before.

Michigan CIO Raps Tory Bills

JACKSON, Mich., June 7—Strong protests against anti-labor legislation voiced at the convention of the Michigan CIO Industrial Union Council proved to be the final blow in the strong campaign waged by organized labor to defeat attempts to smash unions in the state by passing laws to hamstring labor.

When the Michigan legislature adjourned three days after the State CIO convention was over, all the dangerous anti-labor bills expire with it, except the Anti-Sabotage Bill, and Gov. Van Wagoner is expected to veto this.

RE-ELECT SCHOLLE

On the last day of the convention, August Scholle was re-elected president of the State Council and Ben Probe was elected secretary-treasurer. Thirteen vice-presidents were also elected to serve with Scholle and Probe as the Council's Executive Board.

In addition to pledging constant and renewed attention to the goal which the CIO always has before it — organizing the unorganized workers, and safeguarding unions from legislative assaults, the State Council reaffirmed its position in opposition to involvement of the United States in the war. It opposed specifically both an expeditionary force and the convoying of ships.

Delegates also passed a resolution opposing "isms", and denounced the teaching of "any foreign ideology within our unions."

Campbell, Electrical Union Leader, Dies Suddenly

Springfield, Mass., June 7—Matthew Campbell, international vice president of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America and regional vice president of the Massachusetts State CIO council, died suddenly at his home here June 1 of a heart attack.

One of the most outstanding labor leaders in western Massachusetts, Campbell personally led organizing drives that brought nearly 10,000 workers in this area under the CIO banner.

He came into prominence in the fall of 1933, when he led a successful strike of 5,000 workers at the local Westinghouse plant for recognition of their union. In 1934 he was elected president of the Westinghouse local, which at that time was affiliated with the AFL, and one year later led it into the CIO. He had served as president of the local ever since.

On Capitol Hill:

Many Labor Bills Due For House Action

By JOHN T. JONES,
CIO Legislative Representative, Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League.

A number of bills of vital concern to labor are scheduled to come up for final action in the House soon.

Relief: The WPA appropriation for the coming year will come up for a vote early this week. The bill provides only 886 million dollars—this is 100 million dollars less than the appropriation of last year. The cut was requested by President Roosevelt, notwithstanding the fact that WPA officials reported recently that close to one million unemployed workers who are eligible for relief could not get on the rolls because of lack of funds. This cut will require the dismissal of 700,000 from WPA. The CIO asked Congress to appropriate at least 2½ billion dollars in order to provide jobs for 3 million unemployed.

Taxation: The House Ways and Means Committee is at present drafting the final tax bill for House action. The committee has already rejected important proposals for reaching incomes of high-profit corporations. Reports indicate that it is not making a serious effort to place the burden of taxation upon those who can best bear it.

Anti-Strike Legislation: A number of representatives of CIO international unions testified within the past few days before a Senate subcommittee against the Ball Bill, S. 683. They presented excellent testimony showing how this type of legislation would seriously handicap union activities and collective bargaining, and would help anti-union employers. It was evident at the hearings that this testimony made a deep impression on Committee members.

The Vinson Bill is still pending in the House, and may be called up for action upon the request of any member of the Rules Committee. No action is expected on it, however, this week. Because of the nation-wide opposition to this bill, Congressman Vinson is planning a new maneuver, and has announced that he will limit his bill to the anti-strike provision and cut out all other sections. This so-called "concession" will not fool labor. The bill would still make strikes illegal and take away from labor this basic right. Unions should inform their Congressmen that they remain unalterably opposed to such compulsory anti-strike legislation.

Wire-Tapping Bill: The Wire-Tapping Bill has been reported out by the House Judiciary Committee. The Rules Committee granted this bill a special rule which makes it possible for the House leadership to bring the bill out for action at any time. Nation-wide opposition of all labor unions and other progressive organizations to this bill has blocked passage of it to date. Continued opposition to it is necessary to prevent its passage in the House.

Concentration Camp Bill: A revised version of the Hobbs Concentration Camp Bill has been reported out by the House Judiciary Committee. This bill is more drastic and far-reaching in its provisions than the earlier drafts. The Judiciary Committee is trying to get a special rule for the bill which would allow early House action on it. Continued opposition to the bill is necessary to prevent its passage in the House.

Cotton Council To Meet Next Week

Chicago, June 7—A call for the third annual convention of the Southern States Cotton Council was issued jointly this week by the Cotton Council in Memphis, Tenn., and the national office of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers here.

The meetings will be held June 14-15 at the Sharecroppers' Camp in Harviell, Mo., 13 miles from Poplar Bluff.

Delegates will attend from locals of cotton sharecroppers, tenant farmers and day laborers in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Alabama and east Texas.

Hit Ruling In 'Day' Case

New York, June 7—Angered by the refusal of Mrs. Elinore Herrick, Nat'l Labor Relations Board regional director, to issue a complaint of unfair labor practices against the strike-bound Jewish Day, the New York Newspaper Guild announced it would take an immediate appeal from her decision.

The Guild has been on strike at the Yiddish language paper for three months.

General Organizer John F. Ryan of the New York Guild said that on May 29 the union had asked the NLRB to disqualify Mrs. Herrick from hearing any Guild cases because she had shown "open hatred toward the Guild."

"A year ago," he continued, "we asked for her removal as regional director. We pointed out then that her interests lay with the employers and that she was not a neutral party."

Ryan charged that Mrs. Herrick's decision was handed down "with a fine sense of timing," coming when "she knew perfectly well that the Guild was scheduled to confer . . . with the management of the Jewish Day in an effort to seek peaceful settlement of the long drawn-out conflict."

A peculiar angle to the NLRB official's decision was the fact that the announcement of her refusal to consider the case was not transmitted to the Newspaper Guild but was made public through a letter to an attorney for the AFL garment workers and for the unaffiliated Jewish Writers Union, both of which have attacked the strike and supported the struck paper.

Ask Polls At Six More GM Plants

Detroit, June 7—The CIO United Automobile Workers today had asked for Labor Board elections in five General Motors plants where the AFL squeezed through with majorities in the April, 1940, NLRB polls.

The plants are: Chevrolet and Fisher Body, both in Norwood, Ohio; Chevrolet and Fisher Body, both in Kansas City, Mo., and New Departure bearings plants, at Meriden, Conn.

RAISE SPURS DRIVE

Walter Reuther, director of the union's GM division, said the recent new contract bringing 10 cents an hour wage increases and other improvements to employes of the big corporation, had pepped up organization efforts at all the plants where the UAW is now seeking polls.

At Norwood, about 80 per cent of the Fisher employes and about 95 per cent of those at Chevrolet are dues-paying members of the UAW, Intl. Rep. Dale Toler asserted. At Kansas City, only the presence of the goon squads is left to remind the workers of the AFL union.

K. P. DUTY: Striking members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at the American Potash & Chemical Plant in Trona, Calif., get to work on some spuds for use in the union commissary. Strike is winning wide support.

Union's Going To College!

Washington, June 7—The CIO United Construction Workers is going to college!

Not to attend classes, but to help badly exploited service workers increase their income and attain decent job security.

At Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, more than half of the service workers have already joined the CIO and are receiving support in their union drive from many students.

PAY VERY LOW

The union is seeking to boost pay which now ranges as low as 30 cents an hour, and to cut the present 50-hour week while gaining overtime pay, seniority and grievance committees.

"We feel that these conditions are undemocratic and unAmerican," declared a statement supporting the union issued by the Oberlin student committee.

DEAR OLD YALE

At Yale, one of the world's wealthiest institutions, employes who receive little benefit from the university's tremendous endowment, have shown interest in a number of mass meetings sponsored by the UCWOC. About 1,000 employes are eligible to join the union at Yale, including janitors, busboys, maids, electricians, steamfitters and construction workers.

An inquiry into conditions at Yale a year or two ago revealed that many employes are paid so little they must supplement their incomes by going on the relief rolls. This brought violent criticism from many New Haven taxpayers who pointed out that the wealthy institution escapes taxation altogether.

Ask Change In Copper Wage Basis

Magna, Utah, June 7—A proposal to change the system on which Utah copper miners' wages are computed was urged here by Pres. Reid Robinson of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at a conference of Utah local union leaders.

Robinson was authorized to ask James W. Wade of the Tintic Standard Mining Co., head of the state copper mine operators' group, to meet with union representatives.

Copper miners' wages have been based on the price of the metal in the open market, with wages going up as the price of copper rises and dropping as it falls.

Under the national defense emergency, however, "the U. S. government has in effect fixed the price level for these metals through the voluntary ocooperation of the employers in the industry," Robinson noted.

"This has in turn fixed the wages of the employes without any consent or participation by the union . . .

Labor & the Law:

NLRB OKs Voting By Finks

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

In December, 1938, the National Labor Relations Board held in the Sartorious case that where there was a current labor dispute and some of the employes were on strike, the Board would not permit those men hired by the employer to replace the strikers to vote in an election conducted by the Board.

A few days ago Chairman Millis and Board Member Leiserson voted in another case to reverse this doctrine. Board Member Edwin Smith dissented and protested against the participation in the election of employes hired to replace strikers.

THREAT TO UNIONS

This reversal by a majority of the Board marks an extremely important departure by the Board from its previous interpretation of the Labor Act and threatens the interests of all unions whose members may be involved in a strike.

Under the Wagner Labor Act, strikers are employes as long as the dispute is current. The employer may not discharge the strikers for union activities. Strikers, in effect, have the same protection under the Labor Act as any other employe of the employer. While it is true that workers hired during a strike which has been caused by unfair labor practices do not have to be discharged by the employer in order to obtain reinstatement for the strikers, however, anyone sympathetic with the interests of organized labor recognizes that the right of strikers to their jobs is certainly superior to that of the strikebreakers hired during the strike.

BLOW TO BARGAINING

Certainly the present need of having a satisfactory functioning of the mediation machinery of the government should compel employers to negotiate with striking employes looking toward a return by them to work and a termination of the labor dispute.

The rule established by the majority opinion in the recent Labor Board case would have exactly the opposite effect of discouraging employers to bargain with strikers. All that an employer has to do when a strike occurs is to hire a sufficient number of strikebreakers to out-vote the strikers.

The majority, in their opinion, indicate their attitude where they say that:

". . . but where the so-called strikebreakers are made ineligible to vote, it would mean that the scales would be turned against the employer who is not charged with any unfair labor practice.

"Somewhat related to this, it is said that unless the Sartorious doctrine is applied the settlement of strikes is interfered with. It would be more accurate to say that the settlement of disputes on the strikers' terms may be interfered with."

PENALIZES STRIKERS

This expression on the part of the majority reflects a desire actually to penalize strikers. Instead of maintaining a neutral attitude contended by the majority of the Board, the effect of the new decision would encourage employers to engage in strikebreaking by hiring scabs in the hope that in this manner the employer would be relieved from the need of bargaining with striking employees by out-voting them through an election with the aid of the scabs and strikebreakers.

The majority opinion of the Board is thoroughly unjustified and is not in the true spirit of the protection guaranteed by the Act to striking employes. Its practical effect may be extremely disastrous.

For this reason the attitude of organized labor should be very strongly expressed and demonstrated in opposition to this unwarranted and unjustified reversal of the previous policy established by the Board which has been consistent with the declared policy of the Wagner Act.

Murray Blasts Tory Drive

Hot Off The Wires!

PORTLAND, Oreg., June 14—Pity the poor fellow who gains his knowledge of the labor news through the columns of the Oregon AFL Labor Press, published here.

In a recent issue of his weekly paper, Editor Eugene S. Allen published a startling story headed: "AFL VICTORY IN FORD ELECTION IS FORECAST." The story said quite solemnly that the Ford workers would vote 90% for the AFL.

The trouble with the story, as everybody in Portland except Editor Allen knew, was that the Ford workers had voted nearly 3 to 1 for the CIO nine days before the fanciful story appeared in the Oregon Labor Press!

Steel Union Exposes Waste At Curtiss-Wright Plant; Offers Improvement Ideas

PITTSBURGH, June 14—An offer of union-management cooperation looking toward the increasing of wages by 10 cents an hour and an elimination of appalling production inefficiencies was suggested today to the Curtiss-Wright Corp. by Clinton S. Golden, eastern regional director for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Golden's letter was written shortly after SWOC members took a 98 per cent strike vote. The dispute has since been certified to the National Defense Mediation Board, with the union extending the contract's expiration until June 20.

200 WASTED MONTHLY

The steel union leader wrote to Pres. Robert Earle of the company that SWOC researchers had discovered that "the defense program is losing from four to five hundred airplane propellers a month at Neville Island, and one out of every four propellers produced is being scrapped monthly." In the last eleven months, "2,195 propellers have been scrapped," he added.

"This is a monthly average of 200 propellors. We hesitate to set forth the causes for such an appalling record because of the obvious embarrassment it would be to your management.

"It would take a work stoppage of many weeks to lose this many propellors."

WELDING OUTPUT LOW

Golden said that production in the welding department is being held back "at least 33 per cent, and probably more" by poor quality welding rod. The SWOC had a piece of the rod, which costs $400 a ton, tested by a metallurgist and can offer suggestions for improvements.

"In order to get a suitable welding rod so output in the welding department can be raised by one third, the welders have had to sign a petition which, at this moment, has failed to correct the condition. A joint union-management production committee could take care of such matters promptly. The defense program makes the establishment of a union-management cooperation program imperative.

"Mismanagement is rampant and inexcusable. Out of a sense of decency to your subordinates, I shall not record any except those practices of mismanagement that vitally impinge upon the question of wages. The bungling of this matter naturally has affected production adversely."

CIO Swamps AFL at Kopper Coke Plant

Kearney, N. J., June 14—An AFL union at the Koppers Coke plant gained an unenviable "most unpopular man in his class" distinction at a Labor Board election here.

The AFL local, whose contract with the Koppers Co. expired on May 28, polled exactly five votes.

The remaining 498 were cast for Local 12192 of District 50, United Mine Workers.

Months before the expiration date of the AFL contract, the Seaboard employes abandoned the AFL and organized the UMW local.

Their action sprang from dissatisfaction with AFL representatives who usurped the titled offices of the local and subsequently conducted the business of the union in an arbitrary and high handed manner, according to R. W. Hanson, District 50 Regional Director.

WON STRIKE: Virginia Specht of Dayton, Ohio, used to be a school teacher. Now she's working in the Wolf Creek Soap Co., and as strike treasurer for Local 13001 of the United Mine Workers, she helped bring victory and pay increases for 33 fellow workers.

CIO Lifts Wages In Cleveland

Cleveland, Ohio, June 14 — Increased wages have been won in every contract which has come up for renewal in the last three weeks in the Cleveland district of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, William F. Donovan, SWOC district director reported this week.

In some cases the pay boosts were as high as 15 cents an hour, Donovan said.

Calls On All Unions For Immediate Fight Against Repression

WASHINGTON, June 14—Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO today wrote to all affiliates and officials to launch an immediate counterattack against reactionary efforts to rob labor of its right to strike and of its fundamental civil rights.

The CIO leader referred to such recent developments as the use of armed forces to break strikes, the administrative order to cancel draft deferment of defense industry employes who strike, and proposed legislation to force through compulsory arbitration.

"Repression and the use of force are not the methods that can be or will be countenanced by the American people for the establishment of wholesome and sound industrial relations," Murray wrote.

"This is not the American way, or consistent with democracy."

As Murray's letter was being sent to CIO leaders in all parts of the nation, Congressional reactionaries, headed by a group of poll-taxers from the South, were having a field day in both the House and Senate, pushing through a variety of anti-labor bills amidst a burst of florid oratory.

Win Wage Boost

Danville, Ill.—Renewal of an agreement with the General Refractories Co., under which members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers obtained increased wages and additional holidays, was announced here by union officials.

Propose Wage Scale For Shipyards

Washington, June 14 — Wage rates for workers in Atlantic coast shipyards were tentatively set at $1.12 an hour for first class mechanics with proportionate increases for all other categories by a sub-committee of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee set up by OPM.

The proposed zone rates, agreed upon after six weeks of conferences between union, government and employer representatives, will be referred to the General Conference for approval, officials of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers said.

Fireworks!

ROCKLAND, Mass., June 14—There were fireworks a-plenty when the management of the National Fireworks Co. fired seven union leaders in the hope of halting an organization drive.

District 50 of the United Mine Workers filed charges with the NLRB, and won an order directing the company to reinstate the men.

DIE CASTERS STRIKE: Members of the CIO Natl. Association of Die Casting Workers set up picket lines around the Cleveland, Ohio, plant of the Aluminum Co. of America when they struck for wage increases. Walkout ended after a day when the union accepted a compromise offer suggested by the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

ARMY TAKES OVER PLANT: With rifle bayonets gleaming in the bright sun, U. S. Army soldiers arrive at the gates of the North American Aviation Co., in Los Angeles and start to open up the picket lines. The strike, called by Local 683 of the United Automobile Workers, was declared unauthorized after the men refused advice of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Richard T. Frankensteen, that they go back to work.

Wage Parleys To Resume At North American; Plant Under Army Control

LOS ANGELES, June 14—Employes of the North American Aviation Corp. plant were back at their jobs today, while negotiators representing the CIO United Automobile Workers prepared to resume negotiations looking toward a contract, a 75-cent minimum wage and a 10-cent an hour wage increase.

Under terms of an agreement worked out with the National Defense Mediation Board in Washington, the negotiated pay boosts will be retroactive to May 1. The present minimum rate is only 50 cents an hour.

The negotiating group will be headed by Richard T. Frankensteen, head of the UAW's aviation division. Resumption of the negotiations—which have been in progress since mid-April when the UAW won a Labor Board election at the big plant—have so far brought no agreement, with the company stubbornly resisting the union's wage demands and suggestions for general improvements in working conditions.

The company, a subsidiary of General Motors, last year made profits of close to $900 per employe, while paying its workers a minimum of only 50 cents per hour. Its annual profits have amounted to about 200 per cent on its original investment. In 1939 and 1940 they were over $7,000,000 each year on an original investment of about $3,500,000.

ARMY AT PLANT

Resumption of negotiations followed the end of an unauthorized strike by members of Local 683 of the UAW after Pres. Roosevelt dispatched 3,500 soldiers to the plant and ordered that it be reopened.

The strike began on Thursday, and on Saturday, in a national radio speech, Frankensteen denounced it as "communist-inspired". On Sunday, at a strike mass meeting, Frankensteen urged the workers to end the strike. Local officials, at the same meeting, advised continuation of the strike, and were later suspended from office by Frankensteen.

EXECUTIVE ORDER

On Monday, President Roosevelt issued an executive order directing the Army to take over the plant and open it. The order was approved by Associate OPM Director Sidney Hillman, Attorney General Jackson and Harry L. Hopkins, who were with the President when he signed it.

Immediately U. S. troops, reportedly trained for "strike duty" at Camp Lewis, took over the plant and with fixed bayonets drove the pickets away from it. One picket, a former war veteran, was bayoneted and removed to a hospital with a leg wound, and 16 others were placed under military arrest.

In a telegram dispatched to Frankensteen on Sunday, before the troops were ordered to take over the plant, CIO Pres. Murray urged the ending of the strike.

TEXT OF MESSAGE

His message follows in full:

"As president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I strongly urge our membership involved in the North American Aircraft strike to accept your suggestion providing for resumption of operations, with the distinct understanding that in so doing our union and its members will not surrender any of their statutory rights under the National Labor Relations Act or in any other way yield any of the privileges accorded free Americans under the Constitution of the United States and Congressional enactments.

"In making this special plea to our membership to return to work, I am doing so because I do believe our UAW-CIO should comply with their commitments made through its bona fide representatives in the City of Washington with the National Defense Mediation Board and the North American Aviation Company to continue at work through negotiations, with the added provision that all matters agreed upon would be retroactive to May 1.

"It is my considered judgment that pursuance of this policy bespeaks constructive progress for the organization, while continuing of the strike under existing circumstances might, on the other hand, thwart the progress of the UAW-CIO in the aviation industry. It is the purpose of the national CIO to lend every possible assistance to the workers employed by the North American Company in the attainment of their wholesome objectives. It is fully recognized that the employes have just grievances, for which they should secure full redress."

Textile Workers Gain 37½c Minimum Wage

WASHINGTON, June 14—A minimum wage rate of 37½ cents an hour was set for the textile industry this week by the Wage-Hour Administration. The new minimum will go into effect June 30.

Some 300,000 workers, the largest number covered by an industrial wage order, will have their pay increased under the order. Pay of workers in the lowest wage scale, now getting $13 a week, will be raised to $15.

As defined by the Wage-Hour Division, the industry includes the manufacture of cotton textile; certain finished products such as towels, sheets and pillow cases; silk, rayon, linen and jute textiles; and cordage and twine. Around 650,000 are employed altogether in the branches of the industry affected by the order.

UNANIMOUS

The 37½-cent minimum was recommended unanimously by a committee representing employers, labor and the public.

General Philip Fleming, administrator of the Division, said that when he had scheduled the hearing, he had asked for evidence on "what, if any, provisions in the wage order were necessary to prevent circumvention of the minimum wage by deductions for purchases in company stores and rentals in company-owned houses."

This is a matter of administration, he said, and was not a part of the committee's recommendation.

"The wage order to go into effect June 30 will contain no provisions regarding deductions but I will have a representative take further evidence at hearings in the textile centers with a view to possible amendment of the order in this respect."

MANY TO BENEFIT

The Division estimated that the 37½-cent rate will bring increases to 207,000 cotton workers, 28,700 in textile products; 47,000 in silk and rayon; 5,000 in cordage and twine; 1,500 in jute textiles and some 10,000 in dyeing plants, linen mills and other establishments.

The first textile wage order under the Wage-Hour Law which went into effect Oct. 24, 1939, called for a 32½ hourly minimum.

GOUGERS LIFT RENTS

Vandergrift, Pa.—Some landlords in this town have lifted rents by as much as $15 and $20 a month, the Kiski Valley Industrial Union Council reported after a survey.

CORRECTION

In the issue of June 2, THE CIO NEWS erroneously stated that Harry Bridges had testified in his deportation hearings that he had once been a member of the Marine Workers Industrial Union.

The NEWS is informed that Bridges made no such testimony at any time, and hereby expresses regret for the error.

Avert Strikes At GypsumCo.

CHICAGO, June 14—Tentative agreement on a formula for negotiation of a national contract today had averted a threatened strike by District 50, United Mine Workers, in 18 plants of the far-flung U. S. Gypsum Co.

A June 11 midnight deadline passed peacefully after management and union representatives gave their OK to provisions submitted by John W. Cofer of the U. S. Conciliation Service.

The plan, as tentatively approved by the union negotiators and the company, calls for cooperation with the NLRB on investigation of the facts in the District 50 demand for a system-wide bargaining unit; immediate negotiations at the East Chicago, Ind., plant, with representatives of all locals participating, with the pact to be adopted for other plants with local modification as determined to be necessary; substitution of the individual contracts with one national agreement if and when the Labor Board designates all the plants as one large bargaining unit.

Toledo—A contract with the Phoenix Box Co., reached after long negotiations, has been announced by Local 12 of the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Federal Workers Seek Overtime Pay Law

WASHINGTON, June 14—The United Federal Workers of America, CIO affiliate, today moved to secure the introduction of an overtime bill to cover all federal workers who are being called upon by their departments to work more than 39 hours a week.

The situation has been brought to a head, according to the UFWA, because of the War Department's action Saturday, lengthening the workday by one hour, and increasing the work week to 44 hours. The practice is going on with varying degrees of overtime in the Civil Service Commission and other agencies, and is spreading throughout the service.

"Federal workers in common with all organized workers have for years fought for the 39-hour week, 7-hour day," stated UFWA Secretary-Treasurer, Eleanor Nelson. "While we appreciate the needs of the national emergency, we maintain the government should do what Congress has legislated for private employers in the Fair Labor Standard Act, namely, pay time and a half for necessary overtime."

The UFWA is hopeful that Congress will act favorably on such legislation, since it has already approved overtime pay this session for certain field employees in War and Navy. The union points out that the action is "discriminatory and that there is lack of uniformity in payment of overtime." It was learned that even in normal times Federal workers put in millions of hours of uncompensated overtime and it is certain the practice will be increased.

The UFWA contends that Congress as "the nation's largest employer" has a duty to other employers of setting a good example in maintaining fair labor standards.

Frankensteen Raps U. S. Role in Bridges Case

SAN FRANCISCO, June 14—Richard Frankensteen, national director of the Aircraft Division of the United Automobile Workers, was subpoenaed as an FBI witness today in the Harry Bridges deportation trial, but the prosecution's plans boomeranged. In a last minute attempt to discredit Bridges, prosecutor Del Guercio tried to show that the longshore leader supported the strike at the North American Aviation Company in Los Angeles against the position of CIO President Philip Murray and other national officials.

Bridges was on the stand again to refute testimony of Harry Lundeberg, and on cross-examination Del Guercio questioned him about the strike at North American, and his position regarding it. Bridges said he was in favor of the strikers' demand for higher wages, but that he had not supported the strike, and in fact had called State CIO President Philip Connelly last Sunday to tell him to get the workers back into the plant.

He stated that at the end of the conversation he told Connelly to give his "best wishes" to the strikers. Del Guercio insisted that this meant Bridges supported the strike, in spite of his testimony to the contrary.

NOT COMMUNISTS

Frankensteen said that the local strike committee, led by regional officials Wyndham Mortimer, John M. Orr, Arthur Kearns, Stanford Douglas, and Johnson G. Orr, refused to carry out the policy of UAW President R. J. Thomas and the national CIO to call off the strike, and that he suspended them.

Del Guercio promptly asked if they were communists, and Frankensteen indignantly answered, "All five men whom I suspended are definitely not communists." The prosecutor gave up in disgust and excused the witness, but Frankensteen was not through. He demanded to be allowed to make a statement, and Judge Sears allowed it. Said the UAW leader:

"It is my considered judgment that some of the patterns set in this hearing are ominous ones for the future of legal action in the U. S. After one exhaustive trial in which Mr. Bridges was completely cleared of the charges against him, there is a hollow mockery in this hearing and a double jeopardy which cannot but prejudice American workingmen against their government.

"They resent obvious unfairness and discriminatory practice whether it is practiced by the manufacturers for whom they work, or the government which they respect.

"Attacks such as this one, aimed at a militant labor leader who has made outstanding gains for the members of his union, and who has genuinely represented the interests of the American workers, exhaust the patience of citizens and cause them to seriously question the purpose of legitimate functions of government which may be exercised in the future."

5,000 Minneapolis AFL Teamsters Join CIO

WASHINGTON, June 14—Telegrams received this week by Chairman A. D. Lewis of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, CIO affiliate, told of the transfer in allegiance from the AFL Teamsters Union to the UCWOC of 5,000 truckers in Minneapolis, Minn.

Membership of the dominant teamsters' group in Minneapolis voted at a meeting there June 9 to sever relations with the AFL Teamsters and to request affiliation with the CIO union, Miles B. Dunne, president of the Minneapolis local, wired Chairman Lewis.

The UCWOC explained that this large local is a key factor in the trucking industry in the north central section of the United States. Its members operate trucks doing much of the hauling in Minnesota, Wisconsin, northern Iowa, eastern North and South Dakota, as well as handling long-haul operations from coast-to-coast across the northern part of the nation.

FOLLOWED CONFERENCES

Action by the members of the big Minneapolis local came as a result of recent conferences in Washington between Dunne, Kelly Postal, secretary, and others, with Chairman Lewis of the UCWOC. Officers of the local explained that its membership had become disgusted with paying heavy dues into the AFL Teamsters organization and receiving nothing in return.

This transfer of affiliation of the Minneapolis teamsters marks the biggest single break away from the AFL unions associated with the construction industry to the CIO, though in the past year and a half a substantial number of former AFL members have entered the ranks of the UCWOC, CIO industrial union for the construction industry.

Murray Urges CIO Rally Against Anti-labor Drive

WASHINGTON, June 14—An urgent call for action to stop repressive acts against labor and against the right to strike now being pushed by reactionary Congressmen and public officials was sent to all CIO affiliates by President Philip Murray this week.

Murray's call warned that anti-strike measures in the House and Senate, together with the use of armed force to break strikes and the order to cancel strikers' draft deferments were intended "to destroy organized labor" and to extend "enforced labor to practically every major industrial plant."

"Repression and the use of force are not the methods that can be or will be countenanced by the American people for the establishment of wholesome and sound industrial relations," he said. "This is not the American way or consistent with democracy."

ANTI-LABOR BILLS

In Congress, anti-labor forces are using a "national hysteria that has prevailed for some time" to push forward not only the Vinson cooling-off bill to "freeze existing wage standards and employment conditions" but also to push other measures that would blacklist strikers and take over plants where strikes occur.

Referring to the plant seizure amendment proposed by poll-tax Senator Connally of Texas, Murray said: "This amendment does not purport to afford any protection to the rights of labor when such plants are taken over by the government.

"In other words, the amendment is intended solely to inject the government into every industrial dispute, with the threat that if the workers engage in a strike the plant will be seized by the U. S. government, the strike broken and the rights of the workers destroyed, following which the plant would be returned to the management."

ENFORCED LABOR

The "work-or-fight" order issued by Secretary of War Stimson and General Hershey, acting head of the conscription service, which directs local draft boards to cancel strikers' deferments was described by Murray as "a flagrant abuse of the conscription law and an open breach of faith with labor.

"The perversion of the conscription law to the establishment of enforced labor in the U. S. is deeply repugnant to the American way of doing things," he said. "This action is intended to break strikes regardles of the full merits of labor's demands in the particular dispute."

RIGHT TO STRIKE

Injection of armed forces into industrial disputes "must also be condemned," he added. "Such action can only serve to create a status of enforced labor in this nation, and enforced labor can only create bitterness on the part of working people."

The CIO has only one objective, he pointed out—"to obtain a better

Frenzied Congress Rushes Blacklist, Anti-Strike Bills

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, June 14—Congressional attacks on the right to strike mounted to a new frenzy this week as both House and Senate drove through on measures to blacklist strikers and to provide for seizure of plants and for government operation where strikes occur.

In the House, a final vote of 350 to 1 passed an Army appropriation bill with two amendments, one denying payment to any "person" failing to obey a Mediation Board recommendation, the other denying payment to anyone who picketed a defense plant during a strike.

In the Senate, the Connally amendment providing for plant seizure during strikes went through by 67 to 7. This amendment was described by President Murray as designed to inject the government into every industrial dispute until "the strike is broken and the rights of the workers destroyed, following which the plant would be returned to the management."

The two House amendments were opposed before the vote by a number of Congressmen, but were assured of passage when Majority Leader Rep. McCormick announced that he was supporting them. The one final vote in opposition was cast by Rep. Marcantonio of New York, and involved a vote against the entire bill.

AMENDMENTS PLUS

The Senate measure, offered by Sen. Connally from the poll-tax state of Texas, was garnished with three amendments to the amendment—one by Sen. Byrd of Virginia (also a poll-tax state) which condemned strikes and lockouts in toto, the other by Sen. Ball of Minnesota, which provided compulsory mediation, and the third by Sen. LaFollette of Wisconsin, which was a declaration in favor of collective bargaining and the rights of workers.

Only seven votes were cast against the Connally measure. The vote on Byrd's proposal was close; 36 to 34. The Ball compulsory mediation amendment went through by 46 to 25, and the LaFollette declaration was unanimous—72 to zero.

BALL AMENDMENT

The Ball amendment carries out the purposes of Ball's cooling-off measure, companion piece to the House Vinson bill. Ostensibly a restriction of the Connally measure, it provides that the former shall not apply unless either workers or employers refuse to use existing government mediation or conciliation services, or, having used them, refuse to abide by their recommendations.

In the Ball bill, workers who struck while the dispute was before the mediation board would be sub-

Bethlehem To Bargain If Steel Union Wins June 25 Elections

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, June 14—The Bethlehem Steel Corp. today broke its historic anti-union tradition and consented to negotiate a contract with the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee if the union wins Natl. Labor Relations Board elections in six plants on June 25.

Plants where the polls will be conducted are: the Cambria plant, at Johnstown, Pa.; Pottstown Works, Pottstown, Pa.; Rankin Works, Rankin, Pa.; Leetsdale Works, Leetsdale, Pa.; Los Angeles Plant at Vernon, Calif.; and the Los Angeles Works at Los Angeles.

The agreement, which was signed by Lee Pressman, SWOC general counsel, and J. Larkin, Bethlehem personnel executive, provides that all the plants in which the SWOC wins a majority of the votes will be lumped together as one bargaining unit, with the company recognizing SWOC as the sole bargaining agency.

OTHERS INCLUDED

The Lackawanna (N. Y.) plant—where SWOC won a 3-1 victory more than a month ago, may also be brought into the single bargaining unit, as may any other company plants where the CIO affiliate may win a majority vote at some future time.

"Upon request, after the union shall have been certified by the regional director as having received a majority of the valid ballots cast at any one or more of the steel works or fabricating works of the company," the agreement stipulates, "the company will enter into negotiations with the union for an agreement with the union covering the employes in the single appropriate collective bargaining unit . . . The agreement so negotiated shall be reduced to writing and signed by the company and the union and will be extended from time to time to include such additional plants as may be entitled to be brought into said unit as above provided . . ."

Possibility that the election in Pottstown might be delayed was seen after an AFL union, which has a place on the ballot at the Pottstown Works, objected to the presence of an independent union on the ballot. If the AFL presses its demands for elimination of the independent union, formal NLRB hearings on the election and the unions to participate, may be necessary.

Guild to Meet

Detroit, June 14—The eighth convention of the American Newspaper Guild opens here June 23. The International Executive Board will convene two days before the convention opens.

Convention

Boston, June 14—The annual convention of the Leather Division of the International Fur & Leather Workers Union will open June 28 at the Hotel Picadilly in New York City, James J. Chernery, president of the Division announced this week.

Miners Accept Board Plan As Basis For Negotiations

Washington, June 14—Proposals for settlement of the bituminous coal dispute between the Southern operators and the United Mine Workers of America as offered by the Natl. Defense Mediation Board last week were accepted as "a basis for renewing negotiations with the dissenting operators" by the UMWA here.

This acceptance was announced by President John L. Lewis in a letter to the Mediation Board which cited a resolution of the UMWA that read:

"Resolved that we accept the recommendations in principle, with reservations affecting form, fact, details and technical application; that the report constitute a basis for renewing negotiations with the dissenting operators."

UNANIMOUS VOTE

Lewis further informed the Board that this resolution "was adopted by the unanimous rising vote of 150 members of the Policy Committee of the United Mine Workers of America."

The Board's proposal recommended that the wage differential, chief issue between the miners and the Southern operators, be dropped, in addition to other points.

Die Casters OK Mediation Board Proposal; Win Raises In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, June 14.—A proposal offered by the National Defense Mediation Board for settling the two-day strike of 7,000 workers of the Aluminum Co. of America here was ratified Wednesday at a mass membership meeting of the CIO National Association of Die Casting Workers.

The proposed settlement was signed in Washington the day before by officials of the union and the company. It calls for a general 1-cent-an-hour pay increase with an additional 3 cents for workers on the 3 to 11 p.m. shift, and a 5-cent increase for those on the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift.

The basic starting rate was also increased from 72 to 73 cents an hour.

HAILS VICTORY

Edward T. Cheyfitz, NADCW executive secretary, hailed the agreement as a victory which placed the five Alcoa plants under a CIO contract for the first time.

"The strike is officially ended and the men are ready to return to work," Cheyfitz said after the union members had ratified the terms of the settlement. "This is a real victory. The men are going back into the plants with a signed agreement and with a real union. I am very happy that the strike has terminated."

Union members were set to go on strike at midnight on June 4, but voted to postpone the walkout when a telegram arrived from Clarence A. Dykstra, chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board, informing them that their case had been turned over to the Board by Secretary of Labor Perkins.

A union negotiating committee of 12 headed by Secretary Cheyfitz went to Washington at once to confer with the Board. On June 9 the workers walked out on strike, and stayed out until the Mediation Board's formula for settling the dispute was ratified by the membership upon the unanimous recommendation of a union policy committee composed of 300 members.

A union spokesman said that the workers had grown tired of weeks of fruitless negotiations with company officials, during which "every major proposal made by the union had been turned down on the basis that it was contrary to so-called 'company policy.'"

8c Raise At Briggs

DETROIT, June 14—Eight-cent-an-hour wage increases were won today for 18,500 employes of the Briggs Body Co.'s auto and aviation divisions.

Minimum wages were increased a nickel an hour, to 85 cents, it was revealed by the United Automobile Workers. The workers also won a $45 vacation bonus payment.

Just What The Doctor Ordered

DETROIT, June 14—Proving that the wage and hour demands of the CIO are no drug on the market, employes of the Parke-Davis Co. voted overwhelmingly last week for District 50 of the United Mine Workers.

The company is the largest manufacturer of pharmaceutical products in the world. Its workers voted 941 to 371 for the CIO affiliate.

The drug industry in Detroit has long been unorganized and anti-union, but under the impact of District 50's organizing campaign, a quick "clean-up" of other plants is expected.

CRACKING DOWN

Attack On Democracy

"Democracy, with its basic and fundamental institutions, is under serious attack," said CIO President Philip Murray in his recent statement assailing the use of troops in industrial disputes, the abuse of the conscription law for strikebreaking purposes, the compulsory arbitration measures passed by the House, and other antilabor legislation pending in Congress.

At its last convention, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, by unanimous vote, made it emphatically clear that it will "defend the free institutions of this republic . . . not only against our foreign enemies who may dare to attack us directly, but also against those forces within our nation who place the profits of their financial and industrial enterprises above the well-being of the millions of common people."

It is in this patriotic spirit that Pres. Murray has issued his urgent warning and call to action to the whole membership of the CIO.

He points out that anti-democratic forces within the country have taken advantage of current hysteria to strike a number of most serious blows against the democratic rights of labor.

The Vinson bill, the compulsory arbitration amendments passed by the House, and the Connally amendment to the conscription law to provide for governmental strikebreaking are aimed at the destruction of organized labor, Murray declares. He urges that action be taken at once by all unions and members of the CIO to fight these measures and to call upon their representatives in Congress to defeat them.

Murray similarly condemns in the strongest terms "the perversion of the conscription law to the establishment of enforced labor in the United States" and "the injection of armed forces of the nation into a private industrial dispute."

"Repression and the use of force are not the methods that can be or will be countenanced by the American people for the establishment of wholesome and sound industrial relations," the CIO President declares. "This is not the American way or consistent with democracy."

Class Legislation

The actions of both the Senate and the House in the past few days furnish a cynical commentary on the betrayal of their democratic trust by many legislators who have acted as representatives of selfish antilabor interests instead of representing the common people whose votes sent them to Congress.

On the same day that the House, by a vote of 114 to 156, defeated the Casey amendment to provide an adequate appropriation for WPA, the Senate passed the Connally amendment to the conscription law to provide for governmental strikebreaking.

Just before, the House had passed the Case and Pace amendments to the army appropriation bill to destroy the right to strike by giving decisions of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board the force of compulsory arbitration.

The antilabor forces are on the rampage in Congress, it seems, passing one piece of class legislation after another on behalf of profiteering employers, while they refuse to grant to countless unemployed Americans the meager security of WPA jobs.

The American people have suffered many assaults in the past from the agents of selfish corporate interests, who suborn supposed public representatives into supporting their schemes for wage-cutting, union-busting and destruction of the workers' democratic rights.

But the American people have never heretofore taken these assaults lying down. Let us hope that the people's faith in democracy is still sufficiently sturdy, so that they will rise in their anger against the present disgraceful splurge of class legislation, and let their representatives in Congress know their sentiments in no uncertain terms.

None of the present antilabor measures has yet been passed by both Houses of Congress. So there is still time to bring the members of Congress to their senses and to remind them that they were elected to represent the whole people and to defend democracy, not to betray it by legislating in the interests of profiteers who seek to make a killing in this national emergency.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE American people have enjoyed too much freedom, we are told. "We are too uppity and independent. We should therefore be dragooned and disciplined by dictatorial decree. Our standard of living must be kept down, lest it interfere with the profiteering of our betters. We must be compelled to work, by armed force, if necessary, whether we like it or not. And if we show any democratic independence or try to better our conditions, we must be thrown into prison or the army."

Strange doctrine that, you say, to be preached in the United States. What foreign dictator would dare to put over such conditions on the American people?

Yet if you change the words "American people" and "we" in the first paragraph to "labor," you will recognize that exactly that doctrine is being daily preached in the press, and orated and acted upon in Congress.

Labor is spoken about as if it were something separate and apart from the American people, instead of being most of the American people. So publishers lecture, scold and threaten labor; decrees are issued to dragoon labor; and bills are passed to deprive labor of its democratic rights.

And there are people applauding this "crackdown on labor" who would be shocked if they realized that what they are actually applauding is the destruction of their own liberties and of American democracy.

IF THE above seems somewhat of an exaggeration, just consider the bewildering series of blows which have been struck against American democratic rights in the past few weeks, under cover of a stimulated hysteria over one or two short-lived strikes.

(1) A decree has been issued to use the conscription law for strikebreaking purposes. Draft boards have been directed to re-examine and cancel deferments of strikers. This means, in effect, the introduction of forced labor in this land of the free; and, incidentally, the treatment of army service as a punishment, in this home of the brave.

(2) The House of Representatives has passed two measures to establish compulsory arbitration—another form of forced labor which is abhorrent to the American democratic tradition and which has always heretofore been successfully resisted by American labor.

(3) For the first time since 1894, when President Cleveland broke the Pullman strike, the bayonets of the federal army have been turned against American strikers; and armed force is openly advocated as a weapon to be used against American workers.

(4) The Senate of the United States has passed the Connally amendment to the conscription law, under which the government would be injected into industrial disputes, with the threat to seize struck plants and break strikes on behalf of the owners. This measure carefully provides against any infringement of the property rights of employers but contains no provision to protect the rights of labor.

THERE is some confusion in the public mind about the meaning of the words mediation and arbitration. This confusion has been deliberately taken advantage of in the passage through the House of the Case and Pace amendments to a military appropriation measure.

The National Defense Mediation Board was established, as its name implies, for the purpose of mediating industrial disputes. The essence of mediation is its voluntary character, the idea being that the mediator brings together the two parties to a dispute and assists them in working out an agreement which is mutually satisfactory.

Arbitration, on the other hand, means the handing down of a decision by the arbitrator, which both parties to the dispute must accept. Arbitration is voluntarily provided for in many union contracts when it involves the agreement of both parties in advance to accept the decision of an arbitrator chosen by both.

Compulsory arbitration, however, is something different again. It is in complete conflict with free collective bargaining and abolishes the right to strike—since it would compel a labor union to accept a government-decreed settlement of an industrial dispute, whether or not it wishes to submit the dispute to arbitration.

The House amendments would make the Mediation Board a compulsory arbitration board. Under them the Board could hand down any decision, no matter how unsatisfactory to labor, and any worker who struck against such an award could be denied re-employment at any plant producing material for the government.

With government orders now extending into nearly every industrial plant in the country, this would mean the almost complete blacklisting of such workers and denial of their right to earn a living.

WPA IN JEOPARDY: Hospitals, roads, schools, dams and parks were built by this man and millions of other WPA workers. But hundreds of thousands have already been tossed off WPA rolls, and more face the same prospect if Congress passes the small appropriation proposed by Pres. Roosevelt. CIO President Philip Murray last week urged all Representatives to support the Casey amendment for greater funds for our jobless army.

Economic Outlook:

Runaway Prices Not Due To Unions' Wage Increases

WASHINGTON, June 14—"Runaway prices now threatening the country" do not arise from "wage increases or increasing money in the hands of the low-income group," the CIO Economic Outlook says in its current issue released today.

On the contrary, the present price increases and consequent rising cost of living are due to four basic causes:

1. "Shortage of specific essential materials, specialized equipment and (very soon) transportation.

2. "Monopoly control of prices.

3. "Price speculation and excessive accumulation of inventories.

4. "Unplanned public purchasing."

Most serious and spectacular "explosion of price rises" will come from metal shortages, the Outlook points out, with aluminum the most notable at the present time. Already aluminum has been completely withdrawn from civilian use, with all production going to the arms program.

PRIORITIES

Priorities, by which products are reserved for consumption by arms industries, have been placed not only on aluminum but on a number of other industrial materials, including nickel, tungsten, magnesium, zinc, copper, synthetic rubber, certain kinds of steel and some chemicals.

In addition, shortages in fuel oil and gasoline are expected, due largely to the transfer of a large number of tankers to the British government and to the U. S. armed forces.

"These shortages put the most serious kind of pressure on the price structure, not only of the basic materials, but also of parts fabricated of the materials and of assembled products into which the fabricated parts go," the Outlook points out.

"Even when prices are set in the face of such shortages as these, bootleg and illegal markets grow up where the price goes sky high."

PRODUCTION NEEDED

The answer to this is not to blame increased wages for skyrocketing prices, but to blame industry for failing to expand production, the Outlook says, citing the fact that wage raises in coal, steel and autos have not cut deeply into the huge profits made by these industries.

In addition, the Outlook points out: "Workers' families will by and large use the increased income coming from wage rises to buy food, clothing and shelter. Nearly 40 per cent of these wage increases, for example, will probably go for additional and better food."

CIO's estimate of unemployment, monthly feature of the Economic Outlook, is 9,062,200 for March, a drop of 5.4 percent from February. Conscription into the army accounted for 200,000 of the 512,000 drop.

Murray Asks House Boost WPA Funds

WASHINGTON, June 14—Passage of the Casey amendment to the WPA appropriation act was defeated in the House by a vote of 156 to 114. The Casey amendment would have increased the appropriation from the administration figure of $886,000,000 for the coming year to $1,250,000,000, and was strongly supported by CIO Pres. Murray in a letter sent out this week.

The situation of the unemployed is "worse now than at any time since the WPA was started," Murray wrote in pointing out that seven million workers would be left jobless during the year.

"According to available government reports and to reports from our own affiliates, the situation of the unemployed is now worse than it has been at any time since the WPA was started," Murray wrote. "Within the past year both local relief provisions and federal government work programs have fallen off much more rapidly than has unemployment.

Nine Million Idle

CIO estimates that there are now nine million out of work, he added, and of these only two million will be hired during the next year. Of the remaining seven million, at least three will be in serious need of help.

"It seems to me a patriotic duty to provide work for our unemployed and to make certain that this nation shall prove to its working people that their welfare is a first concern," he said.

Replies to Smear:

Addes Tells Hepburn Real Cause of Strike

DETROIT, June 14—Democracy is not helped when "hungry workers are answered with bayonets and irresponsible charges," Mitchell Hepburn, labor baiting premier of Ontario, Canada, was told by Secretary-Treasurer George F. Addes of the United Auto Workers in a reply to a recent smear that charged the CIO was part of "an axis plot."

"Even you must know that the only axis involved in this situation is the hunger-speed-up-insecurity axis which comes not from any foreign capital but from unscrupulous employers and their political servitors," Addes wrote.

FASCIST METHODS

"I must say to you and to men like you in my own country that I shall never be a party to the victimization of workers for taking action against a wage of $20 a week," he added, reminding Hepburn that CIO workers in Canada were as much or more devoted to democracy as any group—"despite the fascist-like methods employed last fall to smother collective bargaining in the Canadian plants of Chrysler Corporation."

Addes hit out at profiteering corporations whose agents blame workers for all stoppages, declaring: "I must record my opinion that responsibility for recent stoppages of defense production lies heavily upon the selfish corporations of this country and your own.

LOW PAY, HIGH PROFIT

"I must condemn those exploiters of labor who insist on a $20 a week wage while their corporation's annual profits have mounted to 75 per cent of total investment.

"Nor do I believe that the cause of democracy is being advanced when hungry workers are answered with bayonets and irresponsible charges. That is the formula of disunity and dictatorship among our own people."

Bohn Strike Settled

Detroit, June 14—Ending of the strike of the CIO United Auto Workers at the Bohn Aluminum and Brass Corp. was announced here. Settlement was on the basis of an agreement worked out with the aid of a U. S. government conciliator from the Labor Dept.

Terms of the settlement were not disclosed as the CIO NEWS went to press, but it was learned that any wage increases won will be retroactive to June 9, when the dispute will go to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

The strike began June 6 and involved 4,000 organized workers. The union asked a 10-cent-an-hour increase and other improvements.

Packing Union Wins Election

Denver, Colo., June 14—The CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee today had snowed under the opposition in a National Labor Relations Board election at Swift packing plant in this city.

The PWOC collected 268 votes to 16 for the Security League, with 78 votes being cast for no union.

ASK 20% WAGE BOOST

Paterson, N. J. — (FP) — A mass meeting of 10,000 workers in this textile center approved the demand of the Federation of Dyers, Finishers, Printers & Bleachers, CIO, for a 20 per cent increase.

Transport Workers Hail Trial on N. Y. Subway Case

NEW YORK, June 14—Refusal of the N. Y. Supreme Court to give Mayor LaGuardia a declaratory judgment, without trial, against collective bargaining on the city-owned transit system "will be warmly received" by the city's 32,000 CIO transit workers and the entire people of New York, Michael Quill, Transport Workers Union president, said here in commenting on the decision.

The city had tried to secure a verdict that would uphold its refusal to bargain without a trial on the facts, but the court verdict will now require a full hearing on the case before passing final judgment.

FEAR OF THE FACTS

"In resorting to the unusual procedure of seeking a declaratory judgment without trial, the Board of Transportation apparently feared that examination of all of the facts and issues would prove conclusively that the Board does possess ample power to bargain collectively and to enter into collective bargaining contracts," Quill said.

"The TWU is confident that when all the facts have been brought into the light of day, the court will find, first, that in so important and vast an enterprise as operation of the city's transit system there is need for bona fide collective bargaining and second, that the law confers sufficient power upon the Board to grant collective bargaining and contract rights to its employes."

Meantime the entire N. Y. CIO joined with the Transport Workers to carry the campaign for contracts to the public, arranging a series of street rallies, mass demonstrations, and the like.

Full Text of Pres. Murray's Letter Urging Attack on Anti-Labor Drive

WASHINGTON, June 12—President Philip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations today sent the following letter to all CIO national and international unions and organizing committees, regional directors and industrial union councils:

Dear Sir and Brother:

Within the last week a number of events have occurred which are of far-reaching importance to every working man and woman in this nation. These events have contributed greatly to aggravating the national hysteria which has prevailed for some time and in the face of which the future existence and well-being of labor unions and millions of their members are being gravely threatened.

In Congress there are pending several bills which aim toward the repression and extinction of labor unions and the rights of workers. In the House of Representatives there is the Vinson bill, H. R. 1439, which is to come up for consideration within a week or so. This bill would freeze the existing wage standards and employment conditions in American industry and would impose compulsory arbitration in industrial relations.

Vicious Bills

In addition, the House of Representatives only a few days ago approved two riders to a military appropriation measure, pursuant to which the National Defense Mediation Board will be made an instrument for the imposition of compulsory arbitration on all labor. Those who would remain on strike in violation of the Mediation Board's award could not be reemployed at any plant producing material under government contracts.

These bills are vicious and have but a single intent—to destroy organized labor. They must be fought and defeated.

In the Senate, the Connally amendment has been added to the conscription law. Under this amendment all plants and mills in which there is any strike or stoppage may be taken over by the United States government. This amendment does not purport to afford any protection to the rights of labor when such plants are taken over by the government. In other words, the amendment is intended solely to inject the government into every industrial dispute, with the threat that if the workers engage in a strike the plant will be seized by the United States government, the strike broken and the rights of the workers destroyed, following which the plant would be returned to the management.

This measure is the most flagrant attempt to wipe out all rights and benefits which the workers of the nation and labor unions have obtained down through the years through bitter struggles. This measure must also be vigorously fought and defeated.

Perverted Draft Law

Secretary of War Stimson and General Hershey, the Acting Director of the conscription law, recently issued a national order under which all local draft boards were directed to re-examine and cancel deferments of strikers. This order extends enforced labor to practically every major industrial plant without regard for labor's rights or the merits of any industrial dispute. It constitutes a flagrant abuse of the conscription law and an open breach of faith with labor.

The perversion of the conscription law to the establishment of enforced labor in the United States is deeply repugnant to the American way of doing things. This action is intended to break strikes regardless of the full merits of labor's demands in the particular dispute. The order is in violation of the basic principles of the conscription law and protests against its continuation must be made.

Use of Army

The injection of armed forces of the nation into a private industrial dispute must also be condemned. Such action can only serve to create a status of enforced labor in this nation, and enforced labor can only create bitterness on the part of working people. Repression and the use of force are not the methods that can be or will be countenanced by the American people for the establishment of wholesome and sound industrial relations. This is not the American way, or consistent with democracy.

The CIO and its affiliated organizations are dedicated to a single objective—to obtain a better life for the working men and women of this nation through increased wages and improved working conditions. The CIO unions must and shall continue to work for the fulfillment of this objective. At the present time the rising corporate profits and the increasing cost of living of the working people amply justify the demands of the workers for increased wages and improved working conditions.

In seeking this goal the workers must continue to enjoy their fundamental right to strike. This right cannot and must not be impaired by government officials or legislative action. No mediation board, which has as its function to mediate labor disputes, should usurp or be given the authority to impose compulsory arbitration or to interfere in any way with the basic rights of labor. There should not and cannot be any justification for governmental action or legislative enactment which would interfere with or diminish the basic rights of labor.

Foes of Democracy

Democracy, with its basic and fundamental institutions, is under serious attack. The CIO, its affiliated unions and its millions of members are determined to defeat any attempt to undermine or diminish the protection afforded to Americans in the exercise of their basic constitutional and democratic rights under our American way of life. Those who lend themselves to repress the rights and privileges of Americans are the enemies of democracy. Those who commit acts which add to the current hysteria are merely furnishing aid to the enemies of democracy.

However, it is understood that the Congress of Industrial Organizations opposes the subversive work of any group in the United States, whether corporate, communistic, nazi or fascist that may be interesting themselves in the promotion of selfish things designed to undermine the interests of the United States of America in its national defense effort.

It is now our joint task to take immediate action through our national organizations, our local unions and our individual members in communicating with our representatives in Congress and public officials and advising them of our attitude and our views in these important situations. Only in this manner can your rights and interests be protected and the survival of democracy assured.

This action must be taken at once. It is only with your full support and cooperation that the past successes of the Congress of Industrial Organizations can be protected and our future expansion assured.

Fraternally yours,
PHILIP MURRAY, President
Congress of Industrial Organizations.

life for the working men and women of this nation through increased wages and improved working conditions." CIO action to attain this is amply justified by "rising corporate profits and the increasing cost of living," he added.

"In seeking this goal the workers must continue to enjoy their fundamental right to strike," he said. "This right cannot and must not be impaired by government officials or legislative action. No mediation board, which has as its function to mediate labor disputes, should usurp or be given the authority to impose compulsory arbitration or to interfere in any way with the basic rights of labor."

AID TO THE ENEMY

Democracy is under serious attack today, Murray explained, and will be defended by all CIO membes against any forces that "lend themselves to repress the rights and privileges of Americans. Those who commit acts which add to the current hysteria are merely furnishing aid to the enemies of democracy," he added.

The CIO is emphatically opposed "to the work of any group in the U. S., whether corporate, communistic, nazi or fascist that may be interesting themselves in the promotion of selfish things designed to undermine the interests of the U. S. in its national defense effort," he said.

Mrs. Henderson, Cannery Union Pioneer, Dies

Chicago, June 14—Mrs. Elinore Henderson, wife of Pres. Donald Henderson of the CIO United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, died here on the night of June 12, after a brief illness.

Mrs. Henderson was a pioneer in organizing agricultural workers. She helped lead the workers' strike against starvation wages in the historic Seabrook Farms walkout in New Jersey several years ago, and was a leader in forming the UCAPAWA when the union affiliated with the CIO in 1937.

Since that time she has edited the union paper, the UCAPAWA News.

She is survived by her husband and three children, Curtis, Lynn and Donald Jr.

Councils to Meet

Washington, June 14—Conventions of two CIO State Councils are scheduled to open June 20. The fourth annual meet of the Indiana Industrial Union Council will be held in the Masonic Temple, Muncie; and the Virginia Council will meet at the Textile Workers Hall in Roanoke.

ject to court injunction and heavy fines.

VINSON AGAIN

Not satisfied with this week's work, the lower House moved to take up consideration of the Vinson bill to freeze wages and working conditions by June 23. Meanwhile, the Connally plus amendment must go to the House for passage before it becomes law, while the two House amendments must make a similar trip to the Senate.

For the record, the seven Senators who voted against the Connally measure are: Adams of Colorado, Aiken of Vermont, Bulow of South Dakota, Clark of Idaho, Danaher of Connecticut, LaFollette of Wisconsin, Murdock of Utah.

THE WORKER'S DUTY:

Priest Urges Workers Join Labor Unions

CHICAGO, Ill., June 14—The Catholic Church "virtually states that workers have a duty to join unions," Father Thomas Lamie of St. Cecelia's Rectory here wrote recently to an employe of the International Harvester Co., where the CIO will seek sole bargaining rights in a Labor Board election June 18.

"Writings of Pope Leo XIII, Pope Pius XI and Pope Pius XII indicate, Father Lamie said, that "the speed-up, the modern system that would make slaves of men and women, is not to be tolerated.

"As for wages, these same Popes have said that the wage must be sufficient to provide working men and women with sufficient for them to live decently, comfortably and happily, and in addition, to lay something by for when they are old and unable to work," he wrote.

UNION IS NECESSARY

"As to whether a union is necessary in a plant is a question that may cause you some misgivings. Many big companies and many small employers are good to their help, pay them excellent wages, take care of them when they are sick, build them hospitals, community hospitals and even homes, and give them pensions when they are old. But all of this does not mean that the union is not necessary.

"Men may change in their ideas, or new managers may come in who do not agree with that good policy. Even if these changes do not occur, it is not right that one man or a board of directors, no matter how kind they are, should have the destiny of a group of workers in the palm of their hands . . ."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

DETROIT, June 12—The victory of the Ford election resulted in an influx in membership until today almost every eligible worker is now a member of the Ford Local 600 UAW-CIO.

Since the election at the Rouge plant, more than 16,000 new members were taken in in the month of May. More than 64,000 paid per capita tax for that month.

Of the current month (June), it is reasonable to expect every eligible worker will belong to the union, which will total some 85,000 in the Rouge and Lincoln plants.

Plans are now in effect to complete organizing in all of the Ford plants, numbering approximately 35.

VICTORIES SPEED DRIVE

The election results are stimulating organizational activity throughout the whole chain. Negotiations are now going on and satisfactory progress is being made toward consummating an agreement. Committees are functioning in a number of the plants outside of Detroit now, and in a very short period of time the complete Ford system will be organized.

A very enthusiastic meeting of international representatives, organizers and local union officers was held in Cincinnati on June 8 and was presided over by Regional Director Robert J. Davidson. Every local union in that area was represented.

The writer had the pleasure of addressing the meeting and discussing the problems of the organizers. The conference decided to institute organizational activity in that area. Ever group pledged to cooperate with the others and use the regional office as a clearing house for all activity and news of the same. Much can be expected now from that section.

Similar meetings are scheduled in Baltimore on June 15, and in New Orleans on June 22. These meetings have been planned by Regional Directors Bender and Pieper, respectively.

The success attained in the recent drives in the major basic industries where CIO direction should be proof in itself that where the counsel of the CIO is accepted wholesomely, organizing drives will succeed to the advantage of the members and organization involved. Only where such counsel and advice have been ignored or flaunted are organizational efforts retarded. The greater the cooperation with the CIO the greater the results.

MANY ELECTION VICTORIES

Meanwhile more election victories for CIO continue to pour in, despite critics and enemies in Congress and elsewhere. From New Jersey Acting Director Pete Mosele reports a landslide victory for District 50 of the Mine Workers at the Koppers Coke Co.—498 for CIO, five for AFL.

From Ohio Field Representative DeNucci reports a CIO Shoe Workers victory of 224 to 100 at the H. C. Godman Co. of Logan. From Connecticut, Joseph Mayo, sub-regional director, adds another—97 for the CIO Auto Workers to 82 for the so-called independent, at the Marlin-Rockwell Co.

A recent roundup report of victories by the Wholesale and Department Store Workers cited a two to one victory at the Daniel Reeves chain, another at Montgomery Ward in Jamaica, N. Y., a third in the largest wholesale florists in New York, and two six-to-one victories, one in Stern Bros. in New York and the other at the Fair Store in Chicago.

Seamen To Propose National Union

NEW YORK, June 14—Formation of a national industrial union of all American seamen will be one of the main aims of the convention of the Natl. Maritime Union, set for July 7 in Cleveland, according to Joseph Curran, NMU president.

Pointing to the scheduled presence of seamen and other marine crafts from the west coast at the convention, Curran declared: "There is a growing realization among seamen that craft unions are no longer adequate to cope with the problems of marine labor organization.

"Combined attacks against our separate organizations by east and west coast shipowners, with their allies in Washington, are making it imperative for seamen to combine in their own defense."

At present west coast seamen are in three unions, the Sailors Union of the Pacific, the Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers, and the Marine Cooks and Stewards, CIO.

The Labor Reader:

Coal Miners

BLACK LAND. By George Korson. Row, Peterson and Co., Evanston, Ill. 1941. 58c in lots of five or more.

By WALTER N. POLAKOV

Who are the people who made CIO possible? How do they live and how do they work? School children and professors, workers in other industries and laymen constantly ask these questions.

For over 300 years coal miners have dug coal. People use it in homes, forges, factories and on the railroads. But men who keep us warm and keep the wheels of industry turning get no publicity except when flashy headlines of daily papers announce a shut-down of mines or a tragic explosion snuffing out the lives of many men.

THEIR OWN STORY

At last their story has been written in a book by Mr. Korson about the way of life of these people. There are some 600,000 of them—with their families, about two and a half million people.

The author is well qualified to write on this subject. For many years he studied the folklore and ballads of the miners. He has published books about their songs and about their tales.

Now when he describes the way of life of miners he makes of it easy and absorbing reading, for he tells the story not as one who knew it but as if he were a newspaper reporter quite ignorant of the subject, nosing around and learning things he never thought existed—placing himself in the position of his readers.

While the book is published primarily as supplementary classroom reading (which means that it does not go into statistics, economics or engineering that may scare many people), any one should read it who wants to know the human factor of our basic industry. Those who read it will get both pleasure and profit, for Korson's narrative tells honestly and simply the facts every American should know.

It is a small book on a big subject. It contains only 72 pages, and is richly illustrated by photographs which enhance the story.

Health and Homes:

CIO Officials Hit Housing Lag, High Disease Rate

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 14—A reminder that for each man-day of production lost through strikes, well over 60 man-days are lost through industrial accidents and occupational diseases, was given to social workers meeting here by Walter N. Polakov, director of the United Mine Workers' engineering department.

Addressing the National Conference of Social Work, Polakov declared:

"We cannot concede that low wages, long hours, and dangerous and unhealthy working and living conditions could possibly increase or speed up the defense activities. On the contrary, all these neglects, abuses, greed and muddled thinking, often excused in the name of patriotism, smack of sabotage.

"For we know that a low standard of living saps the vitality of the people and lowers the efficiency of the workers."

URGES REAL PROGRAM

A program of health service and medical care was urged upon the nation, not merely to cover defense workers but for all groups of citizens—and, Polakov reminded the audience, "the extension of this program must be under the supervision and with the participation of those citizens primarily concerned, i.e., organized labor. Unless this is done, we must surrender our claim to democracy."

Polakov quoted figures from a recent speech in Congress to show the alarming inroads that poor health is making on the defense program.

"If this lost working time were 'applied to the production of various war implements it would be sufficient to build: 15,000 to 18,000 large bombers; 30,000 medium bombers; 75,000 to 90,000 fighter planes; 112,500 to 225,000 trainer planes; 450 submarines; 375 destroyers; 45 battleships.'"

Pointing out that to maintain a government-recommended nutrition diet requires a family food expenditure of about $720 a year, the UMW official noted that U. S. statistics show "a typical working family, whether in Pittsburgh or in Birmingham, spends annually for food only $482—a $238 annual deficit in food consumption.

HEALTH 'DEFICIT'

"What does this mean? It means an accumulated deficit in national health. It means a dependent sequence of reduced productive capacity of the man power of our nation.

"It explains why we have such a high rate of tuberculosis and the scourge of pellagra. May I remind you that the incidence of tuberculosis is only 26 per thousand among better paid professional men, but it is 185 per thousand among the poorer paid unskilled workers.

"May I also remind you that pellagra is likewise the result of malnutrition, and the 40 per cent of rejections among the draftees is a sad commentary on our national health standard. And, let me repeat again, it is the principal cause of our tremendous productivity loss, which is 60 times greater than all the strikes called to correct this situation."

WASHINGTON, June 14—Failure of the government to extend the U. S. defense housing program to meet critical current needs may soon cause serious interference with defense production, Pres. John Green of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers today told members of the National Committee on the Housing Emergency.

He told the delegates meeting here that the shipbuilding industry's "greatest rise in employment will develop between now and the end of this year," but warned:

"I can say with the greatest assurance that the chief obstacle between this vitally needed expansion in employment for our national defense and its realization in a number of the most important shipbuilding industries is the total lack of housing facilities for the new workers."

GRAVE SITUATION

The union official said the housing situation "has long since passed the point of gravity" and makeshift efforts to appease the housing shortage by "doubling up" and other such practices is not going to create the good health and morale needed for total efficiency under the defense program.

In such shipbuilding communities as Quincy, Mass., and Bath, Me., Green said, many "employed skilled key men" are looking for jobs elsewhere in hope of finding "more satisfactory accommodations . . . for their families."

CATER TO REALTORS

A major reason for the failure of the government's housing program to meet present-day needs is "its reliance upon private interests to provide housing for the defense worker," Green charged.

"There has been such solicitude in certain government circles for the tender feelings of the real estate speculator, the mortgage shark and the rent profiteer that government representatives have refrained from recommending defense projects in certain communities. Indeed, they practically took the diametrically opposite course, shutting their eyes to the all-too-apparent need for government aid and declaring that no housing shortage existed."

The shipyard official pointed to the partially completed Audobon Park project in Camden, N. J., as a model for future defense housing plans.

He described the Camden Plan, under which the project was built, as providing "for the establishment of a Mutual Housing Corporation, in which every family head will be issued a membership policy after a provisional period of one year.

"The policy will entitle the occupants to a home in the community. As he accumulates a credit value in the amortization of this policy, he assumes a share in the semi-cooperative equivalent to the value of his home. In the interim the occupants will elect the directors of the corporation, make the rules for the community and conduct its affairs in a democratic procedure."

AFL Disrupters Lose Election At Cannery

San Diego, Calif., June 14 — Emerging with 451 votes from the NLRB consent election held June 5-6 at the Van Camp Sea Food Co. in San Diego, the CIO United Fish Cannery Workers Union routed the AFL Seafarers Intl. Union from the largest tuna packing plant in the country.

Negotiations for a new contract had been temporarily paralyzed when the AFL leaders, although lacking sufficient evidence, were granted a hearing by the National Labor Relations Board. The CIO local, affiliated with the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, consented to an election with the aim of putting an end to the year-old AFL disruptionist activities.

MAJOR REBUFF

The intensive and costly AFL drive to crush the CIO union received a major rebuff from the rank and file, with only 99 out of the 556 ballots being cast for the Seafarers Union. Two ballots were challenged, and only four non-union votes were recorded.

Utility Strike Postponed; Probe Order

By WALTER PETERS

Pittsburgh, June 14—Strike action at the Duquesne Light Company's Colfax Power Plant, Springdale, Pa., was postponed by the Utility Workers Organizing Committee pending an investigation by National Defense Mediation Board, Harold Straub, UWOC Director, announced today.

The CIO union made every effort to bargain with the company without resorting to strike action. At a conference held last Wednesday officials of the company, CIO and a company union agreed to a consent election to be held by the U. S. Department of Labor Conciliation Division and the State Labor Relations Board.

PHONY UNION FLIP-FLOPS

The company unionists later reneged, saying that their "members" voted against an election. Straub pointed out that the UWOC does not want to strike, and placed full responsibility on the company and the company union if strike action becomes necessary.

Threats Fail

Jersey City, N. J., June 14 — A week of anti-CIO intimidation against the workers at the National Bearing Metals Corp. here failed to register despite use of Mayor Hague's police, as shown in a more than two to one Labor Board election victory for the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

The count was 74 for the CIO union, 29 against. The company has agreed to start negotiations on a contract.

Los Angeles CIO Gains 40,000 Members in Year

LOS ANGELES, June 14—From June 1, 1940, to June 1, 1941, a total of 40,100 new members have been brought into the CIO in southern California, the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council revealed today. Wage gains for the same period total $11,156,230.80 per year.

These sensational gains center primarily in the city of Los Angeles, where a determined CIO organizing drive is rapidly changing this open shop citadel into a closed shop metropolis.

Half of the new membership is accounted for by the United Automobile Workers, which gained 10,000 new members in aircraft and another 10,000 in other branches of the automobile industry. The UAW also accounts for $2,909,400 of the total wage gains.

The Steel Workers Organizing Committee comes second on new membership, having brought in 4,000 workers to double its membership. Wage gains for this union total $1,734,000.

The Oil Workers International Union comes fourth on new membership, having organized 1,500, but ranks second in wage gains, which amount to $2,000,000.

The United Rubber Workers organized 1,800 new workers and increased pay checks $550,000. Then come the Warehousemen, Local 1-26, who tallied up their balance sheets and came out with 700 new workers and wage gains of exactly $275,330.80 for the year.

The Warehousemen announced they had already won six closed shop contracts in their strike against a number of waste material houses, and expected to bring in the companies in the holdout Waste Material Association under a master contract in a few days.

On Capitol Hill:

Tories Launch New Blitzkrieg Against Labor

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director Labor's Non-Partisan League

An anti-labor legislative blitzkrieg has been loosed in Washington by labor's enemies and labor's erstwhile skin-deep friends. The barrage of repressive bills, amendments and resolutions may be listed under three anti-labor objectives.

The main effort against labor's rights is to establish compulsory arbitration through taking away the right to strike and making decisions of the National Defense Mediation Board compulsory. The Case-Pace amendments tacked on to the Army Appropriation Bill establish a blacklist for this defense employment directed against strikers.

The Byrd Amendment to the Connally Bill establishes the policy that awards of the Mediation Board shall be compulsory and labor in defense industries shall not have the right to strike.

The Case-Pace amendments have passed the House and must come before the Senate, while the Byrd Amendment has passed the Senate and must come before the House.

"COOLING-OFF" PERIOD

The much discussed Ball Bill (S. 683) and the Vinson Bill (H. R. 4139) providing for compulsory "cooling-off" periods are still before Congress awaiting a vote. The Vinson Bill is set for June 23 in the House of Representatives.

STRIKE-BREAKING

Three bills seek to give to the Government the right to seize defense plants closed by strikes. These bills are H.R. 4949, introduced by Congressman May, S. 1579, introduced by Senator Reynolds, and S. 1600, introduced by Senator Connally. Under these bills the Government has the right to use troops and other Federal forces to break up picket lines and put through back-to-work movements in defense industries. No safeguards of the rights of labor are contained in these bills.

New amendments and revisions of old bills of an anti-labor nature may be made. They will all be directed principally toward restricting or removing labor's right to strike, along the lines discussed above. This legislative situation constitutes the most dangerous threat to labor's rights ever to exist on Capitol Hill.

REMINDER: Taking its case for collective bargaining with the City of New York directly to the public, officials of the CIO Transport Workers Union drive a sound truck through the streets. The billboard poster reminds the people that when Mayor LaGuardia was in Congress several years ago, he spoke strongly in defense of collective bargaining. Now, on the issue of contracts for city-owned subways, he's opposing it.

Canadian Workers Fight New Attacks On Unions

TORONTO, Ont., June 14—Legislative attacks on the rights of Canadian trade unions continued last week while workers won reinstatements and wage increases on a number of fronts.

There were indications that the sharpest attack would be directed against the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' union, whose members virtually closed the Toronto plants of the Canadian General Electric Co., subsidiary of the U. S. concern. The Minister of Labor threatened prosecution of 1,000 strikers under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act if they did not end their holiday and apply for a conciliation board.

The electrical workers countered that negotiations could be successful if the federal department of labor stopped its intimidation and withdrew from the scene.

In a telegram to the Minister of Labor pointing out that GE in the United States had signed agreements on four successive occasions for 70,000 workers without strikes. James J. Matles, organizational director of the UER&MW declared that "we find it difficult to avoid the conclusion that it is the policy and actions of some person or persons in the Canadian Government's department of labor which stands in the way of a conference between the union and the management."

AFFECTS COAL MINES

One of the acts by the Government directed against unions was the placing of Canadian coal mines under the Defence of Canada Regulations, which means that any union member of the United Mine Workers may be spirited away without trial under Section 21.

Another step to weaken trade unions was reflected in an amendment in the House of Commons to the I. D. I. Act barring persons with a pecuniary interest in one side of a labor dispute from acting on a conciliation board.

Two trade union members of Parliament, Angus MacInnis, AFL, and Claire Gillis, CIO, charged that the change would deprive unions of the services of the few lawyers in Canada who have made a special study of labor problems and legislation. Most companies appoint lawyers as their representative and the chairman is invariably a judge.

Eight hundred workers who struck at Canadian Tube, Montreal, returned to work when the company promised to begin direct negotiations with the Steel Workers Organization Committee. More than 150 workers at W. D. Beath, Toronto, ended a short strike when four men who had been discharged for smoking, were reinstated, and a conciliation board was granted. They are members of SWOC.

Issue Call For Smelters' Parley

Denver, Colo., June 14—An official call for the 38th annual convention of the CIO Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers was sent to all affiliated locals today by Intl. Sec.-Treas. James J. Leary.

The convention will open August 4 in Joplin, Mo., heart of the Tri-State lead mining area where a U. S. Circuit Court two weeks ago upheld NLRB charges that an AFL "Blue Card" union was company-dominated and ordered the reinstatement of 200 CIO miners dismissed five years ago for union activity.

Steel Union Wins Three Polls

Toronto, Ont., June 14—Making hay while the sun still shines, the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee rolled up three collective bargaining election victories held in Kitchener under government auspices.

Votes for the SWOC at three plants were: Dominion Truck Equipment Co., 77 yes, 6 no; Waterloo Manufacturing Co., 113 yes, 95 no; Sunshine Foundry Co., 180 for, 169 against.

Boss Decides To 'Interpret' Wagner Act!

NEW YORK, June 14—Already facing contempt of court charges for violating a Natl. Labor Relations Board decision ordering an end to its anti-union activities, the textile converting firm of M. Lowenstein & Co. did a bit of Wagner Act "interpretation" of its own this week.

A. C. Joplin, company vice-president, "ruled" that Johnny Johnson, a member of the CIO United Office & Professional Workers, violated the Wagner Act by wearing a union button on the premises. Johnson was fired, though members of a forbidden company union are permitted to wear their badges during working time.

COMPANY UNION

The contempt of court trial will deal with charges that the Committee of Fellow Employes is a company union dominated by the firm and that it was organized in direct violation of a 1938 court order to disestablish the company union then known as the Employes Group. Johnson was one of the chief witnesses at the hearing on which the contempt of court charge was based.

Meanwhile UOPWA went ahead with plans for an NLRB election on June 26 to determine which organization will be the employes bargaining agent.

Attempting to muddy the already turbulent waters, reactionary Rep. Clare Hoffman of Michigan took to the radio waves last week and asserted that the election issue of Lowenstein's is the question of "patriotism vs. communism."

Pres. Peter K. Hawley replied that the workers will prove on June 26, "as did the thousands of workers at Ford, that their idea of patriotism and true Americanism is the right to organize and choose their own unions."

ALASKA PARLEYS

Fairbanks, Alaska—The CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers' "farthest north" local has finally forced the powerful U. S. Smelting, Refining & Mining Co. to open contract negotiations.

Accuse FBI Of Frame-Up Activities

New York, June 14—Charging anti-labor and frame-up activities by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Greater New York CIO Industrial Union Council today called upon Atty.-Gen. Robert Jackson for a thorough investigation.

The letter made specific references to a number of incidents in the current deportation hearing against Harry Bridges, West coast longshore leader, in which FBI agents have been charged with putting undue pressure on witnesses to testify against the union official.

DANGEROUS IDEA

The letter also branded as a "dangerous attitude" the idea that a union leader is subject to deportation solely if he accepts help in order to win a strike, from persons whom the government may consider "subversive."

"We see in this attitude a subtle attempt to intimidate labor in the use of its right to strike and we strongly condemn this effort by a government agency to link legitimate trade union action with the purposes of organizations which the FBI does not happen to approve," the letter, signed by Council Pres. Joseph Curran, declared.

NOT ISOLATED

The "instances of frame-up, anti-labor bias and intimidation in the Bridges case are not isolated but represent, we believe, the policy of the FBI in relation to all of organized labor in this country, "Curran continued. "It is a matter of grave concern to know what steps you plan to take on these matters."

Soap Workers Win

Cincinnati, Ohio, June 14—A new contract with the M. Werk Company of St. Bernard, Ohio, providing pay increases totaling $10,000 for 100 employes was announced this week by the United Soap Workers, CIO local industrial union here.

11 Days-- 10 Cents!

HOUSTON, Tex., June 14—Exactly 11 days after employes of the Cook Paint & Varnish Co. organized Local 12232 of District 50, United Mine Workers, they gained a written contract with a 10-cent increase.

No question about the issue of recognition was raised when the boss saw 99 per cent of the men wearing union buttons. The pact brought the employes seniority, grievance procedure, six holidays with pay and increased vacation time.

AT CONFAB: Six former students from the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tennessee, were delegates at the recent state CIO convention. The school for workers has the support of many CIO unions throughout the country. Shown at the convention are Zilphia Horton, music and dramatics director at Highlander; Pres. William Turnblazer of the Council; Edna Lamb, former clothing union official; Dillard King, fraternal delegate from the Summerfield Cooperative; Paul Winn, local officer of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; Ed Blair, organizer for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; and Billie Caviness of the CIO cannery workers, who became the first woman vice-president of the state council.

FORD SIGNS UNION SHOP AGREEMENT

Murray Sees Contract As Model for U. S.

WASHINGTON, June 20—CIO Pres. Philip Murray believes the "pattern set by Mr. Ford might very well be followed by other leading industrialists in the United States of America," he said in a statement issued here today.

Full text of the statement:

I am happy to announce the perfection of a mutually satisfactory agreement between the Ford Motor Company and the United Automobile Workers of America, CIO and the CIO national office. The fact that this agreement has been arrived at through the processes of sound, intelligent collective bargaining without resort to strike indicates the wholesome approach that labor and industry have towards the solution of their own problems. The wage contract itself bespeaks substantial progress for the United Automobile Workers-CIO.

CLOSED SHOP

It includes the wholesome recognition of the closed shop and check off, covering all of the production and maintenance employees at all of the Ford plants throughout the country including its steel mills, cement plant, rubber plant, and glass factory. In other words, the contract embraces every eligible worker employed by the Ford Company in its nation-wide enterprises. It may be interesting to note also that the organization has given permission in the contract authorizing the Ford Motor Company to use the UAW-CIO union label on its products.

It will elevate the wage rates to the highest now paid in the auto industry and will also maintain such of its rates as may be higher. It recognizes standard seniority provisions protecting the rights of Ford workers. It creates modern grievance procedure and provides for the speedy adjudication of all disputes arising out of the contract.

RECOGNITION

In addition it gives recognition to standard safety practices to promote health and reduce accidents. The agreement has been entered into in good faith and will undoubtedly promote a cooperative relationship between the UAW-CIO and the Ford Company, guaranteeing stability and continuity of operations.

The pattern set by Mr. Ford in this contract might very well be followed by other leading industrialists in the United States of America. It is the avowed purpose of the CIO to lend every practicable and legitimate cooperation toward the maintenance of friendly relations between the Ford Company and the organization.

Canada Cracks Down On Strikes

Toronto, Ont., June 21—The Canadian Department of Justice last week launched prosecutions against 15 members of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' Union 12 hours after they voted to end a nine-day holiday at two plants of the Canadian General Electric Co.

One thousand workers involved decided to end the holiday on the promise of immediate appointment of a conciliation board after the department of labor made no public attempt to bring the parties to a conference table.

Fourteen shop stewards in the plants are charged with participating in an illegal strike and are liable to a $50 fine for each day; C. S. Jackson, International Vice President of the union nad five of the fourteen are charged, in addition with inciting a legal strike and face a fine of $1,000 each. The cases will be heard July 4.

REFUSES TO ACT

Despite a visit to Ottawa by a committee of the workers, the Minister of Labor refused to take any action towards bringing the company, which has contracts with the UER & MW in the U. S., to the conference table. Every attempt at conciliation brought a threat from the Minister to turn the case over to the Department of Justice.

Company Lifts Wages, OKs Check-Off; Union Label May Appear On Ford Cars

(SEE OTHER STORIES, PAGE THREE)

WASHINGTON, June 20—The Ford Motor Co. today signed the first union shop contract in the automobile manufacturing industry.

Reversing its long open-shop policy, the company reached an agreement with the CIO United Automobile Workers providing:

1. The union shop for all Ford plants in the country.

2. A wage schedule equal to the highest in the automobile industry.

3. The union label to appear on Ford cars.

4. Seniority and grievance systems.

5. Elimination of the Ford Service Squad and its replacement by a plant custodial force whose members will carry open identification.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a statement issued as the contract was signed, said the fact that it "has been arrived at through the processes of sound, intelligent collective bargaining without resort to strike indicates the wholesome approach that labor and industry has towards the solution of its own problems."

The pact was signed in the office of CIO Pres. Philip Murray in the United Mine Workers building in Washington. The company was represented by Harry Bennett, its executive in charge of personnel.

Murray, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW, Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the UAW, Allan S. Haywood, CIO Organizing Director, Richard T. Leonard, UAW regional director, and Michael S. Widman, director of the Ford Organizing Committee, all hailed the agreement as a mighty step forward for the CIO, both in the auto industry and throughout the nation as a whole.

UAW officials said that the contract now brings the total number of automobile workers employed under union protection to approximately 700,000. Some 120,000 workers are employed in the Ford plants throughout the country.

Homer Martin's Home Local Votes CIO

KANSAS CITY, June 21—Workers who read of the United Automobile Workers-CIO victory at the Chevrolet plant of General Motors here who voted more than 3 to 1 for the CIO did themselves a good service and added interest to another smashing CIO victory. The union they voted for used to be Homer Martin's home local.

Homer Martin, it will be remembered, was the individual who set out to smash the UAW on the rocks of factionalism. He didn't succeed, and now he's working for the Ford Motor Co.—currently engaged in negotiations for a UAW-CIO contract.

The Ford Contract—A Great Milepost

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
CIO Director of Organization

They said it couldn't be done—but we did it. An agreement with Ford!

This is a mighty accomplishment for the CIO—this contract with Henry Ford.

This industrial empire, employing 130,000 workers throughout the country, now comes to terms with the CIO United Automobile Workers, and in a convincing demonstration of the benefits of collective bargaining, agrees to the highest wages in the industry, the union shop, the checkoff in all Ford plants throughout the United States.

UNION SECURE

This agreement means that the whole auto industry will be operating on that same basis, with the union secure, and it will extend into other basic industries. Every worker and every friend of labor can now ride in a union-made, union-label Ford car.

In addition the agreement provides that workers in the Ford rubber, steel, glass and cement plants will pay the highest prevailing wage as a minimum.

This agreement establishes the CIO as the largest labor organization in the country beyond any shadow of doubt. It will continue to grow. It is the best answer to our enemies in legislative halls, and without.

PRES. MURRAY

But no mention of this history-making event could be complete withouta tribute to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, whose great wisdom, infinite patience, cool judgment and faith in the democratic process of collective bargaining, made possible this extension of the union throughout the last remaining stronghold of the open shop in the automobile industry.

CIO Leads in 4 Plant Polls at Harvester

CHICAGO, June 21—Higher pay and better conditions for International Harvester workers were predicted this week by the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee following elections in which the CIO union won hte highest number of votes in four of the company's plants.

In the elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board in six Harvester plants, the CIO came out ahead in both the big McCormick Works and the West Pullman plant in Chicago, and in two smaller plants at East Moline and Rock Falls, Ill. The results were:

McCormick Works: CIO—2682; AFL—2671.

West Pullman: CIO—1138; AFL—887.

East Moline: CIO—815; AFL—630.

Rock Falls: CIO—101; AFL—97.

At the Farmall plant in Rock Island, Ill., the AFL got a majority of 100 votes, but the FEWOC is challenging the result on the charge that the election was unfairly conducted. The count at the Milwaukee plant gave the AFL 2067 to 910 for the CIO.

Longshore Unit Cut Up By NLRB

WASHINGTON, June 21 — Elections among longshoremen in three ports in the state of Washington were ordered this week by the National Labor Relations Board in direct reversal of a ruling made in 1938 certifying the CIO International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union as sole bargaining agent for all Pacific coast seamen.

The AFL International Longshoremen's Association petitioned for three separate port elections in September, 1940, asking the Board to throw over its previous certification of the ILWU, although it had been recognized as sole bargaining agency for West Coast longshoremen since the Board certified it in June, 1938.

SMITH DISSENTS.

In ordering the election, the Board rejected the CIO union's contention, upheld in a dissenting opinion by Board Member Edwin S. Smith, that the coast-wide unit is the most appropriate one for collective bargaining.

"The unit embracing all longshoremen on the Pacific Coast is firmly rooted in a Board certification and in collective agreements," Smith said in his dissenting opinion. "The coastwide unit is the broadest unit in which self-organization has been effective. It is the only unit in which the longshoremen can negotiate on a basis of equality with the employers."

BOTH ON BALLOT.

The three ports where elections were ordered are at Tacoma, Anacortes and Port Angeles. Both the ILWU and the AFL Longshoremen's Assn. will be on the ballots in the three elections, as well as a space to vote "neither."

Citizens Group Hits FBI Methods

New York, June 21—Members of the Citizens Committee for Harry Bridges attacked methods of the FBI in the recently concluded deportation trial of Mr. Bridges as irrational, unfair and illegal.

After reading excerpts from the testimony of a number of witnesses in the trial, Dr. Charles Sumner Bacon, Chicago, professor emeritus, University of Illinois, College of Medicine, and a member of the committee, declared:

'BECOMING A DANGER'

"Many fear that the FBI is becoming a danger to our civil liberties and should be checked whenever it is found guilty of dishonorable acts.

"California got a bad reputation in the frame-up in the Mooney case; shall her disgrace now be shared by the whole United States because of the actions of the FBI?

"If there is any suspicion that the Government is using unfair means to destroy Bridges, the facts should be brought to light and investigated," he said. As for himself, said Dr. Bacon, "I only represent a class that has no further interest in the case than to see justice done."

BLOT ON NATION

Dr. Charles F. Brooks, director of the Blue Hill Observatory, Harvard University, also a member of the Citizens Committee, in a letter addressed to President Roosevelt and released by the committee, said:

"The second Bridges trial is a blot on American freedom. The first, by Dean Landis, for the Federal Government, was very thorough and cleared him of deportable activities. No reasonable doubt has been shown the people of the United States that this trial was not in every way a fair and thorough one."

CITY EMPLOYES STRIKE: Garbage, repair and maintenance work piles up in McKeesport, Pa., while Mayor George H. Lysle sits back and refuses to meet with union representatives of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers. The men went on strike when they met failure in their efforts to negotiate a pay raise to meet the rising cost of living.

Goodyear Rubber Signs First CIO Agreement

By ROBERT CRUDEN

AKRON, June 21—More than $3,000,000 was added to the yearly pay envelopes of 14,000 Akron-Goodyear workers this week when Local 2, United Rubber Workers, CIO, and the company concluded a wage agreement providing for substantial increases.

The agreement—the first to be signed between Goodyear and the union—provides for increases of 8 cents an hour for all workers getting less than $1.01 an hour. Those making more than $1.01 an hour will get 7 cents an hour more. All piece work rates are to be increased 7 cents.

Widespread wage adjustments to iron out inequalities in rates will also add substantially to the Goodyear workers' pay. Some increases under this schedule run as high as 29 cents an hour.

MAJOR STEP

URWA President S. H. Dalrymple and Goodyear Campaign Director Robert J. Davidson hailed the wage pact as the first major step toward written contractual relations with Goodyear, the only major holdout against the Union.

"Both the company and the union are to be complimented on the wage agreement," they said. "It marks a real step forward in labor relations at Goodyear. In our opinion it lays the basis for more comprehensive contractual relations in the near future."

Heading the Goodyear Union negotiators was President C. V. Wheeler of the Local.

Negotiations for wage increases are being pushed by the URWA CIO in other Goodyear plants in Los Angeles, Jackson, Mich., and Cumberland, Md.

GOODRICH

The Goodyear wage boost followed shortly on the heels of a 5 cent to 7 cent raise at the Goodrich plant, covering 12,000 workers, under the terms of a new agreement worked out by Local 5, URWA -CIO, under the leadership of President George R. Bass.

In addition to the general wage increase the Goodrich Union negotiators obtained far-reaching rate adjustments which will put another $1,250,000 into the workers' pockets.

Labor and the Law:

NLRB's Decision In Longshore Case Threat to Unions

BY LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

In 1934 the longshoremen of the West Coast engaged in an extremely bitter strike against their employers. The outcome of this strike was a contract between the Association of Employers and the Longshoremen's Union. It was only as a result of the unity among the longshoremen, reflected through their single union, that the workers were able to obtain from the employers coastwide collective bargaining.

Subsequently, the longshoremen of the West Coast in a body left the AFL organization and organized their own union, which became affiliated with the CIO. The International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, which is the CIO affiliate, entered into several successive coastwise collective bargaining agreements with the Water Front Employers Association of the West Coast.

SPLITTERS ACTIVE

Ever since the longshoremen left the AFL in order to avoid the racketeering of the leadership of the AFL longshoremen's union, remnants of the AFL have attempted to split the coastwide bargaining unit of the ILWU.

In June, 1938, the Labor Board certified the ILWU as the exclusive bargaining agent for all the longshoremen on the Pacific Coast. A coastwide contract was executed by the Longshoremen's Union and the Water Front Employers Association of the Pacific in 1938, which has been renewed on several occasions, the last one having been executed in November of 1940.

NLRB REVERSAL

In spite of this history of collective bargaining on a coastwide basis, the majority of the Labor Board, consisting of Chairman Mellis and Leiserson, has now reversed its certification of the ILWU and has ordered a separate election in three ports, permitting the AFL to carve out these three ports from the coastwide unit. Board member Smith vigorously dissented and urged the continuation of the single coastwide collective bargaining unit.

This decision flies directly in the face of the basic policy of the National Labor Relations Act. The interests of the workers demands that their unions be powerful enough to meet the employers on a basis of equality.

On the West Coast the employers are organized on a coastwide basis. A single organization speaks for all the employers. As far as the workers are concerned, it is admitted that an overwhelming majority of the longshoremen on the West Coast desire a single union, namely, the ILWU. Obviously, the only method whereby the workers can establish economic equality with the employers in this situation is to assure the continuation of a single union representing all the longshoremen.

WOULD WEAKEN UNIONS

The Labor Board seems extremely anxious to weaken and break down the economic strength of the longshoremen by carving out separate units, injecting the possibility of many unions to bargain with a single representative of all the employers.

This procedure, if applied to the many siuations where the CIO industrial unions are building up the collective bargaining units, may prove to be disastrous for organized labor.

Parleys Open In Strike Of City Workers

McKEESPORT, Pa., June 21—Representatives of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers were in conference with McKeesport city officials today seeking to bring an end to the strike of 150 municipal employes for recognition and wage increases.

The employes—maintenance men, drivers, garbage collectors and sanitation workers—are seeking wage boosts which 6½% and 10% increases on the eve of their walkout failed to appease, according to SCMWA Dist. Pres. David Kanes.

FIRED 150

Arguing that workers can't strike against the city, the mayor had fired 150 of the union members. Although many western Pennsylvania cities have recognized the union, Mayor Lysle argued that it couldn't be done in McKeesport.

Veteran unionists here remember Lysle, who has been in office for 28 years, as the man who refused to allow any union meetings whatsoever in McKeesport during the big steel organizing campaign of 1919.

Steel Union Wins Pact In Cleveland

Cleveland, June 21—A new contract has just been signed between the SWOC and the Ferro Enamel Company here, according to William F. Donovan, SWOC district director. The Ferro company, which employs about 150 persons, has been under contract with the SWOC continuously ever since 1937, Donovan said.

Besides giving a general wage increase of 10 cents per hour the new contract provides: Sole bargaining rights; a liberalized vacation plan which gives one week's vacation with pay to each employee who has been with the company one year or more; time and one-half for all work done on Sundays and holidays, whether the worker has put in a full 40-hour week or not; and safeguards the seniority rights of employes called to the service of the country. These men also will receive full vacation pay if they have been employed by the company six months or more.

Maritime Federation Dissolves; Unions Join CIO

SAN FRANCISCO, June 21—Maritime workers on the west coast will be served by the newly formed branch of the CIO Maritime Committee to be set up here, it was announced at the close of the final convention of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

The Maritime Federation, which had been in existence since the great 1934 strike, will go out of existence, and all unions now affiliated to it will affiliate to the Maritime Committee. This is being done, union officials here explained, to provide a more tighty knit form of organization for the scores of thousands of maritime workers on the coast.

AIDED WORKERS

"From 1935 to 1937, the Maritime Federation was a powerful instrument for the advancement of the interests of Pacific coast maritime workers," acording to the final report of Federation President A. E. Harding and other executive board members.

"The principal weakness of the Maritime Federation, however, was its loose organization structure; that is, the Federation did not mold the maritime workers together into one industrial union."

LUNDEBERG DESERTION

This weakness was clearly evident when Harry Lundeberg, leader of the Sailors Union of the Pacific and head of the AFL's paper organization, the Intl. Seafarers Union, deserted the Federation during the 1936-37 strike, making a deal with the shipowners independently of the other unions.
